

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

REPORTS

OF

All the Cases decided by all the Superior Courts

RELATING TO

MAGISTRATES, MUNICIPAL,

AND PAROCHIAL LAW.

(REPRINTED FROM THE "LAW TIMES" REPORTS.)

VOL. XIII.

LONDON:

HORACE COX: "LAW TIMES" OFFICE, 10, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, W.C.

1886.

LIBRARY OF THE LELAND STANFORD, JR., UNIVERSITY LAW DEPARTMENT.

α.553 31

JUL 5 1901

LONDON:

PRINTED BY HORACE COX, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, W.C.

INDEX TO THE NAMES OF THE CASES

REPORTED IN THIS VOLUME.

A.

Acton Local Board v. Batten	page 474
Adams (app.) v. Ford (resp.)	700
Atkinson (app.) v. Collard (resp.); Sedgwick (app.) v. Neville (resp.); Loury (app.) v. Collard (resp.)	704
Attorney-General and the Metropolitan Board of Works v. Acton Local Board	93
Attorney-General v. Guardians of Dorking Union	1
Attorney-General v. Vestry of Bermondsey...	161
Austerberry v. Corporation of Oldham.....	674

B.

Baker (app.) v. Town Clerk of Monmouth (resp.)	702
Barlow v. Kensington Vestry	515
Barlow v. Vestry of St. Mary Abbots, Ken- sington, and Epsdon	165
Beatty and others (apps.) v. Gillbanks (resp.)	58
Beatty and others (apps.) v. Glenister (resp.)...	413
Bell and another v. Bassett	42
Berkeley (pauper) v. Thompson and others ...	482
Bexley Local Board v. The West Kent Main Sewerage Board	56
Billington v. Cyples	615
Bishop Auckland Local Board of Health (apps.) v. Bishop Auckland Iron and Steel Company Limited (resps.)	147
Blackmore v. The Vestry of Mile End Old Town	37
Blashill v. Chambers	602
Blosse (app.) v. Wheatley (resp.)	612
Bournemouth Commissioners v. Watts.....	479
Bradlaugh v. Erskine	108
Braintree Local Board of Health v. Boyton...	496
Brierley Hill Local Board v. Pearsall.....	430
Bristol Waterworks Company (apps.) v. Uren (resp.); Uren (app.) v. Bristol Waterworks Company (resps.)	579
Bryson v. Russell	362, 525

C.

Chorlton-upon-Medlock, Overseers of the Poor of, v. The Guardians of the Poor of Chorlton Union and the Overseers of the Poor of the Township of Ardwick.....	page 54
City Bank (apps.) v. Last (resp.)	64
Clark and others, ex parte ; re An Application under the Corrupt and Illegal Practices at Municipal and other Elections Act 1884, in respect of a Municipal Election in the Borough of Huntingdon	534
Clark (app.) v. The Queen (resp.)	408
Clark and others (pets.) v. Wallond (resp.) ...	193
Coles (app.) v. Fibbens (resp.)	563
Compagnie Française du Télégraphe du Paris & New York (apps.) v. The Assessment Committee of the Penzance Union and others (resps.)	357
Coomber (app.) v. Justices of Berks (resps.)...	117
Cundy (app.) v. Le Cocq (resp.)	414

D.

Daniel v. Whitfield.....	659
Dashwood v. Ayles	694
Dinning (app.) v. South Shields Guardians (resps.)	286, 322
Dobbs (app.) v. The Grand Junction Water- works Company (resps.)	28, 90, 271
Downing (app.) v. Schneider and others (resps.)	176
Dyson and others (apps.) v. Greetland Local Board (resps.)	184

F.

Fielding (app.) v. Hawley (resp.)	187
Ford (app.) v. Barnes (resp.); Ford (app.) v. Elmsley (resp.)	709
Ford (app.) v. Hoare (resp.)	607

NAMES OF CASES.

Forsdyke (app.) v. Colquhoun (resp.).....	page 227	Line and others (pets.) v. Warren and others (resps.).....	page 420, 531, 665
Frecheville (app.) v. Souden and others (resps.).....	183	Liverpool, Guardians of (apps.), v. Guardians of Portsea Union (resps.).....	309
Friend (app.) v. Towers (resp.).....	216	Lloyd v. Lloyd.....	673

G.

Gage v. Elsey	151
Gard v. Commissioners of Sewers	252
Gas Light and Coke Company v. Vestry of St. Mary Abbots, Kensington	668
Glen (app.) v. Churchwardens and Overseers of the Parish of Fulham (resps.).....	476
Great Eastern Railway Company v. Hackney District Board of Works	266
Great Northern Railway Company (apps.) v. Langrville Overseers (resps.).....	529
Green v. Broad and Hutt	41

H.

Hackney District Board of Works v. The Great Eastern Railway Company	32
Harbottle (app.) v. Terry (resp.)	143
Harris, ex parte	696
Harrison (app.) v. McL'Meel (resp.)	307
Hayward v. East London Waterworks Company	526
Heawood (app.) v. Bone (resp.).....	366
Henry and others (pets.) v. Armitage (resp.)	179, 296
Hiscocks v. Jermonson	150
Holborn Union, Guardians of (apps.), v. Guardians of the Chertsey Union (resps.)...	509
Hunnings v. Williamson	250
Hunter v. Johnson	475
Hyde (app.) v. Entwistle (resp.).....	586
Hyde, Mayor, &c., of, v. The Governor and Company of the Bank of England	38

J.

James (app.) v. Wyvill (resp.)	403
Jenks and others (apps.) v. Turpin and another (resps.)	341
Josolyne v. Meeson.....	657

K.

Kay (app.) v. Over Darwen Justices (resps.)...	76
Kennard v. Simmons and others.....	291
Knight v. Bowers	641

L.

Lancashire and Cheshire Telephonic Exchange Company (apps.) v. Overseers of Manchester (resps.).....	389, 597
Lancashire, Justices of, v. Mayor, &c., of Rochdale	262
Lane (app.) v. Collins (resp.)	530
Langrish (app.) v. Archer (resp.).....	97

M.

Madeley Union, Guardians of the Poor of (apps.), v. The Guardians of the Poor of the Bridgnorth Union (resps.)	68
Magarrill (app.) v. Overseers of Whitehaven and Preston Quarter (resps.)	701
Mansfield Union, Guardians of, v. Wright ..	105
Maude and others (apps.) v. Local Board of Baildon (resps.)	213
Melliss and Pim v. Shirley and Freemantle Local Board of Health	570
Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Overseers of Llaneilian.....	407, 491
Metropolitan Asylum District, Managers of, v. Hill and others	47
Metropolitan Board of Works, Solicitors of, v. Eaton; Cooke v. Solicitors of the Metropolitan Board of Works.....	330
Mews v. The Queen	132
Middlesex, Justices of, v. The Queen.....	432
Midland Railway Company v. Withington District Local Board	277
Minifie v. Banger	696
Moorhouse v. Linney and Ashton; Thorpe v. Linney and Ashton	644
Morrison, Wood and Co. (apps.) v. West Ham Gas Company (resps.)	600

N.

Newhaven Local Board v. Newhaven School Board	686
Newport Urban Authority v. Graham	55
Newton-in-Makerfield, Improvement Commissioners for the District of, v. Justices of the Peace for the County Palatine of Lancaster.....	455, 555
New Windsor, Mayor, &c., of, v. Stovell	444

O.

Over Darwen, Mayor, &c., of the Borough of, v. Justices of the Peace for the County of Lancaster	448, 472
Oxenhope District Local Board (apps.) v. The Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Bradford (resps.)	74

P.

Pearsall v. Brierley Hill Local Board	274
Peterborough, Corporation of (apps.) v. Overseers of the Parish of Wiltshorpe and the Assessment Committee of Stamford Union (resps.)	300

MAGISTRATES' CASES.

v

NAMES OF CASES.

Piot, ex parte	page 128
Plumstead District Local Board (apps.) v. Speckman (resp.)	331, 467
Pointon and another v. Hill	305
Portsmouth, Mayor, &c., of (acting as the Urban Sanitary Authority of the said Borough) v. Smith and others; Same v. Moody	7, 301, 661
Prison Commissioners v. The Clerk of the Peace for Middlesex	35

R.

Reg. on the prosecution of John Abbott v. Commissioners of Sewers for the Levels of Fobbing	395, 594
Reg. v. Biron and others	429
Reg. v. Brittleton and Bate	311
Reg. v. Brown (Samuel)	158
Reg. v. Butt	461
Reg. v. Carr and Wilson	79
Reg. v. Carter	318
Reg. v. Catholic Life and Fire Assurance and Annuity Institution Limited	207
Reg. on the prosecution of the Commis- sioners of the Treasury v. Justices of Middlesex	281
Reg. v. Cooke	368
Reg. v. Cox and Railton	486
Reg. v. De Banks	313
Reg. v. Dudley and Stephens	502
Reg. v. Eaton and others (Justices, &c.); Re John Sharpe; Re Mary Marriott	24
Reg. v. Edwards (Justice) and Eastern and Midland Railway Company	442
Reg. v. Flavell and another	513
Reg. v. Fletcher and others	425
Reg. v. Ganz	13
Reg. on the prosecution of Gay v. Powell and others, Justices of Truro	364
Reg. v. Gilham and others	557
Reg. on the prosecution of the Guardians of the Poor of the Edmonton Union (apps.) v. Guardians of the Poor of St Mary, Islington (resps.)	646
Reg. on the prosecution of the Guardians of Garstang Union v. Guardians of Preston Union	229
Reg. on the prosecution of the Guardians of the Poor of Madeley Union v. Guardians of the Poor of Bridgnorth Union	189
Reg. on the prosecution of the Guardians of the Poor of Merthyr Tydvil Union v. Guar- dians of the Poor of Stepney Union	355, 625
Reg. on the prosecution of the Guardians of St. Olave's Union v. Guardians of Heading- ton Union	320
Reg. on the prosecution of the Guardians of Wycombe Union v. Guardians of the Parish of St. Marylebone	319
Reg. v. Haslehurst	371
Reg. v. Hatts and Culfe	290
Reg. on the prosecution of Her Majesty's Treasury v. Mayor, &c., of the Borough of Maidenhead and Morris, Treasurer of the Borough	98
Reg. v. Hollis	281
Reg. v. G. Holmes	280
Reg. on the prosecution of Hooley v. Licensing Justices of Pirehill North, Staffordshire	392, 440

Reg. v. Horn (Frederick)	page 160
Reg. v. Jacobi and Hiller	15
Reg. v. Johnson (Annie)	339
Reg. v. Jones (Catherine)	336
Reg. v. Jones (Thomas)	209
Reg. v. Justices of Cheshire	327
Reg. v. Justices of Denbighshire	653
Reg. on the prosecution of the Justices of Devon v. The Local Government Board	640
Reg. v. Justices of Essex	235, 251
Reg. v. Justices of Lancashire	245
Reg. v. Justices of Middlesex	174
Reg. v. Lowe (Thomas)	209
Reg. v. Macdonald	590
Reg. v. Mallory	315
Reg. v. Manning and another	373
Reg. v. Marsham	298
Reg. v. Mayor, &c., of Wigan	566
Reg. v. Nash	163
Reg. v. Overseers of the Parish of Tonbridge	232, 379
Reg. on the prosecution of the Penarth Local Board of Health v. Local Government Board and George Taylor	184
Reg. v. Phillimore and others (Justices) and Pilling	388
Reg. on the prosecution of the Assessment Committee of the Poplar Union (resps.) v. East and West India Dock Company (apps.)	256, 376
Reg. v. Powell	462
Reg. v. Ramsay and Foote	196
Reg. v. Ratcliffe (Josiah)	79
Reg. v. Rawlins; Reg. v. Dibbin	562
Reg. v. Recorder of Sheffield	294
Reg. v. Ritson	337
Reg. v. Sampson	592
Reg. v. Sheil and another	329
Reg. on the complaint of T. D. Sibly v. White and others	241
Reg. v. Stephenson	536
Reg. v. Thompson and others (Justices) and Duncan	304, 323
Reg. on the prosecution of Sir Henry Tyler, M.P. v. Bradlaugh and others	87
Reg. v. Vane and others (Justices of Cum- berland); Re The Guardians of the Penrith Union v. The Overseers of the Parish of Castle Sowerby	44
Reg. v. Weil	115
Reg. v. Wellard	459
Reg. v. West Bromwich School Board	522
Reg. v. White and others	494
Reg. v. Whitfield and another	626
Rhodes v. Guardians of Pateley Bridge Union	393
Ridgway (app.) v. Ward (resp.)	452
Robinson v. Local Board for the District of Barton, Eccles, Winton, and Monton	83
Rotherham, Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of (apps.) v. Fullerton (resp.)	310
Rudland (app.) v. Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Sunderland (resps.)	576
Rumball (app.) v. Schmidt (resp.)	21

S.

Salford Union, Guardians of the Poor of v. Overseers of the Poor of the Township of Manchester	126
--	-----

NAMES OF CASES.

Sandgate Local Board (apps.) v. Pledge (resp.)	page 567
Seager (app.) v. White (resp.)	410
Sellors v. Matlock Local Board	588
Shelley (app.) v. Bethel (resp.)	289
Smith v. Lambeth Assessment Committee ...	123
Smith (app.) v. Mayor, &c., of Birmingham (resps.)	220
Snow (app.) v. Hill (resp.)	614
Spackman v. Plumstead Board of Works ...	619
Summers and others v. Moorhouse and others	427

T.

Tanner (app.) v. Carter (resp.); Banks (app.) v. Mansell (resp.)	697
Teuliere and others v. Vestry of St. Mary Abbots, Kensington	670
Tippett (app.) v. Hart (resp.)	157
Todd v. Robinson	493

U.

United Land Company v. Tottenham Local Board	416
--	-----

V.

Vinter (app.) v. Hind (resp.)	168
-------------------------------------	-----

W.

Wandsworth District Board of Works v. United Kingdom Telephone Company Limited	page 382
Warrington Waterworks Company (apps.) v. Longshaw (resp.)	26
Waye (app.) v. Thompson (resp.)	650
Weekes (app.) v. King (resp.)	617
Weguelin (app.) v. Wyatt (resp.)	599
West Ham, Churchwardens of, v. Iles	243
West Lancashire Railway Company (apps.) v. Iddon (resp.)	285
West Middlesex Waterworks Company v. Coleman; Coleman v. West Middlesex Waterworks Company	572
Wheatcroft v. Local Board of Matlock	560
Williams (app.) v. Powning (resp.)	203
Winyard (app.) v. Toogood (resp.); Hance (app.) v. Fortnum (resp.)	152
Wolstanton and Burslem Union (apps.) v. Northwich Union (resps.)	11
Wootton (app.) v. Rolfe (resp.)	63

Y.

Yates (app.) v. Chorlton-upon-Medlock Union (resp.); Almond (app.) v. Same (resp.)	211
Yates (plaintiff in error) v. The Queen	540
Young and Co. v. Mayor and Corporation of Leamington	224

INDEX TO SUBJECTS OF CASES.

ABDUCTION OF CHILD.
(See Criminal Law .)
ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION.
Bonds stolen from a British ship in a foreign river
—Felonious receiving	page 79
ADULTERATION.
Gin more than thirty-five degrees under proof—
—Notice posted up	151
Skim milk—Deficiency of butter fat—38 & 39 Vict.
c. 63	530
AMBULANCE STATION.
Deposit of plans and sections, with notice of its erection to district surveyor not required under sect. 3 of Metropolitan Building Act 1855, if structurally disconnected with any building, and from which the public are excluded	657
ANNUAL TURNPIKE ACTS CONTINUANCE ACT 1865.
Highways—Encroachment—Limitation of time for conviction	586
APPEAL.
(See Poor Rate .)
ARBITRATION.
Local Government Board—Power of Board to state a special case—Reference by consent—Common Law Procedure Act 1854	56
ARCHITECT'S CERTIFICATE
"General line of buildings"—Magistrate no jurisdiction to decide, being bound by architect's certificate	381
On summons for breach of sect. 75 of Metropolis Management Amendment Act, as to "general line of buildings," architect's certificate conclusive—
Magistrate no jurisdiction.....	467
Effect of, on hearing of a summons for alleged offence of erecting a building beyond the "general line of buildings"	619
ASSAULT.
Parliament—Power to exclude member—Justification—Jurisdiction of courts of law.....	108
ASSESSMENT.
Basis of, for water rate—Rent—Annual value—
Gross value—Rateable value	90
Poor rate—Bookstands at railway stations	123
Poor rate—Owner rated instead of occupier—House
let at greater rent than 20l.	page 243
Water rate—Basis of assessment—Annual value—
Rateable value.....	281
(See Water Rate .)
BACCARAT.
Common gaming house—Unlawful gaming—Proprietary club—33 Hen. 8, c. 9—8 & 9 Vict. c.
109—17 & 18 Vict. c. 38	341
BAKER.
Sale and delivery of bread—Loaves sold and weighed at shop in customer's presence—Delivered at customer's house by baker's cart at customer's request—Cart not provided with beam and scales
659
BANKRUPTCY.
Notices in London Gazette —Cuttings from Gazette
not receivable as evidence of notice.....	209
BASTARDY.
Custody of infant	163
Jurisdiction—Service of summons in Scotland—
Bastardy Laws Amendment Act 1872.....	304
Service of summons—Jurisdiction of justices—
Bastardy Laws Amendment Act 1872.....	323
Issue of summons to putative father by a justice of the peace other than the justice to whom the application was made, not an illegality nullifying
the order	425
Voluntary witness—Refusal to answer questions—
Power of justices to commit to prison under sect.
70 of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101.....	513
Order on putative father obtained by guardians—Right of mother to order more than twelve months after birth of child	615
BEER LICENCE.
Consumption off the premises—Ground of refusal to renew—Discretion of justices—1 Will. 4, c. 64
—45 & 46 Vict. c. 34.....	76
BETTING HOUSES ACT 1853.
"Person having the care or management of" houses,
&c. kept for gaming—Bicycle match	368
Place kept or used for betting—Moving about in inclosed field	614
BILL IN PARLIAMENT.
Private Bill containing clauses imposing burden on rates—Expenses of opposing Bill properly charged by overseers in parish accounts	494

BILL OF SALE.

Farming stock subject to—Onus of proof of consent of bill of sale holder—False pretences—Representation of ownershippage 592

BIGAMY.

Cohabitation—Continuance of doubtful—Presumption of law 209

BIRMINGHAM WATERWORKS ACT 1855.

(See Water Rate.)

BIRTH SETTLEMENT.

(See Poor Law.)

BOND.

Of rate collector—Default of collector—Loss to the parish—Negligence of overseers 105

BREAD.

Sale of—Baker not provided with scales and weights—Delivery from a cart at customer's house in execution of previous order—6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 37, s. 7 452

(See Baker.)

BREWING.

Payment of duty—Exemption—Occupation of brewer—Inland Revenue Act 1880 157

BRIDGE.

Railway company constructing bridge over a river with opening span not bound to open bridge for a barge with a mast that could be lowered 285

BRISTOL WATERWORKS COMPANY ACTS.

(See Water Rate.)

BUILDINGS.

General line of—Frontage and abutment—Magistrate's order—Architect's certificate—Injunction to restrain demolition of buildings projecting beyond certified line 165
Right to prescribe general line of, after commencement of building—Injunction to pull down buildings 686

BURIAL BOARD.

Poor rate—Sect. 12 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, not applicable to a district having separate burial ground, but not separately maintaining its own poor 232
District having a separate burial board—18 & 19 Vict. c. 128 379

BURNING DEAD BODY.

Interfering with coroner—Jurisdiction of coroner—Misdemeanour 536

BYE-LAW.

Validity of—Playing concertina through streets of city—Conviction for 364 Unreasonable, under sect. 157 of Public Health Act 1875 576

CARETAKER.

(See Rating Acts.)

CHURCH RATES ABOLITION ACT 1868.

(See Ecclesiastical Law.)

CLERK TO DISTRICT LOCAL BOARD.

If a shareholder in a gas company which supplies gas to the district, is an officer "interested in" a contract made with the board, and liable to penalties under sect. 193 of Public Health Act 1875page 493

COHABITATION.

(See Bigamy.)

COMMON GAMING HOUSE.

Unlawful gaming—Baccarat—Proprietary club—Proprietor 341

COMMON LODGING HOUSE.

(See Local Board.)

COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS.

Powers of, to take land for improvements under Metropolis Improvement Acts 252 Liability to repair sea wall—Damage caused by extraordinary tide—Evidence of liability—Presentments—Commissioners for Levels of Fobbing owning land in level—Interest 594

COMPANY.

Waterworks—Injunction—Right to cut off supply—Insufficient rate tendered in advance 526

COMPANIES ACT 1862.

Penalty for not forwarding list of members to Registrar of Joint Stock Companies—Continuing offence 207

COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE.

Dispute as to liability—Public Health Act 1875... 430
Damage sustained by raising level of street—Settlement by arbitration—Right to have amount assessed before question of liability determined 274

CONSPIRACY.

(See Criminal Law.)

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) ACTS 1868, 1878, 1879.

Rating—Market tolls—Tolls for foreign animals landing at a market wharf 171
Action against constable for wrongful conversion of cattle—Local venue—Notice of action ...362, 525

CONTRACTS NOT UNDER SEAL.

For more than 50*l*. not valid under sect. 174 of Public Health Act 1875 224

COPYRIGHT (DESIGNS, &c.) ACT 1842

Article in two parts—Registration mark on one part only—Piracy 187

CORRUPT PRACTICES (MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS) ACT 1872.

Election court—Expenses of court—Order as to costs—Liability of borough 98

"COUNTY"

Definition of, in Highways and Locomotive Act 1878 and Highway Act 1872 448, 472

CRIMINAL LAW.

Rape—Child between twelve and thirteen years old—39 & 40 Vict. c. 94 79
Felonious receiving—Bonds stolen from a British ship in a foreign river—Admiralty jurisdiction... 79

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

Libel—Newspaper—Charge of libel not contained in original summons withdrawn before police magistrate—Counts subsequently added to indictment—Consent of court—Vexatious Indictments Amendment Act 1867, and Newspaper Libels Act 1881	page 87
Extradition—"Apprehension"—Detention of person already in custody— Habeas corpus —Court of Appeal—Jurisdiction	115
Foreign warrant—Warrant of committal—Sufficiency of description of offence—Extradition Act 1870—Treaty with France 1876	128
Attempt to murder—Taking a pistol from pocket—Pistol seized by bystander	158
False pretences—Previous conviction—Term of penal servitude—Amendment of sentence	160
False pretence—Posting letter containing pretence—Obtaining money thereby—Jurisdiction	280
Larceny—Ringing the changes—Money obtained by a trick	281
Confession—Admissibility of evidence—Inducement to confess	290
"Criminal prisoner" within the meaning of Prisons Act 1865	291
Husband and wife—Wife indicted for stealing husband's property—Admissibility of husband's evidence	311
Indictment for receiving goods knowing them to be stolen—Evidence of guilty knowledge	318
Receiving stolen property—Possession of other property stolen within preceding twelve months	318
Obtaining goods by false pretences—Necessity for proof that goods were delivered on faith of false pretence	336
Receiving goods knowing them to have been stolen—Evidence—Account given by the prisoner	387
Abduction of child—Evidence of unlawful detaining—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 25	399
Conspiracy—joint indictment against two—Conviction of one only—New trial	373
Indecent exposure—Public place—Witnesses of offence trespassing at time of commission—Place to which public have access, but not legally	459
Falsification of accounts—Making and concurring in making false entry—False memorandum handed by collector to employer's cash clerk—38 & 39 Vict. c. 24	461
False pretences—Obtaining premium on insurance policy by suppression of material facts—Misrepresentation by conduct	462
Rogue and vagabond—Frequenting highway with intent to commit felony	498
Murder—Extreme necessity of hunger—Justification—Special verdict—Formal addition to— Certiorari	502
Coroner—Interference with—Obstruction of course of justice—Burning body after appointment and before inquest	536
Larceny by bailee—Contract by infant—Hire and purchase system—Conversion of hired goods during bailment—Special property	590
False pretences—Sale of farm stock—Stock subject to bill of sale—Onus of proof of consent of bill of sale holder	592

CRIMINAL LUNATIC.

Maintenance of—Prison Act 1877	132
--------------------------------------	-----

CRIMINAL PROSECUTION.

(See Libel.)

DAMAGE.

Caused by extraordinary tide—Liability to repair a wall—Evidence of liability	395
---	-----

DERIVATIVE SETTLEMENT.

(See Poor Law.)

DESIGNS.

Copyright—Article in two parts—Registration mark on one part only—Piracy	page 187
--	----------

DIVIDED PARISHES AND POOR LAW AMENDMENT ACT 1876.

Settlement—Person above the age of sixteen—Birthplace, or parent's settlement	646
---	-----

(See Poor Law.)

DISTRICT LOCAL BOARD.

Constituted a borough—Property vesting in the borough	38
---	----

DOCK COMPANY.

Diminution of profits during preceding twelve months is evidence of alteration in value, but not sufficient to establish an alteration within the meaning of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 67, ss. 46, 47	256
Diminution of profits during preceding twelve months admissible evidence of alteration in rateable value	376

EAST LONDON WATERWORKS COMPANY'S ACT 1853.

(See Company.)

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

Local Act—Rate for ecclesiastical purposes—Contract for valuable consideration—Compulsory Church Rates Abolition Act 1868	42
---	----

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACTS 1870 AND 1876.

Attendance order—Bye-laws—Enforcement of, where parent resides in union extending into several counties—Jurisdiction of justices	24
School-owning district—Contributory district—School attendance committee—Sharing burden of expenses	44
Child prohibited from full-time employment—Child above the age of thirteen—Attendance order—Construction of statute	152
Power to impose home lessons—Detention of child at school after school hours	475

(See Poor Rate.)

EXTRADITION ACT 1870.

Fugitive criminal subject of a state other than the state requiring his surrender—Foreign warrant—Sufficiency of warrant— Habeas Corpus Extradition Act 1870—Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands	13
Foreign warrant—Crime sufficiently stated—Goods obtained by false pretences sent from one country to another—English law of local venue	15
"Apprehension"—Detention of person already in custody—Court of Appeal—Jurisdiction— Habeas corpus	115
Treaty with France 1876—Foreign warrant—Sufficiency of description of offence—"Fraud by an agent"	128

EVIDENCE.

Admissibility of parol, to explain manifest ambiguity in voting paper at municipal election	427
---	-----

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Notice of action—Larceny Act—Inaccuracy as to date of arrest—Validity of notice—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 page 41

FALSE PRETENCES.

(See Criminal Law.)

FALSIFICATION OF ACCOUNTS.

(See Criminal Law.)

FELONIOUS RECEIVING.

(See Criminal Law.)

FISHERY DISTRICT.

River Tyne—Tributary—Waterworks reservoir—Certificate of Secretary of State—Salmon Fisheries Acts 1861-1873—Freshwater Fisheries Act 1878 143

FISH-FRYING.

Though an offensive business, is not a noxious or offensive trade within the meaning of sect. 112 of Public Health Act 1875 496

FRESHWATER FISHERIES ACT 1878.

(See Fishery District.)

FUGITIVE CRIMINAL.

(See Extradition.)

GAME.

(See Poaching.)

GAMING.

Railway carriage—Open place to which public have access 97
 "Person having the care or management of" house, &c., kept for—Bicycle match 368

GASWORKS CLAUSES ACT 1871.

Conviction for laying pipe without consent of undertakers—Notice—Absence of fraud or waste 600

GENERAL LINE OF BUILDINGS.

New street—Vacant site—House at corner of two streets—Order of magistrate—Service 515

HABEAS CORPUS EXTRADITION ACT 1870.

Fugitive criminal subject of a state other than the state requiring surrender—Foreign warrant—Sufficiency of warrant—Treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands 13

HASTINGS LOCAL ACT.

Salvation Army—Disturbance of public peace—Singing, shouting, and cornet playing in public streets 413

HIGHWAY.

Vestry—Surveyors of highways—Flap placed in highway to protect water meter—Injury caused by dangerous condition of flap—Liability of vestry 37
 Highway rate—Public works of paving 74
 Urban district—Part of parish excluded—Repairs of highways in excluded part—Rates for—Highway Act 1835—Public Health Act 1875 184

Dissolution of highway district under sect. 39 of Highway Act 1862—Effect of on highway board—Existence of highway for certain purposes after dissolution—Justices declining to hear respondents—Mandamus to justices to hear and determine appeal page 235
 Dissolution of highway district—Continuance of board—Order obtained by board—Appeal against such order 251
 Turnpike roads—Liability to repair—41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 13 262
 Liability to fence—Lands abutting on the highway—Rotherham Borough Extension and Sewerage Act 1879 310
 Jurisdiction of justices—Highway and Locomotives (Amendment) Act 1878 327
 Highway Act 1835—Local authority—Expense of diverting highway—Employment of solicitor by local board of health 416
 Maintenance of main roads—Contribution by county authority—Definition of word "county" in Highways Act 1878 and Highway Act 1862 448, 472
 Expiration of turnpike trusts in 1877—Disturbed road—Cesser of turnpike road—Contribution from county to repair—Newton District Improvement Act 1855 455
 Salary of clerk to highway board, paid out of highway or school board fund, although collected as a poor rate, no disqualification for serving as guardian 562
 Encroachment—Limitation of time for conviction—Annual Turnpike Acts Continuance Act 1865 586
 Main road—Road ceasing to be turnpike road after 1870—Order declaring road ought to cease to be main road—Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act 1878 640
 Repair of streets—Steam rollers—Injury to gas-pipes—Statutory rights 668
 Turnpike road—Private owners—Dedication to public—Tolls—"Highway repairable by the inhabitants at large" 674

HIRE AND PURCHASE SYSTEM.

Contract by infant—Conversion of hired goods during bailment—Larceny—Special property 590

HOME LESSONS.

Master of board school not authorised by Elementary Education Acts in setting lessons to be prepared at home by the children, and in detaining child after school hours for not doing them 475

HOMICIDE BY NECESSITY.

(See Criminal Law.)

HOUSES IN SUCCESSION.

(See Registration of Voters.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Wife chargeable to parish—Maintenance by husband—Payment towards cost of relief 286
 Wife indicted for stealing husband's property—Admissibility of husband's evidence 311

ILLEGAL PRACTICE.

Printed placard at municipal election posted without printer's name—Order of High Court excusing illegal practice, there being no want of good faith 534

INCOME TAX.

Not payable in respect of building used as assize courts and police stations—16 & 17 Vict. c. 34... 117

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

INDECENT EXPOSURE.
(See Criminal Law .)
INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS ACT 1866 AND AMENDMENT ACT 1880.
Child under fourteen residing in a house frequented by prostitutes may be sent to an industrial school, though living with her mother in such a house	page	150
INHABITED HOUSE DUTY.
"Servant or other person"—Clerk dwelling with family and servant on the premises—Care-taker for protection—Exemption	63
Tenement occupied solely for business—"Clerk" dwelling in the house for its protection	64
(See Revenue .)
INLAND REVENUE ACT 1880.
Brewing—Payment of duty—Exemption	157
JERVIS'S ACT.
Practice—Rule for mandamus —Concurrent remedies—Applicant in person	429
Compensation—Settlement by two justices of the amount	442
JURISDICTION.
Prisoner properly tried and convicted in England for obtaining money by false pretence by means of letter posted in England to a person in France	280
JUSTICES.
Jurisdiction of, in enforcement of bye-laws under Elementary Education Act 1876	24
Discretion of, to refuse to renew beer licence	76
Jurisdiction of, to grant licence to new tenant where former occupier neglected to apply—9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 14	245
Jurisdiction of, in bastardy—Service of summons—Summary Jurisdiction (Process) Act 1881	328
Jurisdiction of, to make an order upon highway authority for repair of highways under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77	327
Power of, under sect. 70 of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, to commit to prison witness refusing to answer questions in bastardy proceedings	513
Duties of, as to enforcing general district rate	567
Examination of lunatic by—Order sending to asylum—16 & 17 Vict. c. 97	626
LANDLORD AND TENANT.
Declaration by lodger—Jurisdiction of magistrates to make an order for the restoration of the goods—Lodgers' Goods Protection Act 1871	696
LANDS CLAUSES ACT 1845.
Compensation—Settlement by two justices of the amount—Time	442
LARCENY.
Ringing the changes—Money obtained by a trick	281
Embezzlement—Sale by person authorised to sell and fraudulent appropriation by him of the price	313
(See False Imprisonment .)
LARCENY BY BAILEE.
(See Criminal Law .)
LIBEL.
What constitutes blasphemous—Newspaper—Criminal intention in the proprietor	197
Criminal prosecution—Criminal information—Fist of Director of Public Prosecutions		page 540
(See Criminal Law .)
LICENCE.
To sell excisable liquors—Occupier about to quit premises neglecting to apply for licence—New tenant or occupier	245
Licensed premises—Constable's demand to enter—Excise licences only—Right to refuse entry	307
Appeal to quarter sessions—Off licence—Licensing Act 1828—Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869—Beer Dealers' Retail Licences Act 1880—Amendment Act 1882	176
Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881—Six-day licence	227
Selling liquor at unlicensed place—Wife licensed—Husband taking liquor to an unlicensed house to be raffled for—Whether husband an admissible witness	410
Selling intoxicating liquor to a drunken person—Conviction for—Knowledge of condition of customer	414
LIGHTHOUSE.
Rateability of, to poor rate—Beneficial occupation	491
LOCAL BOARD.
Powers of—"New streets"—Bringing forward buildings—Public Health Acts 1848 and 1875—Local Government Acts 1858 and 1861	83
Sewers—Adjoining local sewers—Increase of sewage	98
Common lodging-house—Resolution to register—38 & 39 Vict. c. 55	563
Resignation of members—Number less than quorum—Transaction of business by—Filling up vacancies—Lapse of board—Acts done by irregularly constituted board	686
LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACTS 1858 AND 1861.
"New streets"—Bringing forward buildings	83
LODGERS' GOODS PROTECTION ACT 1871.
The protection afforded by the Act does not extend to the occupation of premises for business purposes only	367
LONDON GAZETTE.
Cuttings from, not receivable as evidence of notice in bankruptcy	209
LUNATIC.
Examination of, by justices—Order sending to asylum—16 & 17 Vict. c. 97	626
MAINTENANCE BY HUSBAND OF PAUPER WIFE.
(See Poor Law .)
MANDAMUS.
To justices to hear and determine appeal from quarter sessions after dissolution of highway district	235
To metropolitan police magistrate to state a case—Meaning of "street"—Questions of fact and of law	329
Refusal of justices to hear case—Rule to show cause	388
Practice—Return of unconditional compliance—Plea to—Rules of Supreme Court 1883	392, 440
MARKET.
Tolls for foreign animals landing at a market wharf—Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts 1869 and 1878	171

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT 1854.

"Beneficial occupation" of lighthouse—Assessment to poor rate—Part of tower used as telegraph station	page 407
---	----------

MERSEY DOCKS ACTS.

(See Poor Rate.)

METALLIFEROUS MINES REGULATION ACT 1872.

(See Mine.)

METROPOLIS IMPROVEMENT ACTS.

Powers of Commissioners of Sewers to take lands for improvements—Owner's right of pre-emption	252
Widening street—Part of building required—Power of vestry to take whole	670

METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS 1855 AND 1862.

Paving expenses—New street on bridge over railway—Land bounding or abutting on	32
Metropolitan main drainage—Injunction—Sewers—Increase of sewage	93
General line of buildings—Old buildings—Injunction to restrain demolishing buildings projecting beyond certified line	165
Person interested in contract made with vestry ceases to be member of vestry—Action for penalties	250
"New street"—Land bounding or abutting on—Paving expenses	266
"Soil, rubbish, or filth"—Sweeping mud into sewer	330
Local government—"General line of buildings"—Jurisdiction of magistrate—Street—Row of houses	331
Telephone—Overhead wires—Injunction—Property of district board in street—Meaning of words "vest" and "street"	382
"General line of buildings"—Jurisdiction of magistrate—Architect's decision—Certificate of architect conclusive	467
Order under seal of district board requiring overseers to levy rate—Validity of rate	476
General line of buildings—New street—Vacant site—Order of magistrate—Reduction into writing	515
Foundations—Site—Removal of matter below level of bottom of foundations—41 & 42 Vict. c. 32	602
"General line of buildings"—Effect of certificate of superintending architect	619
Ambulance station—Public building—Notice to district surveyor—Deposit of plans and sections	657

MINE.

"Skip" or open box—Miners using skip without cover—Offence against Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act 1872	183
--	-----

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION ACTS 1835 AND 1882.

Election petition—Amendment of petition—Jurisdiction of High Court	193
Validity of bye-law—Conviction for playing concertina through streets of city	364
Election of town councillors—Four candidates elected—Three only petitioned against—Mayor's allowance of objections appealed against	420
Evidence—Voting paper—Admissibility of parol evidence to explain manifest ambiguity in	427
Town councillor—Resignation—Withdrawal	566
Election of councillors—Nomination paper—Signature of assenting burgess—Inaccurate description on burgess-roll	644

Municipal election—Four vacancies—Petition against three only of the candidates returned on a ground affecting validity of the whole election	page 665
---	----------

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

Election court—Expenses of court—Court of record—Order as to costs—Liability of borough—Certificate of commissioners of Treasury	98
Nomination paper—Situation of property in respect of which nominating burgess is enrolled on burgess roll	179
Nomination paper—Statement of name of candidate—Situation of property in respect of which nominating burgess is enrolled on burgess-roll	296
Four vacancies—Petition against three successful candidates—Subscription to several nomination papers—Objections improperly allowed	531
Illegal practice—Printed placard posted without printer's name—No want of good faith—Excuse by High Court	534

MURDER, ATTEMPT TO.

(See Criminal Law.)

NEW BUILDINGS.

Conviction for erecting without notice—Public Health Act 1875	408
---	-----

NEWSPAPER LIBEL AND REGISTRATION.

Blasphemous libel—What constitutes—Criminal intention in proprietor	196
Fiat of Director of Public Prosecutions—Criminal information	540

(See Criminal Law.)

"NEW STREETS."

Powers of local board—Bringing forward buildings—Public Health Acts 1848 and 1875—Local Government Acts 1858 and 1861	83
---	----

NEWTON DISTRICT IMPROVEMENT ACT 1855.

(See Highways.)

NEW TRIAL.

Grounds for granting—Admissibility of evidence—Costs of previous trial	47
--	----

NOMINATION PAPER.

In municipal election, invalid, not being in the form set forth in schedule to the Municipal Elections Act 1875	179
---	-----

NUISANCE.

Pollution of stream by sewage—Prescriptive right to use sewer—Rural sanitary authority—Riparian proprietor	1
Iron company—Accumulation of cinders within sect. 91 of Public Health Act 1875, though not injurious to health	147
Erection of urinal—Alteration by local authority of level of street—Injunction—Compensation	588
Chimney sending forth black smoke—Furnace constructed to consume smoke	617

OVERSEERS.

Status and duties of—Not entitled to oppose Bill in Parliament and charge costs of opposition upon poor rate—Not trustees for the poor, but statutable officers with duties to keep pariah books, collect rates, &c.	241
---	-----

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

Expenses of opposing private Bill which would have imposed a burden on the rates, properly charged by overseers in parish accounts ... page 494
 Not justified in refusal to alter valuation list, on account of omission of Union Assessment Committee to give notice of their meeting 529

PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION.

Assault—Power to exclude member—Justification—Jurisdiction of courts of law 108
 Registration of voters—Borough vote—Description of qualification—Sufficiency of, under Representation of People Act 1867—Power of revising barrister to amend description 216
 Franchise—County vote—Occupiers list of voters—Description of qualification—Power of amendment—"Tenement"—"Dwelling house"—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878 694, 696
 Borough voter—Inhabitant Occupier—Cambridge and Oxford boroughs—Rooms in college—Break of residence—Reform Act 1832—Cambridge Award Act 1856 (local Act) 697
 Occupation franchise—Industrial trainer of workhouse—Restrictions—Master living in same house—Representation of the People Act 1884 700
 Borough voter—Parochial relief—Disqualification—Borough voter—Receipt of alms as occupier of almshouse—Disqualification 701, 702 Occupation franchise—Soldier living in barracks by virtue of service—Inhabiting separate rooms in block—Soldier of rank inhabiting other rooms in same block 704
 Soldier living in barracks by virtue of service—Occupying separate room—Break of residence—Actual or constructive inhabitation 709
 Revision of lists—Revising barrister's power of amendment—Description of qualification—Houses in succession—Omission of one of three houses occupied successively 607
 Mistake in nature of qualification—Mistake in description of qualification 612

PAYING EXPENSES.

Right of action for—Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847 7
 New street or bridge over railway—Land bounding or abutting on—Parapet wall 32

PAUPER REMOVAL.

(See Poor Law.)

PAUPER SAILOR.

(See Poor Law.)

PAUPER SETTLEMENT.

(See Poor Law.)

POACHING.

Act for prevention of (25 & 26 Vict. c. 14)—Person seen by constable with rabbits in possession on highway—Flight of accused—Seizure of rabbits 200 yards from highway—Validity of information and conviction under sect. 2 673

POOR LAW.

Removal of pauper—Settlement by residence under sixteen years of age—Derived settlement—39 & 40 Vict. c. 61 11
 Derivative settlement—Birth settlement—Wife, and children under sixteen—Father having acquired no settlement—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 69

Settlement—Illegitimate pauper—Idiot—Residence for three years—Divided Parishes Act 1876 page 126
 Removal—Wife and children—Derivative settlement of husband and father—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 189
 Pauper lunatic—Married woman—Removal to husband's settlement—Consent of husband—Wife certified to be proper person to be kept in workhouse 229
 Wife chargeable—Payment by husband towards cost of relief—Limit of amount to be ordered ... 290
 Settlement—Illegitimate child under sixteen—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 819
 Paupers deemed to be settled in the parish in which they were born, with the meaning of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 35 320
 Wife chargeable—Maintenance by husband—Payment towards cost of relief—Amount to be ordered 322
 Settlement by residence—Pauper a sailor in the mercantile marine, and without any independent home 355
 Select vestry—Workhouse and industrial schools—Power to pay Roman Catholic clergyman for religious instruction 371
 Delay in going to trial—Proceedings prosecuted with due diligence—Poor Law Boards (Payment of Debts) Act 1859 393
 Settlement by residence—Child—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 509
 Settlement by residence—Pauper a sailor—39 & 40 Vict. c. 61 625
 Settlement—Person above the age of sixteen—Birthplace, or parent's settlement—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 ... 646

POOR LAW ORDER 1867.

Power under, to pay Roman Catholic clergymen for religious ministrations 371

POOR RATE.

Buildings occupied by corporations for public purposes—Restriction on profits—Rateable value 54
 Assessment of bookstands at railway stations 123
 Bill in Parliament casting burden on poor rate—Overseers opposing Bill by authority of vestry—Right of overseers to oppose Bill and charge costs on poor rate 241
 Owner rated instead of occupier—50 Geo. 3, c. 12—House let at greater rent than 20l. 243
 Telegraph company—Rateability of overhead wires—43 Eliz. c. 2 357
 Rateability of telephone wires, poles, and attachments 389
 Lighthouse—Tower of lighthouse used as telegraph station—Beneficial occupation—Mersey Docks Acts 491
 School board—Lands owned or rented by the school board—Elementary Education Act 1870 522
 Salary paid out of poor rate—Disqualification of guardian—5 & 6 Vict. c. 57—Clerk of highway board—Clerk of school board—Not disqualified 562
 Telephone wires, poles, and attachments—Occupation—Rateability 597
 Appeal—Notice—Valuation list amended by assessment committee—Appeal without further notice against rate on amended valuation list 653
 (See Burial Board.)

PRACTICE.

It is irregular to make individual members of an incorporated vestry defendants for the sole purpose of making them pay costs 161
 Municipal election petition—Amendment of petition—Jurisdiction of High Court 193

Appeal—Case stated pursuant to agreement and to judge's order—Decision of Queen's Bench is an "order" within the meaning of the Judicature Act 1873, s. 19page	301
Refusal of justices to hear case—Rule to show cause— Mandamus	388
Mandamus —Return of unconditional compliance—Plea to—Rules of Supreme Court 1883.....	392
Return of unconditional compliance to writ of mandamus —Rules of Supreme Court 1883.....	440
PRISONS ACT 1877.
Land purchase by prison authority before Act—Vesting of land in Prison Commissioners.....	35
Maintenance of criminal lunatic.....	132
Superannuation of officers—Liability of county for—Prisons Act 1877.....	174, 281
Superannuation—Compensation—Apportionment...	432
PRIVATE THEATRE.
Public performance of stage plays without licence—Performances for a charity.....	289
PROJECTING BUILDING.
Continuing offence—Limitation of summary remedy—38 & 39 Vict. c. 55.....	21
PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS 1848 AND 1875.
Nuisance—Pollution of stream by sewage—Prescriptive right to use sewer—Rural sanitary authority—Riparian proprietor.....	1
District local board constituted a borough—Property vesting in the borough—Right to transfer Bank Annuities.....	38
Houses "adjoining or abutting" on a street—No access to street—38 & 39 Vict. c. 55.....	55
Highway rate—Public works of paving.....	74
Powers of local board—"New streets"—Bringing forward buildings.....	83
Sewers—Metropolitan main drainage—Increase of sewage—Injunction.....	93
Expense of paving street—Appeal to local government authority.....	184
Nuisance—Iron company—Accumulation of cinders within sect. 91 of Public Health Act 1875, though not injurious to health.....	147
Meat unfit for food of man—Exposure for sale—Seizure after sale—Liability of seller.....	168
Urban district—Part of parish excluded—Rates for repairs of highways in excluded part.....	184
Conversion into "new street"—Sufficient evidence of intention.....	203
Summary proceedings against owners to recover expense of works under sect. 150—Road or street—Definition of "street" in sect. 4—Finding of fact by justices.....	213
Contract not under seal—Corporation—Urban Sanitary Authority.....	224
Compensation—Settlement by arbitration—Right to have amount assessed before question of liability determined.....	274
Urban authority—Expense of repairing street—Payment by mistake—Action for money received—Appeal.....	277, 294
Bye-laws—Notice of intention to erect new buildings and send plans—Conviction for erecting new buildings without notice.....	403
Compensation for damage—Arbitration—The question of liability should be raised in an action on the award.....	430
Local board of health—Premises beyond limit of district—Agreement for connecting sewer—Drainage of houses to be hereafter erected.....	444
Sewer—Made for private profit—Drain intended to be connected with houses built, though not vested in local authority, is a "sewer" within the definition in sect. 4 of Public Health Act 1875.....page	474
Sewering private street—Cost exceeding 50l.—Contract not under seal—Recovery of amount apportioned from frontagers.....	479
Penal action—Officer of board—"Concerned or interested in" a contract.....	493
Noxious or offensive trade—Business of fish-frying Watercourse—Meaning of word "sewer".....	496
General district rate—Case stated by justices—Duties of justices as to enforcing general district rate.....	567
Contract not under seal—Ratification—Officer interested in contract—Effect of statutory penalty.....	570
Local government—Urban sanitary authority—Bye-laws unreasonable—Width and construction of new street.....	576
Erection of urinal—Nuisance—Alteration by local authority of level of street—Interference with adjoining owner's right of access to premises abutting on street—Injunction—Compensation...	588
Chimney sending forth black smoke—Furnace constructed to consume smoke.....	617
Unsound meat—Punishment of offender—Admissibility of evidence of unsoundness before justice empowered to convict.....	650
Turnpike road—Private owners—Dedication to public—"Street"—"Highway repairable by the inhabitants at large".....	674
Building line—Right to prescribe after commencement of building—Injunction to pull down buildings.....	686
PUBLIC HOUSE.
Licence to sell excisable liquors—Occupier about to quit premises—Neglect to apply for licence—9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 14.....	245
RAILWAYS CLAUSES ACTS 1845 AND 1863.
Bridge with an opening span—Detention of vessel—Barge with mast which could be lowered.....	285
Settlement by two justices of amount of compensation for lands injuriously affected.....	442
RAPE.
(See Criminal Law .)
RATING ACTS.
Liability to be rated for relief of the poor—Care-taker—Servant—Tenant.....	211
Assessment—Appeal—Agreement to pay old rates—Order of judge—Jurisdiction.....	298
Water rate—Basis of assessment—Annual value—Rateable value.....	271
Poor rate—Lighthouse—Part of tower used as telegraph station—"Beneficial occupation"—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.....	407
Validity of rate—Order under seal of district board requiring overseers to levy rate.....	479
Duties of justices as to enforcing general district rate.....	567
Poor rate—Notice of objection—Valuation list amended by assessment committee—Appeal without further notice against rate on amended valuation list.....	653
RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS.
Evidence of guilty knowledge.....	315
Guilty knowledge—Possession of other property stolen within preceding twelve months.....	318
(See Criminal Law .)

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.

- Parliamentary—Revision of lists—Revising barrister's power of amendment—Description of qualification—Houses in succession.....page 607
 Mistake in nature and in description of qualification 612
 (See Parliament.)

REVENUE.

- Inhabited house duty—Business premises—Care-taker a widow, her son sleeping on premises for increased safety—Liability to duty—Customs, &c. Acts 1878 and 1881 599

REVISING BARRISTER.

- Power of, to amend description of qualification under sub-sect. 12 of sect. 28 of 41 & 42 Vict. c. 26 216

RIVER TYNE.

- Waterworks reservoir not a tributary of—Certificate of Secretary of State 143

ROGUE AND VAGABOND.

(See Criminal Law.)

RULES OF SUPREME COURT 1883.

- Return of unconditional compliance to a writ of mandamus—Plea to—Practice 440

SALE OF FOOD AND DRUGS ACTS 1875 AND 1879.

- Tradesman supplying different article from that demanded by purchaser 641
 (See Adulteration.)

SALMON FISHERIES ACTS 1861 TO 1873.

(See Fishery District.)

SALVATION ARMY.

- Unlawful assembly—Assembly of persons for lawful purpose—Knowledge by them that such assembly would cause others to commit a breach of the peace—Liability for such breach 58
 Disturbance of public peace—Singing, shouting, and cornet playing in public streets—Hastings Local Act 413

SEA WALL.

- Damage caused by extraordinary tide—Liability to repair—Evidence of liability—Commissioners for Levels of Fobbing owning land in level—Interest 594

SETTLEMENT OF PAUPER.

(See Poor Law.)

SEWERS.

- Drain intended to be connected with houses built, though not vested in local authority, is a "sewer" within the definition in sect. 4 of Public Health Act 1875 474
 Meaning of word—Watercourse—Public Health Act 1875 560 Liability to repair a sea wall—Damage caused by extraordinary tide—Evidence of liability—Presentments—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 22 395

SKIM MILK.

- Adulteration—Deficiency of butter fat 530

SPECIAL VERDICT.

(See Criminal Law.)

STAGE PLAYS.

- Keeping a house for public performance of—Performances for a charity—6 & 7 Vict. c. 68, s. 2 page 289

STEAM BOLLERS.

- Injury to gas pipes—Repair of streets—Statutory rights 668

STREET.

- Conversion into "new street"—Intention—Sufficient evidence of—Local Government Act 1858—Public Health Act 1875 203
 Definition of "street" in sect. 4 of Public Health Act 1875 213
 Expenses of paving—Liability of adjoining owners—Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847 301 Meaning of—Metropolis Local Management Act 1855—Metropolis Management Amendment Act 1862 329
 (See Highway.)

SUMMARY JURISDICTION ACT 1879.

- Justices sitting as a court of summary jurisdiction have power to state a case arising out of an application under sect. 38 567

SUNDAY CLOSING (WALES) ACT 1881.

- "Sunday"—Christmas day and Good Friday—Six-day licence 227

SUPERANNUATION ACT 1859.

- Compensation to governor of prison—Apportionment—Special minute 432 Prisons—Liability of county for superannuation of officers 174

TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

- Rateability of overhead wires—43 Elis. c. 2 357

TELEPHONE.

- Overhead wires—Injunction—Property of district board in street—Meaning of words "vest" and "street" 382
 Rateability to poor rate of overhead wires, poles, and attachments 389
 Rateability to poor rates of wires, poles, and attachments—Occupation 597

TOWN COUNCILLORS.

- Resignation—Withdrawal—Declaration of vacancy 566
 Election of—Nomination paper—Signature of assenting burgesses—Inaccurate description on burgess-roll—Municipal Corporations Act 1882 644

TOWNS IMPROVEMENT CLAUSES ACT.

- Right of action for paving expenses—20 & 21 Vict. c. xxxvii.—27 & 28 Vict. c. 83 7
 "Street"—Expenses of paving footpath—Liability of adjoining owners 661

TREATY WITH FRANCE 1876.

- Extradition—Foreign warrant—Sufficiency of description of offence 123

TURNPIKE ROADS.

- Brought within area of borough do not become "main roads" so as to render county rates liable for half the expense of repairing them 262
 Private owners—Dedication to public—Tolls—"Street"—"Highway repairable by the inhabitants at large" 674

TYNE, RIVER.

(See Fishery District.)

SUBJECTS OF CASES.

VAGRANT ACT AMENDMENT ACTS.
Gaming—Railway carriage—Open place to which public have access.....page	97
Idle and disorderly persons—Men on strike collecting alms for fellow-workmen—5 Geo. 4, c. 83	305
VALUATION (METROPOLIS) ACT 1869.
Supplemental valuation list—Alterations—Dock company—Diminution of profits.....	256, 367
VESTRY, SURVEYORS OF HIGHWAYS.
Liability of, for injury caused by dangerous condition of flaps placed in highway.....	37
Incorporated under Metropolis Management Act 1855—Irregular to make individual members defendants for the sole purpose of making them pay costs ..	161
By sect. 54 of Metropolis Management Act 1855, person interested in contract made with vestry ceases to be a member	250
VEXATIOUS INDICTMENTS AMENDMENTS ACT 1867.
(See Criminal Law .)
UNION ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE.
Meeting to hear objections—Notice to overseers—Duty of overseers to amend valuation list	529
UN SOUND MEAT.
Punishment of offender—Admissibility of evidence of unsoundness before justice empowered to convict	650
URBAN SANITARY AUTHORITY.
Unreasonable bye-law under sect. 157 of Public Health Act 1875.....	576
(See Public Health .)
WATER RATE.
Basis of assessment—Rent—Annual value—Gross value—Rateable value	90
Basis of assessment—Annual value—Gross value—Rateable value—General Assessment Act 1836—Waterworks Clauses Act 1847—18 & 19 Vict. c. cxviii.	26
Rent—Basis of Assessment—Annual value—Rateable value—Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869—7 Geo. 4, c. cxl.	28
"Annual rent"—Houses let to weekly tenants—Deduction for "voids"—Owner paying rates—Birmingham Waterworks Act 1855.....	220
Basis of assessment—Annual value—Rateable value	271
Basis of assessment—Rent—Annual value—Dwelling-house occupied partly for domestic and partly for trade purposes—Premium paid in respect of licensed premises	572
Gross sum assessed to the poor rate—Gross estimated rental—Water supplied for domestic purposes—Dwelling-house with garden attached—Bristol Waterworks Company Acts	579
WATERWORKS CLAUSES ACT 1847.
(See Company .)
WATERWORKS RESERVOIR.
Not a tributary of river	143
WILD BIRDS PRESERVATION ACT 1880
Authority of owner or occupier of land	557
WRONGFUL CONVERSION OF CATTLE.
Constable sued in respect of acts done under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act not entitled to local venue or notice of action	552

REPORTS OF ALL THE CASES

DECIDED BY THE

Supreme Court of Judicature

RELATING TO THE

LAW ADMINISTERED BY MAGISTRATES

AND TO

PAROCHIAL AND MUNICIPAL LAW.

[Ct. of App.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GUARDIANS OF DORKING UNION.

[Ct. of App.]

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

March 22 and 24, 1882.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., COTTON and LINDLEY, L.JJ.)

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GUARDIANS OF DORKING UNION. (a)

Nuisance—Pollution of stream by sewage—Prescriptive right to use sewer—Rural sanitary authority—Riparian proprietor—Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, ss. 13, 26.

Plaintiff, the owner of land bounded by a stream, into which was discharged a sewer within the district of a rural sanitary authority, alleged that the sewer was vested in the sanitary authority, that the sewer was being used not only by persons who had a prescriptive right to discharge their drains into it, but by persons who had no such right, and that such user had become a public and private nuisance, which was constantly increasing. He prayed an injunction to restrain the defendants from causing or permitting the sewage of the district to be conveyed through the sewer into the stream, other than sewage so conveyed by prescriptive right before the commencement of the action.

It was in evidence that the defendants had been endeavouring, ever since the passing of the Public Health Act 1872, to provide a system of drainage for the district, but hitherto without success.

Held, assuming the above allegations (which the defendants denied) to be true, that the plaintiff had no right to an injunction, and decision of Hall, V.C. affirmed.

Inasmuch as the defendants could not prevent owners with prescriptive rights from using the sewer, and consequently could not stop up the sewer as against them, the court would not order the defendants to put an end to a nuisance which they could only put an end to, if at all, by bringing an injunction action.

Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Board of Health (40 L. T. Rep. 736; 12 Ch. Div. 102) followed.

THIS was an appeal from a decision of Hall, V.C.

The plaintiff and relator, John Croft Deverill, was the owner and occupier of a dwelling house, stables, gardens, meadow, and appurtenances in the parish of Dorking (the population of which in 1851 exceeded 5000), bounded on the north by a stream flowing from west to east called the Pipp Brook; on the east by the river Mole, into which the Pipp Brook flows; on the south by the grounds of another house; and on the west by a public thoroughfare called Pixham-lane. The plaintiff and his family had lived in this house for upwards of ten years. The town of Dorking lies to the south-west of the plaintiff's house.

On the 17th Jan. 1879 the action was commenced by the Attorney-General at the relation of the plaintiff, against the Guardians of the Poor of the Union of Dorking, who are the sanitary authority for the district; and the statement of claim, which, as amended, was delivered on the 12th Dec. 1879, alleged that the sewage of the entire town of Dorking and of a large portion of the parish was discharged by sewers and drains into the Pipp Brook, injuriously affecting the purity of the water to such an extent that the houses on the northern outskirts of the town were rendered unwholesome, and that the air was impregnated with an odour injurious to the public health; that the house of a miller was rendered almost uninhabitable by the state of the water; and that the plaintiff and his family were most injuriously affected by the state of a pond called the Pixham Mill Pond, which was fed by the Pipp Brook, it being the practice to dam up the water at night after the mill had ceased working, and to let the water flow down in the morning at which time particularly, it was stated, the of sewage down the stream was intolerable. The statement then alleged that the defendants had used since the passing of the Health Act 1875, and "now used" the said sewers for the purpose of carrying sewage into the Pipp Brook;

(a) Reported by E. S. ROGER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[Ct. of App.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GUARDIANS OF DORKING UNION.

[Ct. of App.]

that since 1875 new houses had been erected within the district in constantly increasing numbers, from which the sewage was being discharged through newly-constructed drains into the old sewers vested in the defendants; that the persons by whom such connections were made had not acquired any prescriptive right to throw into the sewers any sewage or filthy water; and that the public nuisance and private injury would increase unless restrained by the court.

The claim was for an injunction to restrain the defendants from causing or permitting the sewage or filthy water of the town or parish of Dorking, or any part thereof, to be conveyed through the sewers or drains within the sanitary district of Dorking (other than sewage or filthy water so conveyed by prescriptive right before the commencement of the action) into the Pipp Brook or into the said ponds or lakes (fed by the same brook) unless and until such sewage and filthy water was sufficiently purified and deodorised so as not to create a nuisance.

By an amended statement of defence, delivered on the 25th May 1880, the defendants denied that the whole, and said that only a portion of the sewage of Dorking was discharged into the Pipp Brook, inasmuch as a great number of houses in Dorking were drained by means of cesspools. They denied that they had used, or were using, any sewers or drains for the purpose of carrying sewage into the brook, and said that the sewers and drains now in existence had been used for a great number of years, and before the house occupied by the plaintiff was built; that the lessee of Pipp Brook Mill had recently taken a fresh lease of the premises, and continued to reside with his family in the house attached to the mill without inconvenience, and denied the fact of there being any nuisance.

They further said that in 1876 they had promoted a scheme for conveying the sewage of the town on to land in the adjoining parish of Mickleham, but the scheme met with so much opposition that it had to be abandoned after costing the defendants nearly 1000*l.*; that they were now, in conjunction with the adjoining parish of Leatherhead, applying to the Local Government Board to constitute a district known as the Dorking Special Drainage District, and the parish of Leatherhead into a united district for the purpose of carrying out a system of sewerage under the provisions of sect. 279 of the Public Health Act 1875; that such application was made on the 27th Nov. 1878, and was still before the local board for consideration.

They further said that there were no sewers whatever vested in the defendants. The sewer referred to in the statement of claim, and all other sewers and drains in the district were either private sewers made by private persons under private roads, or drains vested in or under the control of authorities having the management of roads not being local authorities under the Public Health Act 1875, and over which the defendants had no control.

The defendants had made no connection with any public sewer, and they had no power to prevent owners or occupiers from making connections with or using the sewers. If any nuisance was created, which the defendants did not admit, the plaintiff ought to proceed against the persons who made connections with and used the sewers. Defendants did not admit that the houses had no prescriptive right to send their sewage into the brook, and said that such question could only be tried by proceedings against the owners or occupiers.

Issue was joined by a reply delivered on the 10th June 1880.

It was in evidence that, amongst the bye-laws "made and adopted by" the guardians of the Dorking Union, was one which required every person erecting a new building to construct every drain of suitable material, "and shall cause such drain to be properly connected with the sewers."

On the 12th Jan. 1881 the action came on to be heard before Hall, V.C.

Kay, Q.C., Robinson, Q.C., and Latham, for the relator and plaintiff.—This sewer is vested in the defendants. By the 43rd section of the Public Health Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63) all sewers were vested in the Local Board of Health. By the 3rd section of Nuisances Acts Consolidation Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 121), the local authority, in places where there is no local board of health, council, body of trustees, or commissioners, was to be the highway board; and by sect. 22 of the same Act, the local authority had authority to make sewers, and keep them in repair. By sect. 2 of the Nuisances Removal Act 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 77) the board of guardians of the poor were made the local authority to execute the Act; and by sect. 3 of the same Act the Highway Board was continued so long as it employed, or joined with other local authorities in employing, a sanitary inspector. The 17th section of the Public Health Act 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 90) repealed the last mentioned section, and transferred the powers of the highway board to the nuisance authority, which by sect. 15 was defined to mean any authority empowered to execute the Nuisances Removal Act. Then, by the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), all sewers are (sect. 13) vested in the local authority, to whom are given (sects. 15, 16) powers of maintaining and making sewers; and by sect. 17, nothing in the Act authorises any local authority to "use" any sewer or drain for the purpose of conveying sewage into any natural stream or watercourse, until it be purified. So that in 1879, when this action was commenced, the sewers were vested in the defendants. A highway board, under the Acts of 1855 and 1860, though they could not prevent persons who had once drained into a sewer from continuing to drain into it, yet could be ordered to prevent fresh communications being made with their sewers:

Attorney-General v. Richmond, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 398; L. Rep. 2 Eq. 306.

The defendants say they have made no sewer; but they are allowing an increase of nuisance, and even creating such increase, by compelling new houses to be drained into the sewer. Thus the case is brought within the definitions laid down in Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 736; 12 Ch. Div. 102).

William Pearson, Q.C. and V. Hawkins for the defendants.—This sewer is not vested in the defendants. The plaintiffs have mixed up the Acts. There are three classes of statutes—the Highway Acts, the Public Health Acts, and the Nuisances Removal Acts—entirely separate. By

[CT. OF APP.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GUARDIANS OF DORKING UNION.

[CT. OF APP.]

the Highways Act 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50) the duty was thrown upon parishes of appointing a surveyor, who was to have power (sect. 67) to make and cleanse gutters, drains, and water courses, except (sect. 18) in parishes of a population of over 5000, where a highway board might be nominated and elected by the vestry. In this instance a highway board was elected by the Vestry of Dorking. By the Highways Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), the justices were empowered to form highway districts, but such districts were not (sect. 7) to include any place under the superintendence of any highway board, and the property, powers, and duties already vested in the surveyor were (sect. 11) to remain vested in him. Sect. 7 of the Act of 1862 was repealed by the Highways Act 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), the old highway board under the Act of 1835 ceased, highway districts were made (sect. 3) as far as possible coincident with rural sanitary districts, and the rural sanitary authority became (sect. 4) the highway board. The result of the Acts is that the rights of the old highway board of Dorking were transferred to the Dorking District Board, but no property vested in any of these boards. It has been argued that by the Public Health Act 1848 all sewers were vested (sect. 43) in the local board of health. But that section only applies where a petition has been presented (sect. 8) and a local board formed. By the Sewage Utilisation Act 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 75) the vestry was made the sewer authority, and might (sect. 4) construct sewers. This was the first creation of a sewer authority, except under the Nuisances Act 1855. By that Act nothing was vested in the sewer authority, and the sewer authority had nothing to do with the poor law guardians. The Public Health Act 1866 embodied the provisions of former Acts relating to public health and nuisances removal, but separated them into two parts. The sewer authority remained (sect. 3) the vestry; and any owner or occupier was empowered (sect. 8) to empty his drains into the sewer of the sewer authority; and then, by the Sewage Utilisation Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 113), the sewer authority was (sect. 2) to mean the same as in the Act of 1865. Thus far the guardians of the poor had nothing to do with sewerage. Then came the Nuisances Removal Acts. By the Nuisances Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 123), the guardians of the poor may (sect. 3) summon for nuisances; and, by the Consolidation Act 1855 the highway board (in this case) were made (sect. 3) the local authority, but this had nothing to do with the vesting of sewers, only with the removal of nuisances. The local authority had power (sect. 22) to construct sewers, but only under certain circumstances. There being the Nuisances Removal Act 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 77), the guardians of the poor were for the first time in districts like the present made (sect. 2) the local authority; but nothing was vested in them. The Public Health Act 1866 only vests (sect. 17) in the guardians the powers of the Nuisances Removal Acts. The case of Attorney-General v. Richmond was decided in March 1866, before the passing of the Public Health Act 1866, and merely decided this—that the Hornsey Highway Board having constructed the sewer, were liable to an injunction. By the Sanitary Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 115), the term “sewer authority” was defined (sect. 2) to be the same as in the Sewage Utilisation Act 1865; that is to say, the vestry; and the powers of the “nuisance authority” were (sect. 4) made to cease, so that the guardians of the poor ceased to be the nuisance authority. Then came the Public Health Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 79), whereby the guardians of the poor are made (sect. 5) the rural sanitary authority, and certain powers and duties are (sect. 8) transferred to the guardians for the first time. [HALL, V.C. — Then, at all events, the powers over sewers were transferred to the guardian.] As to sewers, only the powers under the Sewage Utilisation Acts. [HALL, V.C.—Is not that everything?] No; for all other powers of the “sewer authority,” the vestry remain. Nothing has ever been done by the guardians, and no property was vested in them. By the Public Health Act 1875, sewers are (sect. 13) vested in the local authority (here, no doubt, the guardians of the poor), but with certain exceptions, and the effect of sects. 4 and 13 is to except sewers made by the old Highway Boards. It was to meet the difficulties occasioned by Attorney-General v. Richmond that the proviso was inserted; so that sects. 15 to 21, relating to the repair of sewers, and the powers of owners or occupiers to drain into sewers, do not apply to this case. The defendants have nothing to do with the increase during the last twenty years. The principle of Glossop's case is in our favour. This is the first attempt to bring a rural authority into court in respect of sewage. Until rural sanitary authorities were created, there were highway authorities, and it was not intended that their powers should be vested in the rural authorities. It is otherwise in urban districts when there are local boards of health. Limited powers were given to the highway surveyors, because the highway drains had got to be used as sewers; but they were ancillary only. This is the first attempt to obtain an injunction without showing any specific wrongful act by the body assailed. The mere enactment of bye-laws is not enough, unless damage is actually proved. The sewers are not vested in us; but if they are, it is not proved that we ever made a sewer or used a sewer, or made a communication with a sewer.

Robinson in reply.

HALL, V.C. — Assuming the sewers to be vested in the defendants, my judgment is in their favour. The case of the informant and plaintiff is founded upon the defendants having, as the informant and plaintiff say, acted under the Public Health Act by user of the sewer without the sewage being freed from noxious matter. The defendants deny any user by them of the sewers. The statement of claim sets out a bye-law made by the defendants, which is as follows: I need not stop to read it. The bye-law, it is said, shows user of the sewers by the defendants, or such acting in reference to the drain and sewers, as renders them liable to be restrained as asked; and as to this being an alternative case put forward by the statement of claim, I give no opinion; but I shall treat it as being so. The bye-law makes provision as to the mode of constructing drains, and connecting them with the sewers, but does not authorise any unlawful user of a sewer. Further, it is one of many bye-laws, and does not, I think, establish that the defendants have used the sewers, or so acted in reference to them as to render them liable to be restrained, as asked in the statement of claim, or to the limited extent asked at the bar, namely, from allowing any further connections to be made without the sewage being freed from noxious matter. The judgment of Cotton, L.J. in the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board shows what is meant by user in the 17th section of the Act; and I think it would be at variance with the judgment in that case to hold that the making of the bye-laws was user actual, or if that would suffice, constructive, of the sewers. Upon the whole I think the present case is governed by the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board, in which case it is to be observed that the sewers were vested in the defendants. In the case of The Attorney-General v. Richmond, the predecessors of the defendants had made a sewer, and the defendants were actually using it. The information and action therefore are dismissed with costs.

The relator and plaintiff appealed.

March 22.—H. Davey, Q.C. and Latham for the appellants.—If the defendants allow their sewers to be used so as to create a nuisance they can be restrained. The defendants are private owners of the sewer, and they cannot be permitted to use it so as to create a nuisance. In addition to the authorities above mentioned were cited

Goldemid v. The Tunbridge Wells Improvement Commissioners, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 154; 1 Ch. Div. 349;

Attorney-General v. Leeds Corporation, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 330; L. Rep. 5 Ch. App. 583;

Attorney-General v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 44; L. Rep. 4 Ch. App. 147;

Attorney-General v. Cockermouth Local Board, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 590; L. Rep. 18 Eq. 172.

W. Pearson, Q.C. and Vaughan Hawkins, for the respondents, were not called upon.

March 24.—JESSEL, M.R.—This court is bound, as the court below was bound, by the decision in the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board, and even if I differed in opinion, which I do not, from the conclusions arrived at by the Court of Appeal in that case, I should be bound to decide this case in accordance with it unless I saw some substantial difference. As it appears to me there is no substantial difference whatever; indeed, I will go further, and say that there is no tangible difference, if I may use such an expression. As I understand the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board, there were sewers vested in the defendants, the local board, and I will assume for this purpose (and we have not heard the respondents) that the sewers in this case are vested in the guardians, or that they were vested in them at the time when this action was brought. There is a good deal to be said no doubt about the construction of the Acts; but, speaking for myself, if there is nothing else to be relied upon than that which was pointed out during the argument, I should think that it was so, but I give no definite opinion, as it is not necessary. I will assume it. Now it was undoubtedly so in the case of the local board in the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board. In that respect therefore the two cases are alike. In the next place it is admitted here and was proved there that, as regards a large portion of the sewers, there are prescriptive rights, that is, that there are a vast number of persons who have the right, having used the sewer for more than twenty years, to send their drainage down the sewer. In this case the main sewer was made more than twenty-four years ago, and it has been used ever since, and largely used. In the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board, it appears that one of the sewers had been used certainly from the time of Oliver Cromwell, if not before, and therefore it was a very old sewer indeed—subject to a question whether another sewer had not been substituted for it under the power of the Act, which was passed expressly with reference to the persons having a prescriptive right—that is, a right to use the substituted sewer as they had used the old sewer. In that respect the two cases are alike. In the next place, it is the same as Glossop's case in that it is a case of gradual increase of nuisance. That is, in addition to the persons who have prescriptive rights, there are a great many people who have no prescriptive rights, who drain their houses into this sewer, and by reason of that additional sewage the nuisance to the plaintiff's stream is very much increased. Here again I have not gone through the evidence with much care. I have looked at it slightly only, but that is the impression produced upon my mind; and that, so far, is in favour of the appellant. It appears to me that it is a similar case to Glossop's case, although it does not appear distinctly from the report. The time that elapsed has not been so great in this case; but the same point has occurred. The defendants say that in order to construct a new system of drainage, which is what they ought to do, and what they intend to do when they can, they must acquire land; and they have endeavoured to acquire land, but unfortunately they have not been successful. They are still making further endeavours which they hope will be successful. Now, upon that point, I think it is as well to show what they have done. The action in the present case was commenced on the 17th Jan. 1879. That being the position of matters, what happened was this: The Public Health Act came into operation on the 10th Aug. 1872, and as early as in October of that year the defendants employed Sir Joseph Bazalgette to report, and he did report in December of that year. They found a difficulty in dealing with his report because they thought that the sewer did not comprise the whole, and consequently, after a great deal of deliberation, they applied in Dec. 1874 to the Local Government Board to make them a new drainage district. The Local Government Board do not seem to have hurried themselves, for it was not until Feb. 1877 that the request was complied with. During the interval they employed another engineer, Mr. Birch, and he told them to get twelve acres of land to make the sewage works. They gave notices accordingly, whereupon the Local Government Board directed one of their inspectors to hold an inquiry under the Local Government Act. This inquiry took place, but they were so strongly opposed that their counsel, Mr. Michael, advised them not to contest it further, but to give it up, and try to get some other power. We are told by the affidavit that these abortive proceedings cost the defendants upwards of 1000*l.* Therefore they were in earnest. Then they started again, and after they got the new power, the Local Government Board, in June 1878, appointed a committee to confer with the representatives of the parish of Leatherhead as to a joint scheme, and they made another application on the 27th Nov. 1878 to constitute the Dorking Special Drainage District and the parish of Leatherhead a united district. In the month of Nov. 1879, this action having been brought in Jan. 1879, the Local Government Board directed an inquiry to be held before Mr. Arnold Taylor upon the application, and he made an adverse report, and thereupon the board declined to proceed with the matter further until a portion of the parish of Leatherhead was constituted a special drainage district, and now such last-mentioned special drainage district having recently been formed, the application of the defendants is still before the Local Government Board for consideration. Then they go on to say in their affidavit that they have by every means in their power sought to obtain suitable land for the reception of the sewage, but without success, and they are now, in addition to the above-named application to the Local Government Board, seeking the advice of their engineer, Mr. Birch, as to an alternative scheme to be proceeded with, should such application be refused. They are not neglecting to put their general powers into execution any more than the defendants were in the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board. I especially mention this because I do not wish it to be inferred that, if these public bodies do neglect to exercise their power, that is a reason for not compelling them to exercise it. However, that is not the present case. This being the position of matters, what does the plaintiff complain of? He says this—the sewers being vested in you, the defendants, you allow or permit persons having no prescriptive right of drainage to drain through your sewers into my stream, and thereby cause additional and serious additional pollution. Now there are two points to be considered here. Would the plaintiff have any right of action at common law quite irrespective of these Acts of Parliament, by reason of this ownership of the sewers which I assume for this purpose is vested in the defendants; and, secondly, if he would not, does the Rivers Pollution Act or any other Act give him a right of action? As to the first point which does not seem to have been very much discussed in the previous case, we must remember that the vesting of the sewers in the local authority gives them a very limited right of ownership. I am not prepared to say that they are in the same position as a land owner through whose land a sewer, an artificial work, runs. It by no means follows that they have the same rights as he has. He can stop it up without asking anybody. But as I read this Act of Parliament I am by no means prepared to say that this Local Sanitary Board can stop the sewer up, and thereby cause a most frightful nuisance to the inhabitants of the district whose drainage it is their business to protect and perfect. That is the first difficulty in the way—that the vesting is not an absolute right of ownership, but a modified and limited right of ownership, and it does not in my opinion give them a right to stop up the sewer. But independently of that, let us consider the matter. Even assuming they had an absolute right of ownership, could they bring an action at law? I think they could not. It is the case of a landowner with a sewer and drain running through his land, through which persons above have a prescriptive right of drainage and of sending sewage down. He cannot stop up the sewer against them. But other persons also above who have no such prescriptive right send sewage down the sewer. As he cannot stop up the sewer, how is he to prevent it? I know of no means except by bringing an action, and indeed Mr. Latham very fairly argued it upon that ground that you cannot stop up a sewer. He said you must bring an action and get an injunction to prevent them throwing sewage in. Whether the plaintiff could get such an injunction or not must depend upon circumstances. In the case I put, it by no means follows that he sustains any damage. It may be utterly immaterial to him, as it is in this case, whether there is more or less sewage thrown down. It does not matter to him in the least. Could he maintain an injunction? My present impression is that he could not upon that particular ground. Inasmuch as he could not maintain an injunction then, these people, by going on for twenty years, would get a prescriptive right, and he would be entitled to an injunction upon the ground of permanent injury to his property by prescription being acquired over it. Therefore, for this purpose, he could get an injunction. Then the person whose land is situated below, which is polluted, says, "You can obtain an injunction to restrain these people sending the sewage down your sewer, and therefore I will bring an action against you." What for? "Because you do not bring an action for an injunction against the people who are sending the sewage through your land." Suppose he says, "I do not care about prescription; so many people already have prescriptive rights of sending down this sewage into the sewer that I do not care about other people getting them too." Is he compelled to bring an action for the purpose of asserting his title to prevent a prescription as to which he is perfectly indifferent? It is a most singular thing to say so. Independently of that, did one ever hear of an action against a man because he did not bring an action against his neighbour. It is impossible to suppose that any such action could be maintained. It comes to this, if you could maintain it you would get an injunction against a man for not bringing an injunction action against his neighbour. That is the result of it. As it is the only means of preventing it, it comes to an order that he shall bring an action for an injunction against all his neighbours who are sending sewage down without a prescriptive right into the sewer. That is, he would have to fight in every case the question of prescription, acquiescence, and fifty other questions which might arise. How can we tell in the absence of the people what the defence might be? He may have lost his right by acquiescence or in various other ways. No such action has ever been heard of at common law, and I am sure no such action has ever been heard of in equity, where a person cannot physically put an end to the nuisance, when he can only put an end to it, if he can put an end to it at all, by bringing an action for an injunction. If there is no action at common law where do you get the right under the statute? The only rights under the statute are, you shall not do anything to commit a nuisance. They say, "We have done nothing at all, we found the sewers in this state, and we left them there." Besides that, they have a general scheme of

[CT. OF APP.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GUARDIANS OF DORKING UNION.

[CT. OF APP.]

[CT. OF APP.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GUARDIANS OF DORKING UNION.

[CT. OF APP.]

drainage which they are endeavouring to put in force, and as to which I say, without negligence or without the imputation of negligence upon them, they are doing the best they can. Is that a case which gives the plaintiff any right to an injunction? I think it does not. Then I come to the last ground. I must say it appears to me that there is one sentence in the judgment of Cotton, L.J. in the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board, which puts an end to the case altogether. He says this, "But it would be contrary to the course of the court to make a decree of that nature against the defendants, unless the court is satisfied that there is some particular mode by which they can carry into effect this scheme of drainage, and in that way exercise the powers of this Act of Parliament." In other words, it comes to this, you are to enjoin a man or corporation under the penalty of sequestration of his property—there are other penalties as regards an individual—to prevent a certain state of things being allowed to continue, without being aware of any means by which he can stop it. Surely that cannot be right. You are not to send a man to prison for not preventing what he cannot prevent. In the Colney Hatch case Lord Hatherley said, if it is impossible, and if you cannot do it—and I go further and I entirely agree with the statement of Cotton, L.J.—that before you can make an order directing a man to do something—for that is the effect of the injunction; it is negative in form, but it is positive in fact—you must be satisfied that he can do it. As I said before, I am not only not so satisfied, but, upon the present evidence, I think the defendants cannot do it, and that is a sufficient ground. There is one other ground that was not mentioned in the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board, but which appears to me to be a very important ground, and that is that, in granting an injunction which is a very delicate injunction, the court always looks at the balance of convenience. I agree that where it is an injury to the plaintiff's property, it is no answer to say, "We have invaded your property because it is more convenient to us." But where it is a continuance of a state of things which you find existing, and which it is only by the intervention of parliamentary powers you can stop, would it be right to grant an injunction when you cannot compel the exercise of the parliamentary power, the effect of which would be to cause a most frightful injury to the town of Dorking? I am now assuming that they would physically stop up the sewer. Would it be right to order them to stop it up, leaving the town of Dorking to go undrained, and so cause disease probably, which would be utter destruction to the town, because there is a temporary injury to the plaintiff? That is a consideration which the court must not lose sight of when it is asked to grant a mandatory injunction. I am by no means prepared to say what the rights of the plaintiff would be if the defendants neglected to put in force their parliamentary powers, but I am prepared to say that the court would find some remedy for him in that case. It appears to me that this case is not fairly distinguishable from the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board, and that the learned judge in the court below rightly considered himself bound by that case in coming to the conclusion that he did, and I think that we are equally bound, and therefore this appeal ought to be dismissed.

COTTON, L.J.—In this case I assume that the sewers are vested in the defendants. It is not necessary in the view which I take to give any opinion upon that in this case; but I assume, for the purpose of the argument, what I have no doubt is the case, that the stream in which the plaintiff is interested is in a very bad state, and is becoming daily worse. But does that entitle the plaintiff to a decree and injunction against the defendants? Now the defendants are doing nothing. They are not making any new sewer or making themselves active in exercising any power which they have under the Act, of turning sewage, if they had the power, into any new course from that in which it previously went. In that state of things, in my opinion, the case is exactly the same in principle, although there are minute differences, as the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board. I adhere, although Mr. Davey presumed to question the reasons for deciding that case as it was decided, to the opinion that was there expressed by me. Just see how it is. True, all that has happened is that under the Act of Parliament these sewers have become vested in the defendants. Under a section in the Act they are in this position, that they cannot close up those sewers without providing that which is necessary for the purpose of carrying away the sewage, nor can they close up any sewer which would create a nuisance. Could it be for a moment said that closing up this sewer without providing another system of sewage would not cause a great nuisance to every householder who had previously drained into these sewers? It is not only so as regards those already drained into the brook, but, under the Act of Parliament, every householder has a right, if his house is within a certain distance of this sewer, of conducting his drain into it, and that being so, no permission is required from the defendants to enable any householder having a new or old house to connect his drain with this sewer. Therefore they are not using their sewer for the purpose of carrying this drainage in the same way as a body or a person would be doing, who permitted or allowed persons to turn their sewage into a sewer when that person could not make any connection with the sewer except by the permission or with the authority of the person in whom the sewer was vested. In my opinion, therefore, it cannot be said that they are using this sewer for the purpose of conveying this sewage, which I assume, causes a nuisance to the plaintiff. It is said that that would not be in accordance with the 17th section of the Act of Parliament, which says: "Nothing in this Act shall authorise any local authority to make or use any sewer, drain, or outfall, for the purpose of conveying sewage or filthy water into any natural stream or watercourse." Now I pointed out how, in my opinion, they are not really to be considered as themselves using, either by themselves conveying, or by granting permission for sewage to be conveyed, into the stream by means of this sewer. The construction of the section is this, as I understand it, that the Act does not give authority to use or do anything so as to commit a nuisance, and, as was pointed out by James, L.J., and I think also by myself, in our judgment in the

CT. OF APP.] THE MAYOR, &C., OF PORTSMOUTH v. SMITH AND OTHERS; SAME v. MOODY. [CT. OF APP.]

Glossop case, that is simply this: if you want, for the purpose of doing anything, to rely upon authority given by the Act, you must do that thing so as not to commit a nuisance. Here they are doing nothing, subject to what I shall say as to the plaintiff. They are not constructing a new system of sewers. It was said that they are in fact using this sewer by allowing it rather to be used as part of the existing system of drainage, which is vested in them. That is, they are not substituting a new system of sewage; and, in my opinion, the mere fact that they have not substituted a new system of sewage cannot make this the using of the sewer by them, when it is used without any leave granted by them, under the rights which are granted by the Act to householders. That being so, in my opinion, they are doing no act; and the injunction ought not to be granted. But it is said that they can prevent this being done, and, therefore, that an injunction ought to be granted for the purpose, as I understand the argument, of compelling them to exercise for the benefit of the plaintiff those rights which they have of preventing this nuisance. I have dealt with the question of closing up the sewer. It is said that they may do it in two ways, one by bringing an action, or taking proceedings under the powers of the Act against the persons who are in fact causing the nuisance by sending their sewage into it. Now, the Master of the Rolls has dealt with this part of the case, and, I must say, except where a person has bound himself by contract to bring an action, which of course is a different question, I never heard of anyone bringing an action against another person because that other person did not bring an action which the plaintiff could as well bring himself; and if here there is a nuisance committed by the persons who are sending their sewage either de novo or continuing to send it into the sewer, and thence into the stream, the plaintiff can bring an action just as well as the defendants, except that it is said he has not the same knowledge. But does the fact that the defendants know of evidence which the plaintiff does not know entitle the plaintiff to bring an action against the defendants for not bringing an action which the plaintiff himself at law may bring, although he may have some difficulty in proving his case? I never heard of any such principle and, in my opinion, there is none. Then it was said—and that was, I think, really the principal argument—although the defendants here are not actively doing anything which causes the nuisance, although they are doing nothing the doing of which can be stopped by granting an injunction, they may indirectly be compelled to exercise the powers of an Act of Parliament which would be a benefit to the plaintiff by preventing the sewage coming into the stream. I repeat here what I said in Glossop's case, that, in my opinion, if that is the object to be attained, it ought to be done by an order directing the defendants to exercise their powers, and not by way of injunction, which is to have that indirect effect. But, independently of that, there has been no default, as the Master of the Rolls has pointed out, on the part of the defendants to exercise their powers. They have been trying, but they cannot do it. There is this fatal objection to what is asked by the plaintiff as the ground for the injunction: In my opinion it would not be right to grant an injunction to restrain the defendants from allowing this sewage to come into the stream, where it does not appear that there is any means under the authority given by the Act of Parliament by which they can divert the sewage from the stream. It is said that it is contrary to all the cases decided with reference to it. In my opinion it is contrary to not one of them. In those cases which have been referred to, the Birmingham case, the Tunbridge Wells case, and the various other cases which are too numerous to go through, in all those cases the defendants who were restrained had done something actively to turn the sewage into the stream, or on to the land of the parties complaining of it. In this case it is not material to consider whether they could get rid of their sewage by any other means. The Act of Parliament has given them power to get rid of their sewage, provided they could do so without committing a nuisance, and if they could not do it without committing a nuisance the Act of Parliament did not authorise them to do it, and they were in the same position as individuals who were doing a wrong to their neighbour without any parliamentary authority. It is immaterial to consider whether it could be done under any of the powers given to them by the Act without committing a nuisance. Here the defendants are doing nothing, and they are sought to be compelled to exercise the powers of the Act, when it does not appear that the exercise of the powers would prevent the injury or loss to the plaintiff of which he complains. The cases are entirely different, and, in my opinion, if there were no other, that would be a fatal objection to the granting of the injunction for the indirect purpose which the plaintiff here tries to obtain by his application for an injunction. In my opinion, the decree dismissing the information and bill was right, and, therefore, the decree appealed from ought to be affirmed.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I will only add, having looked carefully at the case of Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board, I do not see how to distinguish this case from that in substance.

Solicitors: Walters, Deverell, and Walters; Duncan, Warren, and Gardner, for Hart, Hart, and Marten, Dorking.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Wednesday, Feb. 22, 1882.

(Before BRETT and COTTON, L.JJ.)

THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF THE BOROUGH OF PORTSMOUTH (acting as the Urban Sanitary Authority of the said borough) v. SMITH AND OTHERS; SAME v. MOODY. (a)

Towns Improvement Clauses Act—Right of action for paving expenses—20 & 21 Vict. c. 37 (local and personal), s. 20—27 & 28 Vict. c. 83.

By sect. 53 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), "If any street, although a public highway at the passing of the special Act, have not theretofore been well and sufficiently paved and flagged, or otherwise made good, the commissioners may cause such street, or the parts thereof, not so paved and flagged, or otherwise made good, to be paved and flagged or otherwise made good in such manner as they think fit, and the expenses incurred by the commissioners in respect thereof shall be repaid to them by the occupiers of the lands abutting on such street, or such parts thereof as have not been theretofore well and sufficiently paved and flagged, or otherwise made good, and such expenses shall be recoverable from such occupiers respectively as hereinafter provided with respect to private improvement expenses."

(a) Reported by A. H. BITTLESTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CT. OF APP.] THE MAYOR, &C., OF PORTSMOUTH v. SMITH AND OTHERS; SAME v. MOODY. [CT. OF APP.]

By sect. 156, "Where by this or the special Act the occupiers of any lands or buildings are made liable to the payment of any expenses which are directed to be recoverable as private improvement expenses, the commissioners may charge the occupiers of such lands and buildings respectively with special rates over and above any such rates."

By sect. 149, "If the owner of any buildings or lands made liable by this or the special Act for the repayment to the commissioners of any expenses incurred by them do not as soon as the same become due and payable from him repay all such expenses to the commissioners, the commissioners may recover the same from such owner in the same manner as damages, or in an action of debt in any of the Superior Courts, or in any other court having jurisdiction."

In 1857 a local Act for the borough of Portsmouth incorporated the above sections, with the proviso that sect. 53 "shall be construed as if the word 'owners' were substituted for the word 'occupiers.'"

By the Local Government Supplemental Act 1864, sect. 156 of the Act of 1847, and the succeeding sections dealing with private improvement expenses were struck out of the local Act.

The urban sanitary authority of the borough of Portsmouth (who represented the commissioners mentioned in the above sections) having incurred certain expenses within the above sect. 53, sought to recover the same by action from the owners of the abutting lands. The defendants alleged that the expenses in question could not be recovered directly by action, but that a rate must be made in respect of them, as in the case of private improvement expenses.

Held, on demurrer to the defence, that, by the repeal of sect. 156 and the succeeding sections relating to private improvement expenses, the last words of sect. 53 were in effect repealed; and, consequently, no special remedy being provided for the recovery of expenses under sect. 53 an action would lie to recover them, independently of sect. 149.

Judgment of Field, J. affirmed.

THIS was a demurrer to paragraphs 2, 3, 5, and 6, of the re-amended statement of defence in an action by the urban sanitary authority for the borough of Portsmouth to recover the sum of 268l. 2s. in respect of paving, flagging, and making good part of Asylum-road, within the district of such authority.

The plaintiffs alleged in their statement of claim that after the passing of the Local Government Act 1858, and the Local Government Supplemental Act 1864 (No. 2), the defendants were and still are the owners of certain lands abutting on the north side of Asylum-road, within the urban sanitary district of Portsmouth, the footway of which adjoining the defendant's land had not theretofore been well and sufficiently paved, flagged, or otherwise made good. And that the plaintiffs in exercise of the power conferred on them by sect. 53 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847, caused the footway to be paved, flagged, and made good, and incurred expenses amounting to 268l. 2s.

The re-amended statement of defence was as follows:

1. The defendants say that prior to the time of the execution by the plaintiffs of the work in the statement of claim mentioned, the footway had been well and sufficiently paved, flagged, and otherwise made good by the plaintiffs.

2. By reason of the above premises the footway had become repairable by the inhabitants of the borough of Portsmouth at large.

3. That the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the sum of 268l. 2s., or to maintain this action by reason of their not having taken the necessary steps provided under sects. 156, 171, 191, and intermediate sections of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1844.

4. The defendants deny that the plaintiffs caused the footpath to be paved, flagged, or otherwise made good as alleged.

5. If the plaintiffs did cause the footpath to be paved, flagged, and otherwise made good, as alleged, and incurred the alleged expenses, the defendants deny that the plaintiffs did so in the exercise of the powers conferred upon them by the 53rd section of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847; but, on the contrary, if they did the said work and incurred the said expenses they professed to do so by virtue of the powers conferred upon them by the Public Health Act 1875.

6. If the plaintiffs actually did the work and incurred the expenses under and by virtue of the Public Health Act 1875, the defendants say that the plaintiffs are debarred from recovering the same from the defendants by reason of sects. 251, 252, and 257 of the said Act.

The plaintiffs demurred to the 2nd paragraph of the defence, on the ground that the matters therein stated did not relieve the defendants from liability; to the 3rd paragraph, on the ground that the sections mentioned in that paragraph are not in force so far as relates to the said urban sanitary district; to the 5th and 6th paragraphs, on the ground that it was immaterial how the plaintiffs professed to do the work, and that the sections referred to in those paragraphs do not preclude them from recovering for the same.

Nov. 26.—FIELD, J.—The case stands, in my judgment, thus: The plaintiffs were, before 1875, the Local Board of Health within some districts comprising Portsmouth. After 1875 they became the Urban Sanitary Authority, and as such, I presume, they became in some way the representatives of the commissioners under the Portsmouth Local Act of 1857. They were therefore entitled to exercise whatever powers and remedies those commissioners had. In the present case they seek to recover by means of an action the amount of certain expenses which they allege they have incurred in paving, &c., a certain street. And they seek to recover such expenses from the defendant because he is the owner of the lands abutting upon the street. There have been very serious alterations in the different statutes affecting the question, and in order to understand them we must consider what was the general course of the Legislature. Before the Act of 1857 was passed, questions of a similar kind to the present were decided with reference to the Public Health Act 1848, the 69th section of that Act gave certain powers, almost as great as those given in the present instance, but not exactly similar. There were two differences between the Act of 1848 and the local Act of 1857, the first of which was that the Act of 1848, as well as all the subsequent legislation, relates to streets not being highways, and a highway was afterwards defined as "a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large," whereas the local Act of 1857, in express terms, includes a street, whether a highway or not. The mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, now called the "town commissioners," have therefore a larger power under that Act than they would have had under the Act of 1848. The other material difference is this: That by the Public Health Act of 1848, before the proper authority can charge the owner with any expense, the owner must be given an opportunity of doing the works himself; and it is only in the case of the default of the owner in doing the work that any charge can be made upon him. The Act provides that the expenses may be recovered from the last-mentioned owners in the manner thereafter provided. Sect. 90 provides that manner as follows: That whenever the local board have incurred or become liable to any expenses through doing these works, they may, if they think fit, levy upon the occupiers of the premises, although sect. 69 said owners, and if they decide upon making them private improvement expenses, the occupier is then the person who is to pay. The reason seems to be this: That if the expenses are to be made private improvement expenses, the effect of which will be to throw the whole charge over a series of years, they may be put upon the occupier, who then, by the statute, has his remedy against his landlord by way of deduction from his rent. That was the scheme of the Act of 1848. Besides that Act, however, a skeleton Act had been passed the year before relative to towns, which was not a law binding anybody, unless the Legislature afterwards thought fit to bind persons thereby in particular districts. And, in order to do this, the clauses of the skeleton Act were passed, only to become law binding anyone when incorporated in any particular Act of Parliament. Now, the skeleton Act of 1847 was a well-devised scheme, and consistent with itself from beginning to end, if adopted as a whole, unaltered; but, if in adopting it you alter part, and the other part which is in conflict with the part as adopted is left unaltered, a considerable difficulty arises. Under sect. 53 of the general Act the commissioners are to do the work and then charge the occupiers with the expenses thereof, which are to be recoverable from the occupiers in the manner thereafter provided in regard to private improvement expenses. There are a series of rating clauses, beginning with sect. 156 and going as far as sect. 199, the most important among which is sect. 156, which is as follows: "Where, by this or the special Act, the occupiers of any lands or buildings are made liable to the payment of any expenses which are directed to be recoverable as private improvement expenses, the commissioners may charge the occupiers of such lands and buildings respectively with special rates over and above any other rates." In sect. 164 it is provided that "every occupier of any such house or building at a rent not less than a rack rent, who has paid any such drainage rate, shall be entitled to deduct three-fourths of the rate so paid by him from the rent payable by him to his landlord;" and we then come to the mode of levying the rates, which, amongst other things, requires notice to be given of the rate, which notice, it is to be observed, is an occupier's notice rather than an owner's notice, as in the case of a poor rate. And in sect. 181 it is said, with reference to owners, "the owners of all rateable property of which the full net annual value does not exceed the prescribed sum, or (where no sum is prescribed) the sum of 10*l.*, or which are let to weekly or monthly tenants or in separate apartments, shall be rated to and pay the rates by this or the special Act directed to be made instead of the occupiers thereof." That being the scheme of the general legislation, the local Act says: First of all we will incorporate the general Act with ours, but we will not incorporate it as it stands. We will take sect. 53, but we will alter the incidence of liability, and, instead of the occupier being the person who shall be liable to these expenses, we will make the owners liable. That was done by sect. 20, which says that in construing the Act of 1847, sects. 53, 54, and 73, shall be construed as if the word "owners" were substituted for the word "occupiers." Sect. 54 has been repealed; looking, however, at sect. 57 it seems very distinct and clear that sect. 53 is to be read as saying, first of all, that the expenses incurred shall be repaid by the owners of the lands; and, secondly, that such expenses shall be recoverable from such owners in such manner as is therein-after provided with respect to private improvement expenses. Besides sect. 53, however, and the sections to which I have referred as originally incorporated in the local Act, there is sect. 149, upon which, and sect. 53, the plaintiffs found their title to sue. They say they are the urban authority and incurred the expenses in doing works mentioned in sect. 53, that the defendants are the owners who, under the enactment, are to repay them, whether the works were necessary or not; and that the mode provided for the recovery of their expenses is by an action in the same manner as to recover damages or a debt. Before we consider the defendant's contention let us look how the law was altered. As the Act of 1847 stood the "manner thereafter provided for the recovery of the expenses" was to make a rate upon the occupiers, but, as the plaintiffs say, that provision was repealed. But for such repeal it would, no doubt, have been possible to have made the owners the rateable persons, and the Act would have read in this way, You, the owners, shall pay the moneys, and such moneys shall be recoverable in manner thereafter provided, which manner is not pointed out with reference to owners, but is pointed out with reference to occupiers. In 1858 there was fresh legislation, the Local Government Act 1858, afterwards amended by the Act of 1861, by which Act a very important change was made. Up to that time there had existed all over England, commissioners with all sorts of varying rules as to by whom the work was to be done, and how it was to be paid for. The Act of 1858, therefore, by sect. 77, gave local boards the power to petition the Secretary of State for the repeal or alteration of any local Act. Great doubt arose upon the construction of that section, which was only set at rest by the Act of 1875; it was with reference to sect. 77, however, that the legislation of 1864 took place with regard to Portsmouth. The authorities of Portsmouth proceeded to present the necessary petition, and obtained a modification or repeal of certain clauses in their local Act, the effect of which was, shortly, that the rating clauses in the Act of 1847—I cannot say were repealed—ceased to be incorporated. The only clauses retained were, first of all, sect. 16, limited, however, to retaining (inter alia) sects. 53, 147 to 151, 196, and 197, and it further specifically retained sect. 20 of the local Act, so as to continue to import the word owners instead of occupiers. Therefore, as the law stood at the time when these works were executed, sect. 20 was in force and sect. 16 as to certain clauses, and then sect. 53, expenses incurred under which are to be recoverable in the same manner as private improvement expenses; but there has now ceased to be any provision for the recovery of private improvement expenses; the sections relating thereto, which are 167 to 184, are gone. Then there were retained clauses 147 to 151, the two first of which refer rather to the scheme in the general Act than to sect. 53, for in them the owner is given the opportunity of doing the work himself, which is not the case in sect. 53; and I am of opinion that these clauses, sects. 147 and 148, upon which the defendant relies as modifying the language of sect. 149, do not relate to sect. 53. Sect. 149 applies to the owner, and by sect. 150 a cumulative remedy is given, because, whether any action is brought against the owner or not, the commissioners may, if they like, “require the payment of all or any part of the expenses payable by the owner for the time being from the person who then or at any time thereafter occupies any such buildings or lands under such owner; and in default of payment thereof by such occupier, on demand, the same may be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such occupier,” when he shall be entitled to deduct so much as he has paid from his rent, and he could not have paid more than his rent. It is a species of equitable mortgage upon the rent. The next sections necessary to refer to are sects. 196 and 197, which, in my opinion, though I may be wrong, refer rather to the power of rating the owner contained in sects. 44 and 45 of the special Act. The question I am to decide is, whether this action is maintainable. It is an undoubted rule of law, that where a statute directs the payment of money, an action will lie; so, also, where, notwithstanding there being no contract and no previous liability, a new obligation to pay is created by the statute, unless you see from the statute that a specific remedy is provided. And, therefore, it is that the defendant contends that although it may be that the owner, under sect. 53, is the person who has to pay, yet that section, creating a new obligation, points also to a specific remedy, and that that remedy alone can be pursued, and, therefore, no action will lie, but the expenses must be recovered as private improvement expenses. The plaintiffs do not dispute that rule of law, but say that in sect. 149 there is an express power of suing given, that where any expenses become due and payable by the owner, the commissioners may recover the same from such owner, and that sect. 53 is to be read “the expenses are to be repaid to them by the owner,” and, therefore, looking at the fact that sect. 149 has been retained by the same blow which struck out all the rating sections, that that was the remedy which it was intended to provide. The defendant does not absolutely dispute that construction, but says that sect. 149 is meant to apply only to the cases in sects. 147 and 148. I am not able to come to that conclusion, for this reason, that the language of sect. 149 seems to be general, and, in my opinion, is a specific power given to the commissioners to sue. I think that the expenses in question are recoverable by the commissioners in the present action, and I, therefore, give judgment for them.

CT. OF APP.] THE MAYOR, &C., OF PORTSMOUTH v. SMITH AND OTHERS; SAME v. MOODY. [CT. OF APP.]

CT. OF APP.] THE MAYOR, &C., OF PORTSMOUTH v. SMITH AND OTHERS; SAME v. MOODY. [CT. OF APP.]

From this judgment the defendants now appealed.

A. Charles, Q.C. (with him E. U. Bullen), for the defendant in first action.—It is true that, under sect. 53, as altered by the Local Act, the owner has to pay; but it is a special enactment and provides a special remedy, namely, that these expenses should be recoverable as private improvement expenses; and that is the remedy which must be pursued. Sect. 149 does not apply where there is a special remedy provided. [BRETT, L.J.—It may be that sect. 149 would only apply to a case where the landlord has been called upon to do the work, but has not done it, and it has been done by the urban authority at his charge. So that it all comes back to the construction of sect. 53.]

F. O. Crump for the defendant Moody.—If the contention of the other side is correct, a liability has been put upon the owner which was never on the occupier. Sect. 53 never meant that these expenses should be recoverable immediately.

Bompas, Q.C. and Pitt Lewis, for plaintiffs, were not called upon.

BRETT, L.J.—If I thought that we could get any more light on this case by hearing Mr. Bompas I would do so; but I think that it has been thoroughly exhausted by Mr. Charles. We have, too, a wonderfully careful judgment of Field, J. The ground of that judgment, however, is a short one, and must be appreciated at once; those sections 156 to 199 are not by reference incorporated into sect. 53. If those sections are not incorporated into sect. 53, as regards Portsmouth, they do not exist at all. Therefore, the last words of sect. 53—“such expenses shall be recoverable from such owners respectively as hereinafter provided with respect to private improvement expenses”—must be read as if, as regards Portsmouth, there were no subsequent provisions with respect to private improvement expenses at all. Then those words of sect. 53 become useless, and the section must be read as if they were not there. It must be read as if there were no provision as to the expenses except “the expenses incurred by the commissioners in respect thereof shall be repaid to them by the occupiers of the lands abutting on such street.” If that stands alone, the expenses in question must be recoverable by action. The sole question really is whether the last words of sect. 53 are in such a form as to read into that section the series of sections beginning with 156 that relate to private improvement expenses; or whether those words are to be taken merely as meaning in the same manner as private improvement expenses in other cases. Now private improvement expenses might be recovered in cases to which sect. 53 did not apply at all; therefore, the provisions with respect to private improvement expenses were not all applicable to that section, and cannot, I think, be read into it. The words mean in the same manner as private improvement expenses in other cases. Then, those sections as to private improvement expenses being repealed, sect. 53 must be read as if no such sections ever existed. There is then no special provision as to the recovery of these expenses, and they are, therefore, recoverable by action. I will only add that I do not think that sect. 149 assists the case of either party.

CT. OF APP.] WOLSTANTON AND BURSLEM UNION (apps.) v. NORTHWICH UNION (resps.). [Q.B. DIV.]

COTTON, L.J.—The question that we have to consider here is, what effect upon a section in a general Act of Parliament the private legislation of Portsmouth has had. That legislation incorporated certain sections of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847, and it is upon this that the present difficulty arises. Except so far as special legislation makes them part of the special Act, the provisions of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847 have no effect at all. Then in 1857 a local Act for the borough of Portsmouth incorporated, amongst other sections, sect. 53 of the Act of 1847, but it did not do so simpliciter, because it said that sect. 53 “shall be construed as if the word ‘owners’ were substituted for the word ‘occupiers.’” Sect. 53 enables the local authority to pave streets and to recover the expenses “as hereinafter provided with respect to private improvement expenses,” the effect of which would be that the owners would have had time given them to repay the expenses. Then comes the legislation of 1864, by which the legislation of 1857, which incorporated sect. 53 and the private improvement expenses clauses, was altered by only incorporating sect. 53 without the private improvement expenses clauses. The question is, how is the owner liable now to pay the expenses incurred under sect. 53? Can he say, notwithstanding that sects. 156 to 199 are not part of the private legislation of Portsmouth, I am not liable to have an action brought against me for these expenses until you have proceeded in the way pointed out by those sections? I am of opinion that he is liable to pay these expenses at once. The private improvement expenses clauses are no longer applicable to Portsmouth. Sect. 53 must be read as if the words “such expenses shall be recoverable from such owners respectively as hereinafter provided with respect to private improvement expenses” were not there. The owner cannot, therefore, in my opinion, say that he is not liable to pay at once. I think that he is liable to pay these expenses at once, and that they can be recovered by action. It is not, in my opinion, necessary for the plaintiffs to have recourse to sect. 149 as giving them a right of action in respect of these expenses. Under sect. 53 they are to be repaid to the plaintiffs by the owners of the adjoining lands, and that is sufficient, in the absence of any special provision, to give the plaintiffs a right of action.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Bischoff, Bompas, and Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Ford and Ford.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Monday, May 15, 1882.

(Before GROVE, J.)

WOLSTANTON AND BURSLEM UNION (apps.) v. NORTHWICH UNION (resps.). (a)

Removal of pauper—Settlement by residence under sixteen years of age—Derived settlement—39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, ss. 34 and 35.

A pauper, whose settlement both by birth and parentage was in the appellants' union, had, before he was sixteen years old, resided in another union for the term, in the manner, and under the circumstances required by sect. 34 of the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 to acquire a settlement by residence.

Held, upon an appeal from an order of removal to the appellants' union, that the first paragraph of sect. 35 of that Act refers only to derived settlements; that there was nothing in that section to prevent the pauper from acquiring a settlement under sect. 34; and that therefore the order of removal was bad.

THIS was an appeal against an order of two justices for the county of Chester, dated the 28th day of June 1881, for the removal of one Egerton Wedgwood, a pauper lunatic, from the respondents' union to the appellants' union, by which order it was adjudged that the place of the last legal settlement of the said Egerton Wedgwood was in the parish of Wolstanton, in the appellants' union. The appeal was tried at Michaelmas Quarter Sessions for the county of Chester, holden at Knutsford, when that court affirmed the said order, subject to the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, on the following case:

1. The said pauper Egerton Wedgwood was born in the said parish of Wolstanton, in the appellants' union, on the 3rd Oct. 1860, and was the legitimate son of Abner Philimore Wedgwood, who resided in the said parish from the year 1843 till Jan. 15, 1871, when he died; he resided there during the said period under such circumstances as to gain a settlement in the said parish.

2. The mother of the said pauper continued to reside in the said parish of Wolstanton, in the appellants' union, from the time of her said husband's death until her second marriage in the month of June 1877, and was legally settled in the said parish during such period.

3. The said pauper resided with his father and mother until the death of the former, but he subsequently resided in the parish of Maer, in the Newcastle-under-Lyme Union, in the county of Stafford, from about the year 1872 till the month of May 1877, under such circumstances as to gain a settlement of his own in the said parish of Maer, by complying with the provisions of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 34, unless by the provisions of the 35th section of the said Act he was incapable, under the aforesaid circumstances, of acquiring such settlement.

4. It was contended on behalf of the appellants that the 34th section applies to any person, and that its provisions are not restricted by the 35th section, and therefore that the said pauper lunatic acquired a settlement in the said parish of Maer. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the 34th section should be read together with the 35th section, and that when so read it enacted that a legitimate child under the age of sixteen would not, under the above circumstances, acquire a settlement for itself, and therefore that the said pauper lunatic took the settlement of his widowed mother.

(a) Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.] WOLSTANTON AND BURSLEM UNION (apps.) v. NORTHWICH UNION (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

5. Being of opinion that the above contention of the respondents was right in law, the said Court of Quarter Sessions dismissed the appeal with costs.

6. If the court should be of opinion that the above contention of the respondents is right in law, then the aforesaid order shall stand; but, if the court shall be of opinion that the contention of the appellants is right in law, then the aforesaid order, and the order of sessions confirming the same with costs, shall be quashed, and the aforesaid appeal to the quarter sessions shall be allowed with costs.

By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111, after reciting the Irremovability Act 1845 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 66):

Provided always, that whenever any person should have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children should be removable from any parish or place from which he or she would be removable notwithstanding any provisions of the said recited Act, and should not be removable by reason of any provision in the said recited Act.

By the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 34:

Where any person shall have resided for the term of three years in any parish in such manner and under such circumstances in each of such years as would in accordance with the several statutes in that behalf render him irremovable, he shall be deemed to be settled therein until he shall acquire a settlement in some other parish by a like residence or otherwise."

By sect. 35:

No person shall be deemed to have derived a settlement from any other person, whether by parentage, estate, or otherwise, except in the case of a wife from her husband, and in the case of a child under the age of sixteen, which child shall take the settlement of its father or of its widowed mother, as the case may be, up to that age, and shall retain the settlement so taken until it shall acquire another.

An illegitimate child shall retain the settlement of its mother until such child acquires another settlement.

If any child in this section mentioned shall not have acquired a settlement for itself, or being a female shall not have derived a settlement from her husband, and it cannot be shown what settlement such child or female derived from the parent without inquiring into the derivative settlement of such parent, such child or female shall be deemed to be settled in the parish to which he or she was born.

The argument of this case was by consent heard by a single judge.

Marshall, for the respondents, showed cause against the rule to quash the order of quarter sessions.—The question to be decided is, whether this pauper, who was under the age of sixteen, acquired a settlement by residence in the parish of Maer, apart from his widowed mother, and in a different place from her settlement. There seems to be nothing in the Statutes of Irremovability before the Act of 1876 which touches the question; and although it may have been possible in some few instances for a child under sixteen to have acquired an independent settlement, the Legislature may well have intended by sect. 35 to impose the derived settlement upon all legitimate children under that age. Indeed, it can only be by applying the first paragraph of sect. 35 to acquired as well as derived settlements that the word "estate" can have any meaning or effect. A settlement can only be derived from a parent or a husband; there never can be a derived settlement by estate. If, however, the word "derived," in the first line of the 35th section, be read in its most commonly received sense, so as to include settlements technically both derived and acquired, the words "estate and otherwise" would be intelligible, and would include the settlement which, but for this section, has been acquired by the pauper in this case.

Higgins, contra.—The word "derived" is used more than once in this 35th section; and in the last paragraph its meaning is clearly to be distinguished from that of the word "acquired." It cannot be intended that the same word should have a general meaning in one part and a technical meaning in another part of the same section. The first paragraph, therefore, can only refer to settlements derived in the case of children under sixteen from their parents, and has no application to a child who, like the pauper here, has acquired an independent settlement by residence. We must then fall back upon the 34th section, which, in words general enough to include children under sixteen, enables any person to acquire a settlement by residence. Here the pauper has acquired such a settlement, and the order of removal to the appellants' union, which is the place of his derived settlement, is not justified by the last paragraph of the 35th section. No doubt this construction of sect. 35 involves a difficulty with respect to the word "estate;" but the words "whether by parentage, estate, or otherwise" may be held to be altogether superfluous; or possibly they were intended to refer to the previous substantive "settlement," and not the verb "to have derived," in order to point out that the settlement so derived from the other person might have been obtained by that other person either by parentage, estate, or otherwise, it being well known that a settlement can be technically derived only by parentage or marriage.

Grove, J.—I cannot say that I have much doubt as to the construction of this section; but I admit that, in the only sense I can adopt, there is no effect given to the word "estate." I am not at all satisfied with the suggestion that the words "whether by parentage, estate, or otherwise" should be applied to the settlement of the other person from whom the settlement, which is the subject of the enactment, is derived. It seems to me that the section was intended to deal with the settlement of a man or an unmarried woman above the age of sixteen, which was derived by parentage or marriage. I can only think that the words "estate and otherwise" were used in a vague sense, or as surplusage, and I greatly prefer so to decide than to extend the sense of the word "derived," as suggested for the respondents, in order to include both derived and acquired settlements. The words "derive" and "acquire" are used several times in the 35th section, and in the instances other than this their meanings are distinct, and their use is technically accurate. I feel it impossible to hold, in the face of this careful distinction, that when the word "derived" first appears in the section it means both "derived and acquired." It may be, as contended, that the object of the Legislature was to abolish all settlements acquired by children under sixteen; but, if it was, the necessary words have not been employed, and I cannot make the law. My opinion is that the first paragraph of the 35th section applies to derived settlements only, and not to acquired settlements of children or other persons. There was, therefore, in this case no necessity to resort to the pauper's derived settlement, and the orders of removal and quarter sessions were wrong. I think this is a case in which no costs should be allowed.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. GANZ.

[Q.B. Div.]

Judgment for appellants.

Solicitors for appellants, Llewellyn and Ackrell.
Solicitors for respondents, O. R. and H. Cuff, for A. and J. E. Fletcher, Northwich.

Thursday, March 30, 1882.

(Before POLLOCK, B. and MANISTY, J.)

REG. v. GANZ. (a)

Extradition—Fugitive criminal subject of a state other than the state requiring his surrender—Foreign warrant—Duly authenticated copy of a decree of competent foreign tribunal ordering arrest—Sufficiency of warrant—Habeas Corpus Extradition Act 1870—33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, ss. 10, 15—Extradition treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands, 1874.

G., the fugitive, was alleged to have committed an offence in N. for which he might be extradited. The Government of N. applied for his surrender. On his apprehension in England he produced letters of naturalisation granted to him by the U.S., and claimed to be a subject of the U.S. and not of N., which could not lawfully demand his surrender. The warrant for G.'s arrest was a duly signed and authenticated copy of a decree entered in the official book of a competent tribunal in N. ordering his arrest. G. was taken into custody, and an application for a writ of habeas corpus was made on his behalf. On the argument it was contended that, being a naturalised citizen of the U.S., he was not within the terms of the treaty between Great Britain and N., and could not be delivered up at the request of the Government of N. Also that the warrant of his arrest was not in form or substance within the meaning of the English term "warrant," and was besides bad and insufficient by reason of its being a mere copy, and not an original document.

Held, that a person who commits a crime within the jurisdiction of a particular country is pro tanto a subject of that country which can rightly demand his extradition on escape, unless there are treaty arrangements to the contrary.

Held, further, that a foreign warrant need not be of the same kind or description as an English warrant, and that any foreign judicial document purporting to be duly signed and authenticated which orders the arrest of a person, is a sufficient warrant upon which the committing magistrate in England can order the surrender of that person as a fugitive criminal.

This was an application for a rule nisi calling upon the Governor of Holloway Gaol to show cause why a writ of habeas corpus should not issue calling upon him to bring up for release the body of Edward Nathan Ganz, who had been committed to his custody under an extradition warrant granted by the Chief Magistrate at Bow-street on the application of the Government of the Netherlands.

The following were the material facts of the case:—

1. Edward Nathan Ganz, the fugitive criminal, whose alias was alleged to be Bernhardt Wyprecht, was charged, at the instance of the Government of the Netherlands, with an extraditable offence amounting to the obtaining of money under false pretences during the year 1881.

2. Ganz, whose offices were a small room in a street in Rotterdam, inserted during the year 1881 an advertisement in various newspapers on the Continent to the effect that customers dealing with his firm would save a considerable amount per annum by purchasing their grocery supplies direct from the prisoner's "warehouses" in Rotterdam. The prisoner's firm was styled "Bernhardt Wyprecht and Co."

3. In the advertisement appeared the notice, "All our goods are picked out at the place of growing by our own factories, and the most conscientious warranty for utmost purity and best weight."

4. On receipt of an order the prisoner sent to the customer a circular requiring payment in advance, and in terms repeating the statements put forward in the advertisement.

5. A large number of persons sent the prisoner orders from Berlin and other parts of the German empire, and, on receipt of the circular, remitted the amount of their orders as directed.

6. The prisoner, as "Bernhardt Wyprecht and Co.," did not send any goods in return for the money, nor had he "warehouses" in Rotterdam nor "factories" elsewhere.

7. Ganz came over to England towards the latter part of the year 1881.

8. In consequence of the representations made through the Governments of those persons who alleged that they had been swindled by the prisoner, criminal proceedings were taken in the Arrondissement Court (or the Criminal Court of first instance) in Rotterdam, which held that the offence had not been made out. But the Court of Criminal Appeal at the Hague reversed the decision of the court below, and issued the following copy document [translation] authorising the prisoner's arrest. This document was relied on as a proper and valid warrant of arrest.

In the name of the King.

The Court of Justice at the Hague in Council assembled.

Seen the report of the Arrondissement Court of Justice of Rotterdam assembled in council of the 15th Nov. 1881 in the case of Bernhardt Wyprecht (as he calls himself), from which report it appears that the papers in this case showed no crime, the demanded prosecution was refused, and it is declared there is no ground for further proceedings.

Seen the act of protest, dated the 16th Nov., following against the reports submitted by the officer of justice of the mentioned court of justice.

Seen the papers and requisition of the public prosecutor showing that he does not approve of the report of the court against which he protests.

Seen the further papers.

Considering that there exists sufficient reason for complaint—the accused being said to have resided in the course of the year 1881 at Rotterdam, to have advertised

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. GANZ.

[Q.B. Div.]

from there in different German newspapers wherein he, stating to trade as Bernhardt Wyprecht and Co., in Rotterdam, offered different wares, some of which he named at en gros prices, guaranteeing his buyers that they were picked out through his own factories, and could be delivered at such low prices that through buying from him may hundred marks per annum could be saved, all entirely fraudulent and without any intention of keeping to his offer.

Furthermore he is said to have induced different persons by these advertisements to send him moneys as prepayment in ordering some of the advertised goods, and also from the persons mentioned, the amounts standing against their names, without sending them the ordered goods, to have received the same and fraudulently become possessed of them to their damage. [Here follow the names of twenty-eight persons in different parts of Germany who remitted him money.]

Taking into consideration that these acts are punishable by article 405 of the Penal Code.

Seen the articles 88 and 89 of the Law Book of Demands for punishment.

That the before-mentioned report of the Court of Arrondissement at Rotterdam will not be accepted.

Authorised proceedings with order for arrest against Bernhardt Wyprecht (calling himself so) last living at Rotterdam, thence absconded.

Done at the Hague on the 21st Nov. 1881 by the following gentlemen :

[Here follow the signatures of the vice-president and others of the council.]

For copy delivered on demand of the O. M.,

The actuary of the courts of justice.

(Signed) W. Bisdorn and M. VAN DEN BERGH.

Seen for certifying the handwriting of the above-named Bisdorn and Van den Bergh.

The Hague, Dec. 2, 1881.

For the Minister of Justice, the Secretary-General.

(Signed) CLAMM.

9. A formal requisition for the extradition of the prisoner was made.

10. On being arrested in London Ganz produced two documents which purported to be two letters of naturalisation as a citizen of the United States of America; one described him by the name of Ernest Ganz, the other as Ernest Nathan Ganz.

11. The above charge was preferred against him at Bow-street, and Sir James Ingram committed him to custody for extradition.

12. An application for a rule nisi for a writ of habeas corpus was accordingly made on behalf of the prisoner.

By 33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, sect. 1 :

Where an arrangement has been made with any foreign state with respect to the surrender to such state of any fugitive criminals, Her Majesty may by Order in Council, direct that this Act apply in the case of such foreign state. Her Majesty may, by the same or any subsequent order, limit the operation of the order, and restrict the same to fugitive criminals who are in or suspected of being in the part of Her Majesty's dominions specified in the order, and render the operation thereof subject to such conditions, exceptions, and qualifications as may be deemed expedient. Every such order shall recite or embody the terms of the arrangement, and shall not remain in force for any longer period than the arrangement.

By sect. 6 :

Where this Act applies in the case of any foreign state, every fugitive criminal of that state who is in or suspected of being in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, or that part which is specified in the order applying this Act (as the case may be), shall be liable to be apprehended and surrendered in manner provided by this Act, whether the crime in respect of which the surrender is sought was committed before or after the date of the order, and whether there is or is not any concurrent jurisdiction in any court of Her Majesty's dominions over that crime.

By sect. 7 :

A requisition for the surrender of a fugitive criminal of any foreign state who is in, or suspected of being in, the United Kingdom shall be made to a Secretary of State by some person recognised by the Secretary of State as a diplomatic representative of that foreign state. A Secretary of State may, by order under his hand and seal, signify to a police magistrate that such requisition has been made, and require him to issue his warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive criminal.

By sect. 8 :

A warrant for the apprehension of a fugitive criminal, whether accused or convicted of crime, who is in, or suspected of being in, the United Kingdom may be issued by a police magistrate on the receipt of the said order of the Secretary of State, and on such evidence as would in his opinion justify the issue of the warrant if the crime had been committed or the criminal convicted in England.

By sect. 10 :

In the case of a fugitive criminal accused of an extradition crime, if the foreign warrant authorising the arrest of such criminal is duly authenticated, and such evidence is produced as (subject to the provisions of this Act) would, according to the law of England, justify the committal for trial of the prisoner if the crime of which he is accused had been committed in England, the police magistrate shall commit him to prison, but otherwise shall order him to be discharged.

In the case of a fugitive criminal alleged to have been convicted of an extradition crime, if such evidence is produced as (subject to the provisions of this Act) would, according to the law of England, prove that the prisoner was convicted of such crime, the police magistrate shall commit him to prison, but otherwise shall order him to be discharged.

If he commits such criminal to prison he shall commit him to the Middlesex House of Detention, or to some other prison in Middlesex, there to await the warrant of a Secretary of State for his surrender, and shall forthwith send to a Secretary of State a certificate of the committal, and such report upon the case as he may think fit.

By sect. 14 :

Depositions or statements on oath taken in a foreign state, and copies of such original depositions or statements, and foreign certificates of or judicial documents stating the fact of conviction, may, if duly authenticated, be received in evidence in proceedings under this Act.

By sect. 15 :

Foreign warrants and depositions or statements on oath, and copies thereof and certificates of or judicial documents stating the fact of a conviction shall be deemed duly authenticated for the purposes of this Act, if authenticated in manner provided for the time being by law or authenticated as follows :

- (1.) If the warrant purports to be signed by a judge, magistrate, or officer of the foreign state where the same was issued;
- (2.) If the depositions or statements or the copies thereof purport to be certified under the hand of a judge, magistrate, or officer of the foreign state where the same were taken to be the original depositions or statements, or to be true copies thereof as the case may require; and
- (3.) If the certificate of or judicial document stating the fact of conviction purports to be certified by a judge, magistrate, or officer of the foreign state where the conviction took place; and if in every case the warrants, depositions, statements, copies, certificates, and judicial documents (as the case may be) are authenticated by the oath of some witness or by being sealed with the official seal of the Minister of Justice, or some other minister of state. And all courts of justice, justices, and magistrates shall take judicial notice of such official seal, and shall admit the documents so authenticated by it to be received in evidence without further proof.

By the treaty made between Her Majesty and the King of the Netherlands for the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals, signed the 19th June 1874, art. 1 :

It is agreed that Her Britannic Majesty and His Majesty the King of the Netherlands shall, on requisition

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. GANZ.

[Q.B. Div.]

made in their names by their respective diplomatic agents, deliver up to each other reciprocally any person who, being accused or convicted of any of the crimes hereinafter specified, committed within the jurisdiction of the requiring party, shall be found within the territories of the other party.

By art. 3 :

No subject of the Netherlands shall be delivered by the Government of the Netherlands to the Government of the United Kingdom; and no subject of the United Kingdom shall be delivered by the Government thereof to the Government of the Netherlands. With reference to the application of the present treaty, are comprised in the denomination of "subjects," not only naturalised citizens of the country, but also such foreigners as, according to the laws of either of the contracting parties, are assimilated to subjects, as well as such foreigners who, being domiciled in the country, and having married a citizen thereof, have one or more children by that marriage born there.

By art. 8 :

The requisition for extradition shall be made through the diplomatic agents of the high contracting parties respectively. The requisition for the extradition of an accused person must be accompanied by a warrant of arrest issued by the competent authority of the state requiring the extradition, and by such evidence as, according to the laws of the place where the accused is found, would justify his arrest if the crime had been committed there.

Besley (Tickell with him) moved on behalf of the prisoner for the writ of habeas corpus.—The prisoner is entitled to his discharge from custody on several grounds. The first is, the prisoner is not a subject of the King of the Netherlands, but of the United States of America, and so cannot be claimed by the Government of the Netherlands, for he is not a subject within the meaning of articles 1 and 3 of the Treaty of Extradition of 1874 between this country and Holland. When Ganz was arrested over here, two letters of naturalisation as a citizen of the United States were found on him dated respectively the 25th and 28th July 1880, and also a passport dated the 29th July 1880. Now, there is no evidence on the depositions made against him that he was born in the Netherlands, which ought to be forthcoming to displace the presumption that he is a subject of the United States. So far as the evidence goes, he may be a natural-born Englishman, or one who was born in any country other than the Netherlands. [POLLOCK, B.—A man may be a vagrant, that is, of no country, and the law seeks to give him a domicile. Here you start with the proposition that Ganz was at a certain date in the Netherlands, and that there he did certain acts—I will not say more; therefore the presumption is, he is a subject of that country. That he has come to this country again is patent, but that does not help you unless you show a general proposition that every man, whether he be on the Continent, or in England, or anywhere else, if he can produce letters of naturalisation making him, quoad those letters, the subject of another country, that therefore he has lost his original domicile.] I say that it changes the burden of proof, and it is for the demanding country to show that they are entitled to have him surrendered. My next point is, that there has been no warrant of arrest proper to enable the demanding country to have him arrested. The only document on which the prisoner has been arrested is a mere copy of a letter ordering the arrest of one Wyprecht, who is said to be the same person as Ganz. [The learned counsel here read the document set forth above, beginning "In the name of the King."] This is not an original foreign warrant authorising the arrest of the criminal within 33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, ss. 10, 15: (Clarke on Extradition, p. 178.) There has been no proper authentication in this matter, and, even assuming this to be an order for arrest, it is a copy and not an original; and there is no provision which enables the requisitioning state to send over a mere copy of the actual foreign warrant. [MANISTY, J.—Is your point that no properly authenticated warrant of arrest was produced?] No original warrant at all; that which has been produced is simply a minute. Copies of depositions and statements may be sent over, but not a copy of the warrant of arrest. First, I say this document is not a warrant at all; next, if it were, it is a mere certified copy of that document which has not been sent over. This warrant must be of equal validity with an English warrant by which a person may lawfully be taken into custody: (Extradition Treaty of 1874, art. 8.) [The learned counsel urged several other points for the consideration of the court; but they are not set out fully in argument, because the court requested the Attorney-General to confine his remarks to the two points which are set out above. There were, however, two points urged by him, both of which were covered by the unreported case of Reg. v. Jacobi and Hiller (a) cited in the

(a) Thursday, March 3, 1881.

(Before POLLOCK, B. and STEPHEN, J.)

REG. v. JACOBI AND HILLER.

Extradition—Foreign warrant—Crime sufficiently stated—Goods obtained by false pretences sent from one country to another—English law of local venue—Extradiction Act 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52).

G. and H. were charged with conspiring together in A. in the jurisdiction of the Government of H. to obtain goods by false pretences from H. and Co. in M., in the jurisdiction of the Government of G. They wrote letters from A. (containing the false pretences) to H. and Co., in G., ordering goods to be sent to them in A.; they also orally (with like false pretences) ordered the same goods from the agent of H. and Co., who called on them in A. The goods were sent from M. as ordered. On the receipt of the goods, G. and H. sent them to E., whither soon after they themselves absconded; and were there arrested at the request of the Government of G. The warrant of arrest described the fugitive criminals as "suspected of fraud." On the application for their discharge, it was contended that the warrant of arrest was bad for insufficiency; and that the offence, if any, had been committed in H. and not in G., so that they ought not to be delivered up to the Government of G.

Held, that the foreign warrant of arrest was sufficient, and did not require the offence to be so set out as to strictly satisfy the English definition of the crime committed abroad; but it was enough if it purported to be a judicial document issued by a court of competent authority ordering the arrest of a fugitive criminal.

Held, further, that where the offence is one continuous transaction committed partly in one country and partly in another, the English law of local venue in criminal matters ought not to be applied to the extradition of fugitive criminals.

THIS was an application for two rules nisi calling upon the Governor of Holloway Prison to show cause why two writs of habeas corpus should not issue, calling upon him to bring up for release the bodies of two persons named Jacobi and Hiller, who had been committed to his custody under an extradition warrant granted by the Chief Magistrate at Bow-street, on the application of the Government of the Emperor of Germany.

The following were the material facts of the case:—

1. Jacobi and Hiller were charged with conspiring

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. GANZ.

[Q.B. Div.]

argument: (1) That the document ordering the arrest should not be in general words, but must set out a specific crime committed by the fugitive, together in Amsterdam to obtain goods by means of false pretences from a firm named Heininger and Co., carrying on business in Mayence, in the province of Hesse.

2. On the 23rd Sept. 1880 the prisoners sent a letter in the name of "O. Jacobi and Co." to the prosecuting firm at Mayence, giving orders for the supply of a suite of furniture for four rooms in a house in Amsterdam, which furniture was to be sent by the prosecutors to Amsterdam.

3. Some time after the receipt of the above letter the agent of Heininger and Co. called at the supposed place of business of Jacobi and Co. in Amsterdam, and there saw both prisoners. Jacobi, in the presence of Hiller, told the agent that he had a large woollen manufactory; that he was shortly going to be married, and wanted the goods for the furnishing of the house where he and his wife were going to reside.

4. The above statements were alleged to be false and fraudulent.

5. The furniture so ordered was sent by Heininger and Co. by the ordinary carrying agents to the address in Amsterdam given by Jacobi.

6. Other furniture was subsequently ordered and supplied to Hiller separately on the guarantee of Jacobi.

7. The furniture so supplied was not paid for.

8. The prisoners, on the receipt of the goods, immediately sent them off to England, and the furniture ordered by Jacobi was found at Vine-street, Minorities, and that ordered by Hiller in a warehouse in Brixton.

9. In Dec. 1879 Jacobi and Hiller absconded to England, and a warrant for their arrest was issued by a court of criminal jurisdiction of the province of Hesse.

10. The said warrant of arrest was in the following terms: "Jacobi, the alleged proprietor of the firm of O. Jacobi and Co., at Amsterdam, who is suspected of fraud, by having with intent to procure for himself some illegal pecuniary profit, and by the pretence of doing business, that is to say, by a promise of payment given in writing falsely and in bad faith, induced the firm of J. Heininger, at Mayence, to forward him on the 11th Dec. 1880 a quantity of furniture of the value of 3838 francs 20 cents., thus causing a pecuniary prejudice to the said firm amounting to the above-stated sum, shall be taken into custody and detained during the investigation of the case. The arrest of the accused during the investigation of the case is ordered because, after having perpetrated the said crime, he has absconded with the goods thus obtained to a foreign country." The warrant for the arrest of Hiller was in the same terms with the exception of the substitution of his name for that of Jacobi.

11. A formal requisition for the extradition of the prisoners was made; and on apprehension the above charge was preferred against them at Bow-street, and on the oral evidence of the agent of the prosecutors a prima facie case of obtaining goods by false pretences was made out against them. Sir J. Ingham thereupon committed them to custody for extradition.

12. An application for two rules nisi for two writs of habeas corpus was accordingly made on behalf of the prisoners. The grounds of the application were: (1) that no offence had been committed in Germany; (2) that the warrant of arrest issued by the German authorities asking for the extradition of the prisoners did not contain a statement showing that the offence for which the prisoners were sought to be extradited was an offence within the extradition treaty between England and Germany.

The Attorney-General (Sir Henry James, Q.C., A. L. Smith with him) showed cause.

A. G. M. McIntyre, in support, contended, as on the argument for the rules, that if any offence had been committed by the prisoners it had been committed in Holland, and not within the jurisdiction of the German Empire, because the false pretence had been made (if at all) both by letters written from, and verbally in, Amsterdam; and the prosecutors had not parted with possession of the goods until they had reached Amsterdam, for up to that time they were under the control of the prosecutors and their agents, the carriers; and, for which he could be apprehended on a warrant of arrest in England; and that it was not enough for the extradition crime to be proved by oral secondly, that the warrant ordering the arrest of the prisoners was bad for insufficiency, as it did not state upon its face that the crime charged against the prisoners was the extradition offence of obtaining goods by false pretences, but set out a mere fraud which could be substantiated without proving a single false pretence for which he could be indicted in England, and that such mere fraud was not an extraditable offence within the extradition treaty between England and Germany.

POLLOCK, B.—This is a matter with reference to which, as it affects the liberty of the subject, this court, like any other court, no doubt should be extremely careful in seeing that they thoroughly appreciate the objections which are taken on behalf of the prisoner. Mr. McIntyre has taken those objections both upon his rule and his argument to-day very clearly, and I can myself have no doubt whatever that we are now really in possession of the whole facts and of the law which bears upon this case. Mr. McIntyre's objections are two. The first, although of a somewhat technical character, is still deserving of the greatest attention. That objection is, that the foreign warrant, whereby the police magistrate was put in motion, merely recited that Jacobi and Co., or rather Hiller, who is alleged to be a commercial clerk of Jacobi and Co., "who is suspected of fraud by having, with intent to procure for himself some illegal pecuniary profit, and by the pretence of doing business, that is to say, by a promise of payment given in writing, falsely and in bad faith induced the firm of J. Heininger and Co., at Mayence, to forward him on the 11th Dec. 1880 a quantity of furniture of the value of 3838 francs 20 cents." That is the charge, and the real substantial question is, whether that is, when we have referred to the Extradition Act of 1870, a sufficient statement of the warrant under which a prisoner may be arrested in this country and detained. The 10th section of that Act is as follows: [His Lordship here read the section, which will be found set out in the principal case above.] With regard to the mere actual language used in the warrant, this very question was most carefully considered by this court in the case of Ex parte Terras (39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 502; 4 Ex. Div. 63; 48 L. J. 214, Ex.), and in the course of that decision the court pointed out the general principle of law, and the wide distinction which exists between the case of a warrant for the arrest of a person for the purpose of putting him into safe custody in order that he may be brought to trial, and the case of a warrant which acts as a committal in execution of the body of the prisoner. In that case two authorities were cited: Rez v. Despard (7 T. R. 736) and Rez v. Gourlay (7 B. & C. 669), in which the distinctions pointed out were referred to, and in part relied upon by this court. But in truth it does not require a reference to those authorities, because what we have to consider here is this: If these two persons had been in England and had been residing in England, that evidence would have to be produced to show that they were guilty, or that there was reason to suppose that they were guilty of the obtaining money or goods by false pretences; there could be, of course, no manner of doubt, that being the very language used in our statute relating to false pretences, whereby the offence is constituted, and that is now the language which is used in the schedule to the Extradition Act 1870. By the language of sect. 18, to the effect that "such evidence is to be produced as would, according to the law of England, justify the committal for trial of the prisoner if the crime of which he is accused had been committed in England," you get what is the spirit and intention of the Act, which it is quite clear is not to be affected by mere variation of language, and by not merely saying that there was evidence to show that these prisoners were guilty of obtaining money by false pretences, but saying that they were guilty of "fraud," that "fraud" being "with intent to procure for themselves some illegal pecuniary profit, and by the pretence of doing business, that is to say, by a promise of payment given in writing falsely and in bad faith, induced the firm" to part with the goods which were to be forwarded. When you once get that statement, you get in substance what is the offence of obtaining goods under false pretences, because, as has already been said by my brother Stephen,

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. GANZ.

[Q.B. Div.]

evidence before the magistrate; (2) That, on the facts of the case, the offence, if any, was committed within the empire of Germany, and not within the jurisdiction of the kingdom of the Netherlands.]

The Attorney-General (Sir Henry James, Q.C.)

if you were to attempt to say that each warrant must absolutely contain the exact language to be used in the terminology of our criminal law abroad and at home, the statute would be almost a dead letter. That seems to me to dispose of the first objection taken by Mr. McIntyre. Then comes the second objection, which no doubt is one of much greater substance, because one must be very careful, in dealing with foreign criminals as well as with those of our own country, not to deal equivocally, or say that they were guilty of a criminal act generally, but to see that the offence is actually brought within the statute or law under which they were prosecuted. Now, what was the offence with which these two men were charged? The question whether the evidence establishes the offence is, I agree with the Attorney-General, for the magistrate before whom the case is brought. In this particular case it was for the magistrate at Bow-street on the hearing of the case to say whether in his opinion the evidence established the commission of the offence by the prisoners in question; provided, of course, that this court sees that he has not in any way exceeded his jurisdiction, or that he has not in any way misinterpreted any description of any crime in a statute under which he supposes he is acting. What is the evidence of the offence in this case? Two prisoners, who upon the evidence apparently reside at Amsterdam, sent letters to the firm of J. Heininger and Co., Mayence, a city in the empire of Germany, and those letters ask that furniture may be delivered at Mayence, not merely generally, but for the purpose of going to Amsterdam; and the goods come ultimately into the custody of the prisoners. I entirely agree with Mr. McIntyre that the evidence does not disclose anything which shows that there was an intention on the part of the prisoners in ordering these goods that they should be delivered to any particular carrier in Mayence, so as to make that agent the consignee of the prisoners. If this question had arisen under the Statute of Frauds, or otherwise, which made it necessary to decide whether, when the goods left the hands of the prosecutor at Mayence, they came into the hands of the prisoners in the empire of Germany, I think it would have been a different matter altogether. But, for the purposes of this case, I find that, in favour of the view presented by Mr. McIntyre, there is a clear intention on the part of the prisoners expressed in their letters that the goods should be placed in the hands of some person; and the only further observation I would make upon that is this: if it stopped there, I should myself look at the English statute which governs such cases, viz., 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 89, which provides that "whosoever shall by any false pretence cause or procure any chattel to be delivered to any other person for the use or benefit, or on account of the person making such false pretence with intent to defraud, shall be deemed to have obtained such chattel within the meaning of the last preceding section," viz., the obtaining of it under false pretences. If it stopped there I should have been inclined to think it would have been quite sufficient to show, although no evidence had been given of the prisoners' obtaining these chattels, that they had by their false pretences induced the prosecutors at Mayence to part with their possession; but it is unnecessary to decide that here, because we have this further fact, that the prosecutors were directed to deliver possession to some person on behalf of the prisoners; and that they did so, the correspondence and the subsequent acts of the prisoners clearly show. There was one continuous chain of transaction; the letters were written ordering the goods; the goods were delivered at Mayence to the carrier; the receipt by the carrier was adopted by the prisoners at Amsterdam; and they dealt with the goods and sent them to this country under peculiar circumstances to which I need not advert. It seems to me, therefore, that upon all the sound principles the course of dealing of the prisoners was an obtaining of the goods in Mayence under false pretences; and, without going into the question of what might have been the position under our old law of local venue, that seems to me to be sufficient for us to deal with this particular statute. The only one other remaining point which was taken was, that there was no evidence of false pretence. That is a matter which it was the particular office of the magistrate to decide. He did decide upon evidence contained in those letters which clearly show that there was false pretence, and that under those circumstances the offence was committed. It seems to me that this is enough to dispose of the present case which is before us, and to enable us to say that these prisoners ought to be remitted to custody from whence they came.

STEPHEN, J.—I am of the same opinion; and really for the same reasons, but I will state them in different words, simply because the case is one of considerable importance. It seems to me that there are two objections in this case, the one to the warrant, the other as to the place where the crime was committed. With regard to the warrant, it is said that it does not set forth such a crime as is contained in the schedule of extradition offences, and that it does set forth a crime of which a person might be convicted, although there might not be proof against him, or the evidence necessary to make up that crime, for having committed which, or for having been suspected of which, he was delivered up to the foreign country. That objection appears to me to be a fallacy. I think that the warrant and the evidence are two distinct things. I think that the warrant need show nothing more than the fact that it has been issued by some competent authority, and is, in fact, an official document for the arrest of the prisoner. Then I think that the provisions relating to evidence provide the real safeguard against improper extraditions. I think that it is essential to the delivery up of the prisoner that it should appear upon the evidence given before the magistrate that he might have been committed for trial for one or other of the crimes mentioned in the first schedule if he had done in England the act which he is alleged to have done in a foreign country. Every one of the extradition crimes, when you come to look at them, are taken from English law, and everybody who is at all familiar with such subjects must be well aware of the fact that the definitions of crimes given in the law of England are peculiar to English law, and to the law of those countries which like America have derived the greater part of their criminal law from our own. For instance, in some cases, the English definitions are wider, and in other cases the English definitions are narrower, than those which prevail upon the Continent. If it were necessary for the warrant to set forth precisely the crime for which the magistrate is bound to see that there is sufficient evidence to put a man upon his trial, every foreign magistrate who issued a warrant available for the purposes of this Act would have to be acquainted with the law of England. I take it both ways. For instance, the definition of manslaughter, which is one of the crimes for which extradition may be made, according to English law is exceedingly wide. Suppose it should be a fact, as I rather think it is, a foreign magistrate, acting according to the French or the German Penal Code, were to issue a warrant for a man's apprehension for having in some way assaulted or wounded another, which wound had been followed by death; and suppose that assaulting and wounding was not an extradition crime, if it appeared in evidence before the magistrate that death had followed upon such assaulting or wounding, then, although the man might be tried, and probably would be tried for something very much less than causing death, viz., for causing the injury which led to death, I think that the magistrate, if he saw his way to commit him for manslaughter, or would have seen his way to committing him for manslaughter if the act had been done in England, would have to issue his warrant for his extradition. There are many other things, and I might give illustrations taken from nearly every offence mentioned in the schedule. Here the prisoner is accused of a fraud. Upon the face of the warrant the prisoner is accused of a fraud, and of obtaining money by written promises which were given without apparently the intention of being fulfilled; in fact, he is accused of an offence very like what we call obtaining credit by false pretences. That is what is said on the face of the warrant. When you bring him before the magistrate, it appears that he did acts for which the magistrate thinks he ought to be committed for trial for obtaining goods

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. GANZ.

[Q.B. Div.]

(A. L. Smith with him).—As to the first point of nationality, I will assume that the prisoner is a naturalised subject of the United States. Every person residing in a country is amenable to the laws of that country, whether he be a native or a stranger; there is no immunity from such liability, representatives of a foreign sovereign alone excepted. The criminal law of a country can be enforced equally against strangers residing in it as against native-born subjects; so, too, the power of extraditing equally applies whether the offender is or is not a native of the country where found. In the first article of the treaty between this country and the Netherlands, the wide and general words "any persons" are used, and cover a stranger subject to the criminal law of either country. Mr. Besley says article 3 of the same treaty has restrictive words qualifying the scope of the first article. Now the term "subject" is not used in the first article, though it is in the third. The prisoner, to avail himself of the benefit of the provisions of article 3, must show that he is either a subject of this country, or a person assimilated to a subject; there is not the slightest ground for saying that the Government of the Netherlands shall not ask for the extradition of an American subject. But more than that, prima facie this man must be treated as a Netherlander. He cannot say that he was free from the jurisdiction of the criminal law of that country because of his British or American nationality; the first he never possessed, and the latter cannot avail him. As to the second point, this is more technical, and possibly there is more to be said for it; but it is not at all a fatal objection. Mr. Besley relied upon article 8 of the treaty, and said these proceedings were bad under it. Even if the warrant were defective (which I do not admit), it would be immaterial if the proceedings before the magistrate were regular and in accordance with the terms of the Extradition Act 1870 (33 & 34 Vict.

by false pretences, which is an extradition crime. That being so, it seems to me that, although the warrant is for a different offence, his committal within the Act is proper. Then comes the further question as to the place where the act was committed. What the man actually did at Mayence was this: He wrote letters which we may, upon the evidence, very fairly consider was making a false pretence. The letters speak of the place where the goods are to be delivered, viz., Mayence; he writes letters asking the person with whom he is dealing there to send this property to Amsterdam, and the property is actually parted with by the people at Mayence; it is sent by the railway to Amsterdam, and there it is taken by the prisoner and sent to London. I do not think we ought to import the whole of the English law of venue into these Extradition Acts, or that we ought to consider every independent country as forming so many distinct counties, each with its own grand jury, which would be necessary in order to make the English law of venue intelligible. I think questions might arise upon which at present I express no opinion; I indicated some such, for instance, as a duel fought across a frontier. I will settle any question which may arise upon that when the case happens. For the present purpose I think it is enough to say that the crime of obtaining goods by false pretences appears to me, for the reasons given at length by my brother Pollock, to have been committed at Mayence on this occasion, and therefore I agree in the opinion that the prisoners ought to be remitted to custody.

Rules discharged.

Solicitor for the applicants, D. E. Chandler.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor to the Treasury.

c. 52), for mere non-compliance with the treaty obligations would not invalidate them:

Reg. v. Counhaye, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 761; L. Rep. 8 Q. B. 410.

It has been sought in this case to limit the meaning of the word "warrant," under the Extradition Act 1870, to what would satisfy the technical definition of an English warrant; that is to say, a foreign warrant must be identical in form with an English one. This, however, cannot be maintained when the interpretation of a "foreign warrant" in sect. 26 of the Act is considered. Now, this warrant is a decree of a court authorising the arrest of Ganz, and so within the statutory definition of a foreign warrant. It is no doubt the copy of a decree of a competent court ordering his arrest, but for all practical purposes it is an original document, and no copy. It has received the official seal, and has been sufficiently authenticated under sect. 10 of the Act of 1870, and also under sect. 15 by having been signed by the proper officers of the court issuing it. This document, then, is a foreign warrant within the definition of the term. The prisoner has shown no grounds for setting these proceedings aside and entitling him to be discharged.

Besley in reply.

POLLOCK, B.—In this case the prisoner Ganz has been brought before this court upon habeas corpus, and upon the argument before us Ganz's counsel has certainly most thoroughly gone into the question, and presented to us all the points that could be urged why he is entitled to his discharge. With regard to several points that were taken, which were answered from the bench in the course of the argument, and in respect of which we did not call upon the Attorney-General for any reply, we think it unnecessary to make any further observation. Two points, however, which were most prominent in the argument of Mr. Besley certainly deserve the consideration of this court, because they involve questions of general principles affecting the liberty of the subject. The first of these points is this: It is said that Nathan Ganz, the person who is now in custody, is not subject to the extradition law as existing between this country and the Netherlands, by reason of his being not a domiciled subject of that country. That was put before us in two ways. It was put before us in the first instance by evidence which had been already given before the magistrate of his having been a naturalised subject of the United States. That evidence is now before us. It has, however, also been supplemented by an affidavit for this purpose we admit, evidently by Ganz himself, stating that not merely has he been naturalised in the United States, but that also there is no reason to believe he was born in the Netherlands. On the contrary, he says he has reason to believe he was born in a city in Hungary. Therefore it is said that this extradition treaty between this country and the Netherlands cannot be made to apply in such way as to give him up to the Government of the Netherlands. Now this is a matter which depends not merely upon the English statute, but it depends also on the treaty which exists between this country and the Government of the Netherlands respecting this matter. Before I allude to that treaty, I will merely say that the leading principle which

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. GAUZ.

[Q.B. Div.]

underlies all questions of nationality as applied to crime committed within any particular country is this: Whatever rights, civil or otherwise, a man may have which may be affected by his status and his domicile, it is, and must be, perfectly clear by the law of every nation that each person who is within the jurisdiction of the particular country in which he commits a crime is subject to that jurisdiction, otherwise the criminal law could not be administered according to any civilised method. That has been the law from all time; it is recognised by the earliest writers upon civil law; it has been adopted again and again, and alluded to both in treaties and in dealings between this country and other countries of Europe, and is to be found stated in all the law books in the cases in which this matter has been discussed. That being so, a treaty is made, and in some sense subject to that general rule, we must construe this statute. Now, our attention was called by the Attorney-General to the very general form in which the first and third articles of the treaty are framed. Article 1 is this [his Lordship here read the article]. Here it is according to all rules of law and diplomacy that you would expect to find any limitations which limited the status of the persons who are to be given up. Here not only are the most general words "any persons" used, but the article goes on and refers to their being persons who are accused or convicted of crime within the jurisdiction of the requiring party; clearly showing that the definition of a person to be delivered up is any person who commits a crime which is specified in the later article within the jurisdiction of the requiring party. Then, when we get to article 3, there is an express definition of what is meant by the word "subject," which is made to include not only "naturalised citizens of the country, but also such foreigners as, according to the laws of either of the contracting parties, are assimilated to subjects as well as such foreigners who, being domiciled in the country and having married a citizen thereof, have one or more children by that marriage born there." The first part tends to show that the person who is assimilated to a subject must be so in respect to the subject-matter with which it is dealing in the criminal law. It is clear that a person who commits a crime within a particular territory, and is for all purposes connected with that crime, is assimilated to a subject. The only other article to which it is necessary to refer, which was much dwelt on by Mr. Besley, viz., article 11, and the only single word which gives any assistance to his argument, is this: After providing as to how a person "shall be discharged as well in the United Kingdom as in the Netherlands, if within fourteen days a requisition shall not have been made," it says, "for his surrender by the diplomatic agent of his country." I do not think there is any great stretching the meaning of the word "his" to say that "his country" means that country which he is in for the purposes of the criminal law administered there, and also for the purposes of this treaty. The answer is this: If you ask the question, what is the country of this criminal? it is the country in which he committed the crime. I do not myself feel in any way pressed by that, nor should I have thought it necessary to call on the Attorney-General for any answer to this objection except, no doubt, it is a matter of general importance for us as well as for other countries that this matter should be thoroughly understood. Now comes the next point, which is a more technical one, but still not less important when we are dealing with the liberty of the subject, and that depends, not upon the treaty, but upon the true construction of the domestic statute under which we are acting while the prisoner is here in England, and by which all our English procedure must be governed. The objection raised was this, and it was an objection certainly at first sight entitled to some weight. It was said by Mr. Besley in this case there was no proper warrant of arrest produced before the magistrate who was called upon to detain and imprison for the time Gauz. That is a matter of great importance, essential to a person upon all ordinary principles of justice. A person when arrested in a foreign country would be entitled to know in respect of what crime or offence he is so arrested; therefore it is a careful provision made in the statute for the protection of persons charged. I cannot, however, help thinking that there has been a little confusion of thought on this subject, in supposing that any effect was ever intended to be given by this statute to a warrant drawn up in a foreign country. I can only say for myself, and I think it will be echoed by everybody who has thought of how the laws are passed in this country, and the jealousy with which the interference of any foreign power in this country would be treated, it never could have been intended or contemplated that any of the Extradition Acts should give power or currency to any foreign warrant within this kingdom. But what was intended was this; to establish machinery at the cost of the liberty of the subject which we were interested in with reference to our own subjects in other countries, as well as the subjects of other countries, when they were here, whereby, if it could be shown to any properly constituted tribunal of this country that a person had committed an offence in another country, and then had come here to escape the ends of justice, evidence in such case should be given before a magistrate here, who upon that evidence should commit the prisoner until there was an opportunity of extraditing him; that is, handing him over to the proper authorities of his country. Looking at the statute in that light we need now only see what preliminary precautions the Legislature took to set in motion the jurisdiction of the magistrate in this country, because there are many cases in this country dealing with our own procedure in which there may be some irregularity in a warrant whereby a man is arrested; but if the man once appear, the magistrate has to deal with the matter upon the evidence that is given before him. It, however, seems to me that everything has been done in the most strict form, and that there is no point of time at which the prisoner was not being dealt with under the most rigid carrying out of the provisions of this statute. This point altogether depends upon the meaning of the word "warrant" in sect. 10 of the Act of 1870. That section says, "in the case of a fugitive criminally accused of an extradition crime, if the foreign warrant authorising the arrest of such criminal is duly authenticated, and such evidence is obtained;" then it proceeds to say that the evidence is necessary for the magistrate to act. What then is this "foreign warrant?" If

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. GANZ.

[Q.B. Div.]

the interpretation clause is looked at, it is found that "the term warrant in the case of any state includes any judicial document authorising the arrest of a person accused or convicted of a crime." Therefore it is upon the production of, not a warrant of a foreign power according to the technical rules of English law, but of any judicial document authorising the arrest of a person accused of a crime. We have now before us this document itself in the shape of a copy of a decree of a foreign court. It begins by reciting what had been done by an inferior tribunal which had come to the conclusion that there had not been sufficient evidence to establish any charge against Ganz. Having reviewed the different allegations with great minuteness (even to the reviewing and putting down the names of the persons who are alleged to have been defrauded by Ganz, and the amounts of which they are said to have been defrauded) it goes on to say, "Taking into consideration that these acts are punishable by article 405 of the Penal Code, and having seen the articles 88 and 89 of the Law Book of Demands for punishment—that the before-mentioned report of the Court of Arrondissement, at Rotterdam, will not be accepted—authorised proceedings with order for arrest against Bernhardt Wyprecht (calling himself so), last living at Rotterdam, thence absconded. Done at the Hague on the 21st Nov. 1881, by the following gentlemen." Now come the signatures, including that of the president, and of others described as counsellors of the court, and of the actuary. So much for the document itself. It is impossible to say that is not a judicial document authorising the arrest of this person. Then comes the further question. This being in existence at the Hague, what evidence have we got of it here in England? It is this: we have a copy of it indorsed as follows: "Delivered on demand of the O. M., the actuary of the courts of justice at the Hague;" this is signed again by certain authorities. Lastly, come the words, "The Hague, Dec. 2nd, 1881. For the Minister of Justice, the Secretary-General, (signed) Clamm." It is sealed with the seal of the Ministry of Justice. Is that copy so identified and attested that it can be received under this statute? That depends upon sect. 15. Now it is common knowledge in dealing with a matter of this kind that the prosecution would not produce before the police magistrate in London all the original documents of foreign countries where they were the judgments of courts, and of course some provision would be made for the production and use of copies, accordingly in sect. 15 the use of copies is provided for: [his Lordship here read the last clause of sect. 15.] In foreign warrants by the interpretation clause are included foreign judicial documents authorising the arrest of a person accused, authenticated in manner provided for the time being by law, or authenticated as follows: "If the warrant purports to be signed by a judge, magistrate, or officer of the foreign state, where the same was issued." Then a little later on there is a more general provision. In every case the warrants—including the judicial documents—are authenticated by the oath of some witness, or by being sealed with the official seal of the Minister of Justice or some other minister of state. Now this particular document is sealed with the seal of the minister of state for the Department of Justice. It appears to me, therefore, that in this case all the provisions of the statute have been clearly complied with. In coming to this conclusion I do not think we have in the least degree extended either technically or in spirit the provisions of this Act, which are most carefully set round all persons who are charged under it with every precaution which is requisite and necessary for the maintenance of the liberty of the subject.

MANISTY, J.—I am of the same opinion, but I shall add a few observations of my own. It seems to me, looking at the Extradition Act of 1870, and the treaty of 1874, that there are two essential requisites before the fugitive criminal can be extradited. The first essential requisite is a requisition for extradition by the diplomatic representative of the foreign state. That is necessary for giving effect to all the subsequent proceedings; but that requisition may follow instead of precede the steps taken to arrest the fugitive criminal. Another is, that the magistrate to whom the matter is intrusted, or before whom the matter is brought, should be satisfied by evidence that a crime has been committed, and that it is one specified in the treaty, and that the evidence is such as will convict the criminal in this country. Now, no doubt in the treaty it is stated that the requisition for the extradition must be accompanied by a warrant of arrest (that is, the requisition issued by the competent authority of the state requiring the extradition). But if an information is laid before any justice of the peace or a police magistrate that the accused is a fugitive criminal and has been convicted of a crime within the power of such magistrate, the latter may issue his warrant and arrest the criminal before any requisition is produced. That, I think, throws a good deal of light on the subject, and shows that, with reference to the decision which the court arrived at when they held as they did in a case to which I will advert presently, the Secretary of State may waive certain conditions, because, by the 6th section of the Act of 1870, "where this Act applies in the case of a foreign state" (say, in the Netherlands) "every fugitive criminal of that state who is in or suspected of being in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, or that part which is specified in the order applying this Act (as the case may be), shall be liable to be apprehended and surrendered in manner provided by this Act." What is the manner provided by this Act? The 7th section enacts that the requisition for the surrender of a fugitive criminal "shall be made to a Secretary of State by some person recognised by the Secretary of State as a diplomatic representative of that foreign state. A Secretary of State may, by order under his hand and seal, signify to a police magistrate that such requisition has been made, and require him to issue his warrant for the apprehension of a fugitive criminal." That is a case where a requisition has been received and acted upon by the Secretary of State of this country. Now comes a most important section, viz., sect. 8: "A warrant for the apprehension of a fugitive criminal, whether accused or convicted of crime, who is in or suspected of being in the United Kingdom may be issued by a police magistrate on the receipt of the said order of the Secretary of State, and on such evidence as would in his opinion justify the issue of the warrant if the crime had been committed or the criminal convicted in

CHAM. DIV.]

RUMBALL (app.) v. SCHMIDT (resp.).

[Q.B. DIV.]

England." Then follows an important provision that a warrant may be issued "by a police magistrate or any justice of the peace in any part of the United Kingdom" not upon the receipt of an order from the Secretary of State, but "on such information and complaint and such evidence, or after such proceedings, as would in the opinion of the person issuing the warrant justify the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the criminal convicted in that part of the United Kingdom in which he exercises jurisdiction," without any intimation from the Secretary of State, or any requisition to the Secretary of State. It then provides certain guards to protect the criminal—"any person issuing a warrant under this section without an order from a Secretary of State shall forthwith send a report of the fact of such issue together with the evidence and information or complaint," and so on, "to a Secretary of State, who may, if he think fit, order the warrant to be cancelled, and the person who has been apprehended on the warrant to be discharged;" and further, "a fugitive criminal when apprehended on a warrant issued without the order of a Secretary of State shall be brought before some person having power to issue a warrant under this section, who shall by warrant order him to be brought before a police magistrate. A fugitive criminal apprehended on a warrant issued without the order of a Secretary of State shall be discharged by the police magistrate, unless the police magistrate, within such reasonable time as with reference to the circumstances of the case he may fix, receives from a Secretary of State an order signifying that a requisition has been made for the surrender of such criminal." It will be found that he is to be discharged unless within fourteen days a requisition is received. In my opinion, therefore, a requisition is an essential element in the proceedings under the Extradition Act of 1870. That Act does not say that the requisition must precede the issuing of a warrant by a magistrate, but it must ultimately come, otherwise there is no power to deliver him up. That, I think, may well account for the decision in the case of Rey. v. Counhays (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 761; L. Rep. 8 Q. B. 410), because it was objected there that some of the conditions had not been complied with; but Blackburn, J. says: "As to the objection that the terms of the treaty have not been complied with, and the order of the Secretary of State ought, therefore, not to have been made, I do not think that affects the magistrate's jurisdiction; if the conditions of the treaty have not been complied with the Secretary of State might have refused to order a magistrate to proceed, but these conditions are not in the Act of Parliament; and the Secretary of State having made an order, and the magistrate having acted under it, all we have to do is to look at the Act to see whether he had jurisdiction under it. We are, I believe, also all agreed that sect. 14 makes depositions properly authenticated evidence that may be taken in the absence of the person accused, and for good reason, because, although the requisition must sooner or later come by the 11th article of the treaty, the fugitive criminal is to be discharged as well in the United Kingdom as in the Netherlands if within fourteen days a requisition shall not have been made for his surrender;" that is, after the arrest. So that both in the treaty and in the Act of Parliament that is the course of procedure. But the fugitive, though he may be arrested without the interference of the Secretary of State, or by the interference of the Secretary of State after a requisition has been received, may be arrested before that, although he must be discharged if within fourteen days a requisition is not received by the Secretary of State. The Act of Parliament and the treaty are at one on the subject. If the crime which has been committed comes within the treaty, and the evidence satisfies the magistrate that it is a crime which would have been punishable in England, he may take these proceedings; but the delivering up of the criminal depends upon whether or not a requisition is made by the diplomatic representative of the foreign state. Though I think all the rest is form, yet I am clearly of opinion that the document here objected to comes within the terms of the meaning of a warrant in the 21st section of the Extradition Act. It was an order of the Court of Justice at the Hague, and bore the official seal of the court. It has been properly attested, and is an original document and no copy at all. We are of opinion that all proper forms have been complied with.

Rule discharged.

Solicitors for the applicant, Greenfield and Abbott.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor to the Treasury.

Wednesday, March 22, 1882.

(Before GROVE, J. and HUDDLESTON, B.)

RUMBALL (app.) v. SCHMIDT (resp.). (a)

Projecting building—Continuing offence—Limitation of summary remedy—38 & 39 Vict. c. 55 ss. 156, 252.

Within an urban district, the appellant had, without the consent of the sanitary authority, brought forward a building, forming part of a street, beyond the front wall of the house or building on either side thereof, and he was afterwards served with a written notice by the authority to the effect that he had committed a continuing offence under sect. 156 of the Public Health Act 1875. Upon an information laid more than six months after the date of the notice, the appellant was convicted of an offence under this section and fined.

Held, upon a case stated, that the conviction was right.

Marshall v. Smith (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 538; L. Rep. 8 Q. B. 416) distinguished.

THIS was a case stated by justices under the Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879.

On the 21st Nov. 1881 an information was laid before justices by the respondent, as the building surveyor of the local board of Eastbourne (being the urban sanitary authority of the district), against the appellant for an offence against sect. 156 of the Public Health Act 1875 in building an addition to and bringing forward a house belonging to the appellant, and forming part of a street in Eastbourne, beyond the front of the houses on either side the same house, and in continuing the said offence after written notice to him in that behalf from the urban sanitary authority, for the space of thirty-seven days from the 14th Oct. to 19th

(a) Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

RUMBALL (app.) v. SCHMIDT (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Nov. both inclusive. On the hearing of the information, the justices convicted the appellant, and imposed a penalty upon him of one shilling a day for the thirty-seven days with costs. The material facts stated in the case were as follows:—

The appellant in April 1881, being the owner of the house in question, erected an addition upon the forecourt in front thereof, and brought out such addition considerably beyond the fronts of the houses on either side. This was done without any consent on the part of the urban sanitary authority. On the 2nd May 1881 the appellant was duly served with notice from the urban authority that he had committed an offence against sect. 156 of the Public Health Act 1875, and that he would be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for every day during which the said offence was continued after receipt of the notice. Between the 2nd May and the 14th Oct 1881 the appellant was three times summoned by the urban authority before justices, and convicted for continuing the offence above mentioned. Upon two of those occasions a fine was imposed which he paid, and on the third he undertook to remove the addition complained of; but he had failed to do so up to the time when the present information was laid. At the hearing of the information on the 5th Dec. 1881, it was contended for the appellant (inter alia) that the information was not laid within the time limited by the statute, and that the alleged offence was completed upon the building of the addition complained of, and that the charge of continuing the offence was unsupported by evidence. If the court were of opinion that the conviction upon this information was right, the conviction was to stand; but if otherwise the information was to be dismissed.

By the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 156:

It shall not be lawful in any urban district, without the written consent of the urban authority, to bring forward any house or building, forming part of any street, or any part thereof, beyond the front wall of the house or building on either side thereof, nor to build any addition thereto beyond the front of the house or building on either side of the same. Any person offending against this enactment shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for every day during which the offence is continued after written notice in this behalf from the urban authority.

By sect. 252:

Any complaint or information, made or laid in pursuance of this Act, shall be made or laid within six months from the time when the matter of such complaint or information respectively arose.

Lee Roberts and Pardoe argued for the appellant, and relied upon the case of Marshall v. Smith (28 L. T. Rep. N.S. 538; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 416), in which Keating and Honyman, JJ. held that the appellant could not be convicted of a continuing offence under bye-laws in pursuance of the Public Health Act 1848, merely because he omitted to alter a party wall, which he had constructed half the width required by one of the bye-laws. There the 12th bye-law required that all party walls should be nine inches at least in thickness, and the 42nd bye-law was as follows: "In case any offence under any of the foregoing bye-laws shall continue, the persons offending shall be liable to a further penalty of not exceeding forty shillings for each day during which such offence shall continue after written notice of the offence has been given by the local board to the offender." There, too, the circumstances as to the first conviction, and the period before the date of the information, were similar to this case:

Coggins v. Bennett, 2 C. P. Div. 568.

Gore for the respondent.—The case of Marshall v. Smith is distinguishable from the present, not, perhaps, so much in the facts, as in the enactments under which the conviction was obtained. It was held there that the 42nd bye-law might have applied to some other preceding bye-law besides the 12th; but here, in the 156th section of the Public Health Act 1875, the penalty is imposed only upon the continuance of a building constructed in breach of the section, and if not to such facts as these here stated, the summary remedy could have no effect at all.

Pardoe in reply.

GROVE, J.—I am very unwilling to differ from a court of high authority under any circumstances, even if I am not bound to follow its decision, and, in this case of Marshall v. Smith (28 L. T. Rep. N.S. 538; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 416) the judges who took part in the hearing merit the utmost consideration, and I should not venture to express a different opinion from that which they entertained, were it not that it seems to me doubtful from the reports how far their decision applies to the facts of the present case. Looking carefully at their judgments, and at the 156th section of the Public Health Act 1875, I cannot but think those two judges would have coincided with our view of this case. The language, no doubt, in the bye-law which was before them is somewhat similar to that of this section, but the very fact that it was a bye-law is an important difference; and, moreover, the circumstances of the case were entirely different. In the first place, it should be remembered that the bye-law, there alleged to have been infringed, applied to and followed several other bye-laws which created offences; the words were: "In case any offence under any of the foregoing bye-laws shall continue, the person offending shall be liable to a further penalty of not exceeding forty shillings for each day during which such offence shall continue, after written notice of the offence has been given by the local board to the offender." This bye-law might well have had an application to some of the offences created by the previous bye-laws, but Keating and Honyman, JJ. held that it was not a continuing offence within its enactment to allow a party wall, which had been completed, to remain standing. One of the previous offences was created by these words: "All party walls shall be nine inches at least in thickness. Any person offending against this bye-law shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings." The appellant had been before convicted for building a party wall of only $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches in thickness, and the appeal was brought against a second conviction for that the said offence still continued. Now full effect might have been and was given to this bye-law against continuing offences without applying it to the particular party wall; but here the penalty for a continuing offence is part of the section creating the offence of building beyond the front of adjoining houses, and if we do not apply it to the facts before us we shall render the enactment of no effect. The section says, "it shall not be lawful in any urban district, without the written consent of the urban authority, to bring forward any house or building on either side thereof beyond the front

Q.B. Div.]

RUMBALL (app.) v. SCHMILT (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

wall of the house or building on either side thereof;" but the subsequent part of the section which creates the offence imposes a penalty only "for every day during which the offence is continued, after written notice in this behalf from the urban authority." It follows, from a careful consideration of this section, that a penalty is imposed only for the continuance of this offence during a day after the authority has given written notice. If therefore the appellant's contention is right, and this is an offence which cannot be continued by the building being left standing, there can be no penalty at all; and if the forward building has been completed before the authority has discovered it and given the requisite notice, the builder would escape all responsibility to this summary remedy, provided that he made no further addition. In Marshall v. Smith there was a power under the bye-laws to pull down forbidden buildings, but no such power exists here, and, although there may be a cumbersome remedy by indictment for the misdemeanour of disobeying a statute, it seems to be clear that the Legislature entertained the object of imposing a summary remedy for some useful purpose. It can scarcely be said that there is no way of incurring that penalty but by actively proceeding with the building after notice. The fact that the penalty is imposed by the same section which declares the offence shows the meaning of the section to be that the urban authority may, in the exercise of its discretion, enforce the demolition of a building, constructed in defiance of the section, by a daily fine so long as the building is left standing. I cannot, of course, give the reason why the actual building of any wall beyond the neighbouring line has not been subjected to a penalty; it is enough that the more effectual mode of compelling the demolition of such a building exists in the penalty for its continuance. The words of the section are wide enough to cover this interpretation, and it is strongly supported by the absence of any other power in the sanitary authority to abate the consequences of a disobedience of the section. The judgments in Marshall v. Smith must be read secundum subjectam materiam; there was not only another mode of enforcing obedience to the enacting part of the bye-law by pulling down the building, but it was possible to give effect to the bye-law creating continuing offences without applying it to the offence there committed. Keating, J. is reported to have expressly referred to both these points, and with regard to the former he said: "I was at first struck by the argument that, unless no power were given to continue the penalty until the wall was pulled down, the Acts might be defeated; and if it had been impossible to carry out the intention of the Acts in any other way, I might perhaps have yielded to the force of that argument, and have held that continuing penalties might be enforced; but it appears, from the latter part of sect. 34 of the Act of 1848, that the board has power to pull down walls improperly built. I think that this, and not a continuing penalty, is the appropriate remedy to meet the evil." I think there are substantial distinctions, both in law and in fact, between the present case and that of Marshall v. Smith, and I think that some, if not all, the reasons given for that judgment do not apply here. The only other point is as to the statutory limit of time for commencing these proceedings. About that I am quite clear; there can be no limitation to a continuing offence. The case of Coggins v. Bennett (2 C. P. Div. 568) has no application whatever. I think the respondent is entitled to judgment.

HUDDESTON, B.—I am of the same opinion. I think that, as this section imposes a penalty for a criminal offence, the appellant is entitled to the benefit of any doubt which may arise on the construction of it. It is said that by sect. 252 the information should be laid within six months from the time when the matter of the information arose, that the offence was the bringing forward of the appellant's house beyond the line of the street, that the offence was committed when the addition was completed, and that the matter of the information arose then. It may be that the offence, specified in the first clause of sect. 156, was committed as soon as it became apparent that the appellant was bringing forward his house beyond the line of the street. But in substance the offence for which he was liable to the penalty was the continuing the addition after written notice from the urban authority. It is possible that, for the offence specified in the first clause, the appellant would have been liable to an indictment; but the following clause provides that the penalty shall not be for building the addition, but for continuing it after notice. I think the meaning of the section is clear. It was thought necessary to secure uniformity with respect to the line of buildings in streets; it is therefore enacted that houses shall not be brought forward without that consent, and if the urban authority give him the written notice specified in the section, he is liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for every day during which the offence against the uniformity of the street is continued. I do not feel myself fettered by the decision in Marshall v. Smith, which differs considerably from the present. The decision was upon a bye-law, not upon an Act of Parliament. It is obvious that the judgment of the court was influenced by the fact that there were a number of bye-laws, each of them specifying different offences, and a general subsequent bye-law covering those of the preceding ones to which it applied. Keating, J. thought that the offence under the bye-law, with respect to party walls, was not a continuing one, and, therefore, that the general bye-law did not apply to it. The corporation there had power to make bye-laws enabling them to pull down the party wall, so that there remained a remedy to them beyond the penalty. Here there is no such power; the penalty is imposed, not in respect of the offence, but in respect of the continuing it, and the penalty clause is part of the same section which declares the offence. I should feel but little difficulty in the decision of this case had it not been for Marshall v. Smith; but, for the reason I have given, I think that case distinguishable.

Judgment for respondent.

Solicitors for appellants, Layton and Jaques.
Solicitors for respondent, Ooles and Carr, Eastbourne.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. EATON AND OTHERS; Re JOHN SHARPE; Re MARY MARRIOTT.

[Q.B. Div.]

Dec. 9, 16, and 20, 1881.

(Before FIELD and CAVE, JJ.)

REG. v. EATON AND OTHERS (Justices, &c.); Re JOHN SHARPE; Re MARY MARRIOTT. (a)

Elementary education—Justices—Attendance order—Bye-laws—Enforcement of, where parent or employer resides in union extending into several counties—Jurisdiction of justices in such case—Elementary Education Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79), ss. 12, 34—Poor Law Amendment Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 106), s. 27.

Proceedings before justices, under sect. 12 of the Elementary Education Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79), against parents or employers residing in a union extending into several counties, for non-compliance with a school attendance order or for any breach of the school bye-laws under the Elementary Education Acts, may by virtue of sect. 34 of the Elementary Education Act 1876, incorporating "all enactments relating to guardians and their officers," &c., and of sect. 27 of the Poor Law Amendment Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 106) be taken against such parents or employers before the justices of either of such several counties.

THIS was an application for a rule for a mandamus ordering the defendants, justices of the peace for the county of Northampton, to hear and adjudicate upon certain complaints on the part of a school attendance committee against certain persons for breaches of the bye-laws of the school board, &c.; and the facts of the case, as gathered from the affidavits of the clerk to the guardians and to the school attendance committee of the Stamford Union filed on the application for the rule on behalf of the said committee, appeared to be as follows:—

The Stamford Poor Law Union extends into four counties, viz., Lincolnshire, Rutland, Northamptonshire, and Huntingdonshire, and the workhouse of the union is in the county of Northampton.

Under the Elementary Education Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79) a school attendance committee, selected from the guardians of the Stamford Union, was duly appointed at a meeting of the guardians on the 18th April 1881, and under sect. 74 of the Elementary Education Act 1870, as amended by the last-mentioned Act of 1876, and the Elementary Education Act 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 23), the said committee made and passed certain bye-laws for the several parishes within their jurisdiction and the said union, which were duly sanctioned by Her Majesty's Privy Council.

At a meeting of the school attendance committee, on the 29th June 1881, William B. Arnold, a duly appointed school attendance officer, was directed to institute and carry on proceedings against one John Sharpe, of Belmishthorpe, in the parish of Ryhall, in the county of Rutland, within the Stamford Union, for a breach of the said bye-laws in not causing his son George, under the age of thirteen years, and not being within either of the exemptions mentioned in No. 5 of the said bye-laws, to attend a school; and also against one Mary Marriott, of Borderville, in Stamford aforesaid, and occupying a farm in the said parish of Ryhall in the aforesaid union, for employing a child under the age of fourteen years at Ryhall aforesaid, contrary to the provisions of the Elementary Education Act 1876.

The defendants, three of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Northampton, holding petty sessions at the Town Hall, in Stamford, were accordingly, on the 29th July 1881, applied to by the clerk to the guardians and the school attendance committee, on behalf of the said committee and the said W. B. Arnold, their officer, for summonses against the said John Sharpe and Mary Marriott respectively, for their respective offences as aforesaid, but the said justices refused to grant such summonses, or either of them, on the ground that they had no jurisdiction in cases arising under the Elementary Education Act 1876 elsewhere than in the county of Northampton, and that sect. 27 of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 106, did not apply to such cases.

Thereupon a rule nisi was obtained in last Michaelmas Sittings calling upon the said justices (the defendants) to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue, directed to and commanding them to proceed to hear and determine the matter of the above-mentioned application on behalf of the said school attendance committee, for a summons against the said John Sharpe for a breach of the said bye-laws, but upon its subsequently coming on for argument, the court declined to grant the rule for a mandamus to the justices, but ordered that, in lieu of such rule, the defendants, the said three justices and the said John Sharpe, should show cause peremptorily on Wednesday, Dec. 14, why the said justices should not proceed to hear and determine the matter of the said application on behalf of the said school attendance committee for a summons against the said John Sharpe for a breach of the said bye-laws as above mentioned.

A similar application was made with the like result in the case of the charge against the said Mary Marriott.

The following are the material portions of the Acts of Parliament bearing upon the case, and referred to in the judgment of the court:

The Elementary Education Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79). By sect. 12 it is enacted that Where an attendance order is not complied with, without any reasonable excuse within the meaning of this Act, a court of summary jurisdiction, on complaint made by the local authority may, if it think fit, order as follows: (1) In the first case of non-compliance, if the parent does not appear, or appears and fails to satisfy the court that he has used all reasonable efforts to enforce compliance with the order, the court may impose a penalty not exceeding with the costs the sum of 5s. . . .

Sect. 34:

In a union the clerk of the guardians shall be the clerk of the school attendance committee for the purposes of this Act. All enactments relating to guardians and their officers and expenses, and to relief given by guardians shall, subject to the express provisions of this Act, apply as if the guardians, including the school attendance committee appointed by them, and their officers acting under this Act, and expenses incurred and money paid for school fees and relief given under this Act, were expressly acting, incurred, and paid and given as relief under the Acts relating to the relief of the poor, and the Local Government Board may make rules, orders, and regulations accordingly. Any expenses incurred by officers of guardians in carrying into effect sect. 20 of the Elementary Education Act 1873, when paid by such guardians, may be charged by them to the parish in respect of which such expenses are incurred.

(a) Reported by HENRY LEIGH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. EATON AND OTHERS; Re JOHN SHARPE; Re MARY MARRIOTT.

[Q.B. Div.]

The Poor Law Amendment Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 106). Sect. 27:

Where a union extends into several distinct jurisdictions, every matter, act, charge, or complaint, by which the guardians thereof are affected, or in which they have any interest, shall, for the purpose of jurisdiction, be deemed to arise or exist equally throughout the union.

The rule nisi, as modified by the order of the court as above mentioned, under sect. 5 of Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 44)(a), now came on for argument.

The justices did not appear by counsel to show cause, but they filed an affidavit in which they stated that they refused to issue the summonses applied for on behalf of the school attendance committee, on the ground that they had no jurisdiction in cases under the Elementary Education Act 1876 except in cases arising in the county of Northampton, having been advised and believing that sect. 34 of the last-mentioned Act, being silent as to legal proceedings, did not apply to such cases; that there were certain clauses in the Elementary Education Act 1876 relating to legal proceedings, but there was no clause in the said Act, nor, as they had been advised and believed, in any other Act of Parliament, giving them jurisdiction in cases under the Elementary Education Act arising in any other county than the county of Northampton; that, having been advised and believing that every penalty imposed by them under the Elementary Education Act might be recovered in a summary manner under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and that the imposition of such penalty might, in case of default in payment, subject the person upon whom such penalty was imposed to imprisonment, and believing that they had no jurisdiction except in cases arising in the county of Northampton, they, the said justices, did not feel justified in granting the said summonses, seeing that the proceedings under the same might possibly be followed by imprisonment of the persons against whom the summonses were applied for.

W. Y. Clare now appeared for the applicants, the school attendance committee, and his arguments in support of the rule sufficiently appear in the judgment.

Our. adv. vult.

Dec. 20.—The following judgment of the court (Field and Cave, JJ.) was now delivered by FIELD, J.—A rule nisi was granted by this court calling upon the defendants, three of the justices of the peace for the county of Northampton, to show cause why they should not hear and determine an application made to them on behalf of the school attendance committee of the Stamford

(a) Sect. 5 of Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 44) is as follows: "In all cases where a justice or justices of the peace shall refuse to do any act relating to the duties of his or their office as such justice or justices, it shall be lawful for the party requiring such act to be done to apply to Her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench upon an affidavit of the facts for a rule calling upon such justice or justices, and also the party to be affected by such act, to show cause why such act should not be done; and if after due service of such rule good cause shall not be shown against the said court, may make the same absolute with or without costs as to them shall seem meet, and the justice or justices upon being served with such rule absolute shall obey the same, and shall do the act required."

Union, for a summons against one John Sharpe; and also, on the motion of the same applicants, for a like summons against Mary Marriott, for an offence, in each case, under the Elementary Education Act 1876, in having committed a breach of the bye-laws made and passed by the school attendance committee of the said union. Both of these persons, John Sharpe and Mary Marriott, against whom the proceedings were instituted, reside in the parish of Ryhall, in the county of Rutland, but within the poor law union of Stamford, which union also extends into and comprises within it a portion of the county of Northampton, within which county the said justices had jurisdiction in petty sessions holden at Stamford. The proceedings against John Sharpe were for a breach of the bye-laws made under sect. 74 of the Elementary Education Act of 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), as amended by the Elementary Education Acts of 1876 and 1880, for, amongst other places, the parish of Ryhall; and the application against him was made under sect. 12 of the Act of 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79), by which, when an attendance order is not complied with without any reasonable excuse, a court of summary jurisdiction may, on complaint made by the local authority, make such order as they think fit within the limits imposed by the statute. The proceedings against Mary Marriott were made, so far as the question which we have to decide is concerned, under similar circumstances. It will have been observed that, although the persons proceeded against in both these cases committed the breaches complained of within the county of Rutland, the application in each case was made to the justices in petty sessions in the county of Northampton; and that the justices to whom the applications were made having been advised that they had no jurisdiction in cases under the Elementary Education Act of 1876, except in cases arising in their own county, declined to issue the summonses. There is, of course, no doubt that, primarily, the limits of the commission of justices of the peace are also those of their jurisdiction, and that it lies upon anyone, who asks them to act elsewhere, to show some statutory authority enabling them to do so. In the present case the school attendance committee of the union, whose duty it is to enforce the bye-laws and the provisions respecting the employment of children, relied upon sect. 34 of the Act of 1876 as giving that jurisdiction. By that section "all enactments relating to guardians and their officers and expenses, and to relief given by guardians, shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, apply as if the guardians, including the school attendance committee appointed by them, were acting under the Acts relating to the relief of the poor, and the Local Government Board may make rules, orders, and regulations accordingly." It is impossible to exaggerate the inconvenience of this mode of legislation. Instead of the Legislature referring specially to any previous Acts or sections of Acts of Parliament which it proposes to incorporate in this 34th section, the only incorporation is that of "all enactments relating to guardians," &c.; thus rendering it necessary for any tribunal that may be required to construe the incorporating Act to search through every Act of Parliament in which guardians are referred to, in order to see whether any particular enactment can be found bearing upon the matter in hand; and inasmuch as in this very Act there is a set of clauses (sects. 37, 38, 39) expressly referring to legal proceedings, I am not at all surprised to find that the justices in the present cases, finding no extension of the jurisdiction in those clauses, considered that it had not been given to them. In order, however, to make out that a jurisdiction to act within the county of Rutland had been conferred on the justices for the county of Northampton, we were referred by the learned counsel who appeared on behalf of the school attendance committee to sect. 27 of the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 106), by which it is enacted that "where any union extends into several distinct jurisdictions, every matter, act, charge, or complaint by which the guardians are affected, or in which they have any interest, shall for the purpose of jurisdiction be deemed to arise or exist equally throughout the union." Now, if that clause is to be read into sect. 34 of the Elementary Education Act 1876, and if, when it is so read in, sect. 27 of the Poor Law Act of 1867 applies to the present case, it must, we are of opinion, be taken that the justices of Northamptonshire would have jurisdiction in this matter, although the matter of the complaint in each case arose in the county of Rutland; the marginal note to sect. 27 pointing out, as it does, that the enactment is intended specifically to relate to "jurisdiction of justices in unions." Let us then see whether sect. 27 of the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 106) is made applicable to the enforcement of bye-laws made under the provisions of the Elementary Education Acts. The authority enforcing them is "the school attendance committee," who are expressly mentioned in sect. 34 of the Elementary Education Act 1876. They are "acting" under that Act, and the section says that "all enactments relating to guardians shall apply as if the school attendance committee were acting under the Acts relating to the relief of the poor." Now the statute 30 & 31 Vict. c. 106, is undoubtedly one of "the Acts relating to the relief of the poor," and, as the Stamford Union extends into the county of Northampton, we think that the matter complained of in these cases, although actually arising within the county of Rutland, must be taken to have arisen equally in the county of Northampton, into which county the union extends, and so to have arisen and to be within the jurisdiction of the justices for Northamptonshire. There are many instances of similar legislation. For an offence committed in a workhouse a justice of the peace may commit to the gaol of the county to a parish in which the pauper is chargeable (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 57), notwithstanding that the justices are not justices of that county (see 11 & 12 Vict. c. 110, s. 9). In like manner, under the various Public Works Consolidation Acts, if questions arise relating to lands not wholly in one jurisdiction, they may be decided by a justice of the peace in any county in which any part of such lands is situated; and an offence against the Salmon Fishery Acts, committed in a river running between and fixing the boundaries of two counties, is cognisable by any justice of either of such two counties. The result, therefore, in the present cases, is, that the justices of Northamptonshire have jurisdiction in both these cases, and must proceed to hear and determine them both accordingly. Both rules, therefore, must be made absolute.

Q.B. Div.]

WARRINGTON WATERWORKS COMPANY (apps.) v. LONGSHAW (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Rules absolute accordingly.

Solicitors for the prosecutors, Joseph Mote and Son, agents for English, Stamford.

March 11 and May 26, 1882.

(Before FIELD and BOWEN, JJ.)

WARRINGTON WATERWORKS COMPANY (apps.) v. LONGSHAW (resp.). (a)

Water rate—Basis of assessment—Annual value—Gross value—Rateable value—General Assessment Act 1836—Waterworks Clauses Act 1847—18 & 19 Vict. c. cxciii. ss. 63, 65—6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, s. 1—10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 68.

Sect. 63 of the appellant company's special Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. cxciii.), obliged the company to supply water at a rate not exceeding 6l. per cent. per annum upon the annual rack rent or value of the premises so supplied with water.

Sect. 65 of the same Act provided that such water rates should be payable according to the annual value at which the premises were assessed to the poor rate, if so assessed, or if not, according to the net annual value of the premises. The respondent was charged by the company on the basis of the gross estimated rental value of the premises so owned by him; he disputed his liability for more than the sum to be calculated upon the net rateable value of his premises. The appellants brought their action in the County Court for the full amount. The respondent paid into court the amount for which he admitted his liability. The County Court judge held that the respondent's contention was right, and gave judgment in his favour. The County Court judge, however, stated a case for the opinion of the court above.

Held, on appeal, that the County Court judge was right, and that under the provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. cxciii. s. 65, the basis of assessment was not the "gross estimated rental," but the "net annual value" of the premises sought to be assessed.

THIS was a case stated by the learned judge of the County Court of Lancashire holden at Wigan.

The material facts were shortly as follows:

The appellants were a waterworks company supplying the town of Warrington with water.

The respondent was owner of a house, of which, according to the rate-book, the "gross estimated rental" was 10l. per annum, and the "rateable value," 8l. per annum.

The appellant company claimed to charge the respondent for the supply of water at a rate based upon the "gross estimated rental" of the house; the amount of the rate was 6s. The respondent on the contrary denied his liability to be charged on the higher basis of assessment, but claimed to be assessed on the lower basis of the "rateable value" of his premises, in which case the rate amounted to 4s. 10d.

The appellants, in order to raise the question, sued the respondent in the County Court held at Wigan, for the said sum of 6s. The respondent thereupon paid the sum of 4s. 10d. into court, as being sufficient to satisfy the claim of the appellants.

(a) Reported by W. P. EVERSLY, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

WARRINGTON WATERWORKS COMPANY (apps.) v. LONGSHAW (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

The appellants contended at the trial that they were entitled to charge the water rate on the "gross estimated rental" of the premises; and the respondent contended that he was only liable on the basis of the "rateable value."

The learned County Court judge held that the contention of the respondent was the correct one, and, as the sum of 4s. 10d. paid into court was sufficient, gave judgment for the respondent.

Leave to appeal was granted, and the opinion of the Superior Court was asked in the form of a special case stated by the learned County Court judge.

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. cxii. s. 61:

The owners of all dwelling-houses occupied as separate tenements, and receiving a supply of water from the company, the annual rateable value of which houses or tenements shall not exceed the sum of 10l., and which houses or tenements shall be let for periods not exceeding one month, shall be liable and subject to the payment of all rates, rents, and other charges made by the company; and the powers and provisions herein contained for the recovery of rates, rents, and other charges from occupiers shall be construed to extend and apply to the owners of such houses and tenements.

By 18 & 19 Vict. c. cxciii. s. 63 (incorporating sect. 53 of 9 & 10 Vict. c. cxii.):

The company shall, at the request of the owner or occupier, furnish to every occupier of a private dwelling-house, or part of a dwelling-house, in any street within the limits of this Act in which any main or other water pipe of the company is from time to time laid, a sufficient supply of water for the domestic purposes of such occupier, including water-closets, at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum upon the annual rack rent or value of the premises so supplied with water: Provided always that the company shall not be entitled to receive for such supply from any one such owner or occupier more than the sum of 10l. in any one year, and shall not be obliged to furnish such supply to any owner or occupier for less than 5s. in any one year.

By sect. 65:

Such water-rates shall be paid by the owner or occupier requesting the supply of water, and shall be payable according to the annual value at which the premises are from time to time assessed to the poor rate, if the same be so assessed, or, if not, according to the net annual value of the premises.

By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, s. 1:

No rate for the relief of the poor in England and Wales shall be allowed by any justices, or be of any force, which shall not be made upon an estimate of the net annual value of the several hereditaments rated thereunto; that is to say, of the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free of all usual tenants' rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent charge, if any, and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent.

By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 68:

The water rates, except as hereinafter and in the special Act mentioned, shall be paid by and recoverable from the person requiring, receiving, or using the supply of water, and shall be payable according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water, and if any dispute arise as to such value the same shall be determined by two justices.

B. E. Webster, Q.C. (S. Taylor with him) appeared for the appellants.

Sir Hardinge Giffard, Q.C. (Aspland with him) appeared for the respondent.

The arguments appear sufficiently in the judgment of the court.

Our. adv. vult.

May 26.—The judgment of the court was delivered by FIELD, J.:—This is an action brought to recover a sum of 6s. for half a year's supply of water by the plaintiffs to the defendant in respect of a dwelling-house, of which he is the owner. The defendant admitted his liability to the extent of 4s. 10d., but disputed the rest. The plaintiffs claimed to recover the sum charged under their special Acts. By the first of them, the Warrington Waterworks Act of 1845, c. cxii., s. 53, the plaintiffs were obliged to furnish to every occupier of a dwelling-house water at a rate not exceeding 6l. per cent. per annum upon the annual rack rent or value of the premises; and such rate is by sect. 54 to be payable according to the annual value at which the premises shall be assessed to the poor rate, if the same shall be so assessed, or, if not, according to the net annual value of the premises. By sect. 61, owners of dwelling-houses, the annual rateable value of which shall not exceed 10l., and let upon periods not exceeding a month, are made liable to the water rent instead of the occupier. By and with a subsequent Act (1855) the Act of 1845 was repealed, and the Companies Clauses Act, save so far as the clauses or provisions thereof respectively are expressly varied or excepted, are incorporated. By sect. 63 of this Act of 1855 the plaintiffs are obliged, as in the former Act, to furnish a supply of water at a rate not exceeding 6l. per cent. per annum upon the "annual rack rent or value" of the premises supplied, such water rate being, by sect. 65, made payable according to "the annual value at which the premises are from time to time assessed to the poor rate, if the same be so assessed, or, if not, according to the net annual value of the premises," this proviso being in substance identical with that of the 54th section of the repealed Act. The words "annual value" thus used in these Acts are the same words that are used in the General Parochial Assessment Act (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96), by which, as is well known, the assessment of occupiers to the poor rate is governed, and by which no poor rate is of force which is not made upon "an estimate of the net annual value" of the hereditaments. In that Act the words "net annual value" are followed by an express definition of the sense in which they are used; that is to say, it is to be the rent at which the hereditaments may reasonably be expected to be let "free of all usual tenants' rates and taxes and tithe rentcharge, and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent." Under this Act, therefore, the sum at which the party chargeable to the poor rate is to be assessed is arrived at by two steps: firstly, by ascertaining the rent without taking into account the rates and taxes and tithe rentcharge usually borne by the tenant, or, in other words, the sum which is ordinarily paid as rent to the landlord; and, secondly, by deducting from that sum the expenses necessary to be incurred by the landlord in order to keep the rateable hereditaments in the condition to command that rent. The sum arrived at by the first stage of this calculation is in the words of the heading of the form of rate given by the Act, and of the definition given in the Union Assessment Act of 1862, described as "gross estimated rental," the ultimate result being "rateable value," and being the sum upon which the computation of the amount payable by the person chargeable is to be made.

Q.B. Div.] DOBBS (app.) v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

This being the state of the law applicable to the subject, the following are the facts to which it has to be applied: The defendant is the owner within the meaning of the 65th section of the Act of 1855 of the dwelling-house to which the water was supplied, and by the poor rate at the time in force this dwelling-house was stated to have a "gross estimated rental of 10*l.*, and to be of the "rateable value" of 8*l.*, and the defendant was "assessed" as owner upon the latter sum, and did not dispute his liability to that extent. The plaintiffs, however, claimed to compute his water rate upon the higher sum. At the hearing before the learned County Court judge, he held that the defendant's contention was correct, but stated the case for the opinion of the court upon which we are now called on to decide. Upon the arguments before us it was not disputed on the part of the plaintiffs that the sum upon which the computation had to be made was to be found in the poor rate, but it was said that the words decisive of the question as to the part of the poor rate in which that sum was to be found were the words "annual rack rent or value" in the earlier part of the 63rd section, and which "annual rack rent or value" they said was in truth the sum ordinarily going as rent into the pockets of the landlord, without making deduction for what may be shortly called landlords' charges, or, in other words, the "gross estimated rental" of the poor rate. In support of this contention, Mr. Webster prayed in aid the 68th section of the Waterworks Clauses Consolidation Act of 1847, by which the water rates are to be payable according to the "annual value" of the tenements, alleging that it could not be reasonably held to be the intention of the Legislature to point out one principle of assessment in the general Act, and sanction a different principle in a private Act. But the general Act is, as is well known, of no binding force until it has been applied by some special Act; and, inasmuch as in the present case the general Waterworks Act is only incorporated so far as its enactments are expressly varied and altered by the special Act, the latter and its true interpretation must be had recourse to for the purpose of deciding the question now before us. Thus the contention is narrowed to the simple question, whether by the special Act it is the "gross estimated rental" or "net annual value" of the hereditaments that is to be taken as the basis of the assessment; and upon that question we think that the language of the Act now before us clearly points to the latter and not to the former. The Legislature designedly intended to remove the question, from the uncertainty of the words "annual rack rent or value," as used in the 63rd section and in the Waterworks Clauses Act of 1847, by declaring their meaning by the 65th section; for that section says that the sum is to be calculated upon the amount at which the premises are "assessed" to the poor rate. It is true, as Mr. Webster pointed out, that the language is not technically accurate, for it is the occupier or owner, and not the hereditament upon which the assessment is made, but surely the sum upon which he or the premises are assessed is not the "gross estimated rental." Before the ultimate assessment can be arrived at that sum must be reduced by deducting therefrom the landlord's charges, which leaves the "net annual value" as the basis of the water rent.

That, therefore, is the sum at which the owner or occupier is assessed to the poor rate, and it seems to us to be the sum upon which his water rate is to be charged. Mr. Webster referred us to the case of The Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Bennett (27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 199, and 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 509; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 409, and L. Rep. 8 Ex. 196; 41 L. J. Ex. 233), but whatever light that case might have thrown upon a case in which the language, Act, and question had been precisely similar, it does not assist us in the present case where all differ. We think therefore that the decision of the County Court judge was correct, and affirm it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellants, Gregory, Rowcliffes, and Co., for Nicholson, White, and Nicholson, Warrington.

Solicitors for the respondent, Field, Roscoe, and Co.

March 18 and May 26, 1882.

(Before FIELD and BOWEN, JJ.)

DOBBS (app.) v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY (resps.). (a)

Water rate—Basis of assessment—Rent—Annual value—Gross value—Rateable value—The Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869—7 Geo. 4, c. cxi. s. 27—15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. s. 46—32 & 33 Vict. c. 67, s. 4.

Sect. 27 of the respondent company's special Act (7 Geo. 4, c. cxi.) obliged the company to supply water at a scale of rates graduated to the rent of the houses supplied. Such rate was to be payable according to the actual amount of the rent, where the same could be ascertained, and where the same could not be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate was computed in the district where the houses were situated.

*Sect. 46 of a later special Act of the said company (15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii.) obliged the company to furnish water at the following rates; "where the annual value of the dwelling-house . . . shall not exceed 20*l.* at a rate per centum per annum on such value not exceeding 4*l.*; and where such annual value shall exceed 20*l.*, at a rate per centum per annum on such value not exceeding 3*l.* The appellant occupied a house, the rent of which could not be ascertained, as he held it on a lease for a long term of years at a small ground rent. The appellant was rated by the respondent company at the gross annual value of his hereditament as appearing in the valuation list for the time being in force under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869. The appellant contended that he was liable to be rated only on the rateable value of his hereditament, and refused to pay the larger sum demanded. The dispute was referred to a police magistrate, who decided in favour of the contention of the respondent company, but stated a case for the consideration of the Superior Court.*

Held, on appeal, that the magistrate was wrong, and that the proper basis of chargeability under the statutes was not the "gross estimated rental" of the hereditament, but its net "rateable value."

THIS was a case stated by one of the magistrates of the metropolitan police court in pursuance of

(a) Reported by W. P. EVERSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.] DOBBS (app.) v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

20 & 21 Vict. c. 43; and the material facts were as follows:

1. A dispute arose between the appellant and the respondents as to the amount the appellant should pay to the respondents for water supplied by them to him at his residence, and was referred to the magistrate for his decision.

2. At the hearing, the following facts were either proved or admitted by both parties. That the appellant was lessee for a term of which about seventy years were unexpired, at a ground rent of 15*l.* a year, of the house known as No. 34, Westbourne-park, in the parish of Paddington, which he occupied as his residence. The lease under which the appellant held contained covenants by the lessee to repair and insure, as well as the usual covenants by a tenant. That the portion of the claim or rate as to which the present dispute arose was made upon the appellant by the respondents in respect of the water supply to the said house for domestic purposes, and the amount of the said rate was arrived at by a calculation of 4*l.* per cent. upon a sum of 140*l.*, such sum being the gross annual value of the said premises as appearing in the valuation list for the time being in force under the provisions of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 67 (the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869.)

3. It was also proved that 118*l.* was the amount which the appellant's premises were assessed to the poor rate.

4. After hearing the contentions of both sides, the magistrate decided in favour of the respondents, and held that as the assessment for the water rate was governed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 47, s. 46, and that as the "annual value" in the said 46th section was the exact definition of the "gross value," as defined in the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869, the respondents had charged the appellant on a proper basis for the water so supplied by them to him.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the magistrate was right in deciding that sect. 46 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 47 was applicable, and that the "gross value," as interpreted by the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869, was the proper basis of assessment for the purpose of the water rate to be charged by the respondents to the appellant, or whether he should have decided that such basis should be the "rateable value" of the said premises.

By 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi. s. 27:

The Grand Junction Waterworks Company shall be obliged to furnish a sufficient supply of water at a height not exceeding six feet above the flag pavement to the house of every inhabitant occupying a private dwelling-house in any square, place, street, or lane where the pipes of the said company shall be laid, for the use of his or her own family, at the following rates per annum (that is to say): Where the rent of such dwelling-house shall not exceed 20*l.* per annum, at a rate per centum per annum not exceeding 7*l.* 10*s.*; and where such rent shall be above 20*l.* and not exceeding 40*l.* per annum, at a rate per centum per annum not exceeding 7*l.*; and where such rent shall be above 40*l.* and not exceeding 60*l.* per annum, at a rate per centum per annum not exceeding 6*l.* 10*s.*; and where such rent shall be above 60*l.* and not exceeding 80*l.* per annum, at a rate per centum per annum not exceeding 6*l.*; and where such rent shall be above 80*l.* and not exceeding 100*l.* per annum, at a rate per centum per annum not exceeding 5*l.* 10*s.*; and where such rent shall be above 100*l.* per annum, at a rate per centum per annum not exceeding 5*l.*; and every such rate shall be payable according to the actual amount of the rent, where the same can be ascertained, and where the same cannot be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed in the parish or district where the house is situated.

By 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii., s. 46:

The company shall at the request of the owner or occupier of any house in any street within the limits of this Act in which any pipe of the company shall be laid, or of any person who under the provisions of this Act or any Act incorporated therewith, shall be entitled to demand a supply of water for domestic purposes, furnish to such owner or occupier, or other person, a sufficient supply of water for their domestic purposes at the rates hereinafter specified: that is to say, where the annual value of the dwelling-house or other place supplied shall not exceed 200*l.*, at a rate per centum per annum on such value not exceeding 4*l.*; and where such annual value shall exceed 200*l.* at a rate per centum per annum on such value not exceeding 3*l.*

By sect. 57:

Except as by this Act expressly provided, this Act or anything therein contained shall not repeal, alter, interpret, or in any measure affect any of the provisions of the recited Acts, or any of them, in force at the commencement of this Act.

By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 68:

The water rates, except as hereinafter and in the special Act mentioned, shall be paid by and recoverable from the person requiring, receiving, or using the supply of water, and shall be payable according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water; and if any dispute arise as to such value the same shall be determined by two justices.

By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 67, s. 4 (interpretation clause):

The term "gross value" means the annual rent which a tenant might reasonably be expected, taking one year with another, to pay for an hereditament, if the tenant undertook to pay all usual tenants' rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent charge, if any, and if the landlord undertook to bear the cost of the repairs and insurance, and the other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain the hereditament in a state to command that rent.

The term "rateable value" means the gross value after deducting therefrom the probable annual average cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses as aforesaid.

B. E. Webster, Q.C. (Sutton and A. P. Poley with him) for the appellant.—There are two important questions here: First, whether sect. 27 of 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi. has been repealed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. s. 46; secondly, whether "annual value" in the same section of the latter Act is equivalent to "gross annual value," or "net rateable value." First, I contend that the basis of assessment provided by sect. 27 of 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi. is not altered by 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. s. 46. In this last Act there is no express provision repealing that part of sect. 27 of the earlier Act dealing with the annual value; and the Legislature intended not to alter the meaning of "annual value," or that "annual value" was not to be used exactly the same in the two Acts of Parliament, but only to alter the rate per cent. payable when the annual value of the premises exceeded 200*l.* per annum. Indeed, in sect. 57 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. there is an express provision that nothing in the Act should repeal or alter any of the provisions of the recited Acts (of which 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi. was one), except by express mention. Secondly, I further contend that the appellant's rent is not ascertainable within the Act of 4 Geo. 4. Here the appellant is owner of an unexpired term of years, and he pays no rent properly so called within the Act, for I admit his ground rent of 15*l.* per annum is not "rent" within this section, which I take to be an annual sum agreed to be paid to the landlord by the tenant for the use and occupation of a dwelling-house. There is no such agreed sum here, and the rent is not ascertainable; therefore under this section for the purposes of the water rate, recourse must be had to the poor rate assessment of the premises. There we easily ascertain the "annual value" of these premises to be 118*l.*, and not 140*l.* I admit my liability to be rated at the smaller sum, but deny it for the greater, and submit that the magistrate was wrong in his decision.

Q.B. Div.] DOBBS (app.) v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

O. Russell, Q.C. (with him the Solicitor-General, Sir F. Herschell, Q.C. and J. F. Clerk).—The magistrate was right in holding that sect. 27 of 4 Geo. 4, c. cxi was repealed, and that the percentage was not to be paid upon the rateable value. My two points, then, are these: First, that the earlier Act is repealed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii, sect. 46, in the sense that the two provisions cannot be deemed consistent with each other; Secondly, that by reference to decided cases "annual value" is equivalent to "gross value." Firstly, the argument of the appellant would create a different standard for premises of one of which the rent could be ascertained, and of the other of which it could not. I maintain there is no more difficulty in ascertaining the "gross annual value" than the "rateable value." I might give a startling illustration of the result of the appellant's argument. A landlord owns two contiguous houses in the same row, of exactly the same value; and in the same state of repair; one of these houses he inhabits himself, the other he lets to a tenant. In the case of No. 1 the rent is not ascertainable, according to the appellant; in that of No. 2 it is. Now according to his argument, the landlord would pay on the amount at which he is rated to the poor, while his tenant would have to pay on the sum he agreed to pay as rent, which would be a great deal more than the rateable value of the house No. 1. [FIELD, J.—Thus two standards of value would be created for two houses exactly alike?] Yes, which the Legislature never could have intended. The amount in the rate book has nothing to do with the value or amount of the rent. Secondly, the "annual value" is the annual value to the person occupying the dwelling-house, in other words, the "rent" at which such a house would reasonably be expected to let, that is, "annual value" is equivalent to "gross rateable value."

Webster, in reply, cited Rees v. Tomlinson (9 B. & C. 163), on the point of the different standards of rateability, and Rees v. Adames (4 B. & C. 61), as laying down the canons applicable to rating.

The Court at this point intimated that if they were of opinion that sect. 27 of 4 Geo. 4, c. cxi. was not repealed by sect. 26 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii., there would be no need to argue the question of "annual value;" but if they decided adversely to Mr. Webster on that point, they would give him an opportunity of arguing the other question of the meaning of "annual value."

Curr. adv. vult.

May 26.—The judgment of the court was delivered by FIELD, J.:—The question raised on this case (which was stated by Mr. Major Cooke, one of the metropolitan police magistrates) was as to the principle upon which the respondents are entitled to charge the appellant for two quarters' supply of water to his dwelling-house, and which charge was based by the respondents upon an annual value of 140*l.*, the appellant's contention being that he was liable to be charged on no greater annual value than 118*l.* The 140*l.* was the "gross estimated rental," as the 118*l.* was the "net annual value" of the premises as stated in the poor-rate assessment of the appellant, which was in force at the time of the supply. The respondents claimed to be entitled to the greater sum by virtue of their special Acts. By one of these (7 Geo. 4 c. cxi. s. 27) the respondents were compelled to furnish a supply of water to inhabitants of private dwelling-houses at certain "rates" per annum graduated upwards from a rent not exceeding 20*l.* per annum "to 100*l.* per annum," and where the rent is above 100*l.* per annum, then "at a rate per centum per annum not exceeding 5*l.*" And the same section of the Act goes on to provide that the "rate" was to be "payable according to the actual amount of the rent of the premises, where the same can be ascertained, and where the same cannot be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed." By a subsequent Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii.), by which the respondents had further powers conferred upon them, it is enacted (sect. 46) that the company shall, at the request of the owner or occupier of a house, or of any person who shall be entitled to demand a supply under that Act, or any Act incorporated therewith, furnish such supply at the "rates" following, that is to say, "where the annual value of the dwelling-house shall not exceed 200*l.* at a rate per centum per annum on such value not exceeding 4*l.*; and where such annual value shall exceed 200*l.* at a rate per centum per annum on such value not exceeding 3*l.*" This section does not contain the closing words of the 27th section of the previous Act, by which the mode of computing the "rate" is given; nor does this Act of 1852 repeal in express terms the prior Act, or any part of it. On the contrary, the 57th section of the later Act enacts that, except as expressly provided, the Act, or anything therein contained, shall not repeal, alter, interpret, or in any manner affect any of the provisions of the Acts recited, of which 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi. is one. The assessment to the poor rate must, as is well known, be made according to the provisions of the General Parochial Assessment Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 97), upon "an estimate of the net annual value of the hereditaments," and such "net annual value" is defined as being the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let, "free of all usual tenants' rates and taxes and tithe rentcharge," and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses (if any) necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent. There are, therefore, two necessary steps to be taken in making the calculation in order to arrive at the sum upon which the assessment to the poor rate is to be computed, that is, firstly, gross estimated rental; and secondly, the result of net rateable value. In the present instance, however, the computation for the poor rate is not made under the provisions of the General Assessment Act, but under those of the Metropolitan Assessment Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67) by which the rateable hereditaments subject to it are divided into different classes, with a percentage applicable to each class, for the purpose of making a fixed deduction by which gross estimated rental is reduced to net rateable value. On the hearing of the present case before the magistrate, it was admitted that the appellant was the lessee of a term of which about seventy years were unexpired, at a ground rent of 15l. a year, of a house known as No. 34, Westbourne-park, which he occupied as his residence, and the lease of which contained covenants to repair and insure the premises, as well as the other usual covenants entered into by a tenant. The amount of the water rate which the respondents sought to charge against the appellant was arrived at by a calculation of 4 per cent. upon 140l., the amount of the "gross estimated rental" appearing in the valuation list; and the appellant denied his liability to be charged upon any greater sum than 118l., which appeared in the list as the "net rateable value," and the dispute thus existing between the parties was referred to the magistrate under the 68th section of the Waterworks Clauses Act of 1847. Before the magistrate the appellant's contention was founded upon what he alleged to be the true construction of the 27th section of the Act. 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi., but he was met in limine by the contention of the respondents that the whole of that section was repealed by the 46th section of the subsequent Act, and that it was by that Act alone that the water rate was governed. This contention was supported by the magistrate, who also held, upon the authority of the Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Bennett (27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 199, and 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 509; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 409; 41 L. J. Ex. 233), that the "gross estimated rental" of the valuation list, and not the "net rateable value," was the true representative of the "annual value" of the 46th section. But we are unable to agree in this conclusion, for we do not think that the 27th section of the former Act is repealed by the 46th section of the subsequent Act. The first Act is expressly recited in the latter one, and not only is there no express repeal of it, but instead of any express repeal there is the enactment (sect. 57) which we have already adverted to. This, however, would not be enough to enable us to decide the question, for, although there is no express repeal, that effect would have been produced according to the ordinary rules of construction of statutes, if the enactments of the 46th section of the later Act cannot be construed so as to be consistent with the continuance of the earlier enactments in sect. 27; for in that case the inconsistent affirmative enactment would import a negative fatal to the earlier one. Now it is clear beyond doubt (as was admitted by Mr. Webster, who argued the case for the appellant) that so much of the 27th section as graduates the amount of the percentage according to the rent of the dwelling-house in stages or leaps from 20l. up to 100l., and puts it 5 per cent. upon all above, is inconsistent with the subsequent enactment which gives a uniform charge of not exceeding 4 per cent. up to 200l., and of not exceeding 3 per cent. on all rent above, and that so much therefore of the 27th section is by implication repealed. But he said that this inconsistency between the enactments goes no further, and that there is no inconsistency in adopting the later percentages, and applying to them the mode of computation provided by sect. 27 of the sum upon which the rate of 4 or 3 per cent., as the case may be, is payable, and in this contention we agree with him. It seems to us that if from sect. 27 the graduated scale of rates, jumping by successive steps, is eliminated, and the more simple and general one of starting with 200l. a year, and diminishing the rate for all above is substituted, the whole of the rest of the 27th section may well stand together with the 46th. Repeal by implication is never to be favoured; it is no doubt the necessary consequence of inconsistent legislation wherever it occurs, but which must not be imputed to the Legislature unless absolutely necessary. We think, therefore, that the enactment of the 27th section defining the mode by which the sum upon which the percentage is to be calculated is in force, and therefore the next question is whether in the case now before us the "actual amount of the rent can be ascertained." What, then, is the "actual amount of rent?" It must, we think, mean some actual amount which has been bond fide arrived at by contract between the landlord and tenant (where such a contract exists) as the sum payable to the landlord by way of rent for the hereditament which is the subject of the letting. But in the case now before us no such contract exists, nor has any such actual amount been in any way covenanted for—the hereditament is in the occupation of its owner. It is true that he pays a rental to his landlord of a small sum, but that is, as it is called, a "ground," not a rack or other rent, for the demised hereditament, and Mr. Webster could not and did not contend that the tenant was entitled to have his water supplied upon the footing of that rent. But Mr. Russell said that "the actual amount of rent" could nevertheless be ascertained in the present case; for he said it is to be found in the amount of the "gross estimated rental" of the valuation list, which, applying to this case the principle which he said was at the base of the Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Bennett (ubi sup.), was the equivalent of "rent" or its equivalent "annual value." In that case "rent" and "annual" were the only words to be construed; there was neither "actual amount of rent" or reference to the poor law, and the court, not, however, without considerable doubt and hesitation, held that where a landlord takes upon himself voluntarily to pay, or is under a statutory obligation to pay, charges not in themselves in the nature of rent, in consideration of a larger sum than rent strictly speaking, the owning consumer is entitled to discard every part of the sum so paid which is not rent, and to have his supply based upon that which is actually rent. No doubt also if the principle is applied to a converse case in which a tenant pays a less sum by way of what is called rent on account of his undertaking to bear part of the landlord's necessary expenses in keeping the rateable hereditaments in a state to command the rent, it might be urged that the amount paid in money as for rent should be increased by the annual amount of the obligation so incurred, and thus bring the water charge to the "gross estimated rental," and that, as we understand it, was Mr. Russell's contention, who was able to point out some apparently startling inconsistencies which might occur upon any other view. But, however that might be in any case where the question shall arise, it is not necessary for us to decide the question in the present one, for we think that the Legislature in using the words it has in the 27th section, intended to free the question from all these difficulties, and that it intentionally created as the standard of charge either the actual rent (where ascertained), or in the alternative the poor rate assessment; and if the first words are to be read as compelling the persons supplying and supplied to go to the poor law assessment to find out the basis of computation, the latter words have no meaning, and so no alternative is given. This being so, the question in the present case is reduced (allowing for a very slight variation in words) to the question which we have just had to consider in the Warrington case (ante, p. 26), and we give it the same answer and for the same reasons. In arriving at this conclusion, we do not shut our eyes to the possibility that the application to the sale of water of a standard adopted for and adapted to a totally different purpose may, in some instances, produce results not altogether consistent with uniformity or equality of price, which in ordinary commercial transactions would be found; but we think that the Legislature intended to apply to the charge for supply of so universally necessary an article as water by a privileged body an already ascertained standard easily to be referred to, and upon which the company and the consumer could alike act, and that that standard is to be found either in a bond fide contract reduced to its true elements where that exists, or in "net rateable value," which is the actual basis of chargeability, rather than in gross estimated rental, which is only a step in the calculation. For these reasons we have come to the conclusion that the magistrate's order cannot be supported, and the order we make is that the annual value of the appellant's dwelling-house is to be taken at 118*l.*, the sum upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed; and we allow the appeal with costs.

Q.B. Div.] DOBBS (app.) v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Hollingsworth, Tyerman, and Andrews.

Solicitors for the respondents, Bircham and Co.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

April 20 and 21, 1882.

(Before BAGGALLAY, BRETT, and HOLKEE, L.JJ.)

THE BOARD OF WORKS OF THE HACKNEY DISTRICT
v. THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY. (a)

Metropolis Management Amendment Act 1862—
Paving expenses—New street on bridge over railway—Land bounding or abutting on—Parapet walls.

A railway company constructed a railway in a deep cutting at right angles to a road, and carried the road across the railway by means of a bridge, which was supported on stone piers erected upon the slopes of the cutting on either side of the line. There was a parapet wall on each side of the bridge running along the whole length of it. The district board paved the bridge, and called upon the railway company to contribute to the expense of paving the whole length of it, as owners of land bounding or abutting on a new street within the meaning of sect. 77 of the Metropolitan Amendment Act 1862. The magistrate found as a fact that the road in question was a new street within the meaning of that Act.

Held, that the railway company, being owners of the wall that ran along the side of the bridge, were owners of land bounding or abutting on the new street across the bridge, and were liable to contribute to the expense of paving the whole length of it.

The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company v. The Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell (4 Ex. Div. 239; 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 162) distinguished.

Judgment of Lord Coleridge, O.J. and Manisty, J. reversed.

THIS was a summons taken out by the Board of Works of the Hackney District to recover from the Great Eastern Railway Company a sum of 74*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* in respect of the cost of paving the new street or road, known as Cazenove-road, Stamford Hill. The magistrate dismissed the summons, but on the application of the Board of Works stated the following case:—

The respondents, under powers conferred upon them by an Act of Parliament, built a bridge carrying Cazenove-road over their line of railway, which is in a deep cutting.

The sum of 74*l.* 2*s.* 8*d.* was demanded by the appellants as the contribution of the respondents towards paving Cazenove-road, they being assessed as the owners of land bounding or abutting upon Cazenove-road for a distance of 44*ft.* 8*in.* upon the south side and for a distance of 48*ft.* upon the north side.

The road carried over the line of the respondents crosses it, running east and west on a bridge, which is supported on stone piers erected by the railway company upon the slope of the cutting on either side of the line.

No portion of the land of the respondents in respect of which it is sought to charge them is or can be used for any other purpose than for their railway.

It was contended by the respondents that they were not owners of land bounding or abutting upon the road within the meaning of the Act.

I was of opinion that the facts were the same (except that I found the road to be a new street) as in the case of The London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company v. The Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell (ubi sup.), and that the respondents were not the owners of land bounding or abutting on the road within the meaning of the Act.

The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the respondents are liable to pay the sum demanded to the applicants.

The Queen's Bench Division held that they were bound by the judgment in The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company v. The Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell, and gave judgment for the railway company, but gave leave to appeal.

The Board of Works now appealed.

Sir Hardinge Giffard, Q.C. (with him Poland) for the appellants.—The question whether the respondents are liable depends upon the construction to be put upon sect. 77 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), which provides that "where any vestry or district board shall . . . have paved or be about to pave any new street, the owners of the land bounding or abutting on such street shall be liable to contribute to the expenses . . . of paving the same." This was an extension of the provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 105, by which the owners of houses forming the street were alone liable to contribute. Where there is a railway passing under a street, which street is bounded by walls that form part of a bridge, the property of the railway company, are those walls "land bounding or abutting on" such street within the above section? If the words were used in a conveyance there could be no doubt that the walls would pass. Even if there were no wall in this case, it is submitted that the land upon which the lines are placed would be land bounding or abutting on the street. The Act makes no distinction in respect of the adjoining land being on a different level; it still bounds the street. But the wall here undoubtedly bounds or abuts on the street; and a wall is as much land as a house is. The court below decided this case on the authority of The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company v. The Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell (4 Ex. Div. 239; 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 162), but they did not agree with it. That case is distinguishable, however, because there was no wall. He cited

The London and North-Western Railway Company v. St. Pancras Vestry, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 654;

Higgins v. Harding, L. Rep. 8 Q. B. 7; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 483; Arnatt v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 20 L. T. Rep. O. S. 80.

Charles, Q.C. and French for the respondents. — Unless it is held that the wall is land bounding or abutting on the street, the appellants must rely upon the land underneath the bridge on which the railway is made. But the cases cited do not support the contention that land in such a position is rateable for the purpose of paving a street across the bridge. The case of The London and North-Western Railway Company v. The Vestry of St. Pancras (ubi sup.) decides only that land separated from the street by a dead wall is rateable under the Act. Higgins v. Harding (ubi sup.) is in favour of the respondents rather than against them. The decision in that case is only that, where there is physical contact between the land of the railway company and the street, the company are liable under the Act. The question in each case is, Does the land in the particular case bound or abut upon the street? The land underneath the bridge can certainly not be said to bound or abut upon the street. Then, are the walls on each side of the street land bounding or abutting upon the street? It is submitted that they cannot be, as they are themselves part of the street. What is a street? The word "street" is defined by the interpretation clause in sect. 250 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, and includes "any road, bridge, not being a county bridge," &c. . . . The whole bridge has therefore become a street, and has passed out of the ownership of the railway company. Then by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 46, it is provided that, "If the line of the railway cross any turnpike road or public highway, then (except where otherwise provided by the special Act) either such road shall be carried over the railway, or the railway shall be carried over such road, by means of a bridge of the height and width, and with the ascent or descent by this or the special Act in that behalf provided; and such bridge, with the immediate approaches and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall be executed, and at all times thereafter maintained at the expense of the company; provided always that, with the consent of two or more justices in petty sessions as after mentioned, it shall be lawful for the company to carry the railway across any highway other than a public carriage road on the level." So that the railway company are bound to keep this bridge in proper condition, and might be at any time indicted for non-repair. They cannot, therefore, be liable to contribute to the paving of the bridge by the district board. They also cited

Coverdale v. Charlton, 4 Q. B. Div. 104; 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 88;

North Staffordshire Railway Company v. Day, 8 E. & B. 836.

Sir Hardinge Giffard, Q.C. in reply.—Here the walls of the bridge make the street, but they are not part of the street.

Our. adv. vult.

April 21.—BAGGALLAY, L.J.—The question that we have to decide in this case is, whether the Great Eastern Railway Company is liable to contribute to the expenses of paving a certain street. Cazenove-road is a new street within the meaning of the Metropolitan Management Act 1855, and it has been paved by the Board of Works for the district under the powers given to them by that Act. By sect. 105 of the Metropolitan Management Act 1855 and sect. 77 of the Metropolitan Amendment Act 1862, the parties liable to contribute to the expense of such paving are the owners of the houses forming the street and the owners of the land bounding or abutting on such street. In the present case the railway company have constructed a railway in a cutting at right angles to the road, and have carried the road across the railway by means of a bridge. It is contended by the Board of Works that the railway company is liable to contribute to the expenses of paving a new street which is carried across this bridge, on the ground that it owns land which bounds or abuts on the new street. The railway company denies that its land does so bound or abut. The railway company further contend that, being by law required to maintain the bridge in a state of repair, they could not be called upon to contribute towards the expense of paving the new street. We have photographs of the locus in quo, and the position of the road and the line in question is described in paragraph 4 of the case: "The road carried over the line of the respondents crosses it, running east and west, on a bridge, which is supported on those piers erected by the railway company upon the slopes of the cutting on either side of the line." The magistrate held that the railway company did not own land bounding or abutting on the new street within the meaning of the Act; and he also found, as a fact, that the road in question was a new street. It is perfectly clear, from one of the photographs that we have before us, that there is an open passage leading down to the railway from the bridge in respect of which the railway company would be liable to be rated. Then running at right angles from the passage is a wall which bounds the street. It appears to me that that is all land—any erection on the land notwithstanding, it is all land. The whole bridge is supported on stone piers that are built on the land of the railway company; the bridge is composed in part of the new street, in part of the wall and the piers; the wall is the boundary of the street at that point; therefore, the wall stands on, and is land belonging to the railway company bounding the new street. Then there is the case of The London, Brighton and South Coast Railway Company v. The Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell. No doubt, if there had been no walls to this bridge, this case would have been governed by that. The magistrate thought that it was; the Queen's Bench Division also followed it, but gave leave to appeal. If the whole of the bridge here had constituted the street and there was no boundary wall, I do not say at present what my judgment would have been; at the same time I will not say that I would follow the Brighton and South Coast Railway case. But it is not necessary to decide that now. There is a clear distinction between this case and that. Then it was further argued that as the railway company were bound to maintain this bridge in a state of repair, they had an answer to a claim for contribution to the paving of the new road. I cannot follow that argument. Adjacent owners are called upon to contribute to the paving of the street, because of some supposed benefit that will accrue to them from the street being paved; that obligation cannot be affected by a previous obligation, not as adjacent owner, but by a person who happens to be an adjacent owner, to keep the bridge in repair. It has been suggested that the railway company might be called upon to keep the pavement of the new street in repair. It is not necessary to consider that now. The only question we have to consider is, whether as regards the one single work of paving the bridge, the railway company is liable to contribute, and I think that it is.

BRETT, L.J.—In this case I am sorry to say that the judges in the court below have not given us their opinions. They held themselves bound by The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company v. The Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell (ubi sup.). I wish that the Lord Chief Justice and Manisty, J. had given us their own opinions in the matter. The facts are that there is a railway in a deep cutting, over which the road is carried on a bridge; the Board of Works have determined to treat the road over that bridge as a street. The board resolved that it shall be paved; and have called upon the railway company to contribute towards the cost of paving the whole length of the street. The question is whether the board are entitled so to rate the railway company. They say that they are on two grounds: First, that they are entitled to rate the railway company in respect of the whole length of the street because the company are owners not only of the land on which the buttresses which support the bridge are built, but also of the land underneath on which the rails are. Secondly, it is said that if not on that ground, then because the company are owners of the walls which go along the length of the bridge, and which are to be considered as land and as the boundary of the street. With regard to the first contention, the board, in order to support it, would have to contend that, supposing the bridge and the buttresses that supported it, and the land on which the buttresses were built did not belong to the company at all, but supposing the land underneath the bridge which touches the buttresses did belong to the company, although no part of the bridge belonged to the company, the company would be liable to be rated in respect of the whole length of the street. Where there is a new street, the Metropolitan Act 1855 says that the owners of houses forming such street shall pay the expense of paving it, and the Metropolitan Management Act 1862 says that the owners of the land bounding or abutting on such street shall be liable to contribute to the expense of paving it, as well as the owners of houses therein. My view of the second Act is that it means land in the same position as regards the street as houses in the first Act. I do not agree with Hawkins, J. in Brighton Railway Company v. St. Giles, Camberwell, as to the owners of such lands only being liable as would have been liable under the former Act had their lands been occupied by houses, because I think that the owner of land, not wide enough for a house to be built upon it, might yet be liable to contribute. Nor do I think that the liability in respect of adjoining land can depend on mere level. I can imagine land at a lower level than the street on which houses might be built to which there would be no access except from the street by steps perhaps, or in some other way. I will not say that in such a case the land cannot be said to be abutting on the street. It is not necessary, however, to decide this, as I think the second ground upon which the board base their contention is sufficient to decide this case. It seems to me that upon that ground the railway company are owners of land bounding or abutting on the street for the whole length of the bridge. We are bound to say that this is a new street running across the bridge; that has been found as a fact. But the width of the street is only the width of the footway and the carriage way; the walls that bound it are no part of the street any more than the houses on each side of a street are part of it. What are these walls? They are formed of brickwork, and supported upon buttresses fixed into the land. The buttresses, no one could doubt, would be part of the land for all purposes. It seems to me that the walls are equally to be considered so. Then these walls are lands. Whose land are they? If they were built on land not belonging to the company the question would not arise; but they are built on land belonging to the company, and are themselves, therefore, in my opinion, not only land, but land belonging to the company. These walls bound this street along its whole length at the same level, so that the question how far adjoining land must be level with the street in order to be said to bound or abut on it does not arise. As soon as it is decided that this wall is land, and that it bounds the whole length of the street, it follows that the company are liable to be rated for the whole length of the street. Whether that decision is consistent with The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Company v. The Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell (ubi sup.) I do not stop to inquire; that will have to be considered hereafter. Then the only remaining question is whether there is anything to exempt the railway company from their liability to contribute towards the paving of this bridge. If this is a new street, the board has a right to pave it. Is there anything to prevent them from recovering the expenses from the owner of the land that bounds it? It is nowhere expressly provided that in the case of a street on a bridge crossing the railway the company shall not pay the cost of originally paving it. Is such an exception implied by any provision inconsistent with the company's liability? It is said to be inconsistent with the company's liability to pave that they are bound to keep the bridge in a sort of repair, not paved, before it is a street. I cannot see that that is inconsistent. It is then asked, Are the railway company to keep the pavement in repair? I decline to answer that question.

CT. OF APP.] THE PRISON COMMISSIONERS v. THE CLERK OF THE PEACE FOR MIDDLESEX. [CT. OF APP.]

HOLKER, L.J.—The question here is, are the railway company owners of land that bounds or abuts upon the whole length of the street across this bridge? They confess that they are the owners of some land that abuts upon or bounds the new street. They are the owners of the piers and of that portion of the wall which rests upon the piers. They have paid in respect of that. Notwithstanding that, they have set up one contention here, which, if it was good, would free them altogether. The first question, however, is, Are the company owners of land which abuts upon the street? As to the land in the centre of the railway between the rails, it is extremely difficult to say that that land in any sense abuts on the street. It seems to me clear, however, that the wall is the property of the railway company, is not part of the street, and that the wall is land. It was decided in one case that, if you have land running along a street at some depth below it and separated by a wall, that the land abuts on the street. Why does it? Because the wall is a part of the land. It is admitted that if this was a solid wall going all the way down, the company would be liable. Does it make any difference that this wall is rested on piers, which piers rest on land of the railway company? Under those circumstances, is not the wall resting on the land of the railway company? Suppose this wall rested on an arch, which was carried across the line by a series of pillars, I understood it to be admitted in argument by counsel for the company that in such a case the wall would be land of the railway company. Suppose that a new street were built at a considerable elevation, and against it ran a viaduct of a railway, and that a series of arches and a wall bounded the new street, dividing it from the viaduct, could it be said that only so much of the wall as rested on the piers was abutting on the land of the company? For these reasons I think that this wall is built on the land of the railway company, and has become in law the land of the railway company. I think that the other point should never have been advanced before us at all.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, B. B. Ellis.

Solicitor for the respondent, O. A. Curwood.

Monday, May 1, 1882.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., BRETT and COTTON, L.JJ.)
THE PRISON COMMISSIONERS v. THE CLERK OF THE PEACE FOR MIDDLESEX. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

*Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), ss. 43, 60—
Land purchased by prison authority before Act —Vesting of land in Prison Commissioners.*

*By the Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 43,
"The legal estate in every prison to which this Act applies, and in the site and land belonging thereto . . . shall, on and after the commencement of this Act, be deemed to be vested in the Prison Commissioners."*

By sect. 60, "Prison, in addition to the meaning attached to it by the Prison Act 1865, includes any land or building bought or contracted to be bought before the commencement of this Act by a prison authority, for the purpose of enlarging or altering any prison, or adding to the appurtenances of any prison."

Before the commencement of the Act, the Clerk of the Peace for Middlesex, acting for the justices (who, by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, s. 5, were the prison authority), had purchased the fee simple of certain land near Oldbath Fields Prison for the purpose of providing airing grounds and additional buildings for the officers. The land was in the occupation of tenants whose leases had not expired at the commencement of this action, which was brought by the Prison Commissioners for delivery of the title deeds and an account and payment of the rents and profits of the land.

*Held (affirming the judgment of Lord Coleridge, O.J.), that the land had passed to the plaintiffs,
and they were entitled to recover.*

APPEAL by the defendant from the judgment of Lord Coleridge, O.J. in favour of the plaintiffs.

The nature of the action and the question which came before the court for decision appear from the head-note.

The sections on the construction of which the decision was given are set out, so far as material, in the judgment of the Master of the Rolls.

Webster, Q.C., and B. S. Wright, for the defendant, in support of the appeal.—The plaintiffs are not entitled to recover in this action, for the legal estate in the land in question is not vested in them. By sect. 43 of the Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), "The legal estate in every prison to which this Act applies, and in the site and land belonging thereto . . . shall . . .
be deemed to be vested in the Prison Commissioners." This land does not come within any of these words. It is not part of the prison within the meaning of the definition of the word "prison" contained in sect. 60, nor is it covered by the additional words in sect. 43, "land belonging thereto." Sect. 43 can only include land actually appropriated to the purposes of the prison, which is not the case here. They also referred to the Prison Act 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), sects. 4, 5, 8, 17, 18, 23, 24, 25, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 44, and the Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), sects.
2, 5, 17, 18.

*Sir H. James, A.G., Sir F. Herschell, S.G., and
A. L. Smith* appeared for the plaintiffs, but were not called upon to argue.

JESSEL, M.R.—The question in this case depends

(a) Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CT. OF APP.] THE PRISON COMMISSIONERS v. THE CLERK OF THE PEACE FOR MIDDLESEX. [CT. OF APP.]

on the construction of the Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21). The conveyance is, in my opinion, conclusive as to the nature of the purchase of the land, and therefore it is not proper for us to consider the resolutions which were passed by the justices before the purchase was carried out; any negotiations which may have taken place are immaterial. We must look at the conveyance to see what was the title of the clerk of the peace to the land. Now for what purpose could the prison authority buy land under the Prison Act 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126)? It is plain that they must buy for some of the purposes referred to in sect. 23 of that Act, by which "subject to the conditions hereinafter mentioned, any prison authority may alter, enlarge, or rebuild any of its prisons, or may, if necessary, build other prisons in lieu of or in addition to any subsisting prisons"; and this power is given subject to the sanction of the Secretary of State (sect. 24). Then, by sect. 44: "Any prison authority may purchase or hold such lands . . . as they may require for the purposes of this Act," and the section incorporates most of the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18); there is an exception as to compulsory purchase; there is a power of purchasing by agreement simply for the purposes of the Act, but the power to purchase otherwise than by agreement can only be exercised "in respect of lands contiguous to a prison, and required for the purpose of enlarging a prison or rendering it more commodious or safe." This limitation only applies to purchase by compulsion, and if the prison authority wanted to buy by compulsion, it must be for one of two purposes, for enlarging the prison, or for rendering it more commodious or safe. The result, therefore, in my opinion, is, that these words have no bearing on the present case. The question is, whether the prison authority could buy for any other purpose except those specified in sect. 23. I am of opinion that they could not. Mr. Wright said there was a common law authority on the part of the magistrates, but I think there was not. Sect. 8 of the Act of 1865 imposed the obligation to provide prisons, and enacted that the expenses of carrying into effect the provisions of the Act should be defrayed out of the county rate. Therefore I think there was not a common law authority, but a new power created by statute. If this is so, the definition of "prison" in the Act of 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 60, vests this land in the Prison Commissioners. By that section, "Prison, in addition to the meaning attached to it by the Prison Act 1865, includes any land or building bought or contracted to be bought before the commencement of this Act by a prison authority, for the purpose of enlarging or altering any prison, or adding to the appurtenances of any prison." The land here could not have been bought for the purpose of rebuilding, for rebuilding would take place on the same site where the previous building had stood, and that would be on land already belonging to the prison authority. Then it must have been bought for the purpose of enlarging or altering, if it was bought for any of the purposes referred to in sect. 23, and consequently it passes to the Secretary of State by sect. 5 of the Act of 1877, subject to the other sections of that Act by which it is vested in the Prison Commissioners, the plaintiffs; and they are entitled to judgment. Suppose, however, that all I have already said is erroneous, and that the land has not vested as I have stated, still it appears to me that sect. 48 of the Act of 1877 comprises this land; by that section "The legal estate in every prison to which this Act applies, and in the site and land belonging thereto . . . shall on and after the commencement of this Act be deemed to be vested in the Prison Commissioners." Everything that is used as a prison is included in the word "prison" in this section, and there are in addition the other words, "the site and land belonging thereto;" surely this is land belonging to the prison; it was bought by the prison authority for prison purposes. Therefore, on either view, I think the decision of the Lord Chief Justice is right, and the appeal ought to be dismissed.

BRETT, L.J.—The Lord Chief Justice held that this land was purchased for altering or enlarging the prison, and it is admitted that if he is right in fact the appellant has no case. I do not mean at all to say that I think he was not right in this view, but I think it is immaterial how this may be, for the land was bought by the clerk of the peace on behalf of the magistrates, and it was declared to be bought for some purpose connected with the prison. In the deed of conveyance it is declared that the clerk of the peace buys the land to hold it in trust for prison purposes. There may be no estoppel, because there is no contract between the justices and the plaintiffs; but it is impossible to imagine that, as a matter of fact and evidence, the justices could say they did not buy for prison purposes. It is admitted that they did; but it is said for some prison purposes they could buy and hold land, and that such land does not pass to the Prison Commissioners by the Act of 1877; it is said that they could buy land for the purposes of the Act of 1865, in certain cases, without the land passing to the commissioners under the Act of 1877. In my opinion this contention is untenable. The case does not turn on the Act of 1865, but on the Act of 1877. The words of this latter Act are made wide in order to transfer every description of land bought under the Act of 1865 for prison purposes. It seems to me that the words of sects. 5, 48, and 60 of the Act of 1877 are made expressly large and wide in order to obviate the argument which has been used before us to-day.

COTTON, L.J.—The only question is, whether the land is vested in the Prison Commissioners. Sect. 60 of the Act of 1877 does not vest it; but we must look to sect. 48, and it seems to me plain that this section vests it, while, if the construction put on sect. 60 and the facts found by the Lord Chief Justice are right, this land comes within the definition of "prison," and the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed. If this is not so, then the prison authority wanted land which does not come within the definition of "prison," but which is "land belonging thereto" within the meaning of sect. 48 of the Act of 1877, and they wanted it for the purposes of the prison. This land was bought and conveyed to a trustee for the purposes of the Act of 1865, and I think it must be, if not "prison," "land belonging thereto" within the meaning of sect. 48 of the Act of 1877.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Hare and Fell, agents for the Treasury Solicitor.

Solicitors for defendant, Nicholson and Herbert.

[CT. OF APP.]

BLACKMORE v. THE VESTRY OF MILE END OLD TOWN.

[CT. OF APP.]

Saturday, June 17, 1882.

(Before BRETT and COTTON, L.JJ.)

BLACKMORE v. THE VESTRY OF MILE END OLD TOWN. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Vestry—Surveyors of highways—Flap placed in highway to protect water-meter—Injury caused by dangerous condition of flap—Liability of vestry—18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, ss. 96, 116.

By the Metropolis Management Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 96, vestries are made surveyors of highways, and by sect. 116 they have power to water the streets.

Plaintiff was injured in consequence of the dangerous condition of an iron flap, which belonged to a vestry, and was placed in the highway by the vestry for the purpose of covering and protecting a meter, belonging to a water company, and used for measuring the water supplied by the company to the vestry for the purpose of watering the streets. In an action against the vestry to recover damages for the injury so caused:

Held, that, as the flap had not been placed in the highway by the defendants in their capacity of surveyors of highways, but for the purpose of protecting the water-meter, they were liable for their neglect to keep the flap in a safe condition, and plaintiff was entitled to recover.

Judgment of Denman and Lopes, JJ. affirmed. White v. Hindley Local Board (32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 460) approved.

THIS action was brought to recover damages for personal injury. The plaintiff, while walking in the street in the defendants' parish during the snowstorm of the 18th Jan. 1881, slipped on the iron flap or cover of a box which contained a water-meter, and fell and broke his leg. The water-meter belonged to a water company, and was used to measure the water supplied by the company to the defendants for the purpose of watering the streets. The box containing the meter and the flap on which the plaintiff slipped belonged to the defendants, and had been put down by the defendants in the highway for the purpose of protecting and covering the meter. The injury to the plaintiff was caused by the condition of the flap, which had been left until it was worn smooth, and so became slippery and dangerous. At the trial, before Grove, J., the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and the question, on the argument of a rule nisi on the ground of misdirection, was whether the defendants were exempt from liability in consequence of being surveyors of highways.

By the Metropolis Management Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 96:

Every vestry and district board shall, within their parish or district (exclusively of any other persons whatsoever), execute the office of and be surveyor of highways, and have all such powers, authorities, and duties, and be subject to all such liabilities, as any surveyor of highways in England is now or may hereafter be invested with or liable to by virtue of his office, under the law for the time being in force, so far as such powers, authorities, duties, and liabilities are not inconsistent with this Act. . . . And all streets being highways, and the pavement, stones, and other materials thereof, and all other things provided for the purposes thereof by any surveyor of highways, or by any person serving the office of surveyor of highways, or by any vestry or district board under this Act, shall vest in and be under the management and control of the vestry or district board of the parish or district in which such highways are situate.

By sect. 116:

Every vestry and district board shall have full power and authority to cause all or any of the streets in their parish or district to be watered as often as they think fit, and also to cause any wells to be dug and sunk in such public places as they think proper, and also to erect and fix any pumps in any public places for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants of the parish or district.

The Divisional Court (Denman and Lopes, JJ.) discharged the rule, and the defendants appealed.

Kemp, Q.C. and Pitt-Lewis for the defendants.—The defendants being surveyors of highways, and the soil of the street being vested in them as such surveyors, they are not liable to an action for damages for personal injury sustained by the plaintiff owing to the non-repair of the highway. The flap was part of the pavement of the highway, and the case is the same as if the plaintiff had been injured owing to the paving stones not being properly attended to, in which case the vestry clearly would not be liable. The case of White v. Hindley Local Board (32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 460; L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 219), which will be relied on for the plaintiff, differs from the present case in this, that there the defendants were held liable because they were owners of the sewer, to which the grid, the defective condition of which caused the injury, belonged, whereas here the defendants are not the owners of the water-meter. The decision in that case is not binding on the Court of Appeal. They also cited

Rolls v. The Vestry of St. George's, Southwark, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 140; 14 Ch. Div. 785; Hamilton v. The Vestry of the Parish of St. George's, Hamover-square, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 428; L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 42.

Waddy, Q.C. and Orispe, for the plaintiff, were not called on.

BRETT, L.J.—I am of opinion that this is a very clear case. It obviously comes within the principle of White v. The Hindley Local Board of Health (L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 219), and the only question is, are we prepared to say that case was wrongly decided? Here the defendants are surveyors of highways, and also by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 116, they are something else; they act in a capacity which is independent of their position as surveyors of highways, and in which they have power to water the streets. That is no part of the duty of surveyors of highways, but rather is like the powers of lighting and watering which are sometimes given to commissioners by different Acts of Parliament. Here the vestry act in two capacities, and the flap was laid down for two purposes; it was not laid down merely for the purpose of the highway, but in order to protect the meter which belongs to the vestry. The meter is there because they pay the water company, not by a fixed rate, but by the quantity of water supplied. The flap is there to protect the meter which is put there for the benefit of the vestry. The case is like White v. The Hindley Local Board of Health, because here, besides being surveyors of highways, the vestry also act in a capacity which gives them power to water the roads, and in my opinion they are liable in their second capacity, and not because they are surveyors of highways. I think the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in White v. The Hindley Local Board of Health was right, and if so it follows that the appeal in the present case must be dismissed.

CHAN. DIV.] MAYOR, &C., OF HYDE v. GOVERNOR AND CO. OF THE BANK OF ENGLAND. [CHAN. DIV.]

COTTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 116, gives the vestry power to water the roads. Sometimes there is some difficulty, where persons act in two different capacities, in deciding to which capacity a particular act is to be attributed, but I think this case is plain. The question is, was the flap put down by the vestry acting as surveyors of highways, or was it put down for a different purpose, namely, to protect the meter? The flap was not put down by the vestry for the purpose of pavement, and, because they were surveyors of highways, that does not take away their liability for the defective condition of the flap, which belongs to them, and was put down for a different purpose. I am of opinion that the decision of the Divisional Court is right.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for plaintiff, Noon and Clarke.

Solicitors for defendants, Depree, Austen, and Juteum.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

June 8 and 12, 1882.

(Before FRY, J.)

THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF THE CORPORATION OF HYDE v. THE GOVERNOR AND COMPANY OF THE BANK OF ENGLAND. (a)

Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 310—District local board constituted a borough—Property vesting in the borough—Right to transfer Bank Annuities—National Debt Act (33 & 34 Vict. c. 71).

By the Public Health Act 1875, sect. 310, it is provided that, where a district under a local board is constituted or included in a borough, all the powers . . . and property exercisable by . . . or vested in such local board under that Act or any local Act for similar purposes, or any general Act of Parliament . . . shall pass to and be exercisable by and vested in the council of such borough.

The district of the local board of Hyde was constituted a borough by charter of incorporation in Feb. 1881, there being at that time a sum of Consolidated Bank Annuities registered in the name of the local board in the books of the Bank of England, being an investment made by them under the Act, of moneys borrowed by them, also under the Act.

Held, that the Bank Annuities were property acquired by the local board under the Act, and were by the Act vested in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses as a corporation acting by the council.

DEMURRER.

By this action the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Hyde, in Cheshire, claimed a declaration that they were entitled to a sum of 545l. 13s. 1d. Consolidated Five per Cent. Bank Annuities, standing in the books of the Bank of England in the name of "The Hyde Local Board, Hyde, Cheshire," and to the dividends due and to become due upon the same, and to all the rights of registered stock-holders in respect of the stock. The plaintiffs further claimed an order on the defendants to pay the dividends due, and all future dividends, and to register the plaintiffs as entitled to the Bank Annuities in the books of the bank.

The sum of stock in question was purchased on the 9th Feb. 1881 by the local board for the district of Hyde, and it was duly registered as above mentioned. The purchase was by way of an investment by the board of moneys received by them in respect of private improvements from rates levied under the Public Health Act 1875, and was made pursuant to sect. 234 of that Act, sub-sect. 4 of which provides that

The money may be borrowed for such time not exceeding sixty years, as the local authority, with the sanction of the Local Government Board, determine in each case; and, subject as aforesaid, the local authority shall either pay off the moneys so borrowed by equal annual instalments of principal or of principal and interest, or they shall in every year set apart as a sinking fund and accumulate in the way of compound interest by investing the same in the purchase of exchequer bills or other Government securities, such sum as will with accumulations in the way of compound interest be sufficient, after payment of all expenses, to pay off the moneys so borrowed within the period sanctioned.

By an Order in Council and charter of incorporation, dated the 18th Feb. 1881, the district of the local board was constituted a borough, and the corporation claimed the stock in question, upon the ground that it became vested in them by sect. 310 of the Public Health Act 1875, which provides as follows:

Where after the passing of this Act a district or part of a district under the jurisdiction of improvement commissioners, or a district or part of a district under the jurisdiction of a local board, is constituted or included in a borough, all the powers, rights, duties, capacities, liabilities, obligations, and property, exercisable by, attaching to, or vested in such improvement commissioners or local board (as the case may be) under this Act, or under any local Act for purposes the same as or similar to those of this Act, or under any general Act of Parliament, within or for the benefit of such district or part of a district, shall pass to and be exercisable by and vested in the council of such borough.

The authorities of the Bank of England, however, refused to recognise the plaintiffs' right and to register them as holders of the stock, or pay them the dividends. The legal grounds for this refusal, which were now brought before the court in the form of a demurrer to the plaintiffs' action, appear in the arguments and judgment. In addition to the sections of the Public Health Act, the following section of the National Debt Act 1871 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 71) was referred to:

Sect. 22. In the offices of the respective accountants-general of the Banks of England and Ireland books shall continue to be kept wherein all transfers of stock shall be entered. Every such entry shall be conceived in proper words for the purpose of transfer, and shall be signed by the party making the transfer, or, if he is absent, by his attorney thereunto lawfully authorised in writing under his hand and seal, attested by two or more credible witnesses. The person to whom a transfer is so made may, if he thinks fit, underwrite his acceptance thereof. Except as otherwise provided by Act of Parliament, no other mode of transferring stock shall be good in law.

By the interpretation clause of the last-mentioned Act "person" is stated to include corporation.

Kekewich, Q.C. and W. Latham for the demurrer.—The bank cannot transfer the stock, as required by sect. 310 of the Public Health Act 1875, to the council of the borough, for a transfer can only be made to a person or a corporation, which the council is not:

(a) Reported by J. F. WAGGATT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

National Debt Act 1871 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 71), s. 22.

The council is not a corporate body. In the Act 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 6, the body corporate of a borough are enabled to act by their council. Further, we say that sect. 310 of the Public Health Act 1875 applies only to property acquired under that Act, and that any rights which the corporation acquired must be limited to those acquired by the former local board under the Act:

Attorney-General v. Birmingham, Tame, and Rea Drainage Board, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 901; L. Rep. 17 Ch. Div. 685.

We submit that the intention and operation of the Act was to transfer to the council all managing powers, but not to vest property in them in the legal sense of vesting:

Re Smyth, 4 De G. & Sm. 499.

Coxens-Hardy, Q.C. and Phipson Beale for the plaintiffs.—If the words of the Act are admitted to be sufficient to vest the beneficial interest, they are also sufficient to vest the property in the legal sense. The sum of consols in question, although borrowed under the powers of the Act, should be treated as any other kind of property, and sect. 310 provides for the vesting in the council of property vested in the local board under any Act. The bank is not under the burden of inquiring as to the equitable title to the stock: (per Jessel, M.R., in Howard v. Bank of England, L. Rep. 19 Eq. 295-299.) As to the rights of the council, we say they are secured by sect. 12 of the Public Health Act 1875, and the term "council," as used in sect. 310, is a short expression for "the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses acting by the council." There are several instances in the Act of the council being referred to as the urban authority (see sects. 198, 246, 270). In the present case the former local board or urban sanitary authority are now the council.

Kelenrich, Q.C. in reply.—It has not been shown that the legal ownership of the stock has passed by the Act from the body in which it was originally vested. In some of the statutes, where similar language is used, the property is directed to pass by actual transfer or conveyance; e.g., 9 & 10 Vict. c. 74; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 87. Even if the property vested in the council, then the objection arises that it can only be said that it is incorporated by implication, which, however, cannot be, for the implication must be necessary, and there is nothing in the statutes under consideration to lead the court to such a necessary inference: (Grant's Law of Corporations.)

Fry, J.—The question which I have now to determine arises under the Public Health Act of 1875. The local board of the district of Hyde, in the county of Chester, had been duly constituted under that Act; under that Act and sect. 213 of that Act they had power to levy private improvement rates upon property which might be improved under the powers of the Act; they had, under sect. 233, a power to borrow money, and under sect. 234 they had the duty of repaying the money, either by instalments, or by the formation of a sinking fund, which they were directed to invest in the purchase of Exchequer bills, or other Government securities. It appears that this local board did certain improvement works; they levied a certain private improvement rate; they borrowed certain money which was to be repaid in the course of ten years; they set aside the produce of the improvement rate in the purchase of Bank Annuities; and those Bank Annuities are the sum now in question. Subsequently to their having so done, the Crown was pleased to grant a charter of incorporation to the district which was included in the Hyde Local Board District, and, thereupon, the contingency provided for by the 310th section of the Public Health Act 1875 occurred, for, after the passing of that Act, the district under the jurisdiction of the local board was constituted a borough. Now the 310th section provides that on the happening of that contingency "all the powers, rights, duties, capacities, liabilities, obligations, and property exercisable by, attaching to, or vested in such improvement commissioners or local board (as the case may be) under the Act, or under any local Act for purposes the same or similar to those of this Act, or under any general Act of Parliament, within or for the benefit of such district or part of a district, shall pass to and be exercisable by and vested in the council of such borough." The plaintiffs, who describe themselves as the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Hyde, and also as "the council of the said borough," claim the transfer of the Bank Annuities from the Bank of England, and the Bank of England have declined so to transfer, and by this demurrer they have raised the question of their obligation to so transfer. By the National Debt Act of 1870, sect. 22, the mode of transfer of such annuities is defined. It is in cases of ordinary persons to be in the well-known manner; it is to be in writing under the hand of the person, the transferor, or his attorney, and attested by two or more credible witnesses, "and, except as otherwise provided by Act of Parliament, no other mode of transferring stock shall be good in law." The question, therefore, is, whether the 310th section of the Act of 1875 is a mode of transferring stock other than that mentioned in the 22nd section of the National Debt Act 1870. Now, in the first place, it is suggested that the word "property" is not large enough to carry the legal interest in these annuities, and that all that is operated upon by the word is the equitable interest in the consols. I have a difficulty in following that argument, and for this reason, that the legal estate in an annuity is property just as much as the equitable estate is, and the Act has said that all the property vested in such local board under the Act shall pass. I am bound to give full effect to those words. My attention has, in the next place, been called to a decision of Knight Bruce, V.C., as he then was, in Re Smyth (ubi sup.). That case determined that, where the Trustee Act has said that the right to call for a transfer of consols shall be vested in trustees, that does not vest the consols, but only vests the right to call for a transfer of them. But this statute says that "the property" shall be vested, and it is difficult to see how the proposition that the words giving a right to call for a transfer do not vest property shows that the words saying the property shall be vested will give only a right to call for the transfer, and will not vest the consols. That argument, therefore, appears to me to be untenable. Then, in the next place, it is said that the property in question is not property vested under the Act. To answer that inquiry, whether it will be or not, I must have reference to the other sections of the Act. Now, it appears by sect. 12 that "all such property real and personal, including all interests, rights, and easements in, to, and out of property real and personal (including things in action), as belongs to or is vested in, or would but for the Act have belonged to or been vested in the council of any borough, or any improvement commissioners or local board as the urban sanitary authority of any district under the Sanitary Acts, or any board of guardians as the rural sanitary authority of any district under those Acts, shall continue vested or vest in such council, improvement commissioners, or local board, or board of guardians as the local authority of their district under this Act, subject to all debts, liabilities, and obligations affecting the same property;" and further, by sect. 13, "all existing and future sewers within the district of a local authority, together with all buildings, works, materials, and things belonging thereto, shall vest in and be under the control of such local authority." It is said that the property which so vested in the local board by force of those particular enactments, and any similar words which may be found in the Act, if the local board existed in 1875—a point upon which I have no information whatever—and that property only, will be transferred from the local board to the corporation by force of sect. 310. On the other hand, it is contended that the true meaning of "property vested under the Act" will include not only that property, but all property which has come to the sanitary authority by force and virtue of the exercise of their authorities and powers. I have come to the conclusion that the latter is the true view and meaning of it. In the first place, it is obvious that the general scope and intention of these clauses is to make the corporation the universal successors to the local board, to place it as regards all its powers in exactly the same position; and as regards all its property it is also placed entirely in the same position. If it is to have the powers, it is natural it should have the property, which either has resulted from the exercise of the powers in the past, or is to be acquired by the continuance of the exercise of the powers in the future. Again, the language "vested under the Act" is not to be mistaken for a narrow construction referring to the particular provisions, and its true meaning appears to me to extend to everything which, if the Act had not passed, would not have come to the hands of the corporation. As I have already pointed out, the corporation has the power of making rates, has the power of making general rates, has the power of making private improvement rates, and has the power of purchasing consols with the money so produced, for the purpose of forming a sinking fund. All those powers are powers given by the Act. The property resulting to the local board from the exercise of those powers appears to me to be described with reasonable exactitude as property vested in the local board under the Act. I have been referred to a decision upon similar words with regard to the words "liabilities and obligations;" but that decision only shows that an action brought by the local board for an alleged nuisance is not a liability or obligation created under the Act. Why should it be so? The obligation is created by force of a judgment of the court in consequence of the wrong doing of the local board. It is not a liability under the Act; it is not an obligation under the Act; it only arises from wrong committed by the board, and the ordinary law gives a right to certain remedies against the wrong doer. That decision, I think, throws no light whatever upon the true construction of this Act. Then arises this question: In whom does this section vest the property? The difficulty arises from the words of this section, which vests it nominally in the council. It has been contended that that can only vest an equitable interest. The conclusion at which I have arrived is, that with very considerable inexactitude and looseness of language, the word "council" is in that section used for the words "mayor, aldermen, and burgesses acting by the council." I arrive at that conclusion, because, in the earlier legislation, particularly in the Act of 1872, there are sections which show that the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses acting by the council are treated by the Legislature, and spoken of by the Legislature, as being the council. The 4th section of that Act provides that in a borough, constituted as such either before or after the passing of this Act, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses acting by the council shall be the urban sanitary authority, and in a subsequent proviso of that Act the council are spoken of as having jurisdiction over the borough. Again, in a later section of the same Act, namely, sect. 22, power is given to the Local Government Board to transfer to the council of the borough the jurisdiction and powers of the Improvement Commissioners. In those cases it appears to me reasonably plain that the intention of the Legislature was not to create a new body corporate consisting of the council alone, but to transfer to the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses the particular powers in question to be acted upon and exercised by the council. No doubt, inasmuch as the council is the soul and the hand of the corporation, there is no great difficulty in using the words "the council" for the body for whom they are to act, for whom they are to deliberate, and whose decisions are binding on the body. In the same way, in the Public Health Act of 1875, there is strong evidence that the Legislature has used the words "the council" to mean the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses acting by the council. One trace of that is to be found in the 12th section to which I have already referred, because it is to be observed there that the property already vested in the council of any borough is to remain vested in the council; but it appears from an examination of the earlier Acts by the learned counsel on both sides that, although much of the property was vested in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, no property was vested in the council; and therefore, if I were to read the word "council" in the strict and proper sense, and not to hold it to include mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, that portion of the 12th section would fail of any operation, whereas, if I read it as a short description of mayor, aldermen, and burgesses, the intention of the Legislature has effect given to it; the property is vested in the corporation and continues in the corporation. It is scarcely needful for me to refer to the other sections, which are numerous, to which Mr. Cozens-Hardy has called my attention; but I will only say that in the 198th section, the 207th

Q.B. Div.]

GREEN v. BROAD AND HUTT.

[Q.B. Div.]

section, the 246th section, and the 297th section, similar expressions are to be found which import what the Legislature meant by the council. I hold, therefore, that the same meaning must be given to the word "council" in the 310th section, and the effect of it is to vest in the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Hyde the right not only to receive the dividends but to effect the transfer of the Consolidated Annuities which were part of the property of the local board before the incorporation of the borough. I therefore overrule the demurrer of the defendants and, as a matter of course, I must overrule it with costs. By consent, the statement of claim can be treated as amended by striking out the council as co-plaintiff, and then claiming that the property is vested in the plaintiffs under the Act.

Solicitors: for the plaintiffs, Sharpe, Parkers, Pritchard, and Sharpe, for J. Hibbert, Town Clerk of Hyde; for the defendants, Freshfields and Williams.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

June 12 and 13, 1892.

(Before GROVE, MATHEW, and NORTH, JJ.)

GREEN v. BROAD AND HUTT. (a)

False imprisonment—Notice of action—Larceny Act—Inaccuracy as to date of arrest—Validity of notice—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 113.

The plaintiff in the action alleged that he had been unlawfully, maliciously, and without reasonable cause detained and imprisoned by the defendants. The plaintiff in his statutory notice to the defendant H., who was a police constable, assigned the 13th April as the date of his wrongful arrest, whereas the evidence at the trial proved that it was on the 12th of April. At the trial the judge nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground (inter alia) that the statutory notice was not satisfied by reason of the variance of the dates, and that what the defendant H. had received was no notice at all. The plaintiff moved for a new trial.

Held, on the argument of the rule (by Mathew and North, JJ., Grove, J. doubting), that the judge at the trial was wrong in nonsuiting the plaintiff; and that, as the notice was accurate in every particular except the date, which was wrong only by a day, it was a sufficient and valid notice under the statute.

THIS was a rule calling upon the defendants to show cause why the nonsuit against the plaintiff should not be set aside and a new trial had on several grounds. For the purposes of the present case the rule called upon the defendant Hutt, who was a police constable, to show cause why the nonsuit should not be set aside and a new trial had on the ground (inter alia) that the notice of action was sufficient. The facts of the case material for this point were as follows:

Broad was trustee in liquidation of certain co-operative stores, and, on the days when the stock was being sold off, employed Hutt, the defendant, who was a member of the detective force, to prevent thefts being committed, and to apprehend those whom he reasonably suspected of having committed any felony. One of the orders given to him was to stop persons who left the premises without producing a voucher or receipt for the goods he was taking away.

The plaintiff attended the sale, made purchases, paid for the goods, but threw away the vouchers. The plaintiff left the premises, but was stopped by Hutt, who asked him for his vouchers, which the plaintiff failed to produce, whereupon Hutt made him go back to the stores.

On his return the plaintiff proved that he had purchased the goods, but the defendant would not let him depart; and it was not until Hutt was told to let the plaintiff go that he was able to leave the premises.

The plaintiff then took steps to enforce his claims for his alleged wrongful arrest, and served the following notice of action upon the defendant Hutt: "I, B. O. Green, &c., according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, give you notice that I, the said B. O. Green, will, at, or soon after the expiration of one calendar month from the time of your being served with this notice, cause a writ of summons to be sued out of Her Majesty's High Court of Justice against you, at the suit of me, the said B. O. Green, and proceed thereupon according to law; for that you the said W. Hutt did, on the 13th day of April 1881, at the warehouse of the City of London Co-operative Association Limited, Nos. 25, &c., Newgate-street, in the said City of London, unlawfully, maliciously, and without reasonable and probable cause, assault, detain, and imprison me, and keep me so imprisoned at the said warehouse for the space of one hour and upwards, to the damage of me, the said B. O. Green, &c."

The action was tried before Pollock, B., who nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground (inter alia) that the above notice was no notice at all, by reason of the variance between the date of the arrest therein assigned, and the date proved at the trial. A rule nisi for a new trial was obtained.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 113:

All actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of this Act shall be laid and tried in the county where the fact was committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such action, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant one month at least before the commencement of the action.

Waddy, Q.C. for the defendant Hutt, showed cause.—The nonsuit on the point of insufficiency of notice was quite right. Hutt, as a police officer acting in pursuance of the provisions of the Larceny Act 1861, was entitled to notice under sect. 113 of that Act. Now it is clear law that notice under this and similar statutes must be strictly accurate in all essential matters; the date of the fact which forms the ground of action is most material, and ought to be given with complete accuracy; otherwise it is no notice under the Act. The notice of action must be altogether accurate:

Martins v. Upcher, 3 Q. B. 662;

Forbes v. Lloyd, 16 Ir. Rep. C. L. 552 (per Pallas, C. B. 562).

H. Matthews, Q.C. (O. H. Anderson with him) for the plaintiff in support of the rule.—There is authority to show that this nonsuit was wrong, and that the question whether the defendant acted bonâ fide and without malice ought to have been left to the jury:

Leete v. Hart, L. Rep. 3 C. P. 822; 37 L. J. 157, C. P.;

Hicks v. Faulkner, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 127; 8 Q. B. Div. 167.

(a) Reported by W. P. EVERSLY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

BELL AND ANOTHER v. BASSETT.

[Q.B. Div.]

I do not admit that the defendant Hutt is such a constable as is entitled to notice. [The learned counsel then argued that the defendant, as a member of the detective force of the City of London, acting under private orders, was not entitled under the Act, as a constable, to notice of action.] Assuming, however, he was entitled to notice of action, this notice is sufficiently good and valid. It informs him of the whole ground of the plaintiff's action:

Jones v. Bird, 5 B. & Ald. 837;
Smith v. West Derby Local Board, 38 L. T. Rep.
 N. S. 716; 47 L. J. 607, C. P.

GROVE, J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be made absolute as against the defendant Hutt. This case was an action for malicious arrest brought against Hutt (and another defendant), who was the person who actually arrested the plaintiff. At the trial the learned judge nonsuited the plaintiff as against Hutt; and I am of opinion that that nonsuit was wrong, and that the judge ought to have left to the jury the question whether or not Hutt was acting in an honest belief that the plaintiff had committed a felony. The ground on which the nonsuit proceeded was that the notice of action which was served on Hutt was bad. On the supposition that Hutt acted as a constable, I think notice of action was necessary under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 113. The question then arises whether this notice was good. The notice alleged that the plaintiff's arrest took place on the 13th April, whereas it was on the 12th. For my own part I should have thought it sufficient notice of the matter, but I must candidly admit I feel hampered by certain decisions, viz., Leete v. Hart (L. Rep. 3 C. P. 322; 37 L. J., 157 C. P.); Martins v. Upcher (3 Q. B. 662; 11 L. J., 291 Q. B.), and Smith v. West Derby Local Board (38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 716; 47 L. J. 607, C. P.), that both time and place must be given. I think the notice ought to be accurate both as regards time and place, and ought not to vary in those particulars from the evidence given at the trial. I do not, however, think it necessary to do more than express an opinion on the point, for a decisive judgment is not called for, as I think the learned judge was wrong in removing the case from the jury on the question of Hutt's reasonable suspicion and belief that a felony had been committed by the plaintiff.

MATHEW, J.—I am unable to agree with the ruling of the learned judge at the trial as regards Hutt. As to the notice, there is admittedly a slip in the date, but the place, the nature of the charge, and the parties are all accurately described; indeed, the notice is perfectly in accordance with the facts, except that it substituted 13 for 12. It has been held that we are bound by decisions that make absolute accuracy in the notice a necessity. I think they contain mere dicta on the subject, and are not binding upon us. I am of opinion that mere verbal inaccuracy as to time and place is not fatal to the validity of a notice under the Larceny Act, and that the judgment of the learned judge at the trial was wrong.

NORTH, J.—I am of opinion that a notice under this Act ought to specify both time and place of the wrongful act complained. Now this notice does specify the offence; here everything is accurately referred to and set out. The facts are not disputed, except that the date of the 13th of April instead of the 12th is given. Now, this is not a material variance, indicating that what was alleged in the notice was different from that which really took place, and so possibly calculated to injure and prejudice the defendant. This notice gives sufficient information.

Rule absolute for a new trial.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, J. and M. Pontifex.
 Solicitor for the defendants, H. Montague.

Saturday, June 17, 1882.

(Before DAY, J.)

BELL AND ANOTHER v. BASSETT. (a)

Ecclesiastical law—Local Act—Rate for ecclesiastical purposes—Contract for valuable consideration—Compulsory Church Rates Abolition Act 1868—51 Geo. 3, c. cl., s. 19—31 & 32 Vict. c. 109, s. 5.

An arrangement embodied in a private or local Act, and which is based on good and valuable consideration, and provides for the levying of church rates, though not in the strict form of an agreement between the parties affected, is a "contract" within 31 & 32 Vict. c. 109, s. 5, and protects the rate levied in pursuance of it for ecclesiastical purposes.

NISI PRIUS.

This was an action tried before Day, J. without a jury, to recover instalments of a rate called the rector's rate, brought by the plaintiffs, the churchwardens of the parish of Saint Paul, Covent Garden, against the defendant, who was an inhabitant of the parish.

The statement of claim alleged that, in pursuance of the provisions of the Act, 12 Car. 2 (Private Act), intituled "An Act for making the Precinct of Covent Garden parochial," and of the Act 51 Geo. 3, c. cl. (private Act), which was an Act to amend the former statute, the plaintiffs had made two rates in 1880 and 1881; and that the rates had been duly affirmed and allowed by law; and that the defendant, as such inhabitant, was liable to pay the said rates, but that he had not paid the same.

The statement of defence alleged that the rate had been made for "ecclesiastical purposes," and was bad within 31 & 32 Vict. c. 109, s. 1, that the rates were not duly made or confirmed, and that the plaintiffs had a sufficient balance in hand from former rates, and should not have made these rates.

The reply alleged that the defendant had not appealed to the justices at any quarter sessions against the said rates, pursuant to 51 Geo. 3, c. cl. By 51 Geo. 3, c. cl., s. 19:

Whereas by the said Act of His late Majesty King Charles the Second, a perpetual yearly payment to the rector of the said parish, and his successors, of the sum of one hundred pounds, was charged on certain houses in Covent Garden, in the said parish. And whereas the said houses are now the estate of the Most Noble John, Duke of Bedford, and he is desirous that the same and certain other houses of him, the said duke, situated in Covent Garden aforesaid, and which, together with the houses so charged by the said Act form the Piazza in Covent Garden aforesaid, which extends from Russell-street to King-street, may be charged with the payment of a further yearly sum of eighty pounds to the said rector and his successors for the time being, for the

(a) Reported by W. P. EVERALBY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. DIV.]

BELL AND ANOTHER v. BASSETT.

[Q.B. DIV.]

better support and maintenance of the said rector and his successors. Be it therefore further enacted, that the said rector and his successors shall for ever hereafter have and be entitled to an additional yearly sum of eighty pounds, to be issuing out of and charged upon all and singular the houses charged by the said recited Act with the payment of the said yearly sum of one hundred pounds, and also out of and upon all other the houses in Covent Garden aforesaid now forming the Piazza there, which extends from Russell-street aforesaid to King-street aforesaid, to be paid and payable to the said rector and his successors quarterly, on the several days of payment whereon the said sum of one hundred pounds is by the said Act made payable; and that the first quarterly payment thereof shall be made on the 24th day of June 1811, and that the said rector and his successors shall have all such powers and remedies for the recovery of the said additional yearly sum of eighty pounds as by the said recited Act are given and provided for the recovery of the said therein-mentioned yearly sum of one hundred pounds.

By 31 & 32 Vict. c. 109, s. 1:

From and after the passing of this Act no suit shall be instituted or proceeding taken in any ecclesiastical or other court, or before any justice or magistrate to enforce or compel the payment of any church rate made in any parish or place in England or Wales.

By sect. 5:

This Act shall not affect any enactment in any private or local Act of Parliament under the authority of which church rates may be made or levied in lieu of or in consideration of the extinguishment or of the appropriation to any other purpose of, any tithes, customary payments, or other property or charge upon property, which tithes, payments, property or charge, previously to the passing of such Act, had been appropriated by law to ecclesiastical purposes as defined by this Act, or in consideration of the abolition of tithes in any place, or upon any contract made, or for good or valuable consideration given, and every such enactment shall continue in force in the same manner as if this Act had not passed.

By sect. 10:

In this Act "ecclesiastical purposes" shall mean the building, re-building, enlargement, and repair of any church or chapel, and any purpose to which by common or ecclesiastical law a church rate is applicable, or any of such purposes.

A. Wills, Q.C. (B. A. McCall with him) appeared for the plaintiffs.—We admit this rate was within the Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 109), and it included the salary of the parish clerk and sexton:

Gathercole v. Wade, Burn's Eccl. Law, 888a;

Rand v. Green, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 236; 80 L. J. 80, C. P.; 6 Jur. N. S. 808; Steer's Parish Law, 4th edit. 57.

It was, therefore, partly applicable to ecclesiastical purposes; but is protected by sect. 5 of the Act. The parish has been liable to tithes, but by the division the tithes in the new parish were extinguished, and a new provision made for the support of the clergy. There was a "contract made for valuable consideration given;" for we find the statute of 12 Car. 2 reciting that the then Earl of Bedford had erected the church, and given a rectory house and stipend of 100*l.* a year, and enacting that the parish should be divided from St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, and charging the yearly sum of 250*l.* upon all the houses of the inhabitants of the new parish of St. Paul's, Covent Garden, except the then Bedford House. This annual sum was to be collected by a rate to be made by the churchwardens, and to be divided between the rector, curate, clerk, and sextons. The Act of 51 Geo. 3, c. 61, increases the salaries and the amount of the rate, and by sect. 19 it appears that the then Duke of Bedford consented to charge his property with a further sum of 80*l.* a year; and Russell House, which then extended from Covent Garden to the Strand, was no longer exempted from the rate. The Duke increased his liability, and the parishioners increased theirs; and the Legislature sanctioned the contract by this Act. These facts distinguish this case from Watson v. Parish of All Saints, Poplar (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 201; Price's Church Guide, 93). The other objections are not open to the defendant, he has a right of appeal to quarter sessions, and no objection open on such appeal is now open:

Reg v. Kingston, 27 L. J. 199, M. C.; El. Bl. & El. 256;

Churchwardens, &c., of Birmingham v. Shaw and others, 10 Q. B. 868.

This rate is good on the face of it:

Reg v. Newman, 29 L. J. 117, M. C.;

Reg. v. Bradshaw, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 238; 29 L. J. 176, M. C.

A. Charles, Q.C. (B. S. Wright with him) appeared for the defendant.—If the other objections are not open to me, the only question is, whether this rate is protected by sect. 5 of the Act of 1868. [DAY, J.—Were not the parishioners relieved from all tithes by the Act of 12 Car. 2?] It is not so expressed as relief, and that Act has been repealed. This case cannot be distinguished from Watson v. Parish of All Saints, Poplar (ubi sup.). Sect. 19 of 51 Geo. 3, c. 61, gives effect only to the voluntary benevolence of the Duke of Bedford, which is not referred to in the preamble. There is no contract, and there is no consideration moving the parishioners. You cannot look outside the Act for evidence of it.

McCall, in reply, was stopped.

DAY, J.—In this case I give judgment for the plaintiffs, and I do so without the least hesitation, because I am happy to think that this is one of those cases in which an erroneous judgment will certainly not be allowed to remain unchallenged. If I am deciding wrongly, which is very possible, although I have a very strong opinion on the subject, my error will very soon be set right, and the parties will not be prejudiced. If the matter had stood on the statute of Charles II. alone, I should have said that this rate was doubly protected under the 5th section of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 109, because I should have been of opinion that this rate was made and levied "in lieu of, or in consideration of the abolition of tithes" in the precincts of Covent Garden, which was constituted a parish by the Act of Charles II. But I am impressed by the argument of Mr. Charles, and I am inclined to think that this rate can now only be supported under the Act of 51 Geo. 3, c. 61, that there was no abolition of tithes by the later Act by way of consideration for the imposition of the additional burden on the parishioners, and that, therefore, that portion of the 5th section of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 109, which maintains liability to church rates where they are "in consideration of the abolition of tithes in any place," does not protect the rate which has been made in this parish. Under the Act of 51 Geo. 3, c. 61, I think that the rate is a good and valid rate, because I think that it is a rate made upon "a contract made, or for good or valuable consideration given"—the last words of protection found in the 5th section of 31 & 32 Vict. 109. Now it is quite true that there is a recital in the preamble of 51 Geo. 3, c. cl. to the effect that it is desirable to increase the allowance made to the rector, the curate, the clerk, and the sextons, by reason of the increased price of provisions. That is the general notion which appears to me to influence what I will term the contracting parties. I look upon this statute as evidencing a contract to which certainly the Duke of Bedford was a party on the one hand, and the parishioners on the other, and I am of opinion that the whole statute must be taken together. Looking at it as a whole, it seems to me that the arrangement, which appears to be in the nature of a contract, was a reasonable and natural arrangement. The parishioners and the Duke of Bedford have a common interest in the adequate maintenance of the rector, curate, and officials, and they are desirous that they should be supported in a manner suitable to their position. Owing to the increased price of provisions, the allowance previously made was inadequate, and accordingly the Duke of Bedford, on the one hand, said that he would increase the rentcharge which he had previously paid, that he would abandon the exemption of a large portion of the parish represented by Bedford House, and make that liable with the other houses to the rates, thereby reducing the pound rate, and that he would also extend the area of property upon which his rentcharge is to be raised. The parishioners, on the other hand, submitted to the payment of a larger rate—perhaps larger in proportion than the benefit they derived from the submission, if I may say so, of Bedford House to the general rateability; but still, having regard to the interest and the due administration of public-worship, the Duke of Bedford making these large concessions on his part—they agree to submit to an increased annual rate being levied on them. Now it seems to me that there is abundant reason to suppose and to infer, if it were necessary to infer it, that this was an arrangement made between these parties by reason of the rector and the church officials seeking to have an increase of their allowance, and the duke expressed his readiness to do so on the parishioners also coming forward, and submitting to an increased sum being imposed on them by way of an annual rent. It seems to me that that is the true nature of the transaction, and that there is therefore consideration for the submission of the parishioners to the increased rate, producing 520*l.* a year, should henceforth be imposed on them, the Duke of Bedford agreeing, also, to contribute a much larger sum than he had hitherto done by virtue of a common arrangement. It is true that one does not find a recital in the form in which an agreement would have been drawn by a conveyancer, but one must look at the Act as a whole. Although it is true that a submission to the rate by the parishioners is not in terms to be found in sect 2 of the Act, and the agreement by the Duke of Bedford to provide an increased sum by way of rentcharge is to be found in sect. 19, still, I do not see that that makes any real or substantial difference when one is trying to find out what the gist of the transaction is. Then, on the other hand, it is said the Duke of Bedford purported to do this out of benevolence. It is very likely he did it out of benevolence, but one cannot help seeing that whilst he was submitting to an increased rentcharge out of his benevolence, he might as well have said that the parishioners agreed to pay an increased rentcharge out of their benevolence, because it seems to me that they agreed to do so for the benefit of their minister and officials of the church, and to secure better and more adequate services of the church. I must say that I think that this is in the nature of a contract, and that there is abundant consideration for the rate for which the parishioners submitted themselves as they appear to me to have done, by this statute of 51 Geo. 3 c. cl., which was passed practically to confirm an arrangement made between these parties. This distinguishes the case from Watson v. Parish of All Saint's, Poplar (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 201). Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment in respect of both rates, and I give judgment accordingly with costs.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. VANE AND OTHERS (Justices of Cumberland).

[Q.B. Div.]

Judgment for plaintiffs.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, J. O. Hutton and Co.
Solicitors for defendant, Harding and Co.

Tuesday, June 27, 1882.

(Before FIELD and GAVE, JJ.)

REG. v. VANE AND OTHERS (Justices of Cumberland); Re THE GUARDIANS OF THE PENRITH UNION v. THE OVERSEERS OF THE PARISH OF CASTLE SOWERBY. (a)

Elementary Education Acts 1870 and 1876—School-owning district—Contributory district—School attendance committee—Burden of expenses of committee shared by contributory district—33 & 34 Vict. c. 75, ss. 49, 50, 51, 74—39 & 40 Vict. c. 78, ss. 4, 21, 23, 28, 31, 32.

O. S., a parish in the union of P., had not a school board of its own, but was made, by an order of the Education Department, a contributory district of the neighbouring parish of O., in which there was a school board, and the children of O. S. were in the habit of attending the school board school in O. In 1877 the guardians of the P. Union appointed, under the authority of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 79, s. 7, a school attendance committee for certain parishes of the union, including O. S., and the school attendance committee appointed school attendance officers for the said parishes. In 1880 the school attendance committee incurred certain expenses in connection with enforcing the attendance of children at school, and issued a precept to the overseers of O. S. requiring contribution of the share of the parish in such expenses. The overseers refused to pay the said contribution on the ground that the parish of O. S. was under the jurisdiction and control of the parish of O., and not under that of the school attendance committee. The guardians then summoned the overseers of O. S. before two justices for the county of O., who took the same view as the overseers, and dismissed the summons. The guardians of the P. Union appealed.

Held, on appeal, that the justices were wrong, and that, notwithstanding O. S. was a contributory district to O., it was not a parish "under any other local authority" within the meaning of the Education Act 1876, and so was under the jurisdiction of the school attendance committee appointed by the guardians of the P. Union,

(a) Reported by W. P. EVERSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. VANE AND OTHERS (Justices of Cumberland).

[Q.B. Div.]

whose order for the payment of the contribution was right and proper.

THIS was a rule obtained by the guardians of the Penrith Union calling upon certain justices of the county of Cumberland and the overseers of the parish of Castle Sowerby, in the same county, to show cause why the said justices should not issue a warrant of distress upon the goods of the said overseers of Castle Sowerby for 6l. 15s. 6d., the amount of a contribution required of them by a precept of the Penrith guardians, of the 9th April 1880, in respect of certain expenses incurred under the Elementary Education Act 1876.

The facts of the case were shortly as follows:

1. Castle Sowerby, a parish in the union of Penrith, in the county of Cumberland, had no school board constituted for it, and its schools were voluntary schools. Caldbeck, an adjoining parish, is in the union of Wigton, had a school board constituted for it in 1874, and the schools in the latter parish were under the control and direction of the school board.

2. Owing to the insufficiency of accommodation at their own parish schools at Castle Sowerby, it was deemed more convenient that the children living on the Caldbeck side of Castle Sowerby should attend a school in the former instead of those in the latter parish. This plan was carried out by an order made by the Education Department, under the Elementary Education Act 1870 (sect. 49) that the parish of Castle Sowerby should become a contributory district of the parish of Caldbeck. It was afterwards directed under the provisions of sect. 50 of the same Act, that two persons should be elected by Castle Sowerby to be members of the school board of Caldbeck.

3. In 1878 the school board of Caldbeck made certain bye-laws regulating the attendance of children, &c., for its school district. In the interpretation clause of these bye-laws "the term district means the school district of Caldbeck with Castle Sowerby (contributory)."

4. In 1877 the guardians of the Penrith Union in pursuance of various provisions of the Elementary Education Act 1876, appointed a school attendance committee for certain parishes in their union. Among these parishes was included that of Castle Sowerby. The school attendance committee, as they were empowered to do, with the consent of the guardians of the Penrith Union and the Local Government Board, appointed school attendance officers for the parishes. The school attendance committee also proceeded to make bye-laws affecting these parishes, including Castle Sowerby; these bye-laws were sanctioned by the Queen in Council in March, 1881.

5. On the 24th of April 1878, the guardians of the Penrith Union issued a precept under 39 & 40 Vict. c. 79, s. 31, requiring from the overseers of Castle Sowerby a contribution of 6l. 13s. 1d. in respect of school attendance expenses, which they duly paid.

6. On the 9th of April 1880, the guardians of the Penrith Union issued another precept to the overseers of Castle Sowerby, requiring a contribution of 6l. 15s. 6d. The overseers refused to pay this contribution on the ground that Castle Sowerby was under the jurisdiction and control of the Caldbeck School Board, and not of the guardians of the Penrith Union, and therefore they were not liable to contribute to the expenses incurred by the school attendance committee of the Penrith Union.

7. In Sept. 1881 the overseers of Castle Sowerby were summoned under the provisions of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 84, s. 1, by the guardians of the Penrith Union, before two justices acting for the Leath Ward division of the county of Cumberland, for the non-payment of the said sum of 6l. 15s. 6d., but the justices dismissed the summons. The guardians of the Penrith Union thereupon moved for and obtained the above rule.

By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 84, s. 1:

In every case in which any contribution by overseers or other officers of any parish of moneys required by the board of guardians or persons acting as guardians for such parish, or for any union which shall include such parish for the performance of their duties shall be in arrear, it shall be lawful for any two justices acting within the district wherein such parish shall be situate, on application under the hand of the chairman, &c., to summon the said overseers or other officers to show cause, at a special sessions to be summoned for the purpose, why such contribution has not been paid, and after hearing the complaint preferred under the authority of such chairman, &c., and on behalf of such board, if the justices at sessions shall think fit, by warrant under their hands and seals to cause the amount of the contribution so in arrear, together with the costs occasioned by such arrear, to be levied and recovered from the said overseers, &c., in like manner as moneys assessed for the relief of the poor may be levied and recovered; and the amount of such arrear, together with the costs as aforesaid, when levied and recovered, to be paid to the said board.

By 33 & 34 Vict. c. 75, s. 49:

The Education Department may by order direct that one school district shall contribute towards the provision or maintenance of public elementary schools in another school district or districts, and in such case the former [or contributing district] shall pay to the latter [or school-owning district or districts] such proportion of the expenses of such provision or maintenance, or a sum calculated in such manner as the Education Department may from time to time prescribe.

By sect. 50:

Where one school district contributes to the provision or maintenance of any school in another school district, such number of persons as the Education Department (having regard to the amount to be contributed by the contributing district) direct, shall be elected in the contributing district, and shall be members of the school board of the school-owning district, but such last-mentioned district shall, except so far as regards the raising of money and the attendance of children at school, be deemed alone to be the district of such school board; such members shall be elected by the school board, if any, or, if there is none, by the persons who would elect a school board if there were one, in the same manner as a school board would be elected.

By sect. 51:

... An order respecting a contributory district shall be evidence of the formation of such district, and after the expiration of three months from the date thereof shall be presumed to have been duly made, and no objection to the legality thereof shall be entertained in any legal proceeding whatever.

By sect. 74:

Every school board may from time to time, with the approval of the Education Department, make bye-laws for all or any of the following purposes: (1) Requiring the parents of children of such age not less than five years nor more than thirteen years, as may be fixed by the bye-laws, to cause such children (unless there is some reasonable excuse) to attend school. (2) Determining the time during which children are so to attend school. (3) Providing for the remission or payment of the whole or any part of the fees of any child where the parent satisfies the school board that he is unable from poverty

[Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. VANE AND OTHERS (Justices of Cumberland).

[Q.B. Div.]

to pay the same. (4) Imposing penalties for the breach of any bye-laws. (5) Revoking or altering any bye-laws previously made.

By 39 & 40 Vict. c. 79, sect. 4 :

It shall be the duty of the parent of every child to cause such child to receive efficient elementary instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and if such parent fail to perform such duty, he shall be liable to such orders and penalties as are provided by this Act.

By sect. 7 :

The provisions of this Act respecting the employment of children shall be enforced: (1) In a school district within the jurisdiction of a school board, by that board; and (2) In every other school district by a committee (in this Act referred to as a school attendance committee) appointed annually, if it is a borough, by the council of the borough, and, if it is a parish, by the guardians of the union comprising such parish. Every such school board and school attendance committee (in this Act referred to as the local authority) shall, as soon as may be, publish the provisions of this Act within their jurisdiction in such manner as they think best calculated for making those provisions known.

By sect. 21 :

In a school district not within the jurisdiction of a school board, if it is a borough, the school attendance committee may if they think fit, and if it is a parish, the school attendance committee for the union comprising such parish, on the requisition of the parish, but not otherwise, shall make bye-laws respecting the attendance of children at school under section seventy-four of the Elementary Education Act 1870, as if such school attendance committee were a school board.

By sect. 23 :

For the purposes of this Act section seventy-four of the Elementary Education Act 1870, and all enactments of that or any other Act referring to bye-laws under that section, shall be construed as if "school board" included the authority authorised by this Act to make bye-laws. . . . It shall be the duty of every local authority to enforce the bye-laws made by that authority in pursuance of section seventy-four of the Elementary Education Act 1870.

By sect. 28 :

Every local authority, but subject in the case of a school attendance committee to the approval hereinafter mentioned, shall direct one or more of their officers, or the officers of the council or guardians by whom the committee are appointed, to act in the execution of this Act, and of any bye-laws in force within the jurisdiction of such authority, and may, if they think fit, pay him or them for so doing, and may, if need be, appoint and pay officers for the purpose.

By sect. 31 :

A school attendance committee under this Act shall not incur any expense, or appoint, employ, or pay any officer without the consent of the council or guardians by whom the committee were appointed, and where they are appointed by guardians, also of the Local Government Board, but with such consent may employ and pay any officer of such council or guardians. The expenses [if any] of a school attendance committee shall be paid. . . . (2) Where the committee is appointed by a board of guardians, out of a fund to be raised out of the poor rate of the parishes in which the committee act for the purposes of this Act, according to the rateable value of each parish. For the purpose of obtaining payment of such expenses, the board of guardians shall have the same powers as they have for the purpose of obtaining contributions to their common fund under the Acts relating to the relief of the poor.

By sect. 32 :

. . . . A school attendance committee appointed by guardians shall act for every parish in the union which is not for the time being under any other local authority within the meaning of this Act.

Macaskie showed cause.—The question here is whether the parish of Castle Sowerby is liable to contribute to the school attendance expenses incurred by the school attendance committee appointed by the Penrith Union Guardians, and really turns upon the construction of sect. 50 of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 75, and of sect. 32 of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 79. Owing to defective school accommodation at Castle Sowerby, some of its children were sent to attend the Caldbeck schools, and Castle Sowerby elected two members to the Caldbeck school district, and contributed to the school expenses of that district. Then came the Act of 1876, and the guardians of the Penrith Union included Castle Sowerby among those parishes which were to be under the control of their school attendance committee, which committee ordered the overseers of the parish of Castle Sowerby to pay two sums of money, one of which has been paid; but I contend that both orders were ultra vires, and that the overseers of Castle Sowerby were justified in not paying the second contribution. For all practical educational purposes Castle Sowerby is under the jurisdiction of the Caldbeck School Board, and so is not "a parish in the union which is not for the time being under any other local authority within the meaning" of the Education Act 1876, s. 32, which alone would give jurisdiction to the school attendance committee appointed by the guardians of the Penrith Union.

Charles, Q.C. (F. H. Jeuns and Mallen with him) were not called upon.

FIELD, J.—I am of opinion that the magistrates were wrong in not issuing their warrant, and that this rule ought to be made absolute. The subject, I admit, is one of considerable complication. The parish of Castle Sowerby has no school board of its own, but was made a contributing district to the school board of the neighbouring parish of Caldbeck. The Caldbeck School Board have no power to enforce attendance of children coming from, or punish parents living in, Castle Sowerby. I think the school attendance committee appointed by the Penrith Union are alone the proper persons to decide questions of the children's attendance, for they possess the necessary powers to enforce the attendance, and the like. Though it may be more convenient for the children of Castle Sowerby to go to Caldbeck, still the expenses of enforcing the attendance of the children of Castle Sowerby form part of the expenditure of the school attendance committee of the Penrith Union, and therefore the burden of the committee's expenditure should be shared in by Castle Sowerby.

CAVE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The Education Act of 1870 (sect. 74) gave powers to school boards to make bye-laws for the attendance of children in their school districts; but where a school district was made contributory to a school-owning district, no power was given to the latter to make bye-laws affecting such contributory district, for I am of opinion that sects. 50 and 74 of the Education Act of 1870 did not give power to a school board to make bye-laws for the purpose of enforcing the attendance of children from the contributing school district; neither, under this legislation, had the guardians of the Penrith Union such power in this particular case. The Education Act of 1876, in its 21st section, provided for that want. In sects. 21 and 32 it enacted that it should be in the power of the school attendance committee appointed by the union to make bye-laws, as though such school attendance committee were a school board, and to act for every parish in the union which was net for the time being under any other local authority within the meaning of the Act. In the present case the guardians of the Penrith Union appointed a school attendance committee, which made an order on this parish of Castle Sowerby to contribute its share of the expenses of enforcing the attendance of children within that union. I think the guardians were quite right in making this order for the payment of these expenses, and that the rule ought to be made absolute.

H. OF L.] MANAGERS OF THE METRO. ASYLUM DIST. v. HILL AND OTHERS (Appeal No. 1). [H. OF L.]

Rule absolute.

Solicitors for the applicants, Gedge, Kirby, Millett, and Morse, for Arnison and Co., Penrith. Solicitors for the respondents, Thomsen and Edwards, for S. K. James, Penrith.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

March 2, 3, 6, 7, 9, 10, 20, 21, 23, 24, and May 22, 1882.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR (Selborne), Lords O'HAGAN, BLACKBURN, and WATSON.)

THE MANAGERS OF THE METROPOLITAN ASYLUM DISTRICT v. HILL AND OTHERS (Appeal No. 1). (a)

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND.

New trial—Grounds for granting—Admissibility of evidence—Costs of previous trial.

The ordinary reasoning according to which the verdict of a jury on a question of fact ought not to be disturbed, unless the preponderance of the evidence against the verdict be strong and clear, does not apply to cases in which the verdict depends upon a question of science which is not fully solved, but is still within the region of bonâ fide controversy.

The importance of the verdict to others besides the parties to the litigation, and also the novelty of the question at issue, are elements to be taken into consideration in deciding whether a new trial should be granted or not.

Where a new trial is granted on the ground of the unsatisfactory nature of the verdict, a condition should not be imposed that the party applying for the new trial should pay the costs of the previous trial.

In an action brought in respect of a nuisance alleged to be caused by the construction and maintenance of a hospital for infectious diseases, the plaintiffs proposed to call evidence as to the effect of other similar hospitals on the surrounding neighbourhoods:

Per Lord Selborne, L.O.: Evidence of facts by which the effect (or absence of effect) of such hospitals could be either positively or approximately ascertained, would be admissible and material.

Per Lord Watson: Evidence relating to collateral facts is only admissible when such facts will, if established, afford a reasonable presumption as to the matter in dispute, and when such evidence is reasonably conclusive.

Foulkes v. Chadd (3 Doug. 157) discussed and approved.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal in an action brought by the respondents against the appellants, in respect of a nuisance alleged to be caused to them by the construction and maintenance by the appellants under their parliamentary powers of a hospital for small-pox patients at Hampstead.

The action was tried before Pollock, B. and a special jury at Westminster in Nov. 1878, when the jury, in answer to questions left to them by the learned judge, found that the hospital was a nuisance per se, and also that there had been negligence and want of reasonable care in the management thereof by the defendants. The defendants contended that they were acting under the statutory powers conferred upon them by the Metropolitan Poor Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 6), and were entitled to judgment notwithstanding the findings of the jury.

Pollock, B. reserved the case for further consideration, and after argument gave judgment for the plaintiffs with costs: (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 491; 4 Q. B. Div. 433.)

The Queen's Bench Division (Cookburn, C.J. and Mellor, J.) made absolute a rule for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and, on cross appeals to the Court of Appeal, Bramwell, Brett, and Cotton, L.J.J. affirmed the judgment of Pollock, B. on the question of the statute, and affirmed the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division as to the new trial, on condition that the defendants paid the costs of the former trial, Brett, L.J. dissenting on this point: (42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 212.)

The defendants appealed to the House of Lords both against the order imposing on them the liability to pay the costs of the former trial as a condition of having a new trial (Appeal No. 1), and also on the question of the effect of the Metropolitan Poor Act 1867 on the question of their liability (Appeal No. 2).

This appeal (No. 2) was decided against the appellants (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 653; 6 App. Cas. 193), and they accordingly proceeded with Appeal No. 1.

A preliminary objection was taken that the appeal would not lie, as being for costs only, but it was overruled by the House of Lords (43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 225; 5 App. Cas. 582), and the appeal was heard on the merits.

Benjamin, Q.C., Willis, Q.C., Anderson, and Proudfoot appeared for the appellants.

The Solicitor-General (Sir F. Herschell, Q.C.), Bompas, Q.C., and Finlay, Q.C. appeared for the respondents.

The argument turned chiefly upon the evidence, which is sufficiently set out in the report of the case when before Pollock, B., and in the judgments of their Lordships.

The cases of Harrie v. Aaron (4 Ch. Div. 749; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 43) and Graham v. Campbell (7 Ch. Div. 490; 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 195) were cited on the question of the power of the Court of Appeal to impose a condition as to costs; Solomon v. Bitton (8 Q. B. Div. 176) as to the principles on which the courts will act in granting a new trial; and Foulkes v. Chadd (3 Doug. 157) on the question of the admissibility of certain evidence as to the effect of other hospitals under the management of the appellants on the surrounding districts.

Willis, Q.C. was heard in reply.

At the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships took time to consider their judgment.

May 22.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Selborne).—My Lords: The principal question which your Lordships have now to determine is whether there ought to be a new trial, the conditional order of the Court of Appeal for that purpose having lapsed by reason of the non-performance of the condition by the appellants. If that condition (which was that the costs of the first trial should be paid by the appellants within a certain time) ought, in your Lordships' judgment, to have been imposed, it would be difficult now to relieve the appellants from the consequence of their neglect to comply with it. But my opinion is that, if it was right to make an order for a new trial, the Queen's Bench Division was also right in directing that the costs of the first trial should abide the event. In determining whether there ought in this case to be a new trial, the nature of the question as well as the character and state of the evidence concerning it appears to me to be material. The issues were (1) whether a small-pox hospital, of the character and capacity of that at Hampstead, and situated as that hospital was relatively to the houses and lands of those adjoining proprietors who were plaintiffs in the action, was necessarily and per se a nuisance to those proprietors (when it was full of smallpox patients), however well it might be managed? and (2) whether there were any faults or defects in the management of that hospital during the time which preceded the commencement of this action which made it a nuisance to those proprietors, in a way, or in a degree, in which it might not otherwise have been so? The jury found both those questions in favour of each and every one of the plaintiffs. Without entering into particulars as to these matters I think it enough to say that the evidence relating to them appears to me to have been insufficient to support the verdict, if the finding on the main issue were set aside. While, therefore, I am not myself disposed to say, with the judges in the Queen's Bench Division, that the verdict on this secondary issue was so unsatisfactory as alone to be a sufficient cause for a new trial, I think the converse view, that the verdict on the secondary issue ought not to stand, if on the main issue a new trial is ordered, is correct. Limiting myself to the main issue, I consider it important to observe that the jury had not, in this case, to find a verdict on a common question of fact, depending on the memory or the credit of witnesses, who (if they remember accurately and speak truly) must be capable of understanding what they have seen and heard. Nor was the question one of scientific knowledge, ascertained and verifiable by experiment, as to which any expert, properly qualified, could speak with the same certainty as concerning things which are the direct objects of sense. It was a problem of medical science, not yet fully solved, but still within the region of bond fide controversy. I think it would be a fallacy to apply to a case of that kind the ordinary reasoning, according to which the verdict of a jury on a question of fact ought not to be disturbed when there has been evidence on both sides, unless the preponderance of evidence against the verdict is strong and clear. If, indeed, nothing were at stake beyond the right of the plaintiffs to receive a certain sum of money by way of damages for a particular trespass, the maxim, Interest reipublice ut sit finis litium, might be in point, even in a case of this problematical kind, as (in patent cases especially) may sometimes be liable to happen. But, when much more than this is at stake, it may well be that a single verdict on such an issue, which appears to the court to have been founded upon an inconclusive and unsatisfactory state of evidence, ought not to stand, even though an opposite verdict might also have been open to a similar objection. The court which has to determine whether a new trial shall be granted ought to weigh the importance of the question, and the consequences depending on its proper decision, with strict impartiality. The plaintiffs (of course) ought not to have less than justice, because the duties of an important branch of public administration, with reference to the public health, and to the care and treatment of poor persons suffering from a dangerous disease, may be embarrassed and rendered difficult, or even made impracticable, by their success; but, on the other hand, less than justice ought not to be done to those who have the care of those large public interests because of any inequality of pecuniary resources, which may possibly exist, as between the parties to such a litigation. I think that there ought to be a new trial in this case, because the verdict of the jury, upon the main issue, does appear to me to have been founded upon a state of evidence which is not to my mind satisfactory, having regard to the nature and importance of the question to be determined. I abstain from going into any of the details of that evidence. I think it is sufficient to say that the theoretical part of the evidence does not seem to me to be sufficient to support the verdict; and that there are deficiencies in the practical part, which might be (and, I think, ought to be) supplied, before it can be satisfactory to draw from it the conclusions which the jury has drawn. If evidence could be given of any similar or other facts, from which the effect (or absence of effect) of other hospitals, and particularly of those at Homerton and Stockwell, on the surrounding neighbourhoods, could either positively or approximately be ascertained, it would, in my opinion, be admissible and material. I cannot, however, agree with the Court of Appeal in regarding the objection, which was successfully taken at the trial, to the reception of the evidence then tendered relative to the hospitals at Homerton and Stockwell, as a sufficient reason for making it a condition of the new trial that the costs of the first trial should be paid by the appellants. That objection was suggested by the learned judge who tried the action, before it was taken by the appellants' counsel, by whom it was, not without considerable hesitation and reluctance, adopted; and, under these circumstances, it would, I think, be too much to make the appellants pay costs in consequence of it, from which, in the event of a final decision in their favour, they would otherwise be free. If, indeed, a new trial were granted solely to let in that evidence, as an indulgence to the appellants themselves, the case would be different. But it is not so; nor does it appear to me to be probable, from what passed at the trial, that, if the evidence offered as to the hospitals at Homerton and Stockwell had then been admitted, it would have been less open to criticism than that as to Hampstead itself. If so, it cannot now be assumed that such evidence would have made a new trial unnecessary. I must, therefore, move your Lordships to reverse the order appealed from, and to restore the order for a new trial, as made by the Queen's Bench Division.

H. OF L.] MANAGERS OF THE METRO. ASYLUM DIST. v. HILL AND OTHERS (Appeal No. 1). [H. OF L.]

LORD O'HAGAN.—My Lords: This case, in trial and in argument, has occupied an extraordinary amount of public time and judicial consideration; but, in the view which I take of it, and which is, I believe, entertained by your Lordships, I do not think that, in its present stage, its details should be made the subject of any lengthened criticism. I do not think that, sending it to a new trial, we should anticipate or control the action of a jury in matters which are mainly proper for their determination, and I shall only refer in a few words to its general course and character, so as to make intelligible the grounds of the opinion I have formed. Two questions are raised before this House,—First, Should there be a new trial? Secondly, If so, should it be directed on the terms imposed by the Court of Appeal, or any other terms, or with the reservation made by the Queen's Bench Division? The learned judge before whom the cause was tried, the judges of the Queen's Bench Division, and the judges of the Court of Appeal have unanimously answered the first question in the affirmative; and I see no reason to quarrel with a conclusion sustained by such great authority. Several of their Lordships have intimated that, if the controversy had only regarded the character of the asylum as a nuisance per se, they would have refused or hesitated to grant a new trial; and this on the ground that, as to that controversy, the judge who tried the cause has not expressed dissatisfaction with the verdict; and that the conflicting medical evidence and the statistical evidence, which might have possibly warranted a finding either way, were properly for the consideration of the jury, whose decision should not be disturbed without some coercive reason. But, even if there had been nothing else in the case, and nothing in the verdict attracting distinct judicial dissatisfaction, I should have been disposed to say that a new investigation is desirable. The matters at issue were of great novelty and vast public importance. The verdict and the injunction which necessarily followed it may affect deeply the health and safety of the community at large, and render very difficult, at least, if not impossible, the legal establishment of any hospital in any populated district for the reception of patients labouring under small-pox, or, perhaps, other contagious diseases. And if this single verdict, followed by injunction, is, without further inquiry, to be held binding and irreversible, the consequences, in seasons of danger from epidemics such as are too frequent in this and other cities, might be of a very formidable kind. I do not say that the proof adduced might not have been so conclusive and the verdict so clearly right, as to dissuade your Lordships from putting the parties to the great expense and vexation of another trial, perhaps even more lengthened and more costly than the last. But it seems to me that there is here in the balance of evidence, and in the suggested imperfection, and possibly misleading operation, of the statistics, which may have determined the judgment of the jury, enough to make us pause before we pronounce a ruling—fraught with results so very serious—to be final and irreversible. As I have said already, I do not think it judicious, pending another trial, and with a view to the action of another jury, to criticise the evidence in detail; and I content myself with this general indication of the ground on which I conceive that the findings on the first and second issues, even if they stood alone, should not be considered satisfactory. Taking together the two branches of the case, which are necessarily interwoven, and can scarcely, for the purposes of this appeal, be dealt with apart from each other, I am of opinion that they must both be submitted to a new inquiry. I desire to say that I found that opinion on the reasons I have stated, and not at all on the exclusion of the evidence as to Homerton and Stockwell. Relying on those reasons, I do not feel it necessary to discuss the propriety of the exclusion, but I am not prepared to say that the learned Judge was wrong in rejecting the evidence, especially because of the non-fulfilment of the conditions on which he offered to receive it. Without proof as to the state and management of the other hospitals, so as to establish a substantive similarity, any inferences drawn from a comparison of their operation with that of the Hampstead asylum might have been quite fallacious and deceptive. But, even without regard to this, I am not quite satisfied that the evidence was admissible, whether such conditions were or were not fulfilled. It was not pertinent to the issue tried as to Hampstead only. No notice had been given, in the pleadings or otherwise, that it would be offered. It would have involved the jury in a multitude of collateral inquiries, calculated to confuse and embarrass them; and it might have been endlessly prolonged by an indefinite multiplication of objects of comparison. To keep such investigations within reasonable limits, and secure promptitude, precision and satisfaction in the administration of justice, it seems to me that Courts should be very jealous of the admission of such proof. If it had been admitted here, an inquiry as prolonged, as difficult, and probably as abortive as that which was applied for so many days to the Hampstead asylum, might have been equally applied to each of the others, and to as many more, though numbering hundreds, as might have been alleged to have like characteristics, and to offer in their action on their neighbourhoods the same statistical results. I do not see how judicial inquiries at Nisi Prius can be restrained within a practicable and manageable compass, in many cases, if the admissibility of such evidence be declared. The case of Foulkes v. Chadd (3 Doug. 157), to which attention was called by one of your Lordships, appears to me to be of weight in favour of the view I am submitting. There, an embankment had been erected for the exclusion of the sea from certain lands, and the question was, whether it had been the cause of the choking up of the harbour of Wells? Evidence that other harbours on the same coast, similarly situated, where there were no embankments, had been choked about the same time as that of Wells was offered and rejected. But an engineer was allowed to give his opinion that the embankment did not cause the mischief. On a motion for a new trial, this opinion, formed by a skilled witness on proved facts, was held to have been rightly admitted; and the case, from that day forth, has been held to make such testimony, beyond question, admissible. Lord Mansfield expresses, in these terms, the judgment of the court as to the rejected evidence:—"As to the evidence respecting the situation of other harbours on the same coast, we think that if there were no embankments, it was admissible in illustrating Mr. Smeaton's opinion, but as to harbours in which there were embankments, we think it was improper, since litem lite resolvit." As I understand it, the distinction seems to me well founded. Evidence establishing that the silting up, elsewhere, took place in the absence of an embankment, may have shown conclusively that the engineer was right in believing it to have arisen from some other causes. But if, on the contrary, the embankment's proved existence made the cases—the case in controversy and the case of illustration—identical, proof as to the one could scarcely avail to explain, or vary, or confirm the proof as to the other. In this case, the testimony of skilled witnesses was given in abundance and without objection; and, for the purpose of testing its value, cross-examination might have been applied as to the two hospitals alleged to be similar to that at Hampstead, and their effect on people and property around them; but I do not know that there is any authority for the admission, under such circumstances, directly and substantively, of such evidence. I think the judgment of Lord Mansfield is an authority the other way, applicable to the state of facts before us, founded on intelligible principle and conducive to the convenience and efficiency of courts of justice. On the second and very important question as to costs, if I am right in thinking that the evidence rejected was not properly admissible, the condition imposed by the Court of Appeal should not be allowed to burthen the defendants. In my view, the objection was legitimate and the ruling upon it correct; and the making of it gave no ground for imposing on them the costs of the first trial. But even should that view be erroneous, as I must consider it, if your Lordships are of another opinion, I agree with Brett, L.J., that in the case of a new trial, granted on the ground of the unsatisfactory nature of the verdict and for the express purpose of more accurately ascertaining the rights of the parties, it is contrary to practice and to principle to require of a litigant, who may ultimately prove to be entitled to succeed, the payment of the costs of another who has temporarily had a wrongful triumph. And, especially, I cannot understand why the taking of an objection which, whether well or ill founded, was originated by the judge, on whose pressure it was so taken by the defendants' counsel—presumably on reasonable grounds—should induce the serious punishment of his client by the imposition of the costs of an inquiry in which, possibly, it may appear that he ought to have prevailed. I am, therefore, of opinion that there must be a new trial, and that the ruling of the Queen's Bench Division should be affirmed by your Lordships in all its parts.

Lord BLACKBURN.—My Lords: The respondents in this case brought their action against the appellants for maintaining a small-pox hospital at Hampstead in such a manner as to be a nuisance to them respectively, in respect of their property adjoining the site of the hospital. It was clear on the evidence that the appellants did maintain on a space of about eight acres of ground a hospital, into which they received at one time a larger number of patients than had been before known to be received at one time into any hospital for small-pox. The trial was somewhat embarrassed by a wish to find those facts which would be material if the construction ultimately put on the statutes under which the defendants act had been different from what it has been determined to be. It must be taken now, since the decision of this House in Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill, Appeal No. 2 (6 App. Cas. 193; 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 653), that the Legislature, though authorising the appellants to erect and maintain hospitals for the reception of small-pox patients, and to raise funds for that purpose, did not confer on them any power to erect or maintain any hospital in such a manner as to be a nuisance to the owners of property in the vicinity, even though such should be the necessary and inevitable consequence of maintaining the hospital at all; and that the respondents have the same rights to recover damages, and the same remedies for the prevention of what is shown to be an injury in the technical sense, injuria cum damno, as they would have had against any one erecting and maintaining the hospital in the same manner without any authority from Parliament. No one can doubt that the erection of a small-pox hospital in any locality, even if it be proved to demonstration that it is not a source of real danger, will have a tendency to deter persons from coming to reside in the neighbourhood, and so will depreciate the value of ground which would otherwise fetch a high price as building ground. But this, though it may be a source of serious pecuniary loss to the owner of that building land, is not a matter for which he can recover damages; it is damnum absque injuria. The jury, in this case, after a long trial, have answered six questions put to them by Pollock, B., before whom the case was tried, and from those answers it sufficiently appears that they thought it proved that the maintenance of the hospital, however skilfully and carefully it was maintained, was a nuisance to each of the respondents. But the finding, if satisfactory, that the hospital was a nuisance per se to each of the respondents entitles them to have an injunction to restrain the appellants from carrying on the asylum so as to be a nuisance to all or any of the respondents. This is a very important matter, casting great, if not insuperable, difficulty in the way of carrying out the scheme of having separate hospitals for the treatment of those ill of infectious disorders, which the Legislature appear to have approved of. For, though it might be contended that, consistently with this verdict, a hospital for the reception of a smaller number of patients might be maintained on this spot without being a nuisance to the respondents, yet if the appellants were to maintain a hospital there for any number of small-pox patients, they would do so at their peril and subject to a great disadvantage so long as this verdict stands. The question actually before the House is this. The Queen's Bench Division made an order that the verdict should be set aside and a new trial had between the parties; and that the costs be reserved until after such new trial. I may observe that, before the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, the practice had become inveterate not to grant a new trial as against the weight of evidence, except on payment of costs; by the 44th section of that Act this was altered, and it was made the rule that the costs of the first trial should abide the event, unless the court shall otherwise order. Those words, "shall abide the event," have a technical sense; and it was sometimes a matter of dispute whether the event of the second trial was the same as that of the first (see Dawson v. Harris, 11 C. B. N. S. 801), and to avoid any dispute as to what was the event the rule was often made as it has been in the present case: No complaint has been made as to this. On appeal, the majority of the Court of Appeal ordered "that the plaintiffs' appeal herein be dismissed if within two months the defendants elect to pay, and if, within fourteen days after completion of taxation the defendants pay the costs of the former trial, except in so far as such costs were increased by the plaintiffs' contention that the defendants had been guilty of negligence in the management of the hospital, and that all other costs be costs in the cause; and it is further ordered that if the defendants do not so elect and pay such taxed costs within the times before mentioned, then that the plaintiffs' appeal herein be allowed with costs." The appellants have not complied with this condition, and now on this appeal the two questions arise:—First, Whether the new trial should have been granted at all. Second, Whether the condition which the Court of Appeal attached to the granting of that new trial was one which ought to have been attached. I will deal with those two questions separately. I think that in this case a new trial ought to be granted. It is not easy, probably it is impossible, to lay down any precise rule as to when a new trial shall be granted or refused as against evidence, and I shall not attempt to do so. The power to do so is intrusted to the courts for the purpose of securing that, as far as is practically possible, justice should be done. And the mode in which it is exercised, and the principles on which the courts act in doing so seldom got into the reports, whilst there was no appeal on such questions. Perhaps now they will get better known. The constitution of this country has entrusted the determination of facts to the jury; but even when the jury had acted properly on the materials before them, it may well be that, without imputing blame to any one, it may appear that the nature of the case was such that it was not sufficiently investigated, or as Bramwell, L. J. says, sifted, and that a verdict founded on such imperfectly investigated materials is unsatisfactory. Even if that is made out, it does not follow that there should be a new trial. The court has in its judicial discretion to weigh the delay, vexation, and expense of a new trial, all in fact which forms the foundation of the maxim Interest reipublice ut sit finis litium, against the injustice which may be worked in the particular circumstances by treating a verdict so unsatisfactorily obtained as conclusive; and I think, though as I have already said, it would be difficult to find reported authorities for it, that the importance of the consequences of the verdict is always an important element in coming to a decision on such a question. It is for this reason that I have pointed out the important effects of the verdict, finding that the hospital is a nuisance per se if it stands. I am not at all prepared to say that, if the verdict only affected the payment of a sum of money to the respondents, I should think it right to interfere; at the same time, I am not to be understood as saying that I should not. I think that a further and very important element to be taken into account is, whether the question in issue is one of novelty, such that the litigants could not reasonably be expected to grapple with it and understand it at once, and this is what weighs most with me. I think that the respondents obtained their verdict principally, if not entirely, by the effect of their statistics, by which they undertook to show that the proportion of small-pox cases in the immediate vicinity of the hospital whilst it was open was much greater in proportion to the population than in other districts similar in character, but not near a hospital. Both sides called the evidence of experts, which at least since the decision of Foulkes v. Chadd (3 Doug. 157), now one hundred years, has always been received on questions involving science. This is I think in truth a mode, and practically the best if not the only mode, of getting at the results of the extensive experience of professional men. If the facts did show that, not once or twice only but during the whole course of these two epidemics, there was more disease in the neighbourhood of the hospital than in other localities where everything was similar, except that there was no hospital there, I think the conclusion that the hospital was the cause of that excess of disease is one which the jury might draw. But I cannot think there has been such an investigation into these statistics as to satisfactorily establish the foundation for this inference. It may be that further investigation will confirm the finding of the jury; it may be that it will disprove it. All that I now say is that I think there has not been such an investigation as to be a satisfactory ground for deciding such a novel and important question, and therefore that there should be a new trial. The next question is whether the condition which the majority of the Court of Appeal has attached to the new trial ought to have been so attached. I have come to the conclusion that it ought not. The respondents (plaintiffs below) wished to give evidence of a similar state of statistics round Stockwell and Homerton, two hospitals maintained by the same appellants. After a good deal of hesitation, the appellants' counsel, I think almost at the request of the judge, objected to the reception of this evidence, and it was rejected. There is very little, if any, authority on the question whether such evidence was admissible. In Foulkes v. Chadd (already referred to) the question was whether the silting up of Wells harbour, which commenced soon after an embankment had been made for the purpose of excluding the sea from some lands previously overflowed by the tide, was due to the maintenance of the embankment to such an extent as to make it a nuisance. Evidence was offered to show "that other harbours on the same coast, similarly situated where there were no embankments, had begun to fill up and be choked about the same time as Wells harbour. They also called Mr. Smeaton, an eminent engineer, to show that in his opinion the bank was not the cause of the mischief. The evidence was rejected." A new trial was granted. Lord Mansfield first gives the reasons for holding that Mr. Smeaton's judgment formed on facts was very proper evidence. And this part of the case has been often cited and acted upon. He is then reported to have said, "as to the evidence respecting the situation of other harbours on the same coast, we think that if there were no embankments it was admissible in illustration of Mr. Smeaton's opinion; but as to harbours in which there were embankments, we think it was improper since litem lite resolvit." I have some difficulty as to what the principle of the distinction here laid down is meant to be; and as far as I know there is no subsequent case which throws any light upon it. But, acting on principle and common sense, I should say that the plaintiff in such a case as the present could derive no benefit from proof that disease had been communicated by another hospital unless he was able to show that the management of that hospital was such as to show that it was not communicated in consequence of the neglect of precautions taken in the case before the court. I do not say positively that without such proof the evidence would be inadmissible as being an attempt litem lite resolvere; only that in my opinion it at least ought not to have any weight; and I think it clear that the defendant might give evidence that in other hospitals the disease was not communicated, to raise the inference that a hospital did not, necessarily at least, cause the communication of contagion. But if it could be proved (and in the case of hospitals managed by the same body evidence to that effect probably could be procured sufficient at least against them) that all such precautions were observed, the evidence, if admissible, would be such as to have weight. I am sensible of the force of the remark that such inquiries might be pushed so far as to make a trial of such an issue by a jury impracticable, and as the laws of evidence are framed with a view to a trial at Nisi Prius, I should not like, without further argument and consideration, to say positively that such evidence might not be properly rejected on the ground that a proceeding at Nisi Prius ought to be restrained within practicable limits, though I am not prepared to decide that it might be properly so rejected, and I do not think it necessary to decide this point. For I think that there ought to be a new trial, even though I agreed with what I understand to be the opinion of the whole Court of Appeal, that evidence was on the objection of the appellants (defendants below) rejected which ought to have been received, and that a good deal of evidence which might have been brought forward on their behalf was not produced. If I thought that the objection of the appellants prevented the reception of evidence which would have made the verdict satisfactory, I should have to consider the ground given by Cotton, L. J., who says that those who caused the verdict to be not satisfactory ought not to have a new trial unless they pay the costs occasioned by their objection. I do not mean to decide that this principle should always be decisive, but only that where the facts raise such a point; it seems to me, as at present advised, an element to be taken into account by the court in exercising their discretion. But I think that if the objection had not been made, and the evidence as to the statistics around Stockwell and Homerton had been received, it would almost to a certainty have been even more open to the objection that it was not sufficiently investigated than the evidence actually given, and, if so, instead of making the verdict satisfactory it would have added another reason for thinking it not satisfactory. So thinking, I am obliged to differ from the majority of the Court of Appeal. I think that this condition ought not to have been imposed, and consequently that the order of the Queen's Bench Division should be restored.

H. OF L.] MANAGERS OF THE METRO. ASYLUM DIST. v. HILL AND OTHERS (Appeal No. 1). [H. OF L.]

H. OF L.] MANAGERS OF THE METRO. ASYLUM DIST. v. HILL AND OTHERS (Appeal No. 1). [H. OF L.]

LORD WATSON.—My Lords: I also am of opinion that there ought to be a new trial in this case. The learned judge who presided at the trial submitted six different questions to the jury, but these in reality raised only two issues of fact, the first being whether the hospital, under careful and skilful management, was in itself a nuisance to each of the respondents, and the second whether there had been such defects in the management of the appellants as to occasion nuisance to the respondents, or one or more of them. Upon both issues the jury found in favour of each and all of the respondents. The two issues thus affirmed by the jury are quite independent of each other. No real danger, which is capable of being obviated by skilful management, can be attributed to the mere existence of the hospital, but risks of infection to the neighbourhood, inseparable from a collective mass of small-pox patients within its walls, if such there be, may be aggravated, and other real perils may be created, by want of proper and reasonable care on the part of the managers. Had the second been the only issue submitted to the jury, I should have doubted whether a finding in favour of any one of the respondents would have been satisfactory, but I should have had little hesitation in holding that the indiscriminate finding of the jury in favour of all the respondents was not warranted by the evidence, and consequently that there must be a new trial. It so happens, however, that the verdict of the jury upon the first issue, if it be allowed to stand, is sufficient for the purposes of the respondents, and will entitle them to a more sweeping and effective remedy than they could demand under the second issue, being nothing less than the suppression of the present hospital; and the unsatisfactory character of their findings upon the second issue, whilst it may suggest a doubt as to the discrimination exercised by the jury in dealing with somewhat imperfect evidence, in a case of extreme nicety, does not of itself afford a sufficient good ground for setting aside that verdict. It is therefore necessary to consider upon its own merits the verdict of the jury upon the first issue, which raises a question of great and general importance. Whether the hospital at Hampstead was or was not conducted with reasonable care and skill is a matter with which the appellants and respondents are chiefly, if not solely, concerned. Whether that or a similar hospital must, even with the best of management, necessarily occasion nuisance to its neighbourhood, is a question which concerns many besides the present litigants; and the consequences of the verdict would probably extend to rights and interests, public and private, in all large centres of population throughout the kingdom. These appear to me to be considerations which ought not to be disregarded in considering whether there ought to be a new trial in the present case. In determining whether there shall be a new trial, the real function of the court is to see that no injustice is done, and it is my opinion that, in a case like the present, the court is entitled, if not bound, to look beyond the interests of the litigants. As between them, if no other interests were involved, it might be doing full justice to allow a verdict to become final, although the merits of their controversy had not been satisfactorily or sufficiently investigated. On the other hand, the materials laid by them before the jury may be so incomplete and insufficient that the verdict must of necessity be unsatisfactory, not merely because the litigant parties have failed duly to investigate the case, but because it may seriously prejudice the rights of others who were not parties to the investigation. Being of opinion that the verdict must be assumed to rest mainly if not wholly upon certain facts immediately connected with Hampstead Hospital, which the jury must have held to be established by the evidence, I agree with your Lordships in thinking that the evidence bearing upon these facts is in some respects so incomplete that the verdict founded upon it cannot be satisfactory, and, upon this part of the case, I shall not venture to repeat what has already been so well said by your Lordships. In regard to the evidence bearing upon the Stockwell and Homerton Hospitals, which was tendered by the respondents and rejected by the presiding judge, I have felt more difficulty than some of your Lordships. I do not for a moment doubt that collateral evidence of that description is, subject to certain conditions, receivable. In the Scotch case of Hamilton v. Tennant and Co. (1 Rob. 821), where the discharge of gaseous matter from the chimney of a chemical work was complained of as a nuisance by the proprietor of land in its vicinity, Lord Cottenham held that the effect of the discharge upon other properties in the neighbourhood was legitimate matter of inquiry; and I apprehend that, on the same principle, evidence of the effect of similar discharges from other chimneys would have been admissible. Still, there appears to me to be an appreciable distinction between evidence having a direct relation to the principal question in dispute and evidence relating to collateral facts, which will, if established, tend to elucidate that question. It is the right of the party tendering it to have evidence of the former kind admitted, irrespective of its amount or weight, these remaining for consideration when his case is closed; but I am not prepared to hold that he has the same absolute right when he tenders evidence of facts collateral to the main issue. In order to entitle him to give such evidence, he must, in the first instance, satisfy the court that the collateral fact which he proposes to prove will, when established, be capable of affording a reasonable presumption or inference as to the matter in dispute; and I am disposed to hold that he is also bound to satisfy the court that the evidence which he is prepared to adduce will be reasonably conclusive, and will not raise a difficult and doubtful controversy of precisely the same kind as that which the jury have to determine. It appears to me that it might lead to unfortunate results if the court had not the power to reject evidence of collateral fact which does not satisfy both of the conditions which I have endeavoured to indicate. If it be the right of a litigant to offer just as much or as little testimony as he thinks fit in support of an alleged collateral fact, which would admittedly be useful if proved, then it must be his right to submit to the jury any number of issues precisely similar to that which they are empanelled to try, and to support these by proof far more unsatisfactory than the evidence bearing directly upon the leading issue. Upon this point, the case of Foulkes v. Chadd (3 Doug. 157) appears to me to be an authority deserving of consideration. The question of fact which had been sent for trial was, whether the silting up of a harbour was due to the erection and maintenance of an embankment by which the tidal water had been confined within narrower limits. One point adjudged was that the opinion of skilled engineers was competent evidence; but it was also decided that, whilst collateral evidence as to the silting action of the tide in the case of harbours where there were no embankments was admissible, such evidence as to harbours where there were embankments was inadmissible. The ratio assigned for the decision was, that to admit the evidence would be to resolve litem lite, which, in my opinion, can only signify that Lord Mansfield and the other learned judges of the King's Bench thought that the action of the tide upon alluvial matters could in the one case be satisfactorily investigated, and that in the other the evidence as to the effects of an embankment in aggravating silt would give rise to controversies as doubtful as that involved in the issue before the jury. I am not, however, in a position to hold that the local statistics, with regard to Stockwell and Homerton, which the respondents proposed to put in, ought to have been rejected. The fact that the disease is found to be prevalent in dwelling-houses near to a small-pox hospital, and not obviously exposed to other sources of contagion, would, if established, tend to elucidate the first issue; and it may be that these statistics were such as to show that the localities affected were in that position. In that case, the evidence tendered could not be characterised as an attempt to illustrate obscurum per obcurius. Holding these views, I should prefer, for my own part, not to decide anything as to the admissibility of the evidence in question, leaving it to the respondents to tender it anew, in such shape as they may be advised. I have only to say, in conclusion, that I have been unable to appreciate the grounds upon which the majority of the Lords Justices made their order for a new trial conditional upon payment of the costs of the former trial, by the respondents, within a limited time. In a case like the present, of novelty and difficulty, and involving extensive inquiry into local facts and statistics, I do not think it can be imputed as matter of blame to either party that the evidence was not so complete as to afford materials for a satisfactory verdict. And even if I had been clearly of opinion that the statistics with regard to Stockwell and Homerton ought to have been received, I should not have thought that taking an objection to the reception of evidence, in conformity with the already expressed opinion of the presiding judge, was conduct deserving of the penalty which was attached to it by the Court of Appeal.

H. OF L.] MANAGERS OF THE METRO. ASYLUM DIST. v. HILL AND OTHERS (Appeal No. 1). [H. OF L.]

*Judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.
Order of the Queen's Bench Division restored.*

Solicitors for the appellants, Few and Co.
Solicitors for the respondents, Bompas, Bischoff, and Dodgson.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

March 31 and April 1, 1882.

(Before MATHEW and CAVE, JJ.)

THE OVERSEERS OF THE POOR OF THE TOWNSHIP OF CHORLTON-UPON-MEDLOCK v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE CHORLTON UNION AND THE OVERSEERS OF THE POOR OF THE TOWNSHIP OF ARDWICK. (a)

Poor rate—Buildings occupied by corporations for public purposes—Restriction on profits—Rateable value.

Where premises do not come into the market to be let to tenants, but are occupied by public bodies in discharge of their statutory duties, e.g., corporations and school boards, who are restricted as to the profits to be derived from their user of the premises, the gross estimated rental and rateable value are to be ascertained by finding out what a tenant unrestricted as to charges would give as rent for the premises.

The Corporation of Worcester v. The Droitwich Union (34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 288) distinguished.

SPECIAL CASE stated by consent by order of North, J., pursuant to 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11, for the opinion of the court as follows:

Appellants are the overseers of the poor of the township of Chorlton-upon-Medlock, in the city of Manchester and within the Chorlton Union.

Respondents are the guardians of the poor of the Chorlton Union and the overseers of the poor of the township of Ardwick, also in the said city and union.

The said city comprises six townships.

The said union comprises twelve townships, three of which are within the city.

In conformity with the provisions of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 103, s. 32, notice of appeal to General Quarter Sessions of Hundred of Salford was given by the appellants on the 2nd Feb. 1882 against the valuation list of the said respondent township, as confirmed by the respondent assessment committee, on the following grounds: "That the rateable hereditaments comprised in such valuation are valued at sums less than the annual rateable value thereof, to wit, the Mayfield baths and laundries situated in Stove-street, and the board schools situate in Armitage-street, in the respondent township."

"The question for the opinion of the court is by what process the gross estimated rental and rateable value are to be ascertained in the case of tenements which do not come into the market for the purpose of being let to tenants, such as those buildings occupied by municipal corporations, guardians of the poor, and school boards for public purposes in discharge of their respective statutory duties.

Under the provisions of various Baths and Washhouses Acts, the corporation purchased in 1878 the said Mayfield Baths and Laundries from a private company for the sum of 8528*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.*, and since that date have expended a further sum of 10,846*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* upon the premises.

By the same Acts maximum charges were fixed which the corporation were empowered to make for the user of the baths and laundries by the public.

From the 31st Aug. 1880 to the 31st Aug. 1881 there was a loss in the working of the baths and laundries to be made up out of the poor rate of 531*l.* 10*s.* 10*d.*

If the charges were increased the number of persons frequenting the baths and laundries would probably diminish in a corresponding ratio.

Profit in the commercial sense cannot be made by a tenant at the baths and laundries.

Any loss which may arise in the occupation and carrying on of the baths and laundries by the corporation is made up by a charge upon the poor rate and equally distributed according to rateable value over all the townships within the city.

The corporation pay to the owners of the land, the site of the baths and laundries, the sum of 89*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.* The fair annual value or rent for the said land is 103*l.* The annual cost of repairs and insurance is 80*l.*

If the baths and laundries were now in the market to be let to a tenant as baths and laundries subject to the restrictions imposed by statute, a tenant could not be found who would be willing to take them.

The said premises are capable of being put to other uses, and if they were now in the market to be let to a tenant unfettered and unrestricted to be used as baths and laundries, or for any other purpose, a tenant could be found who would be willing to take them.

The said baths and laundries could not now be erected by a contractor for a less sum than 17,000*l.* If a contractor purchased the land, and erected the baths and washhouses he would require to be paid an annual rental of 1168*l.*

If the corporation were in the market to rent premises suitable for use as baths and laundries, such accommodation as is provided by the said baths and laundries could not be obtained by the said corporation for a less rent than 1150*l.*

As regards the board schools, the School Board for the City of Manchester, under the powers and provisions of the Elementary Education Act (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), purchased in 1878 the land, the site of the said schools, for a sum of 2234*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*, and erected thereon the said school buildings at a further cost of 8945*l.* 17*s.*

The schools are frequented by children of any class, who receive instruction at certain fees fixed by the school board under the powers given by sect. 17 of the Act.

The Education Department limits the fee to be charged to scholars to 9*d.* per week.

Profit in the commercial sense cannot be made by a tenant at the schools.

Any loss which may arise in the occupation of the schools by the school board is made up by a charge upon the poor rate, and equally distributed according to rateable value over all the townships within the city.

The loss during one year, 1881, amounted to 7*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*

The fair annual rent of the land is 90*l.*

The average annual cost of repairs and insurance is 46*l.*

If the schools were now in the market to be let to a tenant as schools subject to the restric-

(a) Reported by W. J. SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

THE NEWPORT URBAN SANITARY AUTHORITY v. GRAHAM.

[Q.B. Div.]

tions imposed by statute, a tenant could not be found who would be willing to take them.

The said premises are capable of being put to other uses, and if they were now in the market to be let to a tenant unfettered and unrestricted to be used for any purpose, a tenant could be found who would be willing to take them.

The schools could not now be erected by a contractor for less than 8000*l*.

If a contractor purchased the land and erected the schools he would require and reasonably expect an annual rental of 620*l*.

If the school board were in the market to rent premises suitable for use as schools, such accommodation as is provided by the said schools could not be obtained at a less rent than 620*l*.

Four methods of arriving at the gross estimated rental and rateable value were then proposed for the opinion of the court, and amounts were agreed upon as the gross estimated rental and rateable value respectively, as regards each of the methods.

1. By calculating the annual interest upon the money expended in the purchase or erection of the premises, and deducting the annual sum expended in repairs, insurance, &c.

2. By finding what a contractor would require as rent for the said premises.

3. By finding what a tenant unrestricted as to charges would give as rent for the premises to be used as baths, laundries, or schools.

4. By finding the profit which the corporation or school board respectively makes or can make by its occupation of the said premises.

Hopwood, Q.C. (Meadows White, Q.C., and Ooghill with him) for the appellants.

Addison, Q.C. (O. A. Russell with him) for the respondent guardians.

Smyley, for the respondent overseers, relied upon

The Mayor, &c., of Worcester, v. The Assessment Committee of the Droitwich Union, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 288; 2 Ex. Div. 49.

MATHEW, J.—I think our judgment must be for the appellants. The correct mode of estimating the rateable value is by the third of the methods stated in the case, that is by finding out what would be given by a tenant as rent for the premises; in other words, by the ordinary principle of what they would be worth to a hypothetical tenant. It is said, however, that as regards this particular property there is no rateable value, because under the particular enactments referred to in the case, the premises have been released from rateability. In order to decide this we must have regard to all the circumstances. It is said on the one side that the case of The Corporation of Worcester v. The Droitwich Union (ubi sup.) applies, and on the other hand that it does not. In that case it is clear that the Act of Parliament imposed fetters on the land itself, which rendered it impossible to make use of it for any other purpose; but in the present case the property had a rateable value up to the time when it was acquired by the Corporation of Manchester, and I am unable to see anything in the Act which leads to the conclusion that it has been deprived of that rateable value. It is quite true that the corporation are unable to make higher charges than the Act specifies, and that their ability to make greater profits is thus limited; but that fact does not indicate that the assessment is to be made on a different footing from that upon which assessments are made all over the kingdom. I am supported in my opinion by this fact, that if the Acts under which the corporation make use of this property have the effect the respondents contend for, the inhabitants of the township where the property lies would have a greater burden cast upon them, because the corporation may select what locality they please, and then throw upon that locality a greater burden of rate where there is, as here, a deficit. If the appellant's contention be well founded then, if there be any deficit on account of the baths, washhouses, and schools, it will be made up out of the rate of all the townships. I think for these reasons that the Droitwich case does not apply, and that this property is rateable.

CAVE, J.—I am of the same opinion. To obtain the gross and the rateable value of any premises, you must take them as they stand, and ask what rent the owner could obtain in the market if he wished to let them. If there is a restriction on the use of the tenement, the market value would, of course, be affected by it; but, where there is simply a restriction on the use that a particular tenant may make of it, I think that should be disregarded, except in the case where the assessment is based on the amount of profit made. As to the first suggested method of arriving at the rateable value, where there is a substantial demand and supply, and the premises are fit and proper for the purposes for which they are required, it may not be an unfair way of ascertaining the gross estimated rental. The second mode suggested never can be correct, but the third shows clearly, in my opinion, how the gross estimated rental and rateable value should be found. The fourth is the right mode where the premises are of no value except for certain restricted purposes, or of greater value when used for those purposes than for any other ordinary purposes. It would be correct in this latter case to take the gross profits, and then, by taking the deductions, which I need not go into, the rateable value could be arrived at. But this does not arise here, because, undoubtedly, the premises would be of greater value if there were no restrictions upon the profits, and the market value is clearly ascertainable by the third mode submitted.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for appellants, Bower and Cotton, for Lyne, Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondent union, Chester and Co., for Crofton, Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondent overseers, Layton and Jacques, for Lings, Manchester.

Monday, April 3, 1882.

(Before MATHEW and CAVE, JJ.)

THE NEWPORT URBAN SANITARY AUTHORITY v. GRAHAM. (a)

Public Health Act 1875—Houses "adjoining or abutting" on a street—No access to street—38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 150.

The back premises of respondent's houses were divided by a wall from the street. There was no access from the houses to the street, the level of which was five feet lower than that of the houses.

(a) Reported by W. J. SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.] THE LOCAL BOARD OF BEXLEY v. THE WEST KENT MAIN SEWERAGE BOARD. [Q.B. Div.]

Held, that the houses adjoined or abutted on the street within the meaning of sect. 150 of the Public Health Act 1875, and that the respondent was liable to pay his proportion of paving, &c., the street.

CASE stated by Justices of Monmouth under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, s. 2.

The case so far as is material was as follows:—A complaint was made before the justices of Monmouth against Robert Graham, the respondent, for nonpayment of 19l. 7s. 10d. and interest, due as his proportion of the expenses incurred by the Urban Sanitary Authority of Newport, in paving, channelling, and other works done upon St. Julian-street, in that borough, under sect. 150 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55).

The respondent is the owner of the houses No. 32, 33, and 34, York-place, which have open yards behind them, and are bounded by a stone wall about twelve feet high which separates them from St. Julian-street. There is no door in this wall, or any access to St. Julian-street.

If York-place were to be paved the respondents' property would have to bear its share.

It was contended for the respondent: (1) That his property derived all street advantages of access, lighting, postal matters, channelling, and sewerage from the front of the houses in York-place. (2) That the boundary wall at the back of the respondent's property separates and divides it entirely from St. Julian-street, and the level of the ground at the back is about five feet above the level of St. Julian-street. (3) That the houses in that street have been on one side built up to and adjoin the said boundary wall, and on the other side to within a few feet thereof. (4) That if the urban authority should call upon the owners in York-place to pave, &c., the respondent would have to pay his share for these improvements at the front of his houses. (5) That there was no access direct or indirect to or from the said houses into St. Julian-street. (6) That the houses did not "abut" upon St. Julian-street within the meaning of the Public Health Act 1875.

The justices decided in favour of the respondent, and dismissed the complaint.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the respondent under the above circumstances was liable to pay the amount claimed.

W. Graham for the appellants.—The real question to be decided is, whether the fact that there is no access from the respondent's property to the street upon which the works were done frees him from liability to contribute to the cost. The case relied on by the other side is The London School Board v. St. Mary, Islington (33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 504; 1 Q. B. Div. 65), but that case is in fact no authority, because there was access from the house there in question to the road. Anyone who went to the house used the street. He also cited

Mayor, &c., of Manchester v. Chapman, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 840; 37 L. J. 173, M. C.;

Reg. v. Newport Local Board, 32 L. J. 97, M. C.;
London and North-Western Railway Company v. St. Pancras Vestry, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 654.

Howard Smith for the respondent.—The test of liability to contribute is beneficial access, and here there is none. In The London School Board v. St. Mary, Islington (ubi sup.), Cockburn, C.J., after remarking that the justice and equity of the case must be looked to, says: "That being so, it matters nothing in point of the justice of the case that the house, instead of actually fronting the street, stands in the rear of the street, if it has its access from the street. It is the benefit of access to the premises which must be supposed to be the foundation of the liability which the Legislature thinks fit to impose." I rely on this dictum.

MATHEW, J.—The Act says that the owners or occupiers of the premises "fronting, adjoining, or abutting on such parts thereof as may require to be severed," etc., are liable either to execute the works themselves or to contribute to the expenses. It is impossible to say that the respondent's property does not adjoin or abut, for in point of fact it does both, and therefore he is liable, and the appeal must be allowed.

CAVE, J. concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Cole and Jackson.
 Solicitors for the respondent, Raw and Co.

Saturday, May 22, 1882.

(Before MANISTY and WATKIN WILLIAMS, JJ.)

THE LOCAL BOARD OF BEXLEY v. THE WEST KENT MAIN SEWERAGE BOARD. (a)

Arbitration—Local Government Board—Power of board to state a special case—Reference by consent—Common Law Procedure Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), s. 5—Compulsory reference—38 & 39 Vict. c. 163, s. 93.

The Act of Parliament by which a sewerage board was incorporated provided that all controversies between the board and any constituent authority should be referred to the Local Government Board, whose decision thereon should be final and conclusive.

Disputes having arisen between the plaintiffs and defendants during certain sewerage operations conducted by the defendants in the plaintiffs' district, the same were referred to the Local Government Board, who stated a case for the opinion of the court.

Held, that there was no power to state a special case, the reference not having been by consent of the parties within the meaning of sect. 5 of the Common Law Procedure Act.

THIS was a case stated by the Local Government Board for the opinion of the court, of which the following are the material parts:—

The plaintiffs were, by virtue of the Public Health Act 1875 and other Acts, constituted the surveyors of the high roads within the district of Bexley. The defendants, the West Kent Main Sewerage Board, were incorporated under and by virtue of an Act of Parliament of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 163, entitled the West Kent Main Sewerage Act 1875, for the purpose of constructing a sewer and other drainage works in certain districts, amongst others the parish of Bexley. By sect. 8 of the Act it is provided that the sewerage board, in making their sewer and filtering bed, may from time to time, so far as they find it necessary or convenient for effecting the objects of the works, break up, cross over or under, or stop up temporarily or permanently, any street, highway, path, sewer,

(a) Reported by DUNLOP HILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. DIV.] THE LOCAL BOARD OF BEXLEY v. THE WEST KENT MAIN SEWERAGE BOARD. [Q.B. DIV.]

drain, creek, and watercourse, and any pipe or tube for water, gas, telegraph, or other purposes, doing so little damage as may be, and making compensation for any damage done.

Whilst certain sewerage alterations and improvements were being effected in the parish of Bexley by the defendants, certain damage was done to the roads by the carts of persons with whom the defendants had contracted to remove the soil pending the operations. Damage to the roads was also committed by several other means, the particulars of which, for the purposes of this report, it is unnecessary to set forth.

The plaintiffs having made a claim against the defendants for compensation under the above section, the defendants disputed their liability to pay any such compensation, and thereupon the matters in difference stood referred to the Local Government Board, under the 93rd section of the above statute, the 38 & 39 Vict. c. 163. That section provided:

Except as in this Act expressly provided, if at any time any difference arises between the board on the one hand, and any constituent authority or authorities, or person or persons, on the other hand, or between any two constituent authorities, or between any constituent authority and any parish or part of a parish, or person or persons, respecting any assessment of a main sewer rate, or any injunction, notice, or any determination of the board, or any controversy or other matter under this Act, the same shall, by virtue of this Act, stand referred for decision to the Local Government Board, whose decision thereon, and respecting the costs of the reference, shall be binding and conclusive.

The Local Government Board having, under their seal, stated a case for the opinion of the court, the case now came on for argument.

H. Tindal Atkinson for the plaintiffs.

B. M. Bray for the defendants.

Counsel having opened the case on behalf of the plaintiffs, the Court called upon him to show what power the Local Government Board had to state a case, having regard to sect. 93 of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 163.

H. Tindal Atkinson.—It is submitted this is an arbitration by consent, and is subject to the provisions of sect. 5 of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854. That section provides that, "It shall be lawful for the arbitrator, upon any compulsory reference under this Act, or upon any reference by consent of the parties, where the submission is or may be made a rule of any of the Superior Courts of law or equity at Westminster, if he shall think fit, and if it is not provided to the contrary, to state his award, as to the whole or any part thereof, in the form of a special case for the opinion of the court; and when an action is referred, judgment, if so ordered, may be entered according to the opinion of the court." In the case of Be The Dore Valley Railway Company (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 717; L. Rep. 4 Ch. App. 554), it was held by James, V.O., and affirmed by the Lords Justices on appeal, that the provisions of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, with regard to remitting matters to the reconsideration of the arbitrator, and enlarging the time for making the award, applied to references under the Lands Clauses Act, and that the court had jurisdiction to extend the time for making the award. References under the Lands Clauses Acts are by consent of the parties; all that is prohibited is a reference to any other arbitrator than the one fixed by that Act. Here also, the arbitrator only is fixed, and the reference is by consent within the meaning of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854. [WILLIAMS, J.—Can it be said that there has been any submission here?] In Ex parte Harper (L. Rep. 18 Eq. 539) it was held that the reference to arbitration of a question of disputed compensation pursuant to sect. 25 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, is a "submission to arbitration by consent" within the meaning of the 17th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, and the submission may be made a rule of court. In Rhodes v. The Airedale Drainage Commissioners (31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 59; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 46; 1 O. P. Div. 402), the Court of Appeal held that the umpire in the arbitration under the Lands Clauses Act, in which each party had appointed an arbitrator, had power to make his award in the form of a special case for the opinion of a Superior Court. The ground of that decision was that the appointment of the arbitrator was, by the terms of sect. 25 of the Lands Clauses Act, a submission to arbitration on the part of the party by whom the same was made, and that the arbitration was, therefore, an arbitration by consent within sect. 5 of the Common Law Procedure Act. This is a private Act, and is therefore in the nature of an agreement, and so constitutes a submission.

B. M. Bray, for the defendants, also argued in favour of the power of the board to state a case.

MANISTY, J.—I am of opinion, upon the construction of the 93rd section of the West Kent Drainage Act, 1875, that there is no power to state this special case. That section enacts that "if at any time any difference arises between the board on the one hand, and any constituent authority or authorities (as the sewerage board and the local board for the district) on the other hand, or between any constituted authority and any parish or part of a parish, or person or persons, with respect to any assessment, rate, notice, or any controversy or other matter under the Act, the same shall by virtue of this Act, stand referred for decision to the Local Government Board, whose decision thereon shall be final and binding." The object of this provision seems to have been to avoid all litigation before the ordinary tribunals of the country by transferring all controversies and questions to the Local Government Board for final and conclusive decision. That was manifestly the intention of the Act, and it seems to me that we should defeat that intention by hearing this special case. I am of opinion that this was not a reference by consent within the meaning of sect. 5 of the Common Law Procedure, because there has been no consent and no submission to arbitration. The decision of the Court of Appeal in the case of Rhodes v. The Airedale Drainage Company (31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 59; 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 46; 1 O. P. Div. 402) turned entirely upon the words of sect. 25 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845. That section expressly says that the appointment of an arbitrator by each party respectively shall be deemed a submission to arbitration on the part of the party by whom the same shall be made. The arbitration was therefore held, by the effect of that section, to be an arbitration by consent within the meaning of sect. 5 of the Common Law Procedure Act. It is clear, therefore, that that decision does not affect this case. For these reasons, I am of opinion we cannot hear this special case.

Q.B. Div.]

BEATTY AND OTHERS (apps.) v. GILLBANKS (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

WATKIN WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. The Bexley Local Board and the West Kent Main Sewerage Board happen to have a number of controversies between them, touching questions of some difficulty, as to what ought and ought not to constitute grounds for compensation for injuries done by the sewerage board, or by persons with whom they have contracted, in carrying on certain sewerage operations. The two boards being desirous of having these questions settled by this court, have accordingly embodied them in the form of a special case, under the seal of the Local Government Board. Now, can we hear it? The only authority the court could have to entertain this proceeding is that conferred by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, sect. 5. That section provides that "it shall be lawful for the arbitrator upon any compulsory reference under the Act (which does not apply to this case), or upon any reference by consent of the parties." The private Act of the defendants, the 38 & 39 Vict. c. 163, s. 93, directly provides that all disputes shall stand referred to the Local Government Board, whose decision shall be final and conclusive—expressly substituting, as it seems to me, its own tribunal in the place of the ordinary courts of justice for the purpose of settling their disputes. The tribunal is specially selected, and it is clearly intended that any tribunal or proceeding other than that pointed out in the section should be absolutely excluded. I wish to say further, that this case appears to have been stated for the purpose of obtaining the judgment or opinion of the court, not upon stated facts, but upon a number of speculative and abstract questions. It would, in my opinion, be most objectionable for the court to have to decide such questions, which would involve a treatise upon an extremely difficult point of law for the guidance of the sewerage board in performing their duties. It was never intended by the Common Law Procedure Act that arbitrators should be enabled to seek the opinion of the Superior Courts upon questions of such a kind. I therefore concur in holding that this court is bound to refuse to hear this case.

Hearing refused.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, Sidney Matthews.

Solicitors for the defendants, May, Sykes, and Batten.

Tuesday, June 13, 1882.

(Before FIELD and CAVE, JJ.)

BEATTY AND OTHERS (apps.) v. GILLBANKS (resp.). (a)

APPEAL FROM INFERIOR COURT.

Unlawful assembly—The "Salvation Army"—Assembly of persons for lawful purpose—Knowledge by them that such assembly would cause others to commit a breach of the peace—Liability for such breach—Sureties to keep the peace.

The appellants, with a considerable number of other persons, forming a body called the "Salvation Army," assembled together in the streets of a town for a lawful object, and with no intention of carrying out their object unlawfully, or by the use of physical force, but knowing that their assembly would be opposed and resisted by other persons in such a way as would in all probability tend to the committing of a breach of the peace on the part of such opposing persons. A disturbance of the peace having been created by the forcible opposition of a number of persons to the assembly and procession through the streets of the appellants and the Salvation Army, who themselves used no force or violence, it was Held, by Field and Cave, JJ. (reversing the decision of the justices), that the appellants had not been guilty of "unlawfully and tumultuously assembling," &c., and could not therefore be convicted of that offence, nor be bound over to keep the peace.

Held also, that knowledge by persons peaceably assembling for a lawful object that their assembly will be forcibly opposed by other persons, under circumstances likely to lead to a breach of the peace on the part of such other persons, does not render such assembly unlawful.

CASE stated by justices pursuant to the Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879, and the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a petty session for the division of Axbridge, in the county of Somerset, held at Weston-super-Mare, in the said division, on the 29th March 1882, the three appellants Beatty, Mullins, and Bowden were charged on the complaint of the respondent Gillbanks, the superintendent of constabulary within the said division, for that the appellants had unlawfully and tumultuously assembled, with divers other persons, to the number of 100 or more, in public thoroughfares, called Walliscoteroad, Regent-street, and other places within the said parish of Weston-super-Mare, on the 26th March inst., to the disturbance of the public peace and against the peace of our Lady the Queen. And upon the hearing of such complaint, the justices found that the allegations therein contained had been proved, and did order the appellants to be severally bound in their recognisances respectively, with two sureties, to keep the peace for the term of twelve calendar months, and in default to be imprisoned for three calendar months, or until they did severally sooner comply with the aforesaid order.

The appellants being dissatisfied with that decision, the justices, on their application, stated and signed the following case, setting forth the facts and grounds of their aforesaid determination, for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, as follows:

CASE.

At the hearing of the before-mentioned complaint, the following facts were proved:

(a) The Salvation Army is an organised body of persons who are and have for some time been in the habit of forming themselves into processions of more than 100 persons, and in such processions parading the principal streets and public places of the town.

(b) These processions are formed at the hall of the Salvation Army, and, after their formation, proceed, headed by a musical band and flags and banners, through the streets, collecting, and for the purpose of collecting, as they go, a mob of persons with whom, attended by much shouting and singing, uproar and noise, they eventually return to the hall, where a meeting is then held.

(c) The appellant Beatty is captain and a leader of the Salvation Army, and organises and directs these processions and meetings.

(d) The other appellants Mullins and Bowden

(a) Reported by HENRY LEIGH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

BEATTY AND OTHERS (apps.) v. GILLBANKS (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

are also leaders of the Salvation Army, and assist in organising and directing the processions and meetings.

(e) There is another organised band of persons at Weston-super-Mare, called the Skeleton Army, which also parades the streets and is antagonistic to the Salvation Army and its processions.

(f) There are numbers of other persons at Weston-super-Mare who, as soon as the Salvation Army has formed for the purpose of thus parading the streets as aforesaid, are in the habit of assembling in a mob of great numbers about and around and in front of the procession of the Salvation Army. Some of these, together with the Skeleton Army, assemble to dispute the passage of the Salvation Army through the said streets and places, some to encourage such passage, with shouting, singing, uproar, and noise, to the great terror, disturbance, annoyance, and inconvenience of the peaceable inhabitants of the town and to the endangering of the public peace.

(g) On several occasions previous to the 23rd March last the procession of the Salvation Army, accompanied by such a mob as aforesaid, has come into collision with the said Skeleton Army and other persons who are antagonistic to the Salvation Army, and thereupon a free fight, great uproar, blows, tumults, stone-throwing, and disorder have ensued.

(h) On the 23rd March last the Salvation Army formed their aforesaid procession and paraded the streets and places, accompanied by a disorderly and riotous mob of over 2000 persons who had been collected as the Salvation Army proceeded. In the midst of the said mob were fighting and great disturbance, stone-throwing, and noise. The police were for a long time overpowered and unable to cope with the disturbance, and the Salvation Army forced their way through several public streets to a public place called the Railway-parade, where a general fight occurred. The appellant Beatty led and directed the Salvation Army on this occasion, but neither he nor the other appellants were seen to commit any overt act of violence. The police were ultimately reinforced and the crowd then dispersed. In all probability bloodshed and injury were prevented by the interference of the police.

(i) The matters set out in the last paragraph caused great terror and alarm in the minds of the peaceable inhabitants at the said place, who believed, and had good reason to believe, that the aforesaid processions would lead to a repetition of the aforesaid disturbances, and would endanger life, property, and the public peace; and who, in consequence, brought the matter to the notice of the sergeant of police in charge of the peace of the town and made complaints to him thereupon.

(j) In consequence of these matters a notice was issued signed by two of the magistrates, and copies of it were placarded in conspicuous parts of the said town and were served on the principal appellant Beatty, in these terms:

Public Notice.—Whereas it hath been made to appear unto us, the undersigned, two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Somerset, acting in and for the division of Axbridge in the same county, upon the oath of divers persons, that a riotous and tumultuous assembly did take place on the night of the 23rd March, in certain public streets at Weston-super-Mare, in the said county, and further, that there are reasonable grounds for apprehending a repetition of such riotous and tumultuous assembly in the public streets of Weston-super-Mare as aforesaid; we do therefore hereby require, order, and direct all persons to abstain from assembling to the disturbance of the public peace within the said parish.—Given under our hands and seals at Weston-super-Mare aforesaid this 24th March 1882. (Signed by two Magistrates.)

(k) On Sunday, the 26th March, at 10.30 a.m., whilst numbers of the inhabitants of the said town were proceeding to their respective places of worship, the Salvation Army, under the direction of the appellants, was formed into a procession of 100 or more persons, and, having been so formed, commenced to march away from their hall, through the aforesaid streets and public places of the said town. The appellants marched at the head of the procession, which was surrounded by a tumultuous and shouting mob of some hundred persons, which rapidly increased as the procession passed on.

(l) The said police sergeant met the procession (after it had paraded through certain principal public streets) in a public street called Walliscote-street, and with others of the police force stopped the advance of the procession, and asked the appellant Beatty if he was leading the procession, and if he had received a copy of the notice. The appellant Beatty admitted that he was leading the procession and had received the notice. The sergeant of police told him that he must obey the notice, and must desist from leading the procession, and must disperse at once or he would be arrested. The appellant Beatty refused to comply and marched on at the head of the procession some twenty yards further, and told the sergeant that he should still proceed, and thereupon he was arrested. After he was arrested he shouted to the procession to proceed. The other appellants, Mullins and Bowden, then took the direction of the procession and persisted in leading it on, whereupon they also were arrested. Neither of the appellants were guilty of any overt act of violence other than the acts aforesaid, and submitted quietly to their arrest.

(m) The aforesaid assembling of the Salvation Army and march of the said procession and collection of the said mob was a terror to the peaceable inhabitants of the said town, and to those who were going to their places of worship as aforesaid, and was calculated to endanger and did endanger, and was calculated to cause a breach of the public peace; and there was good and sufficient cause for the inhabitants to suppose, and any rational person knowing the aforesaid circumstances would suppose that, unless the procession and mob were dispersed, there would be a repetition of the aforesaid violent and tumultuous acts, and that there would be a breach of the peace.

(n) The appellants intended to parade their procession through the principal streets and public places of the town, and to collect on their march a large mob of persons to accompany them; and they had good reason to expect that they would come into collision with the said Skeleton Army and other persons antagonistic to the procession, and they had good reason to expect that there would be the same fighting, stone-throwing, and disturbance, as there had been on previous occasions, and intended on meeting such opposition to force their way through the said streets and places as they had done on previous occasions. It was contended for the appellants

Q.B. Div.]

BRATTY AND OTHERS (apps.) v. GILLBRANKS (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

that there had not been any unlawful and tumultuous assembling on their part, that they had not been guilty of the charge and complaint made against them, and that their arrest had been unlawful, and that they should be discharged. The magistrates, however, thought that the charge had been made out, and decided against the appellants as above stated.

The questions of law stated for the opinion of the court were, whether these facts so found to be proved as aforesaid constituted the offence charged in the complaint, and whether the order made—that the defendants should find sureties to keep the peace—was valid.

Edward Clarke, Q.C. (with him were Sutherland and L. O. Jackson), for the appellants, submitted that there was no evidence of any unlawful or tumultuous assembly, or any conduct on the part of the appellants amounting to a disturbance of the public peace, or causing terror to the inhabitants of the town. It was not suggested that there was any riot. To make an assembly unlawful, it must be an assembly for an unlawful purpose, or, if the purpose for which the persons assemble is a lawful one, the assembly itself must be conducted in a disorderly and tumultuous manner. In the present case it was clear from the evidence in the case itself that the purpose was a perfectly innocent and lawful one, and that the assembly itself was peaceable and orderly. The argument on the respondent's part is, that because some other persons objected to the Salvation Army parading quietly through the streets and turned out to forcibly oppose them, therefore the appellants were guilty of unlawfully assembling. [CAVE, J.—That is to say, because others unlawfully opposed their assembling, therefore their assembling was unlawful.] An unlawful assembly is defined as an assembly of persons with intent to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act in a tumultuous way, or so as to excite public terror. That is the largest definition of it, but there is nothing to be found in any case or textbook to the effect that, where persons are lawfully doing a certain act, the unlawful interference therewith by other persons can make that lawful act unlawful. The law interferes to check the wrong-doer, and not the person acting lawfully. The wrong-doers here were the Skeleton Army. The rule and the law relating to and regulating such assemblies have been well and clearly stated in various cases. In Reg. v. Vincent (9 C. P. 91), Alderson, B., at p. 109, lays it down as law that any meeting assembled under circumstances which, in the opinion of rational and firm men, are likely to be dangerous to the peace of the neighbourhood is unlawful; but he goes on to say that, "the alarm must not be merely such as would frighten foolish and timid persons, but must be such as would alarm persons of reasonable firmness and courage." To the same effect are the rulings of Littledale, J. in Reg. v. Neale (9 C. & P. 431), and Holroyd, J. in Bedford v. Burley and others (3 Stark. N. P. O. 76). The object of the appellants here was both laudable and lawful, and the manner of carrying it out was peaceable and orderly. The case finds no act of violence on their part, and though the information alleges that the peace would be broken by them, nothing of that sort happened. The only noise and violence that occurred were on the side of the Skeleton Army. The merely walking four abreast through the streets was not unlawful in itself, nor in the conduct of the Salvation Army was there anything to produce terror or alarm. [FIELD, J.—Suppose the appellants knew that their procession would be opposed, and that violence might probably ensue, and they still proceeded with it?] The answer to that is, that their procession being lawful they were entitled to be and ought to have been protected by the authorities from such opposition. If it were not so, mob rule would soon take the place of law and order. It is disorderly rowdies and riotous roughs whom the police should put down, and not lawful and peaceable processionists. He referred also to Dalton's Country Justice, cap. 136, sect. 1, and Hawk. P. C., book 1, cap. 28, sect. 10.

A. B. Poole (with whom was Valpy), for the respondent, contra, submitted that the cases cited for the appellants were very different from the present one; but that, if not, still the words there describing an unlawful assembly were amply sufficient to cover the case now before the court. Here, however, the appellants have not been indicted or punished for unlawfully assembling, but simply bound over to keep the peace and be of good behaviour. [FIELD, J.—No persons can be forced to find sureties to keep the peace without having done something to render them liable to be so bound.] Bearing in mind what had so recently before happened, the justices were justified, even if the assembly were not absolutely unlawful, in calling on the appellants to find sureties for the peace. [CAVE, J.—In what does the procession of the Salvation Army differ from that of every village club in the kingdom?] They parade the streets intending to collect a mob. [FIELD, J.—Surely not a "mob" in the evil sense of the word. Their object is to awaken some sense of religion in the lower classes, and with that view they go through the streets singing hymns in order to induce the people to follow them to their meeting-house and join in their religious services. Can that fairly be called "collecting a mob?"] As a fact, they do collect together the roughest and lowest classes, and, however meritorious may be their object in itself, they know that it causes disturbances. They may not desire to fight or throw stones, but they know such things will probably follow their gathering. [CAVE, J.—Am I forced to stay within doors because I know that a man intends to knock me down if I go out? and, if I go out, am I guilty of provoking a breach of the peace?] FIELD, J.—And who, in such a case, ought to be bound over? The appellants assembled in large numbers, which is unlawful. [CAVE, J.—What is an unlawful number?] As many as are likely to lead to a disturbance. In Russell on Crimes, p. 387, 4th edit., citing Hawk. P.C., it is said that the assembling of a man's friends for the defence of his person against those who threaten to beat him if he go to such a market, is unlawful, though they may lawfully assemble to defend him in his house against a threatened assault, for, it is added, "a man's house is looked upon as his castle." It may be admitted that the Salvationists did not intend to force their way against opposition by fighting their opponents, but they intended to force their way by pushing on, and

Q.B. Div.]

BEATTY AND OTHERS (apps.) v. GILLBANKS (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

that would inevitably lead to disturbance and violence. By that persistence, though not themselves guilty of any riotous and tumultuous acts, they were the cause of them, and were properly called on to find sureties. Under the circumstances stated in the case, the assembly, whatever the object of the appellants might be, was from its very commencement unlawful, and the magistrates were justified in the course they adopted. He referred also to the cases cited for the appellants, and relied on them as showing the assembly was an unlawful one.

E. Clarke, Q.C. was not called on to reply.

FIELD, J.—I am of opinion that this order cannot be supported, and must therefore be discharged. The appellants, it appears, together with a large number of other people, belong to a body of persons called the Salvation Army, who are associated together for a purpose which cannot be said to be otherwise than lawful and laudable, or at all events cannot be called unlawful, their object and intention being to induce a class of persons who have little or no knowledge of religion and no taste or disposition for religious exercises or for going to places of worship, to join them in their processions, and so to get them together to attend and take part in their religious exercises, in the hope that they may be reclaimed and drawn away from vicious and irreligious habits and courses of life, and that a kind of revival in the matter of religion may be brought about amongst those who were previously dead to any such influences. That undoubtedly is the object of the Salvation Army, and of the appellants, and no other object or intention has been or can be imputed to them; and, as has been said by their learned counsel, and doubtless with perfect truth, so far as they are from desiring to carry out that object by means of any force or violence, their principles are directly and entirely opposed to any conduct of that kind, or to the exercise or employment of anything like physical force; and, indeed, it appears that on the occasion in question they used no personal force or violence, but, on the contrary, when arrested by the police, they submitted quietly without the exhibition of any resistance either on their own parts or on that of any other member of their body. Such being their lawful object and intention, and having no desire or intention of using force or violence of any kind, it appeared that on this 26th March they assembled, as they had previously done on other occasions, in considerable numbers at their hall, and proceeded to march thence in procession through the streets of the town of Weston-super-Mare. Now that, in itself, was certainly not an unlawful thing to do, nor can such an assembly be said to be an unlawful one. Numerous instances might be mentioned of large bodies of persons assembling in much larger numbers, and marching, accompanied by banners and bands of music, through the public streets, and no one has ever doubted that such processions were perfectly lawful. Now the appellants complain that, for having so assembled as I have before stated, they have been adjudged guilty of the offence of holding an unlawful assembly, and have in consequence been ordered to find sureties to keep the peace, in the absence of any evidence of their having broken it. It was of course necessary that the justices should find that some unlawful act had been committed by the appellants in order to justify the magistrates in binding them over. The offence charged against them is "unlawfully and tumultuously assembling with others to the disturbance of the public peace, and against the peace of the Queen," and of course before they can be convicted upon the charge clear proof must be adduced that the specific offence charged has been committed. Now was that charge sustained? There is no doubt that the appellants did assemble together with other persons in great numbers, but that alone is insufficient. The assembly must be a "tumultuous assembly," and "against the peace," in order to render it an unlawful one. But there was nothing so far as the appellants were concerned to show that their conduct was in the least degree "tumultuous" or "against the peace." All that they did was to assemble together to walk through the town, and it is admitted by the learned counsel for the respondent, that as regards the appellants themselves, there was no disturbance of the peace, and that their conduct was quiet and peaceable. But then it is argued that, as in fact their line of conduct now was the same as had on previous similar occasions led to tumultuous and riotous proceedings with stone-throwing and fighting, causing a disturbance of the public peace and terror to the inhabitants of the town, and as on the present occasion like results would in all probability be produced, therefore the appellants, being well aware of the likelihood of such results again occurring, were guilty of the offence charged against them. Now, without doubt, as a general rule it must be taken that every person intends what are the natural and necessary consequences of his own acts, and if in the present case it had been their intention, or if it had been the natural and necessary consequence of their acts, to produce the disturbance of the peace which occurred, then the appellants would have been responsible for it, and the magistrates would have been right in binding them over to keep the peace. But the evidence as set forth in the case shows that, so far from that being the case, the acts and conduct of the appellants caused nothing of the kind, but, on the contrary, that the disturbance that did take place was caused entirely by the unlawful and unjustifiable interference of the Skeleton Army, a body of persons opposed to the religious views of the appellants and the Salvation Army, and that but for the opposition and molestation offered to the Salvationists by these other persons, no disturbance of any kind would have taken place. The appellants were guilty of no offence in their passing through the streets, and why should other persons interfere with or molest them? What right had they to do so? If they were doing anything unlawful it was for the magistrates and police, the appointed guardians of law and order, to interpose. The law relating to unlawful assemblies, as laid down in the books and the cases, affords no support to the view of the matter for which the learned counsel for the respondent was obliged to contend, viz., that persons acting lawfully are to be held responsible and punished merely because other persons are thereby induced to act unlawfully and create a disturbance. In Russell on Crimes (4th edit. p. 387), an unlawful assembly is defined as follows: "An unlawful assembly,

Q.B. Div.]

BEATTY AND OTHERS (apps.) v. GILLBANKS (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

according to the common opinion, is a disturbance of the peace by persons barely assembling together with the intention to do a thing which, if it were executed, would make them rioters, but neither actually executing it nor making a motion towards the execution of it." It is clear that, according to this definition of the offence, the appellants were not guilty, for it is not pretended that they had, but, on the contrary, it is admitted that they had not, any intention to create a riot, or to commit any riotous or other unlawful act. Many examples of what are unlawful assemblies are given in Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, book 1, cap. 28, sects. 9 and 10, in all of which the necessary circumstances of terror are present in the assembly itself, either as regards the object for which it is gathered together, or in the manner of its assembling and proceeding to carry out that object. The present case, however, differs from the cases there stated; for here the only terror that existed was caused by the unlawful resistance wilfully and designedly offered to the proceedings of the Salvation Army by an unlawful organisation outside and distinct from them, called the Skeleton Army. It was suggested by the respondent's counsel that, if these Salvation processions were allowed, similar opposition would be offered to them in future, and that similar disturbances would ensue. But I cannot believe that that will be so. I hope, and I cannot but think, that when the Skeleton Army, and all other persons who are opposed to the proceedings of the Salvation Army, come to learn, as they surely will learn, that they have no possible right to interfere with or in any way to obstruct the Salvation Army in their lawful and peaceable processions, they will abstain from opposing or disturbing them. It is usual happily in this country for people to respect and obey the law when once declared and understood, and I hope and have no doubt that it will be so in the present case. But, if it should not be so, there is no doubt that the magistrates and police, both at Weston-super-Mare and everywhere else, will understand their duty and not fail to do it efficiently, or hesitate, should the necessity arise, to deal with the Skeleton Army and other disturbers of the public peace as they did in the present instance with the appellants, for no one can doubt that the authorities are only anxious to do their duty and to prevent a disturbance of the public peace. The present decision of the justices, however, amounts to this, that a man may be punished for acting lawfully if he knows that his so doing may induce another man to act unlawfully—a proposition without any authority whatever to support it. Under these circumstances, the questions put to us by the justices must be negatively answered, and the order appealed against be discharged.

CAVE, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. The question in this case is, whether these persons were guilty of the offence of unlawfully and tumultuously assembling together to the disturbance of the public peace and that of the Queen, and I am of opinion that they were not. The learning on the subject of "unlawful assemblies" is to be found in Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown and Dalton's Country Justice. In the first-mentioned authority the definition of an unlawful assembly is given, which my brother Field has referred to in his judgment; but it is there further said: "This seems to be much too narrow a definition; for any meeting whatever of great numbers of people with such circumstances of terror as cannot but endanger the public peace and raise fear and jealousies among the king's subjects seems properly to be called an unlawful assembly, as when great numbers, complaining of a common grievance, meet together, armed in a warlike manner, in order to consult together concerning the most proper means for the recovery of their interests, for no man can foresee what may be the event of such an assembly;" and further it is said: "Also an assembly of a man's friends for the defence of his person against those who threaten to beat him if he go to such a market, &c., is unlawful, for he who is in fear of such assaults must provide for his safety by demanding the surety of the peace against the persons by whom he is threatened, and not make use of such violent methods, which cannot but be attended with the danger of raising tumults and disorder to the disturbance of the public peace. Yet an assembly of a man's friends in his own house for the defence of the possession thereof against those who threaten to make an unlawful entry therein, to or for the defence of his person against those who threaten to beat him therein, is indulged by law, for a man's house is looked upon as his castle:" (Hawk. P. C., book 1, c. 28, ss. 9, 10.) So far Hawkins; but Dalton, in his Country Justice, goes further where, in cap. 136, s. 1, it is said: "An unlawful assembly, riot or rout, is where three or more shall gather together, come, or meet in one place, to do some unlawful act with violence, and that unlawful act must be malum in se and not malum prohibitum. As when three persons or more shall come and assemble themselves together to the intent to do any unlawful act with force or violence against the person of another, his possessions or goods; as to kill, beat, or otherwise to hurt or to imprison a man; to pull down a house, wall, pale, hedge, or ditch; wrongfully to enter upon or into another man's possession, house, or land, or to cut or take away corn, grass, wood, or other goods wrongfully, or to hunt unlawfully in any park or warren, or to do any other unlawful act with force or violence, against the peace or to the manifest terror of the people; if they only meet to such a purpose or intent, although they shall after depart of their own accord without doing anything, yet this is an unlawful assembly." Now, putting these several passages from these old authorities together, it seems to me to be impossible to hold that the appellants here have been brought within them as being guilty of unlawfully and tumultuously assembling. The meeting or assembly of the Salvation Army was for a purpose not unlawful. Was there an intention on their part to use violence? If, though their meeting was in itself lawful, they intended, if opposed, to meet force by force, that would render their meeting an unlawful assembly; but it does not appear that they entertained any such intention. On the contrary, when met and resisted by the Skeleton Army, they used no violence of any kind, and manifested no intention of meeting their opponents with like violence to that which the latter offered to them. I come therefore to the conclusion that the appellants were not guilty of unlawfully assembling, and that, for the reasons and on the grounds before mentioned, the judgment

Q.B. Div.]

WOOTEN (app.) v. ROLFE (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

of the court should be pronounced in their favour.

Judgment for the appellants with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Whittington, Son, and Baker.

Solicitors for the respondents, Crowder, Anstie, and Co., for J. O. Simmons, Axbridge.

Wednesday, Nov. 23, 1881.

(Before GROVE and LOPES, JJ.)

WOOTEN (app.) v. ROLFE (resp.). (a)

Revenue—Inhabited house duty—“Servant or other person”—Clerk dwelling with wife, children, and servant on the premises—Caretaker for protection—41 Vict. c. 15, s. 13, sub-sect. 2—Exemption.

The appellant, a banker, was the owner of premises which he occupied and used as a bank, and for the purpose of carrying on his business as a banker therein. The premises comprised three coal cellars and strong room under ground, a front and back sitting-room, with a kitchen and scullery on the ground floor, a front sitting-room and two bedrooms on the first floor, and five bedrooms on the second floor. One coal cellar and the strong room, the front and back ground-floor room, and the front sitting-room on the first floor, were used by the appellant for the purpose of his bank. The kitchen and scullery, one bedroom on the first floor, and two on the second floor, were occupied by one Somerford, who dwelt therein for the protection of the bank (the rest of the cellars and rooms being unused), and his family, viz., his wife and a son and daughter, both of age, and the son being occupied in the County Court office, dwelt there with him, Somerford himself being in the employ of the appellant as a clerk, at a salary of 100*l.* a year, which included the services of himself and family in taking down and putting up the bank shutters, cleaning the offices, lighting the fires, and answering the door.

The Commissioners having, upon these facts, confirmed the assessment of the appellant to the inhabited house duty in respect of his occupation of the above-mentioned premises, it was, on appeal therefrom, Held, by Grove and Lopes, JJ. (affirming the finding of the Commissioners), that the case came precisely within the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Yewens v. Noakes (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 128; 6 Q. B. Div. 530; 50 L. J. 132, Q. B., O.P., & Ex.), and that the respondent was liable to the duty to which he had been assessed, and did not come within the exemption in sect. 13, sub-sect. 2, of 41 Vict. c. 15.

In this case, the appellant having appealed against an assessment, for the year ending the 5th April 1880, of 120*l.* at 9*d.* in the pound, in respect of a house, No. 119, St. Aldate's-street, Oxford, and claimed exemption under sub-sect. 2 of sect. 13 of 41 Vict. c. 15, the commissioners determined the appeal, and confirmed the assessment; but the appellant requiring them so to do, they stated the following case for the opinion of the court:

CASE.

1. The appellant is seised in fee of the premises mentioned in the assessment, and carries on therein the business of a banker and agent of the County Fire Insurance Company.

2. The premises comprise three coal cellars and strong room under ground; a ground floor consisting of a front room, a room behind that, with a kitchen and scullery at the back of that; a first floor consisting of a front sitting-room and two bedrooms; a second floor consisting of five bedrooms.

3. One coal cellar, the strong room and ground-floor front room, room behind that, and first-floor front sitting-room are used by the appellant for the purposes of his business; the kitchen and scullery, one first-floor bedroom, and two second-floor bedrooms are occupied by Edwin Somerford, who dwells therein for the protection of the bank (two coal cellars, one first-floor bedroom, and three second-floor bedrooms are not used). Besides the said Edwin Somerford, his family, consisting of wife, daughter, and son, both of age (the son being employed in the County Court office), dwell on the premises. Mr. Somerford is in the employ of the appellant as clerk at a salary of 100*l.* per annum, which includes also the services of himself and family in taking down and putting up the bank shutters, cleaning the offices, lighting fires, and answering the door.

The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the commissioners were right or wrong in confirming the assessment.

Spokes for the appellant.—There is one point in the present case which makes it a stronger one in favour of the appellant than the case of The City Bank v. Last (post, p. 64), which has just been argued before this court, and that is, that the duties performed by the caretaker in the present case are all entirely of a menial character. His salary or wages as a “clerk” includes the services of himself and family in putting up and taking down the shutters, cleaning and sweeping the offices and rooms, lighting the fires, and answering the door, &c., all of them strictly duties of a menial character. It is customary in banks and such like establishments for the junior clerk, in addition to writing or keeping accounts, &c., to perform several menial functions of the above-named kind. There is no reason why a man may not be a “clerk” and a menial “servant” at the same time. [Grove, J.—It is not stated that he dwells on the premises merely for the protection of them.] Though not perhaps expressly so stated it comes to the same thing—he is there to protect the bank. In Rolfe v. Hyde (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 775; 6 Q. B. Div. 673; 50 L. J. 481, Q. B.) the servant was a cashier. [Lopes, J.—How is the present case distinguishable from Yewens v. Noakes, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 128; 6 Q. B. Div. 530; 50 L. J. 132, Q. B. P.] There was no statement that the family in that case were occupied in any duties in relation to the bank; but here they all are. [Lopes, J.—What have these several duties got to do with the protection of the bank P] The whole family to a certain extent are servants, and if they are engaged in menial duties that prevents the occupation being purely residential, and makes it so far servile. Both Thesiger and Baggallay, L.JJ. were not, apparently, of opinion in Yewens case (ubi sup.) that the fact of the wife and children being on the premises made any difference. Thesiger, L.J. says: “I cannot bring myself to think that the exemption from the

Q.B. Div.]

THE CITY BANK (apps.) v. LAST (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

inhabited house duty which trade premises enjoy is necessarily lost from the fact that the caretaker is put in possession and occupation of the house with his wife and family." And Baggallay, L.J. expresses himself to the same effect. If it were so, every caretaker must needs be a single man, or at all events have no children. If he be a bona fide caretaker his wife and family can make no difference. [LOPES, J.—I do not think this man was a bona fide caretaker.] He was left there for the protection which every bank must have.

The Attorney-General, Sir H. James, Q.C. (with whom were the Solicitor-General, Sir F. Herschell, Q.C., and A. L. Smith) was not called on to argue for the respondent.

GROVE, J.—In this case I cannot see any substantial or real distinction between it and the case of Yewens v. Noakes (ubi sup.) in the Court of Appeal. All the substantial ingredients in the present case, except perhaps the position of the man Somerford, agree with those embraced in the judgments of the Lords Justices of Appeal in Yewens v. Noakes. The words of the statute, so far as they apply to the present case, are as follows: "Every house or tenement which is occupied solely for the purposes of any trade or business, or of any profession or calling by which the occupier seeks a livelihood or profit, shall be exempted from the duties by the commissioners upon proof of the facts to their satisfaction, and this exemption shall take effect although a servant or other person may dwell in such house or tenement for the protection thereof." The case finds that on the premises in question the business of a bank and an insurance agency are carried on, and, after stating generally what the premises consisted of, it proceeds to state how they are occupied, namely: "One coal-cellar, the strong-room, the ground-floor front room, and room behind that, and the first-floor front sitting-room are used by the appellant for the purposes of his business;" and it then goes on to state that which is more material to the determination of the present question, namely: "The kitchen and scullery, one first-floor bedroom and two second-floor bedrooms are occupied by Edwin Somerford, who dwells therein for the protection of the bank." It does not say "merely for the protection of the bank," and it would appear that he dwells there for other purposes besides that, for further on it is said, "Besides the said Edwin Somerford, his family, consisting of wife, daughter, and son, both of age (the son being employed in the County Court office), dwell in the premises." Therefore, not only the man Somerford, but his wife and grown-up daughter and son, also dwell there. The case then proceeds to say, "Mr. Somerford is in the employ of the said appellant as a clerk at a salary of 100*l.* per annum, which includes also the services of himself and family in taking down and putting up the bank shutters, cleaning the offices, lighting the fires, and answering the door." Therefore, although he is called a "clerk," he has duties to perform which are not ordinarily those of a clerk, using the word "clerk" in the old sense of the term, because, though he has to protect the bank, his other occupations are not, I should have thought, quite clerical occupations, namely, taking down and putting up the shutters, cleaning offices, lighting fires, and answering doors, which it appears he and his family have to do. We have here, therefore, the case of a man who is called a "clerk," but who with his family resides on the premises and occupies five rooms, and who has other duties besides protecting the bank at night, and for which general duties, performed by himself and family, he is paid a salary. It appears to me that this case comes precisely within the case of Yewens v. Noakes (ubi sup.), and wholly and entirely within the judgment of Bramwell, L.J. in that case, which was concurred in by the other Lords Justices. We are, I think, bound by that judgment, and accordingly our judgment in this case must be for the Crown.

LOPES, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion, the case, according to my view of it, coming precisely within the judgments delivered in the Court of Appeal in the case which has been so often referred to.

Judgment for the Crown with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Twisden and Parker, agents for Hazel and Baines, Oxford.

Solicitor for the Crown (respondents), The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Wednesday, Nov. 23, 1881.

(Before GROVE and LOPES, JJ.)

THE CITY BANK (apps.) v. LAST (resp.). (a).

Revenue—Inhabited house duty—Tenement occupied solely for business—"Caretaker"—"Servant or other person"—A "clerk" dwelling in the house for its protection—41 Vict. c. 15, s. 13, sub-sect. 2—Exemption.

The appellants, the City Bank, occupied and used as a bank and for the purpose of carrying on their business as bankers therein, the ground floor and basement of a building, which had a separate entrance from the street, and no internal communication with the rest of the building, from which it was structurally separated. The only persons dwelling on the premises at night were two persons, namely, a porter, in the service of the appellants, and a man named Smith, a clerk in their employ, who dwelt therein for the protection of the property. There were also two watchmen employed to patrol the premises at night, but who had no room there. The custody of the keys of the premises was committed by the appellants to Smith, whose duty it was to see that the premises were safely locked up and secured every night, he occupying one small room only, and such residence being merely for the protection of the bank.

Upon these facts, the Commissioners having held the appellants liable to inhabited house duty upon the above premises, it was, on appeal therefrom, Held, by Grove and Lopes, JJ. (setting aside the ruling of the Commissioners) that the man Smith, though called a "clerk," dwelt on the premises as a caretaker only and solely for the purpose of protecting the same, and therefore the case fell within the exemption contained in sub-sect. 2 of sect. 13 of 41 & 42 Vict. c. 15, and the appellants were not liable to the duty.

Yewens v. Noakes, in the Court of Appeal (ubi infra), discussed and distinguished.

THIS was a case stated by the Commissioners for

(a) Reported by HENRY LEIGH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

THE CITY BANK (apps.) v. LAST (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

General Purposes, &c., for the city of London, for the opinion of the Exchequer Division of the High Court of Justice, and the facts as stated in the case were as follows :

1. The bank by its agent appealed against an assessment to the inhabited house duties for the year ending 5th April 1879, of 2895*l.* at 9*d.* in the pound, upon and being the full value of the whole of the premises Nos. 5 and 20, Threadneedle-street, in the city of London, and claimed exemption in respect of the said premises under sect. 13 of the 41 Vict. c. 15.

2. The premises constituting Nos. 5 and 20, Threadneedle-street, consist of a basement, ground, and upper floors, with two separate main entrances from the street.

3. The ground floor and basement of the building, with a separate entrance, are in the occupation of the appellants, and are used by them as a bank for the purpose of carrying on their business as bankers, and have no internal communication whatever with the rest of the building, being structurally separated therefrom; no persons dwelling therein at night times excepting Thomas Gladding, a porter, and William Stewart Smith, a clerk (both in the employ of the appellants), who dwell therein for the protection of the property; and John Palmer and Edward Hatherway, who are employed as night watchers. The custody of the keys of the premises is committed by the appellants to Smith, and it is his duty to see that the premises are safely locked up and secured every night; he occupies one small room only, and such residence upon the premises is merely for the protection thereof.

4. The remaining rooms, numbered respectively 1 to 26, form a distinct building, with a separate staircase and main entrance from the street, and are let to and occupied by traders and others for the purpose of profit, no person dwelling therein except a housekeeper, who occupies her rooms for the protection of the premises.

5. The respondent Last, on behalf of the Crown, contended, as regards that portion of the property in the occupation of the appellants, that the room occupied by Smith was used by him as a residence, and not solely for the protection of the premises, and that his employment as a clerk to the appellants, the City Bank, gave him a quality not within the meaning of the expression "servant or other person" contained in sect. 13 of the Act; and further, that the above-named porter and night watchmen were the persons dwelling therein for the protection of the premises, but that the remaining portion of the property not in the occupation of the appellants, being solely occupied for trade purposes, excepting an ordinary "caretaker," came within the exemption referred to.

6. The commissioners were of opinion that the premises, as divided, were so structurally severed as to form two distinct buildings; that the building or tenement in the occupation of the City Bank was liable to the inhabited house duty; that the other building came within the statute 41 Vict. c. 15, s. 13, sub-sect. 2, and they reduced the assessment to the sum of 1700*l.*, being the annual value of the tenement occupied by the appellants; whereupon this case was stated and signed by the commissioners for the opinion of the High Court of Justice.

MAG. CAS.—VOL. XIII.

H. Matthews, Q.C. (with him was H. D. Greene), for the appellant bank, argued that on the facts as stated the commissioners were bound and ought to have exempted these premises. The watchmen merely patrolled at night, but had no room there. The Crown contends that there is something in the position of a "clerk" that takes a person who is so called out of the category of "a servant or other person." More than one person in the present case had the care of these premises; and the number necessary for purposes of protection must depend upon the kind of premises, the nature of the business carried on, and the value of the stock and property kept there. In a bank, full of valuable securities and money, precautions against fire as well as against thieves are required, and a messenger who could leave the spot to raise an alarm is a necessity. The question is whether the quality as "clerk" destroys the exemption. If a bank clerk is not a servant of the bank employing him, who is a servant? The case is concluded by the recent authority of Rolfe v. Hyde (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 775; 6 Q. B. Div. 673; 50 L. J. 481, Q. B.), where it was held that the fact of a man occupying some other position in the employ of a bank (in that case he was a cashier, with 200*l.* a year salary) did not take him out of the exemption, if it were found as a fact that, although a "clerk," his occupation was of a kind consistent with residence for protection only. The Crown no doubt will rely on the case of Yewens v. Noakes, in the Court of Appeal (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 128; 6 Q. B. Div. 530; 50 L. J. 132, Q. B.), but that was a decision on a different statute, viz., the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 14, s. 11, under which the occupation is a narrower one than that under the statute regulating the present case (41 Vict. c. 15), which comprises a wider class of building. That case of Yewens v. Noakes is commented on and explained in Rolfe v. Hyde. It has indeed been questioned in The Chartered Mercantile Bank of India v. Wilson (38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 254; 47 L. J. 153, Ex.; s. c. nom. Bank of India v. Wilson, 3 Ex. Div. 108), and other cases, whether a banking company were within the statute 31 & 32 Vict. at all. The true test I submit is, has the man a larger residence than a "caretaker" requires, and not whether during the day he is a clerk or a policeman. It is not doubted that a policeman may be a "caretaker," yet he is not a "servant," but "another person;" but why is he more ejusdem generis with a "servant" than a "clerk" is?

The Attorney-General, Sir H. James, Q.C. (with him were the Solicitor-General, Sir F. Herschell, Q.C., and A. L. Smith) for the Crown (respondents), contra.—The case of Yewens v. Noakes was determined by the Court of Appeal on the very ground on which the Crown now asks this court to determine the present case. It is true, no doubt, that Bramwell, L.J. rests his judgment there principally on the fact of the man's wife and children having occupation of the premises as well as himself; but Thesiger and Baggallay, L.J.J. decided the case on the very ground contended for by the Crown here, viz., that the term "servant" is used and intended by the Legislature as meaning an ordinary menial or domestic servant, and that "other person" means some one of the same kind and description and standing on the same footing. Putting aside, therefore, the incident of the wife and children, there was still, in the opinion of the Lords Justices, a necessity to hold that a "clerk" did not come within the words "servant or other person." He was not ejusdem generis. The commissioners here, in their discretion, and in order to determine the question of fact, have found that the man Smith was not a servant, &c., or they could not have held the premises to be liable to the duty. In Rolfe v. Hyde, relied on by the appellants, the commissioners found the "caretaker" came within these words, and the court would not disturb their finding on a question of fact; and that is what the Crown now asks this court not to do. If in that case the court declined to interfere with the commissioners' decision, who had not followed the opinions expressed by Thesiger and Baggallay, L.JJ. in Yewens v. Noakes, why should this court now interfere when the commissioners have followed those opinions? Although Bramwell, L.J. based his judgment there on a different ground, yet, having heard the judgments of his two learned brothers, he expressed no dissent therefrom. That case is conclusive of the present point, that this man does not come within the exemption.

K

H. Matthews, Q.C. in reply.

Grove, J.—In this case the claim of exemption is under sub-sect. 2 of sect. 13 of the 41 Vict. c. 15. After stating what the premises consist of, the case goes on: "The ground floor and basement of the building, with a separate entrance, are in the occupation of the appellants, and are used by them as a bank for the purpose of carrying on their business as bankers, and have no internal communication whatever with the rest of the building, being structurally separated therefrom, no person dwelling therein at night time excepting Thomas Gladding, a porter, and William Stewart Smith, a clerk, both in the employ of the appellants, who dwell therein for the protection of the property, and John Palmer and Edward Hatherway, who are employed as night watchmen. The custody of the keys of the premises is committed by the appellants to Smith, and it is his duty to see that the premises are safely locked up and secured every night. He occupies one small room only, and such residence upon the premises is merely for the protection thereof." The case calls Smith a "clerk," but he occupies only one small room, and his residence upon the premises is merely for the protection of them. Now the question arises, is he who is called a "clerk" (and we will assume that he is a "clerk" for some purposes), and who occupies one small room merely for the protection of the bank, within the exemption in sub-sect. 2 of sect. 13, or is he not? Practically it comes to the question whether we are or not bound by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Yewens v. Noakes (ubi sup.), in which I should of course acquiesce if I considered that it applied to the present case in the sense that we should be bound by it in giving our present judgment; but I do not consider that it does so apply, and for the following reasons: First of all, to note the distinction between the facts in the two cases, in Yewens v. Noakes, the person in whose favour the exemption was sought was a clerk in a good position with a salary of 150*l.* a year, in addition to which his wife and family, consisting of four or five children, and a servant, occupied not one small room only, as is the case here, but several rooms in the house, and upon that the question arose before the court, whether he was within the exemption as being a person dwelling in such house or tenement "for the protection thereof." Now it is, I think, to be derived from the statement in the present case, that the clerk Smith was resident on the premises merely "for the protection thereof," that is, solely and exclusively for the purpose of protecting the bank. It is true there were a porter and two night watchmen; but the argument of the learned Attorney-General, on the part of the Crown, did not seem to rest upon that, and I did not understand it to be denied that those other persons would come within the words "servant or other person," which are the words upon which the case almost wholly depends. The whole strength of the learned Attorney-General's argument rests upon the fact that this man Smith was a "clerk," and that the man as to whom the claim to exemption in Yewens v. Noakes arose was also a "clerk." But then there is this distinction in fact—and I will see presently whether the judgment in that case applies to that—that here we know nothing of the character and position of the man Smith further than that he is called a "clerk," and that he occupies one small room only for the protection of the bank. Therefore he is a person to whom the word "clerk" is applied, but whose residence is merely for the protection of the premises. Now there are clerks of various grades and various descriptions. In the case of Wooten v. Rolfe (ante, p. 63) in which we have just given judgment, the man Somerford was called a "clerk," though he certainly did not appear to perform any of the ordinary duties which we usually find connected with the word "clerk." Here there is no finding that Smith performed any duties other than those of protection. From what appears in the case I should rather take it that he performed none, and that he resided there merely for protection, though he may have had some other duties unconnected with his residence. The question therefore arises, does he inhabit the house in any other sense than for the purpose of protection? It does not appear to me that he does. In Yewens v. Noakes the "clerk," it appears, did inhabit the house ultra a mere inhabiting for the purpose of protection, and, as I read the judgment of Bramwell, L.J., that learned judge dwells very much upon that matter, for he says: "It may be said, are married men not to be caretakers? I do not say that they are not to be, but what I say is, that the houses which they take care of must not be the dwellings of themselves and their families, and that if they are made the dwellings of themselves and their families the case is not within the exemption which supposes an exemption in the case of a caretaker only." Further on the Lord Justice says: "Here are a man and his wife and children, having a servant, residing within this building, which, as far as they are concerned, is as much an occupied dwelling to the extent to which they occupy it as a part of a house can be; and it is impossible to say that this person is not residing, or having the benefit of a residence, with his family in the house. I think therefore that, whether we look at these general principles to which I have adverted, or to the circumstances of this particular case, it is not within the statute." Both Thesiger and Baggallay,

Q.B. Div.]

THE CITY BANK (apps.) v. LAST (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

L.J.J. agree with that judgment, but they add other grounds for their agreement with it. I do not know that there is anything more difficult in some cases than for a court which is bound by the decision of another court, whether a Court of Appeal or of co-ordinate jurisdiction, to be quite certain as to how far the opinions expressed in the judgment of such other court are to be taken as a necessary part of the judgment of such court. The general rule I believe to be that the court, to whose attention a judgment of a Court of Appeal or of co-ordinate jurisdiction is called, is bound really by that judgment only so far as it applies to the facts of the case then before such court; and though the utmost deference is of course to be paid to any opinion expressed by any Court of Appeal, or even by a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, still the court is not bound by anything which may be said by such other court beyond what is plainly necessary to constitute the judgment of the court, having regard to the facts before it. Now in Yewens v. Noakes (ubi sup.) Thesiger, L.J. gives another reason for coming to the conclusion that the appeal should be allowed. He says, "What is the meaning of the words 'other person'? Now definitions are proverbially dangerous, and I do not propose to define exactly what the words 'other person' may mean, but this, I think, is obvious, that by the words 'other person' is intended some person of the same kind and description as a servant, standing somewhat on the same footing, and subject to the same conditions." I may remark here that the term "servant" is one open to considerable latitude of meaning, because a different servant would be required for the protection of a bank, or (putting a bank out of the question) of a very large and important commercial business concern, from that which would be required in the case of an ordinary shop. A person required as a "servant or other person" to protect a large commercial establishment, might vary very much from a servant required to protect a small insignificant shop consisting of a room and a little cell behind it, where, probably, the only servant kept, as a maid of all work, might be quite sufficient for the protection of apples and oranges, and things of that sort. Then Thesiger, L.J. having given that definition, says: "I think a very good illustration was given by the Solicitor-General where he referred to the not uncommon case of a policeman being put into an unoccupied house or trade premises for the purpose of watching and guarding them"—I apprehend that the Lord Justice meant that he would come within the definition of "other person"—"but," his Lordship goes on to say, "if that be the proper meaning, as I think it is, of the words 'servant or other person,' then it is obvious that a clerk with a salary of 150*l.* a year does not come within such words. If he did, where is the construction to stop? The manager of a bank, a foreman with high wages, persons in the position almost of gentlemen, might be put in to take care of premises." The Lord Justice gives judgment in favour of the Crown, first of all, on the ground that, even if the man had not been a clerk, he was not within the exemption—not putting his judgment upon the actual word "clerk"—because he was on the premises with his wife and family and a servant; and secondly, upon the ground that, being a clerk with a salary of 150*l.* a year, he was not in the position of a "servant or other person" contemplated by the Act. Thus Thesiger, L.J. in effect, says: "First, I agree with Bramwell, L.J. that this man, inhabiting, with his wife and several children, and a servant, several rooms in the house, does not come within the position of a mere caretaker of property inhabited for no other purpose, and only inhabited to an extent sufficient to give him a sleeping place or a place in the house enabling him to act as a caretaker; and, secondly, I do not think this person was in the position of a servant, being a clerk with a salary of 150*l.* a year." The present case clearly does not come within the judgment of Bramwell, L.J., and therefore it does not come within the first ground of Thesiger, L.J.'s judgment, and I do not think it comes within the second ground of the same last-mentioned judgment either, because all that I find in the case here is, that the man is merely called a "clerk," and if we were to give judgment for the respondent in the present case, we should go the length of saying that a person called a "clerk" could not be a "servant or other person" within the meaning of sub-sect. 2 of sect. 12 of the Act of Parliament. I feel that we should be straining the law if we were to say that. Even taking that part of the judgment of Thesiger, L.J. in which he comes to the decision that the appeal should be allowed, on the ground that the man in that case was a clerk with a salary of 150*l.* a year, and was therefore not a "servant or other person" contemplated by the statute, the facts here are not ad idem with those in that case. I should give the utmost deference to the whole of the judgment pronounced by a judge of the Court of Appeal, but, where there is amply sufficient in the case to satisfy, if I may use the expression, the requisites of the judgment without certain extra reasons given in the judgment, I do not think that, sitting here, we are bound by all those extra reasons. I endeavour to avoid (without pretending to say that there may not be cases where I have not avoided) the strengthening my judgment by reasons which are not essential for the decision of the particular case. Speaking for myself, I have thought it desirable, as much as possible, not to give reasons which may involve anything not necessarily involved in the facts of the case upon which I am giving my judgment. Therefore I do not think I am bound by that portion of the judgment not necessarily applying to the case before the court, because I see enough in the case to support the judgment of the Lords Justices upon the other portions of the judgment. But, even if I did consider myself bound by that portion of the judgment to which I have referred, I do not think that this case comes within it. There is only one other point to which I need refer. It is said, on the part of the respondent, that here the commissioners must have assumed by their judgment that Smith was not "a servant or other person" within the meaning of the statute, and that they having so found, we are bound by that finding; and the case of Rolfe v. Hyde (ubi sup.) (which was decided by the Court of Appeal subsequently to their judgment in Yewens v. Noakes) was referred to, in which Lindley, L.J. comments upon the judgment in Yewens v. Noakes, and says that a portion of that judgment was "extra-judicial," by which I understand him to mean that it was unnecessary to the decision of the case before the court. It is also said, on the part of the respondent here, that Rolfe v. Hyde is distinguishable from the present case on the ground that there the commissioners found, as the court found, that the "cashier" was a "servant or other person" who dwelt on the premises only for the purpose of protection. Here the commissioners do not expressly find that this man Smith was "a servant or other person" within the meaning of the statute. Possibly they thought it was an arguable case, and, in order to enable the case to be appealed, they must find one way or the other. It may be assumed that they thought he was so, but they thought also that it was a fair case for appeal, and they have given those other findings, one of which I have very much relied on, viz., that this man occupied one small room only, and merely for the protection of the bank. Having given these facts the commissioners leave it to the court. In Yewens v. Noakes Thesiger, L.J. says (and I fully agree with what he says upon that subject): "If in this case the commissioners had distinctly found as a fact that the caretaker in this particular instance was simply the caretaker, and even a 'servant or other person' within the Act, although we may think the decision was erroneous, I do not think that we should be justified in interfering with it; but, in this case, under the terms of the special case, the object of the commissioners appears to be to submit to the court the very question; and that being so, we are justified, notwithstanding their belief that this was the case of a caretaker, in deciding in the way in which we have done." In the present case, as in that case, the commissioners have not found distinctly, or in terms, that this man was "a servant or other person," but they have given a decision upon the case referring it to us for our judgment. Therefore we are not bound by the finding of the commissioners. The facts here are very different from those in Yewens v. Noakes, and the case does not come at all within what I may call the main part of the judgment in that case, that is to say, the judgment of Bramwell, L.J.; nor do I think it comes within the other part of the judgment of Thesiger and Baggally, L.J.J. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appellants here are entitled to our judgment, which must therefore be given for them and against the Crown.

LOPES, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question raised in the case is this: Is the man Smith "a servant or other person" dwelling in the building in question for the protection thereof? Now there is nothing in the finding of the commissioners as to whether he is "a servant or other person" or not; but they find this, that he occupies one small room only, and that such residence upon the premises is merely for the protection thereof, and having found that, they leave it to the court to say whether that finding sufficiently justifies them in arriving at the conclusion, which beyond doubt they must have arrived at to have decided as they did, that that does not bring him within the exemption mentioned in the Act. The commissioners seem to have thought that the employment of Smith as a "clerk" gave him a quality not within the meaning of the words "servant or other person;" in point of fact they state that that was the ground of their decision. It appears to me that, if we were to decide in favour of the Crown in this case, we should have to go the length of holding that no person who is a "clerk," whatever his salary or his position might be, could be "a servant or other person" within the meaning of the statutory exemption referred to, or, in other words, could be a "caretaker." I cannot think that the mere quality of "clerk" can destroy the exemption. I think what we are bound to look at in every case is the character of the evidence; and looking at the character of the evidence in this case, and the finding of the commissioners with regard to it, I think that this man Smith is a "servant," or at any rate "another person," within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. I do not mean to say that I have not felt some difficulty during the argument of the case, but that difficulty has entirely arisen from the judgment of the majority of the Court of Appeal in the case of Yewens v. Noakes (ubi sup.), I mean the language of Thesiger and Baggally, L.J.J. I did at first think that the words used by those learned judges amounted to a judicial interpretation of the words "servant or other person;" but, on careful consideration, I adopt the view expressed by my learned brother Grove, that in reading those judgments, we are bound to look to the facts which were being dealt with in that particular case. I mean, that the words of the learned Lords Justices must be interpreted by the light of the matter and the facts then before them. I think those learned judges, when they used the expressions which they did, must have had before their minds the facts concerning the "clerk" in the particular case with which they were dealing, and I cannot think that they meant to say that no "clerk" could be within the exemption, whatever his position might be. On these grounds I think that our judgment ought to be in favour of the appellants.

Judgment for the appellants with costs.

Solicitors for the Bank (apps.), Ingle, Cooper, and Holmes.

Solicitor for the Crown (resp.), The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Friday, June 3, 1882.

(Before FIELD and CAYE, JJ.)

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE MADELEY UNION (apps.) v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE BRIDGNORTH UNION (resps.). (a)

Poor law—Derivative settlement—Birth settlement—Wife, and children under sixteen—Father having acquired no settlement—The Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 35.

E. H. and her three children were the wife and children of W. H., who was the son of J. H., and had become chargeable to the respondents' union. J. H. was born in the parish of Madeley in the appellants' union, but had acquired no settlement in his own right.

W. H. was not born in the parish of Madeley, and had also acquired no settlement in his own right.

Held, that the Court of Quarter Sessions were right in quashing an order of two justices for the removal of the paupers E. H. and her three children from the respondents' union to the appellants' union.

That, although the Divided Parishes and Poor Law

(a) Reported by H. D. BONSKY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Amendment Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61) (a) abolished derivative settlements, it excepted the wife and left the law as it was before upon that head, and therefore she takes the settlement of her husband whether acquired or derivative.

That a legitimate child will in no case take any derivative settlement acquired by the widowed mother by a second marriage, or any derivative settlement acquired by either parent by parentage; and an illegitimate child will in no case take any derivative settlement acquired by the mother by parentage or marriage; and as the parents in this case had none but derivative settlements the children would not take the settlement of either father or mother, but their birth settlement.

SPECIAL case stated by the Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the Borough of Bridgnorth.

On the 9th Jan. 1882 two justices for the borough of Bridgnorth made an order for the removal of Ellen Hughes and her three children, aged respectively five, three, and one year, from the Bridgnorth Poor Law Union to the Madeley Poor Law Union.

Upon appeal by the Madeley Union to the Court of Quarter Sessions for the borough of Bridgnorth the order of the justices was quashed, subject to a special case to be stated for the opinion of the High Court of Justice.

The material part of the case is as follows:—

The grounds of removal alleged that the settlement of the paupers, and of William Hughes, the husband of the said Ellen Hughes, was the birth settlement of John Hughes, the father of William Hughes. No other settlement of John Hughes or of William Hughes was set up affirmatively by the appellants in their grounds of appeal, nor did they therein allege that the said John Hughes had derived a settlement from his father or had acquired any other settlement than such birth settlement as aforesaid before his son the said William Hughes had attained the age of sixteen; but they allege that the said William Hughes was not born nor ever legally settled in the parish of Madeley, and in their fourth ground of appeal they maintained "that the alleged settlement (if any) of the said William Hughes would be a derivative settlement, and as such is abolished by Act of Parliament."

The Court held that upon the reasonable construction of the grounds of appeal the respondents were not bound to prove more than the birth of the said John Hughes in the parish of Madeley, and that upon such proof the question of law intended to be raised by the appellants would properly arise.

(a) 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 35: No person shall be deemed to have derived a settlement from any other person, whether by parentage, estate, or otherwise, except in the case of a wife from her husband, and in the case of a child under the age of sixteen, which child shall take the settlement of its father or of its widowed mother as the case may be, up to that age, and shall retain the settlement so taken until it shall require another.

An illegitimate child shall retain the settlement of its mother until such child acquires another settlement. If any child in this section mentioned shall not have acquired a settlement for itself, or being a female shall not have derived a settlement from her husband, and it cannot be shown what settlement such child or female derived from the parent without inquiring into the derivative settlement of such parent, such child or female shall be deemed to be settled in the parish in which he or she was born.

It was proved or admitted that John Hughes was born in the parish of Madeley, in the appellants' union, in or about the year 1822, and acquired no settlement in his own right; that William Hughes was the lawful son of the said John Hughes, and also had acquired no settlement in his own right; and that the paupers Ellen Hughes and her three children were the lawful wife and children of the said William Hughes, and had become chargeable to the respondents' union.

The appellants called no evidence at the close of the respondents' case, but submitted as matter of law that it was not sufficient for the respondents to prove the place of birth of John Hughes; but that, unless they could show affirmatively a legal settlement of the said John Hughes at Madeley—not derived from the fact of his birth there—his son William Hughes must be held to be settled in the place in which the said William Hughes was born.

The Court quashed the order on the ground that it was in law insufficient to make out a primâ facie birth settlement for John Hughes; and that as the respondents had not established a settlement in the parish of Madeley for John Hughes, other than a primâ facie birth settlement, William Hughes must be held to be settled in the parish of his birth by virtue of the Divided Parishes Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61). If the court shall be of opinion that the facts admitted and proved established a settlement for the said William Hughes in the parish of Madeley, then the said order of removal shall stand confirmed, and the order of sessions quashing the same shall be quashed.

Bosanquet and Kenyon for the appellants.

Jelf, Q.C. and Archibald (Spearman with them) for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

Aug. 3.—FIELD, J.—This was a special case stated by the Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the Borough of Bridgnorth Union upon an appeal by the Union of Madeley, against an order by which two justices had, upon the 9th Jan. 1882, adjudged the last place of settlement of Ellen the wife of William Hughes and three children, aged five, three, and one year, to be in the parish of Madeley. The Madeley Union or parish appealed against that order and the court of quarter sessions quashed it subject to a case. Now, the question turns upon the construction of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61. The facts to which the statute has to be applied are these: The paupers, the wife and three children, were the wife and children of William Hughes. The birthplace of William Hughes was not proved, and was taken not to be in Madeley Union, but his father John was born in Madeley, and the justices below held that the settlement of John the grandfather ought to be considered the settlement of the father, and upon that ground they made the order. Now, the matter has been under discussion in various cases, and I have before, in one or two cases, expressed my views of the construction of the statute. Upon those occasions I had not taken time to consider, but I gave the construction which appeared to my mind, in the course of the arguments, to be the true one. Since these cases others have been argued, and, in the very able argument that has been addressed to us in this case by Mr. Bosanquet, these cases have been fully brought before us. I thought it right therefore, ab initio, to go back through the whole thing and see whether or not the view I before expressed was correct and sound, or whether an examination of the statute and authorities tended to remove any doubt there might be in my mind, and would enable me to acquiesce in Mr. Bosanquet's view. Now, for that purpose I have gone further back than the statute in order to see as far as I can what has been the policy of the Legislature. There is, first of all, no doubt to be entertained that by law every person unable from poverty to maintain himself is entitled to be maintained at the expense of the inhabitants of some parish or place which has the duty thrown upon it of maintaining its own poor, and that place so charged with the liability—and indeed every other place in which a person is found who is likely to become chargeable to the funds for the relief of the poor in it—has a right given to it of causing the removal of the person likely to become chargeable to what is popularly known as the place of settlement of the pauper. That right of removal of poor persons was in existence before the pauper settlement laws came into existence at all. It was in existence as far back as the reign of Richard II. and also Henry VII., in which years various Acts of Parliament were passed which insisted or asserted that poor persons and persons of certain descriptions should resort to certain places; and it is remarkable, in regarding the modern legislation upon the subject, how much that modern legislation agrees with the first legislation, because the whole spirit of the Acts of Henry VII. and Richard II. was that persons of certain descriptions were to resort to certain places where, in the language of the Act, they had become conversant, or had dwelt, or had abided. Therefore the policy in those days, if you found a vagrant or a person not having means of support, was to hold that the proper place for that person to resort to was a place where he was conversant and where he would find friends or persons likely to support him, or associate with him. That continued the state of the law until the time of Charles II. when the Act was passed which defines the law of settlement until recent changes have been effected by this Act, and in one instance by the Poor Law Act of 4 & 5 Will. 4. Now the of state things, therefore, which ultimately became settled, was that which came into existence by the statute of 13 & 14 Car. 2, which fixed the right of removal of persons likely to become chargeable, and consequently their place of settlement was deemed to be in the place where the paupers were last legally settled. Every word is important. "Last legally settled"—he might have been settled in a dozen places, but the place where he was last legally settled was asserted to be the one to which he was to be removed, and therefore it became technically known as "the place of settlement." Now the persons we have to deal with here who are to be removed, consist of a married woman and three children, all the children being under the age of sixteen, and of course unemancipated. If a question had arisen about the removal of these four persons before the statute which we have to construe, viz., 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 35, the state of things would have been this: The wife might have been removed to the place of her husband's settlement, because she derived that settlement from her husband. That would have been the state of things before 39 & 40 Vict., and is the state of things still, because, although that Act intended to abolish and did abolish derivative settlement in general, it excepted the wife from it, and therefore left the law as it was before upon that head. Therefore whatever construction you may put upon the Act the wife must be removed to the place of her husband's settlement. It seems to me that the policy of the Legislature was very clear, namely, that it would be very undesirable to separate husband and wife; and if you abolished her derivative settlement by marriage she would have had to go to her place of birth, because women, as a rule, very rarely have acquired any settlement of their own, and the probability is that a very large percentage of married women have no other than the derivative settlement of their husbands or birth settlement. In a great majority of cases if you were to send the wife to her birth settlement it would be a very different place from the husband's settlement, and the effect would be at once to separate them. It is most important to observe that the tendency of all modern legislation has been to increase the facility of gaining a settlement. In this very Act that we have to construe the Legislature has shown its intention of reducing irremovability as much as possible, and fixing the settlement as much as possible at the last place where the pauper had been conversant, by converting the status of irremovability of three years into a settlement, and since then, if I remember rightly, that term has been reduced to one year. So the effect is that any man having lived for a year in a place (that of course is not a very long time) has acquired a settlement in his own right, and therefore the wife presumably would go to the place where she had been recently dwelling, and therefore it would be a place possibly much better for her to be removed to than to the place of her birth, which she may have left for many years, and where, possibly, all her friends may be dead and gone. That is the matter as it stands with regard to the wife. By the old law, as well as by the new law, she has the same settlement as she had before, namely, the settlement of her husband. Then, with regard to the children, the case before the statute stood thus: They are legitimate children, and under the age of sixteen and unemancipated, and, consequently, before the statute, they would have derived their settlement from the father or mother, or would have been settled where they were born; but the foundation of all this is that birth is only a prima facie settlement, it does not become a conclusive settlement except in those cases where the derivative settlement is not known. I have said that these are legitimate children—and we have upon the present occasion, of course, nothing to do with bastard children, except by way of illustration—and in that view it is important to look at the legislation with reference to bastard children for the purpose of ascertaining the policy of the Legislature on the enactment now before us. Originally bastard children were in a different position to legitimate children; they were the children of nobody, and could derive nothing from anybody; they could not derive a settlement, and consequently of

Q.B. Div.]

GUARDIANS OF MADELEY UNION v. GUARDIANS OF BRIDGNORTH UNION.

[Q.B. Div.]

necessity were always removed to the place of their birth, with one exception, and which exception shows the anxiety on the part of the Legislature not to separate people who cannot take care of themselves. There was an exception in the case of nurlings who up to a certain tender age could not be separated from the mother. The law as to bastards was altered by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 71, which made a bastard child follow the settlement of the mother until the age of sixteen, or until it had acquired a settlement in its own right. I have adverted to that for the sake of pointing out by way of illustration the policy of the Legislature in regard to the removal to one and the same place of the mother and the child. The legitimate children were first of all benefited by the Act we have to deal with. Before the passing of that Act these three children now in question would have had the last settlement of their father, and it may be that that would have the effect of separating them from their mother; but the statute in question not only excepts the mother from the abolition of derivative settlement, but also excepts the children. Sect. 35 says: "No person shall be deemed to have derived a settlement from any other person, whether by parentage, estate, or otherwise" (I have endeavoured to find out how it is that the word estate has crept in there, and I think it must be by accident that the word has crept in) "except in the case of a wife from her husband and in the case of a child under the age of sixteen." Therefore, a child under sixteen is excepted and may still derive a settlement by parentage. What is the settlement which it is to derive from parentage? It is to be the settlement of its father or its widowed mother, as the case may be, up to the age of sixteen. Then the section goes on: "Which child may take the settlement of its father or its widowed mother, as the case may be, up to that age, and shall retain the settlement so taken until it shall acquire another." Therefore, again, the Legislature fixes the child's settlement at that of the parent up to a particular age, and it prevents what was previously the state of things, namely, the applicability of the removal of the child to any subsequent settlement acquired by the father. It therefore fixes the child's settlement at that place where it was most likely the child would be conversant, that is to say, the most recent place of the father's settlement; and, inasmuch as that is reduced now to one year, it would most probably be a settlement of recent date. So far as possible it seems that the Legislature says: "Let the child go to its parent and with its parent," but then there was this further to be provided for: if the section had stopped there, the child being excepted from the abolition of derivative settlement, and still deriving its settlement by this very Act with its parent, it might turn out that the parent's settlement was a derivative settlement at a period prior to the abolition of derivative settlement, and might still therefore be the settlement of the child. That would be doing the very thing which the Legislature seemed to desire not to do, and that is to go back to a derivative settlement acquired, perhaps, from a grandfather no one knows when. Therefore, if the section stopped there, the effect would have been still that you might have to send the child a long way from where the child was conversant and abided, and that it appears to me the Legislature intended not to do, and it proceeded to legislate in regard to it, and provided: "If any child in this section mentioned shall not have acquired a settlement for itself, or, being a female, shall not have derived a settlement from her husband" (let me pause here to say I am unable at present to concur in the construction which has been put upon the words "any child" there, for reasons that my brother Cave will state), "and it cannot be shown what settlement such child or female derived from the parent without inquiring into the derivative settlement of such parent, such child or female shall be deemed to be settled in the parish in which he or she was born." Therefore, it being the intention to abolish derivative settlement, it would seem that the Legislature thought, in that particular event, it would be better for a child to be sent to its place of birth rather than any other place. Whether that is a wise policy, whether it was exactly right, and whether it has secured the very object the Legislature intended, I am not prepared to say, but, I may say generally it seems to me to have been wise and prudent, though no doubt it is open to the observation made by Mr. Bosanquet to the effect that some cases may arise where it will work the very mischief which the general policy of the Act intended to prevent. I cannot help thinking that in the great majority of cases the policy is not only sound and good, but, in my opinion, according to the plain meaning of the Legislature. I am glad to find that my brother Cave concurs in the views I have expressed, but, although we have arrived at the same conclusion, our grounds are quite independent of each other. I entertain the same view as I have before expressed, and therefore I now hold that in my opinion the order of the quarter sessions is quite right, and must be affirmed.

CAVE, J.—The question in this case is, what construction is to be placed on the 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 35—a question not free from difficulty owing partly to the language of the section and partly to the interpretation which appears to have been placed upon it by judicial decisions. The section first enacts that "No person shall be deemed to have derived a settlement from any other person, whether by parentage, estate, or otherwise." Now, stopping there for a moment, it may be observed that there are only two species of derivative settlements, viz., settlement by marriage and settlement by parentage. By the former, if a woman married a man who had a known settlement, she acquired the husband's settlement, and she took every subsequent settlement which he might obtain until his death. If the husband had no settlement, then the prior settlement of the wife continued. By the latter, legitimate children took the settlement of their father, and they took successively any settlement which the father might from time to time acquire before their emancipation. If the father had not a settlement acquired by his own act, they took the settlement he derived from his parents till it could be traced no further, and recourse was then had to the maiden settlement of the mother. If neither father nor mother had a known settlement acquired or derivative, the children were settled in the place of their birth until they acquired another settlement by their own act. The case of an illegitimate child differed. Previous to the Poor Law Amendment Act 1834 the settlement arising from the place of birth of a bastard was in general only superseded by a settlement subsequently acquired by the bastard in his own behalf; but by sect. 71 of that Act it was enacted that "every child born a bastard after the passing of this Act shall have and follow the settlement of the mother of such child until such child shall attain the age of sixteen or shall acquire a settlement in its own right." In Reg v. St. Mary Newington (4 Q. B. Rep. 581) it was held that by virtue of this section illegitimate children (differing in this respect from legitimate children) followed the mother's settlement acquired by marriage after their birth and while they were under sixteen years of age; and in Bodenham v. St. Andrews (1 Ell. & Bl. 465) it was held that illegitimate children followed the mother's settlement only until they were sixteen, and that a bastard who had attained that age without having acquired any settlement of its own was settled in the place of its birth, though the mother was settled elsewhere. Now, applying so much of the 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 35, as has been already cited to the previous law, a wife could no longer have taken the settlement of her husband, nor a legitimate child that of its parents or a bastard that of its mother. The section, however, proceeds to make the following exceptions from the generality of this first part: "Except in the case of wife from her husband and in the case of a child under the age of sixteen, which child shall take the settlement of its father or of its widowed mother, as the case may be, up to that age, and shall retain the settlement so taken until it shall acquire another." Now, the exception in the case of a wife has been held entirely to exclude derivative settlement by marriage out of the operation of the first part of the section, so that a wife will take the settlement the husband has at the time of the marriage, whether acquired or derivative, and every subsequent settlement which he may obtain until his death: (Great Yarmouth v. City of London, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 712; 3 Q. B. Div. 232.) The subsequent exception seems to exclude derivative settlement by parentage out of the operation of the first part of the section to this extent, that a child will take the settlement of its father so long as he lives, and the subsequently-acquired settlement of its widowed mother only up to the age of sixteen, and not up to emancipation as before. The latter part of this exception seems intended to preclude the interpretation which was put on sect. 71 of the Poor Law Amendment Act 1834 in Bodenham v. St. Andrews (ubi sup.) since it goes on to provide that the child shall retain the settlement so taken (that is, the settlement of its father or widowed mother which it actually has at the age of sixteen) until it shall acquire another. The next part of the section, "an illegitimate child shall retain the settlement of its mother until such child acquires another settlement," seems obviously intended to abrogate the rule laid down as to illegitimate children in Bodenham v. St. Andrews. Had the section stopped here a doubt might have arisen whether the settlement of its father or of its widowed mother which the legitimate child was to take and retain, or the settlement of its mother which the bastard was to retain, included not only their birth settlements or settlements acquired in their own right, but also, in the case of the father, a settlement derived by parentage, or, in the case of the mother, a settlement derived by parentage or marriage. The section accordingly goes on to provide as follows: "If any child in this section mentioned shall not have acquired a settlement for itself, or, being a female, shall not have derived a settlement from her husband, and it cannot be shown what settlement such child or female derived from the parent without inquiring into the derivative settlement of such parent, such child or female shall be deemed to be settled in the parish in which he or she was born," or, in other words, a legitimate child will, up to the age of sixteen, take the last settlement which the widowed mother may have acquired in her own right after the death of its father, or, failing that, it will take the last settlement the father shall have acquired in his own right, or, in the absence of any such settlement, it will take the father's birth settlement, and it will retain the settlement which it had at the age of sixteen until it had acquired another in its own right, but it will in no case take any derivative settlement acquired by the widowed mother by a second marriage (Keynsham Union v. Bedminster Union, 3 Q. B. Div. 344), or any derivative settlement acquired by either parent by parentage; while an illegitimate child up to the age of sixteen will take the last settlement, which the mother may have acquired in her own right, and, in the absence of any such settlement, it will take her birth settlement, and will retain the settlement which it had at the age of sixteen until it has acquired another in its own right, but will in no case take any derivative settlement acquired by the mother by parentage or (abrogating Bodenham v. St. Andrews) by marriage. This being, as it seems to me, the natural construction to put on the section in question, I am next led to inquire whether any other construction has been put upon the section by any previous case. The first case to which we were referred is that of Westbury-on-Severn v. Burrow-in-Furness (38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 315; 3 Ex. Div. 88). In that case the pauper, who was more than sixteen at the time of the passing of the 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, had acquired no settlement of his own, but before he had attained the age of sixteen his father had acquired a settlement in his own right by estate. The appellants contended that the first two lines of the 35th section were retrospective so as to take away the derivative settlement the pauper would otherwise have gained, but that the exception in the same clause of the Act was not retrospective and consequently that the pauper had lost the old derivative settlement, and had not acquired the new modified. It is not surprising that this contention was unsuccessful, but the decision (with which I entirely agree) in no respect conflicts with the view which I have taken above of the construction of the section. Indeed, the observation at page 94 of the judgment directly supports that view. It is there said that "If, in order to prove the place of settlement of the pauper, as derived from the father, it had been necessary to prove the derivative settlement of the father, then, by the direct enactment of the 35th section, the pauper would be deemed to be settled in the parish where he was born." The next case which was cited to us was Great Yarmouth v. The City of London (37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 712; 3 Q. B. Div. 232), in which it was held that the wife of a man who had while under the age of sixteen derived a settlement from his father took this derivative settlement of her husband, and not his birth settlement. There is no doubt that in that case the husband, being within the clear language of the Act, took a derivative settlement from his father, and all that the case decided is that, under those circumstances, the wife takes the derivative settlement of her husband under the exception in the first paragraph of the section, "except in the case of a wife from her husband." For myself, I should not like to express an opinion on this point without further consideration; but, at any rate, this case is no authority for holding that, notwithstanding the third paragraph, the children of the husband would have taken the settlement which their father derived from his parent. The next case in point of time is Woodstock Union v. St. Pancras (39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 256; 4 Q. B. Div. 1), in which it was held that a female pauper whose father had never acquired a settlement of his own, did not take the derivative settlement which the father while under sixteen had acquired from his father, but was settled in the place of her birth by virtue of the third paragraph of the section. This decision again is entirely in conformity with the construction I place on the section in question, and I heartily subscribe to the judgment delivered in that case, especially to that of my brother Field. The next case is Manchester v. St. Pancras (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 218; 4 Q. B. Div. 409), in which it was held that an illegitimate child under sixteen is, by the third paragraph of the section, precluded from taking the settlement of its mother where such settlement has been derived from her marriage. In that case the pauper, who was nine years of age, was born three years after his mother, who had since died, had been divorced from her husband, and Lush, J. says that the words in the third paragraph, "Any child in this section mentioned," mean any legitimate or illegitimate child, and that there is nothing to confine the expression "any child" to any particular class of children. The next case is The Guardians of Hollingbourne v. The Guardians of West Ham (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 520; 6 Q. B. Div. 580), and as that case was much pressed upon us, and has caused me to hesitate greatly, it is necessary to examine it somewhat closely. By an order of removal, affirmed at quarter sessions, it was adjudged that the last legal settlement of Sarah Thorndycraft and her four children, who were all under the age of sixteen, was in the parish of Sutton Valence. John Thorndycraft the younger, husband of Sarah, was born in Hackney, but acquired no settlement in his own right. John Thorndycraft senior, the father of the husband, was born in Sutton Valence in 1804, but lived and was married in the parish of Hackney, and never acquired any settlement in his own right. It was admitted that Sarah Thorndycraft was legally settled in the parish of Sutton Valence, I presume on the ground that she took the derivative settlement of her husband, and not his birth settlement, and in deference to the authority of Great Yarmouth v. The City of London (ubi sup.). The question for the court was what settlement the children took, and it was held that they took the settlement of the mother, although that settlement would only be arrived at by inquiring into her derivative settlement. Looking at the judgment, the court there seems to have held that the first paragraph referred only to children who had a father or widowed mother alive, the second to illegitimate children of any age, and the third to legitimate children who had not a father or mother alive, and to illegitimate children of any age. I find myself unable to assent to this division. By the first paragraph, as I read it, children on their birth take their father's settlement, as they would have done before the Act, except that they take no settlement he may acquire after they have attained the age of sixteen years. If that is so, they take on their birth the settlement their father then has, and they continue to follow each successive settlement acquired by him in his own right (Cummer v. Milton, 2 Salk. 528) until they attain sixteen, when they no longer take any future settlement he may acquire, but retain that they had at sixteen until they acquire another in their own right. If the father dies before they are sixteen, they retain the settlement they had at his death, unless the widowed mother subsequently acquires one in her own right, in which case they take each successive settlement she may so acquire in her own right up to the time of their attaining the age of sixteen, when they retain the settlement last acquired from her until they acquire another in their own right. The assumption that they only take the father or widowed mother's settlement so long as he or she is living, is, it seems to me, inconsistent with the provision at the end of the first paragraph that the child shall take the settlement of the father, &c., up to sixteen, and shall retain the settlement so taken until it shall acquire another. To my mind the words "in the case of a child under the age of sixteen" include all legitimate children, whether the parents are alive or dead. I am also unable to assent to the proposition that the second paragraph includes legitimate children of any age. As I have shown above, under the Act of 1834 illegitimate children took the settlement of their mother only up to the age of sixteen, and on arriving at that age lost her settlement, and took their birth settlement only. The second paragraph of the section in question does not say that illegitimate children shall take any settlement acquired by their mother after they have attained the age of sixteen, but only that they shall retain the settlement of the mother which by the previous law they took only up to that age until they have acquired another settlement. This construction put an illegitimate child on the same footing with reference to a settlement derived from its mother as a legitimate child is with reference to a settlement derived from its father, or after his death from its widowed mother, except that, had the section stopped there, an illegitimate child would have taken the settlement acquired by its mother by marriage subsequently to its birth, while a legitimate child would not have done so: (Keynsham Union v. Bedminster Union (ubi sup.)). I am also unable to accede to the view that the third paragraph applies to legitimate children under sixteen not having a father or mother alive, and also to illegitimate children, whether under or over sixteen. The words are "any child in this section mentioned" which to my thinking must include both the legitimate children mentioned in the first paragraph, and the illegitimate children mentioned in the second, and cannot refer to any children not included in one or other of those paragraphs. If I am right, the effect of the third paragraph is to cut down both the first and second so as to prevent children, whether legitimate or illegitimate, taking any derivative settlement of their parents, and also, again, to put legitimate and illegitimate children on the same footing by preventing the latter from taking the settlement of the mother acquired by subsequent marriage; while, if Guardians of Hollingbourn v. Guardians of West Ham is right, a distinction is introduced between legitimate children under sixteen who have a parent alive and those who have not, and also between legitimate children under sixteen and illegitimate children of the same age in respect of the settlement they take from their respective mothers. Although, however, I am unable to agree with the decision of the court in this case, I should probably have felt myself bound by it had it not been, as it seems to me, inconsistent with the principles laid down in Manchester v. St Pancras (ubi sup.). Both cases were before the court which decided the still later case of Reg. v. Guardians of Portsea (7 Q. B. Div. 384); and, although the two cases were alleged in the argument to be inconsistent, the court there followed the case of Manchester v. St. Pancras without attempting to distinguish it from the later case. I think, therefore, that I am free in this conflict of authority to follow that which approves itself to my judgment. Applying the principles I have referred to to the present case, I am of opinion that the children in this case come within the first paragraph, and would have taken the settlement of their father William, or, failing that, the settlement of their mother, had they not also fallen within the third paragraph which precludes their taking the settlement of either, because neither father nor mother had any but a derivative settlement. As to the argument drawn from the supposed policy of the law against separating the children from their parents, I am, I confess, unable to discover what that policy is. It is true that if a father has none but a derivative settlement, on my interpretation of the section, he will be separated from his children if all become chargeable together; but that, as it seems to me, will also be the case if the widowed mother marries again. Looking, however, at the facility given for acquiring a settlement by sect. 34 of the Act of 1876 it seems probable that questions as to derivative settlement will not be very frequent in future.

[Q.B. Div.] OXENHOPE DIST. LOCAL BOARD (apps.) v. MAYOR, &c., OF BRADFORD (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

Solicitors for the appellants, C. B. and H. Cuff, agents for G. Burd, Ironbridge.

Solicitors for the respondents, Sole, Turner, and Knight, agents for Cooper and Haslewood, Bridgnorth.

Tuesday, Nov. 14, 1882.

(Before FIELD and STEPHEN, JJ.)

THE OXENHOPE DISTRICT LOCAL BOARD (apps.) v. THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF BRADFORD (resps.). (a)

Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 207, 210, 211, 216—Highway rate—Public works of paving.

By sect. 216, sub-sect. 3. of the Public Health Act

(a) Reported by H. D. BONSEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

1875 it is provided that "where no public works of paving, water supply, and sewerage are established in the district, the cost of repair of highways in the district shall be defrayed out of a highway rate to be levied throughout the whole district by the urban authority as surveyor of highways."

The appellants, a local district board, made a general district rate, and a highway rate, and demanded the same from the respondents, who had constructed two compensation reservoirs in connection with the supply of water for the town of B.

The respondents contended that the local board had no power to levy a highway rate, because in 1880 they laid down in their district a curbstone (about 300 yards long) as a coping to a cinder pathway of a carriage road.

Held, that putting down the curbstone did not constitute the establishment of public works of paving within the meaning of sect. 216, sub-sect. 3 of the Public Health Act 1875, and therefore the appellants were entitled to levy a highway rate.

SPECIAL CASE.

This is a case stated by us, the undersigned four of Her Majesty's justices of the peace, in and for the West Riding of the county of York, under the 33rd section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879, for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on questions of law which arose before us as hereinafter stated:

1. At a petty sessional court, holden at the sessions-house in Keighley, in and for the petty sessional division of Keighley, in the said riding, on the 5th day of May 1882, we heard and determined a summons, of which the following is a copy:

Between the Oxenhope District Local Board, by Joseph Heap, of Oxenhope, their clerk, plaintiffs, and the Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Bradford, defendants.—To the above-named defendants.—You are hereby summoned to appear before the court of summary jurisdiction sitting at the sessions-house, in Keighley, in the West Riding of the county of York, on Friday, the fourteenth day of April 1882, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon, to answer the plaintiffs to a claim, the particulars of which are hereunto annexed.

2. The following is a copy of the particulars annexed to the said summons:

To the Bradford Corporation. W. T. McGowen, Esq., Town Clerk.—Gentlemen.—I have to demand payment to the Oxenhope District Local Board of the sum of 203l. 8s. 2d., being as to 36l. 19s. 8d., part thereof, for a general district rate at fourpence in the pound made on the 14th Oct. 1881, on the reservoir and water conduits at Leesham, Oxenhope, the rateable value of which is 915s., and on the reservoir and conduits at Leeming, Oxenhope, the rateable value of which is 1304l., and as to 166l. 8s. 6d., the remainder thereof, for a highway rate at 1s. 6d. in the pound, made the 14th of October 1881, on the above-mentioned property. Also a sum of 1s. 5d., being for a general district rate at fourpence in the pound, made on the 14th of October 1881, on a cottage at Scar Hall, Oxenhope, in the occupation of John Stansfield, the rateable value of which is 44. 5s., and 6s. 4d. for a highway rate at 1s. 6d. in the pound, made on the 14th of October 1881, on the same property.—Yours truly, JOSEPH HEAP, Clerk.—March 17th, 1882.

3. Upon such hearing the appellants produced their rate book, from which it appears that the respondents were not rated therein for the said cottage at Scar Hall, Oxenhope, in the occupation of John Stansfield, in respect of which the said sums of 1s. 5d. and 6s. 4d. were claimed; but that the occupier of the same cottage was therein rated in respect thereof. The appellants thereupon abandoned their claim for 1s. 5d. and 6s. 4½d., but proceeded with their claim for 36l. 19s. 8d. for a general district rate, and 166l. 8s. 6d. for a highway rate, and, after fully hearing all parties, we made an order adjudging that the appellants should recover against the respondents the said sum of 36l. 19s. 8d. for debt, and 1l. 1s. for costs, and that the respondents should pay the same forthwith, and that judgment be entered for the respondents in respect of the said sums of 166l. 8s. 6d. and 6s. 4½d.

[Q.B. Div.] OXENHOPE DIST. LOCAL BOARD (apps.) v. MAYOR, &c., OF BRADFORD (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

4. The appellants being as to the said sum of 166l. 8s. 6d. dissatisfied with our determination upon the hearing of the said summons, as being erroneous in point of law, and in excess of jurisdiction, have, pursuant to sect. 33 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879, duly applied to us in writing to state and sign a case setting forth the facts and grounds of such our determination as aforesaid for the opinion of this court, and have duly entered into a recognisance as required by the statute in that behalf.

5. Now, therefore, we the said justices, in compliance with the said application, and in obedience to the provisions of the 33rd section of the Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879, do hereby state and sign the following case:

6. Upon the hearing of the said information the following facts were proved:—(a) That the said rates (which appeared to us to be good on the face of them) were made and duly demanded in writing. (b) That the respondents have established works of water supply in the appellants' district, but that no part of such district is or ever has been rated for such works, and that no public works of water supply are or ever have been established by the appellants in such district. (c) That there are in the appellants' district several sewers constructed by the owners, lessees, and occupiers of the property connected therewith, and that the appellants, under the powers contained in sect. 150 of the Public Health Act 1875, have constructed a sewer in their district, the cost whereof has been paid by the owners or occupiers of property liable thereto. That no part of the appellants' district is or ever has been rated for the sewers aforesaid or any of them, and that except as aforesaid no public or other works of sewerage are or ever have been established in such district. (d) That the appellants, in the year 1880, laid down in their district a curbstone (about 300 yards long) as an edging for a cinder pathway of a carriage road, and that unless the laying of such curbstone is a public work of paving no public works of paving are or ever have been established in the appellants' district.

7. On the part of the respondents it was contended before us that public works of paving, water supply, and sewerage, or for some of those purposes, had been established in the appellants' district, therefore, under the Public Health Act 1875, the appellants had no right, regard being had to the above circumstances, to levy a highway rate as well as the general district rate in their district, but were bound under sect. 210 of the last-mentioned Act to levy the moneys they required for their district under their general district rate, and thus let the respondents have the benefit conferred by sub-sect. B. of sect. 211 of the said last-mentioned Act, and that the rate in question was contrary to law and void.

8. On behalf of the appellants it was contended before us that, inasmuch as the highway rate in question was good upon the face of it, we were bound to enforce it, and that the point raised by the respondents could only be raised on an appeal against the rate at the Court of Quarter Sessions, and we had no right to enter upon it.

9. And on behalf of the appellants it was further contended that the laying of the said curbstone was not a public work of paving, and in that case no public works of paving, water supply, or sewerage were or ever had been established in the district, and that if the laying of the said curbstone was a work of public paving the appellants' district was not, at the time of the laying of the said rates, rated for works of paving, water supply, or sewerage, and that therefore the appellants had power under the 216th section of the Public Health Act 1875 to levy a highway rate, and the highway rate in question was good and valid accordingly.

10. We being of opinion that we had the right, and in fact were bound, to inquire whether or not the rate in question was authorised by sub-sect. 3 of sect. 216 of the Public Health Act 1875, and being also of opinion that the works of water supply and sewerage aforesaid are not works within the meaning of the said sect. 216, but that the said curbstone is a public work of paving within the meaning of such section, gave our determination, and made an order in the manner hereinbefore stated.

11. The questions of law arising in the above statement for the opinion of this court therefore are: (1) Whether, seeing that the highway rate in question was good upon the face of it, we were bound to enforce it, or it was our right and duty to ascertain and inquire whether or not such rate was authorised by sub-sect. 3 of sect. 216 of the Public Health Act 1875 if the whole or any part of the appellants' district is rated for works of paving, water supply, or sewerage, or any public works of paving, water supply, or sewerage are established in such district. (2) Whether, under the circumstances hereinbefore stated, the appellants had or had not the right to lay the highway rate in question.

Wills, Q.C. (Tindal Atkinson with him) for the appellants.

Forbes, Q.C. (Lockwood with him) for the respondents.

FIELD, J.—The question we are asked is, whether under the circumstances stated the appellants had or had not the right to lay the highway rate. That point turns entirely (as Mr. Forbes just now said) upon the true construction of the 216th section under which the urban authority of Oxenhope claim to lay this rate upon the Bradford corporation, and to levy it from them. Of course it is for them to make out that they have that right. Now they are overseers of the highways, therefore, prima facie, unless otherwise controlled, they would have the ordinary power of levying the highway rate. That would follow. But then Mr. Forbes says their right as overseers of the highways is limited (and Mr. Wills does not deny it) by the 207th, 211th, and 216th sections of this Act. No doubt by the 207th section it is said, "All expenses incurred by an urban authority in the execution of this Act," that is, whether on highways or not, "and not otherwise provided

Q.B. Div.]

KAY (app.) v. OVER DARWEN JUSTICES (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

for, shall be charged on and defrayed out of the district fund and general district rate." Therefore, no doubt, there is a statutory enactment that, unless otherwise provided for, the expenses attending highways are to come out of the district rate. Then there comes the district rate definition clause (211), and that draws a marked distinction between the classes of property which are liable to be charged to a district rate, and I quite agree with what Mr. Forbes has said, that that section does point to a distinction between land which does not derive the full benefit from the various matters that the local board are able to carry out in the shape of sewers, gaslight, paving, and all those other delicacies and pleasures which we in town enjoy, and which the country people cannot have. Those are things which are not capable of being enjoyed by occupiers of land, such as arable, meadow, pasture, or wood land, to the same extent and proportion as by the inhabitants of houses and things of that kind, and it was intended that for various purposes strictly urban purposes, the agricultural portions of the parish were not to bear the same proportion of expense as houses and things of that sort, which are likely to be more fully benefited by the execution of the works. That being the state of things, comes sect. 216, which is headed "Highway Rate," and that, therefore, is the code of law which is to effect the mode by which the costs of repairs of highways are to be borne. Now that makes no difference in the highway rate; they are to levy that with its ordinary incidents, namely, the net annual value the same as the poor rate. Then it goes on to say in certain cases, "the expenses of a roadway or highway shall not be levied by a highway rate, but shall come out of the district fund," or out of the district rate for which sect. 211 has already provided, and if it does come out of that the corporation of Bradford will succeed in paying one-fourth instead of four-fourths which they ought to pay. What does the law say then about the case of repairs of highways? In the case which it is admitted this case falls within "the cost of the repair of highways shall be defrayed as follows." Therefore there is a manner which is now provided, which, if it is within sect. 207, takes it out of that fund, and does not fall within it. First of all, if the whole district is rated for works of paving, water supply, and sewerage, or for works for such of these purposes as are provided for in the district, the cost of repairs of highways shall be defrayed "out of the general district rate." Now Mr. Forbes says (if I follow his argument rightly), that that means that, if at any time heretofore since the constitution of the urban authority it has ever spent a single pound in paving or doing anything in the nature of paving, that at once brings into operation subsect. 1. Does it do so? I cannot come to that conclusion. First of all what are the words? "Where the whole of the district is rated." Who can say that the whole of this district is rated "for works of paving, or works of water supply?" I take the case of paving alone, because there is no pretence for saying that there is any water supply. Who can say that this is rated for paving? There was no doubt in 1880 one small thing done in the shape of edging a cinder footway, the expense of which I agree came out of the rate, but is that enough to complement and fill up these words, "where the whole of the district is rated for works of paving?" I think it means actual and effective paving. Sub-sect. 2 says, "Where parts of the district are not rated for works of paving, water supply, and sewerage, or for such of these purposes as are provided for in the district, the cost of repair of highways in those parts shall be defrayed out of a highway rate to be separately assessed and levied in those parts by the urban authority as surveyor of highways, and the cost of such repair in the residue of the district shall be defrayed out of the general district rate." Then in sub-sect. 3 the words are slightly altered, "Where no public works of paving, water supply, and sewerage are established in the district, the cost of repair of highways in the district shall be defrayed out of a highway rate to be levied throughout the whole district by the urban authority as surveyor of highways." It is not true to say that public works of paving are established in the district. What is the meaning of those words? What does "established" mean? One knows perfectly well that it does not mean one single act. If a man on one particular day sells a particular class of goods, he does not thereby establish a business for the sale of those goods. I cannot think that the word "established" in this section was ever intended to mean that a single act of that kind was to be construed as being public works established in the district. In my judgment, this evidence is entirely insufficient to comply with the section, and therefore I think the magistrates were wrong, and that their decision must be reversed.

STEPHEN, J.—I am of the same opinion, and for the same reasons. The whole question really is, whether the putting down some curbstones in the road is establishing public works of paving in the district. I am clearly of opinion that it is not.

Case remitted accordingly. Leave to appeal refused.

Solicitors for the appellants, Richard Smith and Wilmer, agents for Spencer and Clarkson, Keighley.

Solicitors for the respondents, Cunn and Son.

Friday, Nov. 24, 1882.

(Before FIELD and STEPHEN, JJ.)

KAY (app.) v. OVER DARWEN JUSTICES (resps.). (a)

Beer licence—Consumption off the premises—Ground of refusal to renew—Discretion of justices—1 Will. 4, c. 64—45 & 46 Vict. c. 34.

The appellant, the occupier of a grocer's shop, had for several years past received a certificate authorising him to hold, and he still held, a licence for the sale by retail of beer not to be consumed on his premises, in pursuance of 1 Will. 4, c. 64, and the Acts amending the same; it was admitted that he was a person of good character, that his shop was duly qualified by law, and that his application to justices at a general annual licensing meeting for the renewal of his certificate was duly made. He was duly served with notice of objection to his application on the ground that such a licence was not required in his district, and the justices refused to renew his certificate on this ground only.

(a) Reported by M. W. MCKELLAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

KAY (app.) v. OVER DARWEN JUSTICES (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Held, upon a case stated by quarter sessions, after appeal thereto, that the refusal of the justices was justified by the Beer Dealers' Retail Licences (Amendment) Act 1882.

THIS was a case stated by W. H. Higgin, Q.C., and others his fellow-justices for the county of Lancaster, assembled at the General Quarter Sessions of the peace holden at Preston by adjournment on the 18th Oct. 1882, for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on the question of law which arose upon the following facts:—

1. The appellant, Alexander Kay, is the owner and occupier of a grocer's shop, No. 334, Bolton-road, Over Darwen, in Lancashire. Since 1875 he had been the holder in each year of a certificate authorising him to apply for and hold a licence for the sale by retail of beer not to be consumed on the said premises, in pursuance of the Act 1 Will. 4, c. 64, and the Acts amending the same; and the last of the said licences was in force in September 1882.

3. At the general annual licensing meeting held by adjournment for the said borough of Over Darwen (which borough has upwards of ten justices acting in and for the same), on the 14th Sept. 1882, an application of the said Alexander Kay for a similar certificate in respect of the same shop came on to be finally heard and determined.

3. It was admitted on the hearing of such application that the said Alexander Kay was a person of good character, that his shop was duly qualified, as by law is required, for the holding of such a certificate, that the said application was duly made, and that notice of objection to the said application, on the ground that the licence was not required in the district in which the said premises are situate, had been duly given to the said Alexander Kay.

4. The justices assembled at the said last-mentioned meeting refused the said certificate on the ground that, having regard to the neighbourhood of the said shop, and its wants and requirements, it was not expedient that the same should be granted.

5. The appellant duly appealed to quarter sessions, and the said appeal came before the said justices for hearing on the 20th Oct. 1882. It was then objected that the discretion given by the Beer Dealers' Retail (Amendment) Act 1882, is limited to applications for certificates in respect of new licences, and does not extend to grants of certificates for the licensing of premises which had been similarly licensed prior to and at the passing of the said Act.

The justices at quarter sessions overruled the said objection, and after hearing evidence in support of the decision of the licensing justices as to the nature of the neighbourhood and its requirements, confirmed the same and dismissed the appeal with costs, subject to the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division as to the validity in law of the said objection.

The question of law for the determination of the court was the following: "Is the discretion given by sect. 1 of the said Beer Dealers' Retail Licences (Amendment) Act 1882 limited to applications for certificates in respect of premises not theretofore similarly licensed?"

If so, the appeal was to be allowed, otherwise to stand dismissed.

By the Excise Licences Act 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 81), s. 2, certain annual duties of excise are imposed, amongst others:

Every person not being a brewer of beer, who shall sell strong beer only in casks containing not less than four and a half gallons, imperial standard gallon measure, or in not less than two dozen reputed quart bottles at one time, to be drunk or consumed elsewhere than on his, her, or their premises, 3*l.* 3*s.*

By the Licensing Act 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 1, it is enacted that in every county and borough

There shall be annually holden a special session of the justices of the peace (to be called the general annual licensing meeting) for the purpose of granting licences to persons keeping, or being about to keep, inns, ale-houses, and victualling houses, to sell excisable liquors by retail to be drunk or consumed on the premises therein specified.

By the Beer and Cider Excise Licence Act 1830 (1 Will. 4, c. 64), s. 2,

It shall be lawful for every and any person, being a householder (other than and except such persons as are hereinafter specially excepted), who shall be desirous of selling beer, ale, and porter [also by sect. 30 cider or perry], by retail under the provisions of this Act, to apply for and to obtain an excise licence for that purpose.

By the Beer and Cider Act 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 1, the excise licence, authorised by the above Act of 1830, "shall not authorise the person obtaining it to sell beer or cider to be drunk or consumed in the house or on the premises specified in the same licence, unless the same be granted upon the certificate [of good character] hereinafter required."

By sect. 19:

Every sale of any beer or of any cider or perry in any less quantity than four gallons and a half shall be deemed and taken to be a selling by retail.

By the Inland Revenue Act 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 33), s. 1:

Any person who, in England or Ireland, shall have taken out an excise licence to sell strong beer in casks containing not less than four and a half gallons, or in not less than two dozen reputed quart bottles at one time to be drunk or consumed elsewhere than on his premises, may take out an additional licence on payment of the excise duty of one pound one shilling and five per cent. thereon; and the same shall authorise such persons to sell beer in any less quantity and in any other manner than as aforesaid, but not to be drunk or consumed on the premises where sold and such additional licence shall be granted without the production of any certificate or the possession of any other qualification than the licence herein first mentioned.

By the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), s. 4:

No licence or renewal of a licence for the sale by retail of beer, cider or wine, or any of such articles under the provisions of any of the said recited Acts [amongst others the above Acts of 1830, 1834, and 1863], shall (save as in this Act otherwise provided) be granted except upon the production and in pursuance of the authority of a certificate granted under this Act.

By sect. 5:

Certificates under this Act shall be granted by the justices assembled at the general annual licensing meeting held in pursuance of [the above Act of 1828]. . . . Provided that certificates for licences under [amongst others the above Act of 1863]. . . . may be granted by justices at the special sessions for transferring licences.

By sect. 8:

All the provisions of the said Act [of 1828] as to the terms upon which, and the manner in which, and the persons to whom grants of licences are to be made by the justices at the said general annual licensing meeting,

Q.B. Div.]

KAY (app.) v. OVER DARWEN JUSTICES (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

and as to appeal from any act of any justice, shall so far as may be have effect with regard to grants of certificates under this Act, subject to this qualification, that no application for a certificate under this Act in respect of a licence to sell by retail beer, cider, or wine not to be consumed on the premises shall be refused, except upon one or more of [the four grounds therein stated].

By the Licensing Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 37:

In counties a grant of a new licence shall not be valid unless it is confirmed by a standing committee of the county justices, in this Act called the county licensing committee [to be appointed by the justices at quarter sessions].

By sect. 38 a similar provision is made for boroughs having ten justices or upwards.

By sect. 40 notices are required for new licences and transfers of licences.

By sect. 42, "where a licensed person applies for the renewal of his licence," he need not attend in person, and the justices shall not entertain any objection without notice, nor receive any evidence which is not given on oath.

By sect. 74:

"Licence" is defined to mean "a licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors granted by justices in pursuance of the Intoxicating Liquors Licensing Act 1828, including a certificate of justices granted under the Wine and Beerhouse Acts."

"A new licence" means a licence granted at a general annual licensing meeting in respect of premises not theretofore licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

"The renewal of a licence" means a licence granted at a general annual licensing meeting by way of renewal.

"Licensing justices" means the justices having jurisdiction in respect of the grant of new licences in a licensing district under the last-mentioned Act [of 1828] as amended by this Act.

By the Beer Dealers' Retail Licences Act 1880 (43 Vict. c. 6) the preamble is

Whereas by the enactments described in the schedule to this Act (viz., the above Acts of 1863, 1869, and 1874) provision is now made for the holder of a strong beer dealer's wholesale excise licence obtaining, on a certificate granted by justices, an additional licence for sale of beer by retail for consumption off the premises, and it is expedient that justices should be at liberty to exercise their discretion respecting the grant of such certificates, as they are in respect of their certificates for licences for sale of beer to be consumed on the premises, and that such certificates should be granted at the general annual licensing meeting of justices, and not at any other time

And it is enacted as follows by sect. 1:

Sect. 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869 is hereby repealed so far as the qualification therein contained relates to grants of certificates for such additional licences as aforesaid; and the licensing justices shall be at liberty either to refuse such certificate as aforesaid on any ground appearing to them in the exercise of their discretion sufficient, or to grant the same to such persons as they in the execution of their statutory powers, and in the exercise of their discretion, deem fit and proper.

By the Beer Dealers' Retail Licences (Amendment) Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 34), after reciting that "it is expedient to extend the provisions of the said Act" [of 1880] "to the granting of certificates for all licences for sale of beer by retail for consumption off the premises," it is enacted as follows:

By sect. 1:

Notwithstanding anything in sect. 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869, or in any other Act now in force, the licensing justices shall be at liberty, in their free and unqualified discretion, either to refuse a certificate for any licence for sale of beer by retail to be consumed off the premises on any grounds appearing to them sufficient, or to grant the same to such persons as they in the execution of their statutory powers, and in the exercise of their discretion deem fit and proper.

By sect. 2:

Certificates for any such licences as aforesaid shall, notwithstanding anything in any Act now in force, be granted at general annual licensing meetings, and not at any other time.

By sect. 3:

This Act may be cited as the Beer Dealers' Retail Licences (Amendment) Act 1882, and shall not extend to Scotland, and words therein have the same meaning as in the Licensing Act 1872.

Addison, Q.C. for respondents.—The words used in the first section of the Act of 1882 are very wide in the discretion they give to justices, and there is nothing in that or any other Act to limit the application of this discretion to new licences. [Stopped by the Court.]

Henn Collins for appellant.—Throughout the Licensing Acts the Legislature has recognised the distinction between a renewal of an existing licence and a new licence, and the courts will hesitate to extend restrictive limits to powers of refusing licences in cases of vested interest:

Reg. v. Vine, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 842.

Here, moreover, the enactment is by its words necessarily limited to new licences, for the words licensing justices by the definition in sect. 74 of the Act of 1872 (incorporated into the Act of 1882 by sect. 3) mean the justices having jurisdiction in respect of the grant of new licences. [FIELD, J.—Have not the justices the same jurisdiction over both?] No, for new licences have to be confirmed by a committee. [FIELD, J.—But the justices having jurisdiction in respect of the grant of new licences have also jurisdiction in respect of renewals.] The procedure is different, and the words used imply a reference to new licences only.

Addison, Q.C. in reply.

FIELD, J.—I think this is a very clear point, and the justices were well warranted in putting the construction they have upon the words of the statute. The facts are clearly stated in the case, and the only question for us is whether the statute applies only to new licences or includes renewals. The justices have refused a renewal of this licence, although they admit that the ground for their doing so is not contained amongst the four recognised by sect. 8 of the Act of 1869. It appears, however, that due notice of objection was given to the applicant, and the justices seem to have duly adopted the procedure required by sect. 42 of the Act of 1872, modified by the subsequent Act of 1874. We can but interpret the words of the statute in their ordinary meaning, if that meaning be clear. If we entertain any doubt of the meaning of the words used, we are of course bound to consider the policy of the legislation, and give effect as far as we can to the claims of vested interests. Here the definitions contained in the Act of 1872 are expressly adopted, and we find that the words licensing justices must be read as if the Act referred only to the justices having jurisdiction in respect of the grant of new licences in a licensing district as provided by the Act of 1872. Now, although the justices at a general annual licensing meeting are the justices having jurisdiction over new licences, no doubt those new licences, to be valid,

CR. CAS. RES.]

REG. v. JOSIAH RATCLIFFE—REG. v. CARE AND WILSON.

[CR. CAS. RES.]

must be confirmed by a committee; but the very same justices at a general annual licensing meeting have jurisdiction over renewals generally, and by sect. 2 of the Act of 1882 they are expressly directed to have jurisdiction over these certificates. I see nothing in the statute to deprive such justices of the very ample discretion expressly given them, and the words seem to me to apply equally to renewals and to new licences. If it had been intended to enable the justices to refuse a certificate for any licence only when such certificate was first asked for, it would have been easy to have so limited their discretion. In my opinion this Act of 1882 applies to all certificates for any licence, whether new or a renewal for the sale of beer by retail to be consumed off the licensed premises.

STEPHEN, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Judgment for the respondents.

Solicitors for the appellant, Pritchard, Englefield, and Co., for Charles Costeker, Darwen.

Solicitor for respondents, F. G. Hindle, Over Darwen.

CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Saturday, Nov. 25, 1882.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., POLLOCK, B., LOPES, STEPHEN, and WILLIAMS, JJ.)

REG. v. JOSIAH RATCLIFFE. (a)

Rape—Child between twelve and thirteen years old—38 & 39 Vict. c. 94, s. 4.

The 38 & 39 Vict. c. 94, s. 4, which enacts that whoever shall unlawfully and carnally know and abuse any girl being above the age of twelve and under the age of thirteen years, whether with or without her consent, shall be guilty of misdemeanour, does not repeal the old law which made the offence of rape a felony.

Reg. v. Dicken (14 Cox C. C. 8) affirmed.

Case reserved for the opinion of this Court by Fry, J.

At the Winter Assize for the county of Chester in Oct. 1852, Josiah Ratcliffe was tried and found guilty upon two indictments.

The first indictment charged—

For that Josiah Ratcliffe, on the 7th day of Aug. in the year of our Lord 1832, with force and arms, in and upon one Ellen Ratcliffe, violently and feloniously did make an assault, and her the said Ellen Ratcliffe then violently and against her will feloniously did ravish and carnally know, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace, &c.

The second indictment charged—

For that Josiah Ratcliffe, on the 7th day of Aug. in the year of our Lord 1832, unlawfully did assault one Ellen Ratcliffe, a girl above the age of twelve years and under the age of thirteen years, to wit of the age of twelve years, and her the said Ellen Ratcliffe did unlawfully and carnally know and abuse, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace, &c.

2nd count. For that the said Josiah Ratcliffe on the day and year aforesaid unlawfully and indecently did assault the said Ellen Ratcliffe, and her the said Ellen Ratcliffe then did beat and ill-treat, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of said Lady, &c.

It was proved that Josiah Ratcliffe violated his own daughter, a girl named Ellen Ratcliffe, she being at the time above the age of twelve and under the age of thirteen years.

The jury found the prisoner guilty on both indictments, and separate verdicts were returned upon them.

By 38 & 39 Vict. c. 94, s. 4, it is enacted as follows:

Whosoever shall unlawfully and carnally know and abuse any girl being above the age of twelve years and under the age of thirteen, whether with or without her consent, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

This enactment was a repetition of the 51st section of the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, with two variations: (1) that the ages of twelve and thirteen were respectively substituted for those of ten and twelve years; and (2) that the words "whether with or without her consent" were introduced.

In the case of Reg. v. Dicken (14 Cox C. C. 8) Mellor, J. held that, notwithstanding the words of this section, the violation of a girl between the age of twelve and thirteen without her consent was rape and felony.

The prisoner was undefended, but I felt so much doubt as to the validity of a conviction for felony under the circumstances that I postponed sentence till the next assizes, and state the question for the opinion of the Court of Appeal in Criminal Cases.

I doubted (1) whether the clause referred to does not plainly declare that the violation of a girl of the specified age without her consent is a misdemeanour; (2) whether the selfsame offence could at the same time be a misdemeanour and a felony; and (3) whether any real distinction could be drawn between violently and against her will carnally knowing a girl and carnally knowing a girl without her consent.

I beg to refer to the note on this point in Mr. Justice Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law, p. 173, edit. 1877.

The question reserved for the opinion of the Court is, whether sentence can be passed for felony on the prisoner.

EDW. FRY, J.

No counsel appeared to argue on either side.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J. — We have considered this case, and we are all of opinion that the law is correctly stated by Mellor, J. in Reg. v. Dicken (ubi sup.), and in accordance with his view we give judgment in this case.

Conviction affirmed.

Saturday, Nov. 25, 1882.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., POLLOCK, B., LOPES, STEPHEN, and WILLIAMS, JJ.)

REG. v. CARE AND WILSON. (a)

Felonious receiving—Bonds stolen from a British ship in a foreign river—Admiralty jurisdiction.

Egyptian and other bonds were put on board a British ship lying in the river, and moored to the shore, at Rotterdam, for conveyance to England. The bonds were stolen, and the prisoners, British subjects, were found dealing with them in England, and were tried at the Central Criminal Court, and found guilty of feloniously receiving the same, well knowing them to have been stolen.

Held, assuming the bonds to have been stolen by a

(a) Reported by JOHN THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a) Reported by JOHN THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

foreigner, or other person not being one of the crew, from the ship at Rotterdam, whilst so moored in the river, that the admiral had jurisdiction over the offence, and that the prisoners were properly tried at the Central Criminal Court.

CASE reserved for the opinion of this court by North, J.

The prisoners were tried before me at the Old Bailey, at the session of the Central Criminal Court, on the 13th Sept. last, for felony in respect of twenty-five bonds (20*l.* each) of Egyptian Preference Stock, two bonds of 1000 dollars (ten shares), and 500 dollars (five shares) respectively of the Illinois Railway, and thirty other bonds of Egyptian Unified Stock.

The first count charged the prisoners with stealing these securities upon the high seas within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England; the second count charged that they being British subjects within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, upon the British ship Avalon, then being in a certain foreign port, to wit, the port of Rotterdam, stole the same securities; the third count charged them with larceny of those securities within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court; the fourth count charged them with receiving the same securities within the jurisdiction of that court, well knowing them to have been stolen; and the fifth and sixth counts respectively charged them with having been accessories after the fact to the theft and the receiving respectively of the same securities by persons unknown.

A copy of the abstract of the indictment will be found in the schedule to this case, and the indictment may be referred to as a part thereof.

I was asked by the counsel for the prisoner Wilson to quash the second count of the indictment; but it was suggested by Sir H. Giffard, who appeared for the prisoner Carr, that the better course would be that the prisoners should refuse to plead, and I should direct pleas of not guilty to be entered, and this was accordingly done.

The material facts proved were as follows:—

1. On the 12th July last the above-mentioned Egyptian Preference Stock and Illinois Bonds were made up by Messrs. Kelker and Co., bankers at Amsterdam, into a parcel which was marked outside "value 50*l.*," and was addressed to Messrs. Mercia, Backhouse, and Co., in London. The Unified Stock was made up into another parcel similar to the first, except that it was marked outside as "value 100*l.*" These parcels were of a class known as "valued parcels." They were traced clearly from Amsterdam to Rotterdam, to the office of Messrs. Pieters and Co., the agents there of the Great Eastern Railway Company, on whose behalf they were received.

2. There was evidence that these two parcels were (with two others) taken from Pieters and Co.'s office by a man employed by them for that purpose, and placed by him on board the steamship Avalon about half-past five p.m. on the same 12th July.

3. The Avalon is a British vessel, registered at Harwich, and sailing under the British flag. She is about 240 feet in length, with a gross tonnage of 670 tons; and draws about ten feet six inches of water when loaded. She is the property of the Great Eastern Railway Company, and is regularly employed by them in their trade between Harwich and Rotterdam. On the evening in question she was lying in the river Maas, at Rotterdam, about twenty or thirty feet (the captain also described it as "about the breadth of the Court") from the quay, and against a "dolphin," a structure of piles for the use of the company's ships only, projecting from the quay for the purpose of keeping vessels off the quay. She was moored to the quay in the usual manner.

4. The place where the Avalon was lying was in the open river, sixteen or eighteen miles from the sea. There is not any bridge across the river between that point and the sea. The tide ebbs and flows there, and for many miles further up the river. The place where the Avalon was lying at the dolphin is never dry, and that vessel would not touch the ground there at low water. The Admiralty chart showing the river Maas from Rotterdam to the sea was put in evidence at the suggestion of the counsel for the prisoners, and was proved by the captain of the Avalon to be correct. It is marked J.T.H. 1.

5. While the Avalon was lying at the dolphin, as above described, persons were allowed to pass backwards and forwards between her and the shore without hindrance.

6. The Avalon sailed for England the same evening, about six o'clock, and arrived at Harwich the following morning. Upon her arrival the two valued parcels above-mentioned (and one of the other parcels) were at once missed, and upon inquiry it was found that they had been stolen. The parcel containing the Unified Stock and the third parcel have never since been traced; but the parcel containing the Egyptian Preference Stock and the Illinois bonds was found in the prisoners' possession on the 1st Aug.

7. The prisoners are British subjects.

8. It was contended for the prisoners that there was no evidence upon which the jury could find them guilty upon the counts charging them with stealing the securities. I was of that opinion, and so directed the jury, and the prisoners were accordingly acquitted upon those counts.

9. It was also contended for the prisoners that unless the jury found that the securities had been stolen from on board the Avalon the prisoners must be acquitted, as, if they had been stolen after leaving Pieters and Co.'s office, and before reaching the ship, the offence of stealing them was one which this court had not jurisdiction to try, and therefore the prisoners could not be tried here for receiving, according to the case of Reg. v. John Carr (one of these prisoners), reported in vol. lxxxvii., p. 46, of the Sessions Papers at the Central Criminal Court, and the cases there cited. I took this view and directed the jury, that unless they were satisfied that the securities had been taken from the Avalon, they must acquit the prisoners. They found both the prisoners guilty.

10. I was not asked to leave, and did not leave, any question to the jury whether the securities were stolen before or after the Avalon commenced her voyage from Rotterdam. There was no evidence upon which the jury could have found that the theft occurred after the voyage began; the evidence rather pointed to its having occurred before she sailed.

11. It was further argued on the prisoners' behalf that even if the securities had been stolen from the Avalon, there was nothing to show that they had been taken from a British subject, and, therefore, the case did not come within the Acts 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 267, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 91, s. 21, or 30 & 31 Vic. c. 124, s. 11, and the thief was amenable to the law in Holland only; and, further, that the case of Reg. v. Anderson (L. Rep. 1 Cr. Cas. Res. 161; 11 Cox C. C. 198) was no authority to the contrary, inasmuch as the prisoner in that case, though a foreigner, was one of the crew of a British vessel, and therefore owed allegiance to the law of England, and upon that ground could be tried here. The counsel of the Crown did not dispute that the offender might be tried in Holland, but insisted that he might be tried here also.

CR. CAS. RES.]

REG. v. CARR AND WILSON.

[CR. CAS. RES.]

12. I expressed my opinion that if the Avalon had, at the time when the securities were stolen, been sailing up or down the river Maas, the person who took them, whether an Englishman or a foreigner, could clearly have been tried here, upon the authority of Reg. v. Anderson; that the law is the same, whether the ship be anchored or sailing, as appears from the cases of Reg. v. Jemot and Reg. v. Allen (7 Car. & P. 664; 1 Moody's Cr. Cas. 494), where the vessels were lying in port, and which cases are referred to by Lord Blackburn with approval in Reg. v. Anderson; and that it could not make any legal difference whether the vessel was made fast to the bottom of the river by anchor and cable, or to the side of the river by ropes from the quay. I also expressed my opinion that, although the fact that the prisoner in Reg. v. Anderson was one of the crew was referred to more than once in the judgment of Bovill, C.J., it was not mentioned by any of the other judges, and was not the ground of the decision; and that it made no difference in the present case whether the securities stolen from the Avalon were taken by one of the crew or passengers, or by a stranger from the shore.

13. I directed the jury accordingly, telling them that if they came to the conclusion that the securities were taken from the ship, the taking of them was an offence which could be tried here; and that, if so, the prisoners could now be tried here for receiving, and could be found guilty of that offence, if the jury thought the facts proved warranted such a finding. I stated at the same time that I should, if necessary, reserve the point for the consideration of this court.

14. With respect to the receiving, no difficulty of law arose, and no point was reserved.

15. The jury found both prisoners guilty upon the fourth count. I postponed passing sentence until the opinion of the court is given; and the prisoners remain in custody.

The question upon which I desire the opinion of this court is, whether, under these circumstances, there was any jurisdiction to try the prisoners at the Old Bailey for the offence of which they have been found guilty. If answered in the affirmative, the conviction is to stand. If otherwise, the conviction is to be quashed; but the prisoners are to remain in custody to be tried upon another indictment, on which a true bill against them has been found by the grand jury.

FORD NORTH.

Sir H. Giffard, Q.C. (Tickell with him) for the prisoner Carr, and E. Clarke Q.C. (Grain with him) for the prisoner Wilson. — The Central Criminal Court had no jurisdiction to try the prisoners, the offence not having been committed within the Admiralty jurisdiction. It is immaterial that the prisoners were British subjects, as jurisdiction over the offence is not given by the nationality of the prisoners, but must exist independently thereof. The prisoners were convicted of receiving stolen bonds, and without the court had jurisdiction over the thief it has none over the receiver. There is no evidence as to the person who stole the bonds, and it is consistent with the facts that the thief may have been a Dutchman. On the case as stated it must be taken that the bonds were stolen from the vessel while it was moored to the wharf at Rotterdam. The question is whether the Dutch courts had not exclusive jurisdiction to try the prisoners? It is submitted that they alone had jurisdiction. The ship was attached to the shore by ropes, and became, as it were, part of the shore of the country to which it was attached. When the ship was moored to the quay the English flag was lowered, and the law then governing the ship was the law of Holland. There is no authority that decides that a foreigner on board a vessel at such a place and not being one of the crew and not claiming the protection of the flag of the vessel subjects himself to the jurisdiction of the country to which the vessel belongs. In Reg. v. Anderson (L. Rep. 1 Cr. Cas. Res. 161; 11 Cox C. C. 198), Bovill, C.J., Channell, B., and Blackburn, J. seem to place reliance on the fact that the prisoner was one of the crew of the vessel. This is a new point not hitherto decided. What is the condition of a vessel in a river in a foreign country moored to the shore? It is submitted that the local and municipal authorities have exclusive jurisdiction over offences committed upon it whilst so moored.

Poland (Goodrich with him) for the prosecution. — It is submitted that the prisoners were properly tried and convicted. The question depends not on the character of the person committing the offence, but on the character of the ship. At the time the bonds were stolen the ship was within the Admiralty jurisdiction. It was a vessel trading from Harwich to Rotterdam, and when the theft was committed was lying in a tidal river where great ships go, and was in every sense floating within a place where the admiral had jurisdiction:

The United States v. Hamilton, 1 Mason (Amer. Rep.) 152.

Even if the theft was committed by a Dutchman, the admiral had jurisdiction over it. There can be no distinction between a seaman, one of the crew, and a stranger who goes on board to do a criminal act; being on board an English vessel he puts himself within the jurisdiction of the English law, the ship being considered, as it were, part of the English territory. The test of the admiral's jurisdiction has always been whether the ship was upon the high seas or lying in a river where the tide ebbs and flows and where great ships go. The American reports of Thomas v. Lane (2 Sumner 1), and The United States v. Coombes (12 Peters 71) were then referred to. In Reg. v. Allen (1 Moo. C. C. 494) it was held that the Admiralty had jurisdiction over a larceny in a vessel lying in a Chinese river, although there was no evidence as to the tide flowing where the vessel lay. In Reg. v. Jemot (MSS. 1812), as appears from the report in the Times newspaper (29th Feb. 1812), it was held that the Admiral had jurisdiction over a larceny of 40,000 dollars from a British ship while lying in the harbour of St. Jago, in Cuba. The prisoner was convicted and sentenced to death. The case of Reg. v. Keane (2 Ex. Div. 92) was then cited. The principle on which Reg. v. Anderson (ubi sup.) was decided is applicable to this case, and supports the conviction. The theft in this case was committed on board a vessel sailing under the British flag, and being at the time floating in a tidal river where ships used for commerce go, and therefore it is submitted the admiral had jurisdiction over the offence.

M

Sir H. Giffard and E. Clarke were heard in reply.—The case of Reg. v. Leslie (Bell C. C. 220; 8 Cox C. C. 269) was referred to.

COLERIDGE C.J.—This case has been argued at some length, and the question raised by it is no doubt of considerable importance. The facts are these. The bonds which the prisoners have been convicted of feloniously receiving were on board an English ship, in the river Maas, off Rotterdam, in front of a "dolphin," and was moored by ropes to the land of Holland. The tide ebbs and flows in the river, and at the place where she was lying in front of the "dolphin" there is always enough water to float ships of her class. There was no actual proof when, or by whom the bonds were stolen. The case states, "There was no evidence upon which the jury could have found that the theft occurred after the voyage began; the evidence rather pointed to its having occurred before she sailed." Whether the bonds were carried off the ship on to the shore, and sent by some conveyance to the prisoners in England, or whether they were brought by the prisoners to England, does not appear. The prisoners were acquitted of stealing the bonds and found guilty of receiving them with guilty knowledge that they had been stolen. It is obvious that the prisoners could not be convicted of feloniously receiving the bonds unless they were stolen within the same jurisdiction where the receiving took place, and therefore it becomes material to inquire whether the jurisdiction of the Admiralty attached so that the prisoners could be tried at the Old Bailey. It is admitted that the exact point raised in this case has never arisen for decision in our courts before. There appear but two points for us to decide. 1. Was the ship within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty so as to make offences committed upon it triable according to the English law? 2. If that point is answered in the affirmative, were the prisoners, according to the decisions, liable to be tried in the English courts? First, as to the place. The place appears to me to come within the old definition of the Admiralty jurisdiction. The ship was at a part of the river which is never dry, and where it would not touch the ground at low water, and the tide ebbs and flows in the river, and great ships do lie and hover there. That is sufficient to bring this ship within the Admiralty jurisdiction. Without saying that the reports of the cases of Rea v. Jemot and Rea v. Allen (ubi sup.) are as full as could be desired, it seems very difficult to draw any tangible distinction between them and the present case. This case also falls within the decision of Reg. v. Anderson (ubi sup.), where the ship was half-way up the river Garonne, in France, and at the time of the offence about 300 yards from the nearest shore, and this court held, the prisoner having been convicted of manslaughter, that the offence had been committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, and that the Central Criminal Court had jurisdiction to try the prisoner. I am unable to distinguish this case from that, but if anything Reg. v. Anderson seems an à fortiori case. Then, as to the second point, whether there is anything in the personality of the prisoners which would make them not liable by the law of England. It is true that some of the Judges in Reg. v. Anderson (ubi sup.) place reliance upon the fact that the prisoners formed part of the crew of the vessel, but Bovill, C.J. in his judgment points out that England has always insisted on her right to legislate for persons on board her vessels in foreign ports. None of the judges suggested that their judgments would have been in any way altered if the prisoners had not in those cases formed part of the crew. I think it makes no difference whether a person is a British subject or not who comes on board a British ship where the British law reigns, and places himself under the protection which that flag confers; if he is entitled to the privileges and protection of the British ship he is liable to the disabilities which it creates for him. I am unable, therefore, to make a distinction between a passenger or stranger on board a ship and one of the crew, and it makes no difference in my mind whether the person is on board voluntarily or involuntarily; if while on board he is entitled to the protection of its flag, he is also bound by the obligations imposed by the law governing that ship. The utmost that can be said as regards the theft in this case is that the bonds may have been stolen by someone who came on board casually; it may be a foreigner who took them off the vessel at Rotterdam. Suppose the thief had not been able to get off the ship, and had been captured and brought here, could he have been tried here? In my opinion he could, for if while he was on board the ship he was entitled to the protection of the British flag, he was at the same time equally liable to the disabilities of the criminal law of this country. It appears to me that the evidence shows that the bonds were stolen within the jurisdiction of the English law, and I am of opinion that the prisoners therefore were triable at the Central Criminal Court for receiving them well knowing them to have been stolen. I think that the conviction should be affirmed.

POLLOCK, B.—I am of opinion that the conviction should be affirmed. The prisoners were convicted of the offence of feloniously receiving stolen goods, and the question is, were the prisoners within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court for all purposes? The general rule of law is that a person on board an English ship is to be treated as within the dominion of the English Crown; and it is admitted that if the ship had been on the high seas, or had been moored in the middle of the river, this rule would have applied to the case. Then what distinction can there be because the ship was tethered by ropes to the shore? I think there is no distinction. She was a large ship carrying passengers and goods from Harwich to Rotterdam, and was in a tidal river at Rotterdam at a spot where great ships go. She was there for the purpose of unloading, and when unloaded would return to Harwich. I think, therefore, the conviction was right.

CT. OF APP.] ROBINSON v. LOCAL BOARD FOR THE DISTRICT OF BARTON, ECCLES, &C. [CT. OF APP.]

LOPES, J.—I think, also, that the conviction should be affirmed. As to the question of the thief not being one of the crew of the vessel, I do not think that that matters. The thief was on board an English ship at the time the bonds were stolen, and therefore came within the English law.

STEPHEN, J.—Since the time of Richard II. the jurisdiction of the Admiralty has been extended to waters where great ships go. There are many statutes which gave jurisdiction to particular courts in particular cases. But the jurisdiction of the Admiralty itself has never been defined in any other way than as laid down in the reported cases. The case of Rea v. Jemot bears on the question of local jurisdiction, and decided that the Admiralty had jurisdiction over a theft on board an English vessel in a Spanish port, and shows that the jurisdiction of the admiral was not confined to the waters outside creeks, ports, harbours, &c. Rea v. Allen (ubi sup.) is to the same effect. Reg. v. Anderson (ubi sup.) goes further, and affects both the questions of place and person, the place being in a foreign river, and the person being an American subject, who had committed manslaughter on board an English ship. No doubt the prisoner was one of the crew of that ship, but it seems to me that we cannot lay down the rule in narrower terms than that the jurisdiction of the admiral extends to all tidal waters where great ships go, and to all persons on board of them whether foreigners or not. There is no reason which should induce us to lay down restrictions to the extent which has been contended by the prisoners' counsel, that the Admiralty jurisdiction extends only when the British flag is flying, and not when it is lowered. It seems to me that the protection of the British flag and the English jurisdiction are co-extensive, and that protection and obedience must co-exist. I think, therefore, that the thief in this case, if he had been captured, might have been tried at the Old Bailey.

WILLIAMS, J.—I concur.

Conviction affirmed.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Aug. 4 and 7, 1882.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., BRETT and COTTON, L.JJ.)

ROBINSON v. THE LOCAL BOARD FOR THE DISTRICT OF BARTON, ECCLES, WINTON, AND MONTON. (a)

Powers of local board—"New streets"—Bringing forward buildings—Public Health Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), s. 2—Local Government Act 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 34—Local Government Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 61), s. 28—Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 156, 157.

The words "new streets" in the 34th section of the Local Government Act 1858, and in sect. 157 of the Public Health Act 1875, apply not only to a street which is constructed for the first time out of a field, but also to an old country road in the neighbourhood of a town, which, by the building of houses on each side, has gradually become a street; and the local board has power to restrain the owner of property adjoining such street from erecting new buildings within a prescribed distance from the middle of such street.

Decision of Fry, J. (12 Mag. Cas. 611; 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 193) reversed.

THIS was an appeal from a decision of Fry, J. on a special case, the question being whether a road called New-lane, near Manchester, was a "new street" within the meaning of sect. 34 of the Local Government Act 1858 and the Public Health Act 1875.

The case is reported before Fry, J. in vol. 12 Mag. Cas. p. 611; and 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 193, where the facts are fully stated. His Lordship held that it was not a "new street" within the meaning of the Acts. The defendants appealed.

Bigby, Q.C. and Buckley for the appellants.—This is a new street within sect. 157 of the Public Health Act 1875. It has long been a public highway, but was not a street until lately, when houses were built along it, and therefore it is a "new street" within the section of the Act:

Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 461; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 183;

Dryden v. Overseers of Putney, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 69; L. Rep. 1 Ex. Div. 223;

Baker v. Corporation of Portsmouth, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 381, 322; L. Rep. 3 Ex. Div. 4, 157.

Cookson, Q.C. and Byrne for the respondent.—This is not a new street within the meaning of sect. 157 of the Public Health Act 1875, or the Local Government Act 1858, sect. 34. This is an old road, and the plaintiff is only erecting houses on one side of it. Reg. v. Fullford (10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 346; L. & C. 403; 33 L. J. 122, M. C.) shows that, in order to constitute a street, there must be a row of houses sufficiently continuous and sufficiently proximate to one another, and here the houses are neither continuous nor proximate. This has been a street within the interpretation clause of the Public Health Act of 1848 for a very long time, and therefore it cannot now be a new street. Besides, the court below has decided as a matter of fact that the houses are too scattered along the road to make it a street, and the court will be slow to entertain such an appeal.

Bigby, Q.C. in reply.

JESSEL, M.R.—I think this a very difficult case, and one as to which opinions may fairly differ without the person holding one opinion being entitled to say that the person who holds the other is wrong. But, in construing this Act of Parliament, I think we ought to look to what must be presumed to be the intention of the Legislature. Now, the general intent was evidently this, to give in every district to some local authority the power of regulating the mode of laying out and building new streets, a power to be exercised for the public benefit, and of course imposing a restriction on the ordinary rights of proprietorship. We have then to consider what the meaning of a "new street" is. I should say that laying out a new street means making a street where there was no street before, and the term "street" is prima facie to be understood in its ordinary meaning. If we wanted authority there is authority for saying that that is the proper mode of reading this Act of Parliament, though the definition clause makes the word in certain cases include more than what would popularly be called a street. Now, there are two ways in which a street may come into existence where there was no street before. A person may take a grass field or a country lane (for, in my opinion, it makes no difference whether or not there was a public highway, a lane, or a footpath existing before which is thrown into the street, and is utilised, or whether there was nothing but a mere plot of grass land out of which a new roadway is made), he may take it and build continuous lines of houses so as to form what is commonly known as a street. When I say continuous lines, I do not mean that there are to be no breaks or intervals, but there must be a certain degree of continuity. A new street may arise in another way, and that is where it is not from the first laid out as a street in a formal manner, but may be considered to grow up, so to say, of itself. This often happens where there is an existing highway and people build houses along the sides of that highway so that, without any intention of laying out a street, the street grows. When does it become a street? This question cannot be answered until you know the locality. It must be a question in each particular case when the road becomes a street. At some time or other it becomes a street, and as soon as it does so it is a new street, and not the less a new street because some of the houses were built before it was a street. That being so, let us look at the terms of the Act of Parliament (Public Health Act 1875, sect. 157): "Every urban authority may make bye-laws with respect to the following matters, that is to say: with respect to the level, width, and construction of new streets and provisions for the sewerage thereof." That plainly enables them to make bye-laws before the street is made at all. They may make general bye-laws. They may say, "Every street in this district shall be sixty feet wide; every street in this district shall have a main sewer running through the middle of it, or two sewers one on each side of it." They may make general bye-laws, and the moment a street comes under the definition of "new street," it then becomes subject to the bye-laws. That being so, we have to consider whether that which is before us is a new street, and I think on the special case there can be no doubt whatever that it is a new street, and indeed a very new street. [His Lordship here read the 4th and 6th paragraphs of the special case.] When you come to look at the plan referred to in the special case, and look at the place opposite the plaintiff's land, you find a continuous line of houses; in fact, there are two continuous lines, they are separated by a roadway, and they both extend beyond the boundary of the plaintiff's land; there is a continuous line of houses more than double the width of the plaintiff's land and which extends beyond each side of it, and the houses are thrown back from the lane so that the lane is widened on the easterly side, which is a matter of considerable importance. I have no doubt that this is a new street. Now what do the defendants ask the plaintiff to do? They have asked him to throw back his buildings to a building line so as to widen the lane on the westerly side. If it is a new street—and I think it is—they have a right to define the width, for the first bye-law is this, "Every new street shall be laid out and formed of such width and at such level as the board shall in each case determine." That must refer to width at the place, because a new street may be wider at one part than at another. If then the board determine that the street shall be bounded on one side by this building line which they have marked out, the boundary on the other side being already defined by houses already erected, their marking out the building line defines the width of the street. I think, therefore, that in substance they are calling upon the plaintiff to build a street of a certain width. He is building his line of houses on the other side of the new street, he is laying out a new street by building a continuous line of houses, and I am satisfied that the defendants, having called for a block plan showing the position of the buildings and the width and level of the street which they are to approve, do, by stating their building line on one side, the buildings being up on the other, show the width of the street, and I think that the plaintiff is not entitled to build so as to make it of less width than the width upon which they have determined.

BART, L.J.—No doubt the construction of this Act of Parliament and the bye-laws under it and the application of either of them to particular cases is a matter of extreme difficulty, and it is difficult to express oneself in terms which will not invite criticism hereafter. I think that the first remark to be made on the Act of Parliament is that it certainly deals with at least two different kinds of streets. One is a street which nobody in ordinary language, without the help of an Act of Parliament, would have called a street; and the other is a street which everybody without the aid of an Act of Parliament would have called a street. The interpretation clause includes under the word "street" things which no one in ordinary parlance would call streets; as, for instance, a highway which has not a house on either side of it. But where there are a certain number of houses on each side of a thoroughfare or a roadway, whichever you please to call it, everybody, without the assistance of any Act of Parliament, would call that thing a street, and call it nothing else. Therefore there are two totally different kinds of streets mentioned in the Act. Now can you, by altering a street of one of these two kinds into a street of the other kind, make a new street? In my opinion you can. You make it into something which is absolutely different from what it was before. That which no one would ever have called a street is made into that which everybody would call a street, and after that transformation is it new or is it old? I should say it is certainly new. But further, I cannot help thinking that something which everybody would have called a street may be made into a new street within the meaning of the Act. Take the case of a street in York. There are a great many of them which are highly picturesque, but so narrow that you might knock your head on either side if you did not walk very straight. When the whole street is pulled down, and upon that very same line and preserving the same name a handsome street is erected with buildings of a very different class, and instead of being eight feet wide it is made sixty feet wide, would anybody doubt that in ordinary language that would be called a new street? Certainly not, and I cannot help thinking that a local board would have jurisdiction over it as a new street. The first question of fact in this case must be, Is this a street at all? It is a street without the help of the definition. It is that which would be called a street in ordinary language without any interpretation clause. The other question is, whether the bye-laws apply to it, which depends on the question whether it is a new street. It was suggested that it was not a new street, because by the interpretation clause it has been a street ever since the original Act of Parliament was passed, and that therefore it is not new. But I say, if you alter it from its original state into another wholly different kind of street, that new kind of street is a new street at some time or other. This street certainly has been altered into the new kind of street. Has that been done at such a time as to make it a new street? I cannot help thinking that the term "new street" in the Act of Parliament must have a very elastic meaning, and that when you find that a street is in gradual course of completion, and is not yet finished, the time when the change was begun may be put very far off without its being called an old street. But let us look at this a little further. It is often a difficult thing to say when a street begins to be a new street—that is, when it begins to alter its character. New streets may be made under different circumstances. The whole land on both sides may belong to one owner. Then, suppose he conceives a design of making a new street and has a plan drawn, to my mind that does not begin the laying out the street within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. The Act of Parliament is not concerned with what people do upon paper, but with what they do in point of fact and upon the land. When would such an owner begin to lay out and form a street? To my mind he would do so when he built his first house, having the intention to go on to make a street. He would then have begun to lay out and to form a street, and it would from that moment begin to be a street. But streets may be formed in another way. Supposing that along the line of that which would eventually be considered a street there are a great many owners, no one of them could make a plan for the whole; but it may be clear that all of them are intending to build with regard to and so as to utilise an existing roadway. How then, will those people lay out and form a street? Each of them, by what he does on his own land, would be taking part in laying out and forming a street. Which of them begins? I should say the one who first begins to build begins to form a street; and if you find that there are several proprietors along a line, each of whom acts so that the tribunal comes to the conclusion that all of them intend to build in the same direction, then the tribunal would have the right to say that there is a common intention amongst all these people to build in a particular course which will produce a street, and, therefore, the first of them who in virtue of that common idea begins to build, is beginning to form and lay out a street, and he and all others are subject to the jurisdiction of the board. There is another case to which my Lord has alluded, where there are several proprietors along a long line, but no tribunal could say that there ever was at the same time an intention amongst them all to build. One man at the end of the street may have begun to build, but the others have not built nor laid out their land as building land, nor advertised it as building land, nor done anything to show an intention to build. Then the street really forms itself, as it were, by gradual accretion without any common intent. In such a case you have to wait until you can see by the course of building that there is a common intent to build. The moment you see that, you come to the conclusion that a street has begun to be formed. Now when did this street begin to be formed? It is obvious from the plan that the landowners are intent on building along this line. Many of them have already put buildings there, having regard to this roadway. This is, in my opinion, a street begun not so long ago as to prevent its being a new street, for it is not yet finished. Therefore I take it to be a new street. Now, if the street is a new street, it is subject to the bye-laws of the board so far as they are applicable. It is contended that these bye-laws do not affect the line of street. Now take the first bye-law, which provides that "Every new street shall be laid out and formed of such width as the board shall in each case determine." Supposing that that bye-law had been, "Every new street shall be formed of the width of sixty feet," then it would have been obviously applicable to this street, and nobody would have denied it. But that would have been a very foolish bye-law, because it would not be desirable to have all the streets in the district of the same width. Therefore they do not specify the width, but reserve a power of determining the width in each particular case. That bye-law gives power to the board to deal with the width of this very street. Now how are they to deal with it? Is there anything in the bye-law which enables them to deal with it at once and once only; or may they deal with it from time to time? The bye-law does not say that it shall be laid out on a plan, and, as I said before, the laying out on a plan is utterly immaterial. A plan laid out may show an intent to do a thing, but the laying out in this bye-law does not mean laying out on paper; it means laying out on the land. It is laying out and forming it. How are the board to determine the width? I cannot see that they are prevented, in the case of each house to be built in the street, from saying that they will determine as to that house how it shall form the width of the street, or, in other words, how far that house shall be set backwards or set forwards. It may be objected that, if that be so, they reserve to themselves the right of saying that one house shall be up to the line of the old road and another shall be twenty feet back and another ten feet. Well it may be so, but, unless you say that they are bound to make the street of the same width throughout its whole length—which can hardly be contended—you must take the other alternative, which is, in other words, that they have the power of acting capriciously. I suppose that everybody who lives in this great city or town, or what you please to call it, knows that the boards have the power of acting capriciously, and that many of them very often exercise it. But the Legislature intends to give them that power. If they put some houses forward and others back without any method, they certainly would be acting with such caprice that there might be sufficient ground for holding that it was a dishonest caprice, and then I have no doubt that the law would be strong enough to control them. But, as long as they act honestly in the exercise of their power, it seems to me to be no valid objection to say that they are exercising their power by determining what the width of the street shall be at each point of it at the time when a person is about to form the width of that street by building a house at that point. I think, therefore, that in this case the board had the power to make a bye-law which would enable them to interfere with regard to this particular building as to its relation to the street, that they did make a bye-law which gave them the power to deal with it, and that they had that power. And in that view it seems to me that it makes no difference whether that which the plaintiff intended to build was a line of buildings, or only one building. It seems to me that the board were acting within their power, and have not improperly exercised it.

COTTON, L.J.—I must confess that to my mind this Act of Parliament as well as the bye-laws have caused very considerable doubt; but I have arrived at an opinion in accordance with that entertained by the rest of the court. The question to be considered really is this: First, whether under the Acts of Parliament the local board had power to make bye-laws enabling them to interfere as to the construction of these houses in the way in which they purport to control the operation of the building owner; and in the second place whether in fact they had passed any such bye-laws. The first point to be considered is, whether this is a new street within the Public Health Act 1875, sect. 157, sub-sect. 1. In my opinion, it can be called a new street independently of any interpretation clause in the Act. A short time ago undoubtedly it could not in ordinary parlance be called a street; but now, if we look at the facts stated and at the plan, I think that one cannot possibly come to any other conclusion than that this has now in ordinary parlance become a street, and it is equally clear that a few years ago, possibly even within the last four or five years, it was in no way a street, but a lane or country road. It is a street, and therefore, in my opinion, in ordinary parlance it is a new street. But the difficulty which was raised is this, that there is an interpretation clause under which this, although it was only a country lane or road, was, within the meaning of the Act of Parliament, a street unless the context prevented it. But, although there is that interpretation clause, in my opinion it does not prevent us from saying that a street is a new street when in ordinary parlance and not under the interpretation clauses of the Act of Parliament it is now a street, whereas within a short period of time it was not in ordinary parlance a street at all. Then comes a question of greater doubt, whether, having regard to the remainder of sub-sect. 1, it can be said that this is a new street within this provision of the Act of Parliament, so that any bye-laws "with respect to the level, width, and construction of new streets" could be made to apply to it. A great difficulty arises from this, that the Act of Parliament does not explain how the matters which come within this section are to be dealt with. This section applies to intended new streets. Now, where there is no street or road at all, but the owner or owners intend to construct a street over vacant land, no one would doubt that the urban authority had, under the Act, power to make bye-laws as to how it was to be laid out. But the clause must also apply, in my opinion, to that, which originally was not in ordinary parlance a street, but has become such so as to be a new street in the sense to which I have referred. Then how is such a street to be dealt with? How can bye-laws be made with reference to the level, width, and construction of these highways, which, although not streets before, in ordinary parlance have become such? In my opinion in such a case the bye-laws do not direct what is to be done in alteration of that which already exists, but give directions controlling the way in which matters which are to be done shall be done. If a house is to be built, then the bye-laws can prevent that house from being built contrary to the bye-laws; if an alteration is to be made in the level or width of the street, then the bye-laws will prevent the alteration being made otherwise than as allowed by the bye-laws; and if a street is to be laid out as a new street over vacant ground, then of course the bye-laws will apply, and will prevent the making of it except in the way authorised by the bye-laws. The difficulty which I at first entertained vanishes when one considers that the bye-laws are preventive, and framed to prevent persons from doing anything contrary to the rules and regulations laid down by the board under the authority of the Act of Parliament. Therefore, in my opinion, under this section it is within the power of the local board to lay down bye-laws which would affect this street. Then comes the question whether they have done so. The case of Reg v. Fullford (10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 346; Leigh & Cave 403; 33 L. J. 122, M. C.) certainly decides that a new street includes not only the carriageway and footway, but also the houses, and that therefore bye-laws can be laid down under the authority of this section with reference not only to the way, but also to the houses. If that is so, then the board may lay down directions not only as to the roadway, but also as to the houses, and that being so, they may direct how with reference to the required width of the street the houses are to be constructed. Have they done so in the present case? I think they have, because, when they require that a ground plan shall be made and laid before them, showing where the house is to be placed, reserving to themselves the right as to approving or not approving of the intended position of the house as well as the other structures, they do in fact say that in new streets to which the bye-law is to apply, any house which is built is to be put down in a position which they sanction and approve. I doubted for some time whether this was the proper way to make a bye-law, and whether they ought not to say that in such and such a part of the street it shall be of a certain width, but I think on the whole that they are at liberty (and of course the Legislature would give a public body the credit of supposing that they would exercise their powers in a reasonable way) in each case to say, "Show me where you wish to put your house, and we will decide whether that is a proper position, having regard to the required width of the street at that place." That view is somewhat supported by sect. 155, which empowers the board in the case of old streets not to lay down a general line, but when any house is to be rebuilt to say where that house is to be rebuilt, and how far, if at all, it is to be thrown back from its old position, the power being given in terms as to any one single house. I think it is not unreasonable, therefore, that, in the bye-laws to be made under sect. 157 as to new streets, they should make the building line by requiring in each case the position of any new house to be laid before them for their approval, so that they may require the street to be made of sufficient width.

Q.B. Div.] REG. on the Prosecution of SIR HENRY TYLER v. BRADLAUGH AND OTHERS. [Q.B. Div.]

The Court decided that question 1 must be answered by declaring that the part of New-lane where the plaintiff proposed to build, was a new street within the meaning of the term as used in sect. 157 of the Public Health Act 1875; that questions 2 and 3 must be answered in the affirmative; and that as to No. 4 the plaintiff must pay the costs both below and in the Court of Appeal.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Byrnes and Lucas, agents for Taylor, Kirkman, and Colley, Manchester.

Solicitors for the defendants, Le Riche and Son, agents for Cobbett, Wheeler, and Cobbett, Manchester.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Saturday, Dec. 16, 1882.

(Before HAWKINS and WATKIN WILLIAMS, JJ.)

REG. on the Prosecution of SIR HENRY TYLER, M.P. v. BRADLAUGH AND OTHERS. (a)

Criminal law — Libel — Newspaper — Charge of libel not contained in original summons withdrawn before police magistrate — Counts subsequently added to indictment containing charge of libel so withdrawn — Consent of court — Vexatious Indictments Amendment Act 1867, and Newspaper Libel Act 1881 — 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1 — 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1 — 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, ss. 3, 6.

The defendant B., with others, was charged with having published alleged blasphemous libels on certain dates, in the F. newspaper. The fiat of the Director of Criminal Prosecutions had been obtained authorising the prosecution. The summons on which the defendants were charged specified the particular dates of the libels on which the prosecution relied. At the first hearing before the magistrates the alleged libels were not read out in court, but the counsel for the prosecution gave an undertaking to furnish both to the court and the defendants particulars of the numbers of the newspaper and articles prosecuted. At the adjourned hearing the defendant B. called the attention of the court to the fact that the particulars furnished in pursuance of the undertaking contained a reference to an alleged libel published in an earlier number of the same newspaper, but not included in the summons. The counsel for the prosecution then withdrew the number as not being in the summons. The defendants were committed for trial. The counsel for the prosecution subsequently applied ex parte to the Recorder of London under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1, to add two counts to the indictment based upon the alleged libel contained in the number withdrawn before the police magistrate; the counsel for the prosecution did not state in his application that he had so withdrawn the said number of the newspaper. The Recorder granted leave; the two counts were added, and the indictment sent up to the grand jury, who found a true bill against the defendants in respect of the whole indictment. The indictment was removed by certiorari from the Central Criminal Court into the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court. The defendants then obtained a rule nisi, calling upon the prosecution to show cause why the two additional counts should not be quashed.

Held, on argument of the rule, that the counts must be quashed on the ground that the leave of the court to add them was obtained on materials insufficient for the exercise of its discretion; and that the obtaining of such leave in cases under the Vexatious Indictments Act, and Acts amending it, is not a mere formality, but must conform to the spirit and intention of those Acts.

THIS was a rule, obtained by the defendant, Charles Bradlaugh, calling upon the prosecution to show cause why the fifteenth and sixteenth counts of the indictment preferred and found against him should not be quashed.

The facts were as follows:—

The defendant was charged, with others, at the Mansion House Police Court, before the Lord Mayor of London, with having published alleged blasphemous libels in a newspaper called The Freethinker.

The fiat of the Director of Criminal Prosecutions had been obtained in accordance with the provisions of the Newspaper Libel Act 1881, authorising the prosecution to prosecute the defendants.

The summons issued against the defendant charged him with having published the alleged blasphemous libels in The Freethinker newspaper in the following numbers and dates: Vol. 2, No. 15, April 9, 1882; No. 16, April 16; No. 17, April 23; No. 18, April 30; No. 19, May 7; No. 20; May 16; No. 21, May 21; No. 22, May 28; No. 23, June 4; No. 25, June 11; and No. 26, June 18.

On the 17th July the parties appeared before the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House Police Court. At this hearing the different alleged libels were not read, but Mr. Moloney, who appeared as counsel for the prosecution, gave an undertaking that he would furnish to the court and the defendants the particulars of the libels on which he relied. Such particulars were so furnished.

At the next hearing of the case on the 21st July the defendant, Charles Bradlaugh, called the attention of the court to the fact that the particulars of the alleged libels contained a reference to an alleged libel in the number of The Freethinker newspaper dated the 29th Jan. 1882, a date not included in the summons. Mr. Moloney then stated that he withdrew any charge for the libels set out under that date; and the defendant Bradlaugh thereupon applied to the Lord Mayor that the prosecution should strike out from the particulars the charges so abandoned. With the assent of the Lord Mayor, the new charges were formally struck out from the list of particulars.

The defendants were committed for trial.

(a) Reported by W. F. EVERSOLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.] REG. on the Prosecution of SIR HENRY TYLER v. BRADLAUGH AND OTHERS. [Q.B. Div.]

On the 31st July the Recorder of London charged the grand jury at some length on the indictment which would be sent up to them in the case of the defendants, Charles Bradlaugh and others.

After the charge was finished, an ex parte application was made to the Recorder by the counsel for the prosecution for leave to add two additional counts (Nos. 15 and 16) to the indictment; but the counsel applying did not state that the two new counts were based upon the alleged libel which he had withdrawn when before the police magistrate.

The Recorder consented to the two new counts being added; it was stated on affidavit that he intimated his opinion that his consent was unnecessary.

The following order embodying the consent was drawn up and signed by the Clerk of the Central Criminal Court:

Upon the application of Mr. Moloney, of counsel for the prosecution, the consent of the court is given for the addition to the indictment of counts charging other libels besides those upon which the defendants were committed for trial.

(Signed) EDWARD JAS. READ,
Clerk of the said Court.

The grand jury returned a true bill against the defendants in respect of the whole indictment.

This indictment was removed by certiorari into the Queen's Bench Division.

The defendant Bradlaugh then moved for a rule nisi calling upon the prosecution to show cause why the two added counts of the indictment should not be quashed as against himself on the ground that there had been a deception (not intentional) practised on the court, granting the leave to add the two new counts. A rule nisi was granted.

By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1:

After the first day of September one thousand eight hundred and fifty-nine, no bill of indictment for any of the offences following, viz., perjury, subornation of perjury, conspiracy, obtaining money or other property by false pretences, keeping a gambling house, keeping a disorderly house, and any indecent assault, shall be presented to or found by any grand jury, unless the prosecutor or other person presenting such indictment has been bound by recognisance to prosecute or give evidence against the person accused of such offence, or unless the person accused has been committed to or detained in custody, or has been bound by recognisance to appear to answer to an indictment to be presented against him for such offence, or unless such indictment for such offence, if charged to have been committed in England, be preferred by the direction or with the consent in writing of a judge of one of the Superior Courts of law at Westminster, or of Her Majesty's Attorney-General or Solicitor-General for England. . . .

By 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 1:

That the said provisions of the said first section of the said Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17) shall not extend or be applicable to prevent the presentment to or finding by a grand jury of any bill of indictment containing a count or counts for any of the offences mentioned in the said Act, if such count or counts be such as may now be lawfully joined with the rest of such bill of indictment, and if the said count or counts be founded (in the opinion of the court in or before which the same bill of indictment be preferred) upon the facts or evidence disclosed in any examinations or depositions taken before a justice of the peace, in the presence of the person accused or proposed to be accused by such bill of indictment, and transmitted or delivered to such court in due course of law; and nothing in the said Act shall extend or be applicable to prevent the presentment to or finding by a grand jury of any bill of indictment, if such bill be presented to the grand jury with the consent of the court in or before which the same may be preferred.

By 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, s. 3:

No criminal prosecution shall be commenced against any proprietor, publisher, editor, or any person responsible for the publication of a newspaper for any libel published therein, without the written fiat or allowance of the Director of Public Prosecutions in England . . . being first had and obtained.

By sect. 6:

Every libel or alleged libel, and every offence under this Act, shall be deemed to be an offence within and subject to the provisions of the Act of the Session of the twenty-second and twenty-third years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter seventeen, intitled "An Act to prevent vexatious indictments for certain misdemeanours."

Moloney, for the prosecution, showed cause.—I quite admit that the fifteenth and sixteenth counts were based upon the libel contained in the newspaper, dated the 29th Jan., which I withdrew at the Mansion House Police Court, and that I omitted in so many words to inform the Recorder when making my application to add these two counts, that they were so based upon the withdrawn newspaper; but I submit that, under the 1st section of the Vexatious Indictments Act 1867, I did what was sufficient. [HAWKINS, J.—It strikes me as odd that you should go behind the defendant's back, and prefer before the Recorder ex parte these additional charges which you had so abandoned.] It is the ordinary practice to apply ex parte to add fresh counts; the Recorder was aware of the facts charged against the defendants. [WATKIN WILLIAMS, J.—If you had prosecuted the charge based on the paper of the 29th Jan. non constat but that the Lord Mayor might have dismissed it.] But this charge was never before the Lord Mayor, and so could not have been withdrawn. [WATKIN WILLIAMS, J.—In a sense you did make the charge, but had to retreat from it.] Only because it was not in the summons. [HAWKINS, J.—Did you ever give the defendant notice that this charge was going to be prosecuted against him?] No. [HAWKINS, J.—How came the Recorder to make the order adding this charge?] I made my application in court. [HAWKINS, J.—After the Recorder had charged the grand jury with no other materials but the depositions which contained no reference to this particular charge, you as a favour, get his leave to add these counts.] He knew the general character of the charge, which is connected with those on the depositions, for the fiat of the Public Prosecutor covered this date of the 29th Jan. of which he was aware. The Vexatious Indictments Amendment Act of 1867 authorises this leave on order of the Recorder, for it provides that it should not prevent the addition of counts containing any offences which might lawfully be joined. [WATKIN WILLIAMS, J.—If founded on facts and evidence disclosed before the committing magistrate.] Yes; without leave in such a case, but in a case like the present, the judge may exercise his discretion whether to give leave or not; here the Recorder, in the exercise of his discretion, did give leave. [HAWKINS, J.—What is it worth? He exercised no discretion; he had no materials on which to do so. WATKIN WILLIAMS, J.—You have got this leave without having informed the court of all the facts of the case. You are here trying to substantiate absolutely new charges; whereas in ordinary cases the application to add new counts is almost formal. If this leave or order was granted, it was granted improvidently.] Even so; he exercised his discretion; he had the materials before him in the shape of a file of all the prosecuted papers, and the fiat of the Public Prosecutor covering the date in dispute. This is the first application of its kind that has ever been made; and the defendant has made it on the ground that the court was deceived (not intentionally, he admits), but there is no real ground for it. It is a common occurrence for a magistrate at the hearing of a charge on which he is determined to commit, to say: "There is no use in entering into further charges, as they can be added to the indictment upon leave." It is a bold thing to ask this court to inquire on what grounds the recorder here exercised his discretion. In the case of false pretences, this course is constantly followed. It was intended by the Act of 1867 to avoid the waste of time in beginning de novo in respect of similar offences to those already charged in the indictment. The defendant is not prejudiced, for he has not yet pleaded. My second point is, that this court has no jurisdiction to quash these counts. It is true that the indictment has been removed into this court, but only for the purposes of the trial. These counts are in the indictment by leave of the Recorder, and it is only where there has been no leave given can they be quashed. [HAWKINS, J.—I have read this order, and I think it makes your case very bad. Under it you may claim anything; and it leaves it quite uncertain what charges the Recorder intended to be allowed to be added.] It is not a formal order; it is a mere note by the officer of the court of the leave given by the Recorder. [HAWKINS, J.—Be it so; at all events, it was only a general leave to add other counts for other libels.] Leave was granted to add these new counts. [WATKIN WILLIAMS, J.—On an ex parte application, without information to the judge; according to this argument the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act might be evaded, and its object defeated.] There was no intention to deceive the judge or evade the statute.

Q.B. Div.] REG. on the Prosecution of SIR HENRY TYLER v. BRADLAUGH AND OTHERS. [Q.B. Div.]

Mr. Bradlaugh, in person, supported the rule.—With regard to the question of the jurisdiction of this court to quash these counts, I will cite only two cases to show that counts might be struck out under circumstances like the present:

Reg. v. Fudge, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 777; 9 Cox C. C. 430;

Reg. v. Knowlden and others, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 691; 9 Cox C. C. 483; 33 L. J. 224, M. C.

On page 224 of the Law Journal report of the case of Reg. v. Knowlden, Cockburn, C.J. says: "If a prosecution is improperly instituted, or if any deception has been practised on the court . . . there can be no doubt that relief can be had in some way, whether by application to the judge before trial to quash the indictment, or whether when it comes to the parties' knowledge at some later period, it is not necessary now to decide. It is enough to say that redress can be obtained in some way." I apply here to quash these counts, first, because no leave to add them was ever granted; this order or memorandum is too general; secondly, because, if any leave or consent was given, it was improperly obtained, and without anything on which the court could exercise its discretion. I do not say that the court acted improvidently, but that it had not submitted to it the proper materials. The counsel for the prosecution ought to have disclosed everything necessary to the application for the addition of the new charges; but facts were withheld which ought to have been brought to the attention of the court.

HAWKINS, J.—This is an application to quash the fifteenth and sixteenth counts of the indictment found by the grand jury at the Central Criminal Court against the defendants, and brought into this court by writ of certiorari. These two counts were founded on an alleged blasphemous libel in The Freethinker newspaper of the 29th Jan. 1882; and the ground of the application to quash these counts was that the proper proceedings under the Vexatious Indictments Acts had not been taken. The defendant Bradlaugh was never called upon to answer this charge, or committed by the magistrate to take his trial upon it. It has been said in argument that, even if these counts might have been added by the judge at the Central Criminal Court, and what was granted might be said to be a leave, it is altogether inoperative for the purpose; and on two grounds: (1) that leave given on improper materials is no leave; (2) and that no means were given to the judge at the Central Criminal Court to enable him to exercise his discretion, for all that was done was to refer to the fiat of the public prosecutor under the Act of 1881. I am of opinion that this rule should be made absolute, and these counts quashed. It is necessary to refer to sect. 2 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, which provides that indictments in certain offences should not be preferred unless the prosecutor had been bound over to prosecute, or the accused committed to take his trial. Now by the Newspaper Libel Act 1881 (sect. 6), libel has been added to the offences within the Vexatious Indictments Act. It is perfectly obvious, looking at this indictment, we must treat each separate count or libel as a separate offence, and that being so, we are quite assured that the prosecutor has given no recognisance in respect of the alleged libel of Jan. 29, 1882. I now refer to the other statute (30 & 31 Vict. c. 35), sect. 1. [His Lordship here read it.] With reference to the provision that the Act should not prevent the addition of any counts to an indictment if founded, in the opinion of the court before which the indictment is preferred, on the facts disclosed in the evidence taken in the depositions, and leave be obtained, it is conceded by the counsel for the prosecution that the counts sought to be added are not counts which could in the opinion of any court be said to be founded on the facts disclosed before the Lord Mayor, for the January number of this newspaper was not in the depositions. Though the paper had been mentioned to the Lord Mayor, it is alleged, and there is no doubt about the fact, that this date was purposely struck out, and the defendant expressly led to believe that it would not form the matter of an indictment. The defendants having been committed, and held to bail in respect of the other libels, an application on the part of the prosecution was made to the learned Recorder of the City of London for leave to add counts in respect of the charge abandoned before the Lord Mayor. On a mere suggestion the Recorder seems to have made this order, or rather to have given the leave applied for, viz., leave to add counts on other libels. Two objections have been taken to this order: first, that it does not specify in what newspaper the libel was published, the leave to add which was to be obtained, in other words, that it was too general in its terms. I think it is a general leave justifying the insertion of any other charge of libel, and is bad for generality, for under it ten or a hundred fresh counts might be added. Secondly, that there were no materials upon which the Recorder could have exercised his discretion in granting this leave or order. There was no statement of the circumstances which had occurred before the Lord Mayor; there was no proof or even suggestion of any blasphemous statement in the particular newspaper. He was simply asked to add counts for libel without even seeing the alleged libel. If this application had been made to the Recorder, and the indictment had not been removed into this court, I think it probable that he would have reversed his own decision on the ground that he had acted improvidently. If the Recorder had really had the opportunity of forming a judgment upon the application, and the means of exercising his discretion upon it, this court would not have interfered. But the question here is whether he had those materials or that opportunity. I think he had nothing upon which to exercise his discretion except the application of counsel; in fact, that he did not exercise any discretion at all. We have jurisdiction in this case, and following the course adopted in the case of Reg. v. Fridge (ubi sup.) this court can quash these two counts. I think they ought to be quashed on both grounds.

WATKIN WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion, but will shortly state my reasons. These counts ought to be quashed on the ground that the course adopted to obtain them was an evasion of the provisions of the Vexatious Indictments Act; and unless such counts as these were quashed, the protection of that Act over certain persons would be taken away and rendered futile. This application is in no sense an appeal from the Recorder, or a review of his discretion; but the application to him was made ex parte, and on insufficient materials on which he could not and did not exercise any discretion. The Vexatious Indictments Act of 1859 was passed with the intention of protecting persons charged with certain classes of offences before magistrates; so that, if the justices declined to commit on the charge preferred, the prosecutor might take the case before the grand jury only on certain conditions. Then the Act of 1867 was passed to amend the earlier Act in certain particulars; and it provided that it should not operate to prevent the addition of counts that might be added with the consent of the court. Now, if that consent is to be taken as a mere matter of course, why ask for it at all, and on an application which is purely formal? The Recorder must here have assumed, and was allowed to assume, that the counts asked to be added were founded on the depositions; he so thought and acted. It seems to me that they were obtained and granted improvidently; that is, without that knowledge of the facts necessary to have been brought before the court; and that, if the facts before us had been brought before the Recorder, he would not have been induced to give leave to add these counts.

Rule absolute.

Solicitors for the prosecution, J. B. Batten and Co.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Dec. 9 and 14, 1882.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., BAGGALLAY and LINDLEY, L.JJ.)

DOBBS v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY. (a)

Water rate—Basis of assessment—Rent—Annual value—Gross value—Rateable value—7 Geo. 4 c. cxl. s. 27—15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. s. 46.

Sect. 27 of the Grand Junction Waterworks Company's special Act (7 Geo. 4, c. cxl.) obliged the company to supply water at a scale of rates graduated to the rent of the houses supplied. Such rate was to be payable according to the actual amount of the rent, where the same could be ascertained, and where the same could not be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate was computed in the district where the houses were situated.

Sect. 46 of a later special Act of the said company (15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii.) obliged the company to furnish water at the following rates: "where the annual value of the dwelling-house . . . shall not exceed 200l. at a rate per cent. per annum on such value not exceeding 4l.; and where such annual value shall exceed 200l. at a rate per cent. per annum not exceeding 3l." D. occupied a house, the rent of which could not be ascertained, as he held it on a lease for a long term of years, at a small ground rent. He was rated by the company at the gross annual value of his hereditament as appearing in the valuation list for the time being in force under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869. He contended that he was liable to be rated only on the rateable value of his hereditament, and refused to pay the larger sum demanded. The dispute came before a police magistrate, who decided in favour of the company, but stated a case for the consideration of the Superior Court.

Held, that the magistrate was right, and that the proper basis of chargeability under the statutes was not the "rateable value" as appearing from the poor rate assessment, but the "gross estimated rental" of the hereditament.

The judgment of Field and Bowen, JJ. reversed.

THIS was an appeal by the Grand Junction Waterworks Company from a judgment of Field and Bowen, JJ. The case is fully reported in the court below, where the facts and the material parts of the special case are set out (ante, p. 28; 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 817; 9 Q. B. Div. 151).

Sir F. Herschell, S.G. and J. F. Clerk (with them C. Russell, Q.C.) for the appellant company.

Sutton and Poley (with them Webster, Q.C.), for the respondents.

The arguments used in the court below were repeated.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.—In this case an important question is raised before us upon the true construction of two Acts of Parliament referring to the Grand Junction Waterworks Company, viz., 7 Geo. 4, c. cxl., and 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii.; and the question is upon what footing the water rate, which the Grand Junction Waterworks Company

(a) Reported by A. A. HOPKINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Ct. of App.]

DOBBS v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY.

[Ct. of App.]

have a right to take in return for water supplied by them to houses within the ambit of their Acts, is to be calculated. On the one side it has been said that the footing upon which it is to be calculated is not the gross annual value of each house (I abstain for the moment from saying what "annual value" means for this purpose), but the gross annual value subject to those deductions which are familiar to us all, and which are made under an assessment to the poor rate. On the other side it is said that the words of the Act of Parliament are express, and that the earlier Act of Geo. 4, according to its true construction, manifestly intends that the rate shall be calculated upon the gross value, year by year, of the houses and tenements, without any such deductions. There is, however, another important question to be considered in this case, viz., whether the two Acts of Parliament, 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi., and 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii., are both existing Acts, or rather, to put it more correctly, whether sect. 27 of the earlier Act and sect. 46 of the later Act are co-existing sections. It has been strongly urged by the Solicitor-General that they are not co-existing sections, but that, if they are, then the larger view, which I last referred to, of the sum upon which the rate is to be calculated, is to prevail. Now, I am of opinion that both these sections exist, and that sect. 46 of the later Act has not repealed sect. 27 of the earlier Act. The later Act, by sect. 57, expressly preserves all that is not expressly repealed by that Act. [His Lordship read 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. s. 57, and continued:] The Act of Geo. 4, which was one of the recited Acts, was in force at the commencement of the Act, and therefore the section, unless it is expressly repealed by the later Act, remains in force. Now I quite agree that if there were any sections in the later Act which, though not in terms expressly repealing the former, were in terms absolutely inconsistent with the former, then, according to well-known principles of interpretation, they would be held to repeal the former by necessary intendment; but I do not think that 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. s. 46, is such a section with regard to 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi. s. 27. It appears to me that sect. 27 of the earlier Act may well stand with sect. 46 of the later Act, and that sect. 46 of the later Act may well be limited to this operation—that whereas the earlier Act had provided a certain rate per cent., and had laid down certain terms of supply, the rate per cent., and the levels of supply, are distinctly and expressly altered by the provisions of the later Act. Of course, so far as the provisions are altered with regard to the rate per cent. and levels of supply, the two Acts cannot be read together; and therefore, so far, the later Act has superseded the former; but it seems to me that except so far the earlier Act remains, and that Act not only fixes certain rates per cent., but fixes also the mode in which those rates per cent., which I have already said are now altered, are to be calculated. The provision in the earlier Act is this: "Every such rate shall be payable according to the actual amount of the rent, where the same can be ascertained; and where the same cannot be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed in the parish or district where the house is situated." Now, I construe that section to mean this: that there is to be a fixed rate per cent. upon rent; rent being used there in the ordinary meaning of the word, as the rent paid to the landlord by the tenant for the occupation of the dwelling-house, which is, ordinarily speaking, a rack rent, and which, according to the primary intention of this section, must, I think, mean the rack rent to be paid by the tenant to the landlord. Where the amount of that rent can be ascertained, then the rate is to be payable according to it. I would say that cases of ground rent and cases of private arrangement, where the rent is not rack rent, do not come within the meaning of the words "the amount of rent where the same can be ascertained," unless the rack rent, in addition to the ground rent, or unless the premium (which was one illustration put by Mr. Sutton) can be ascertained, and some person competent to make the computation can allocate to each year what is the fair proportion of the ground rent, if it be ground rent, or of the premium, if it be premium, or whatever other arrangement may have been made between the landlord on the one hand and the tenant on the other, so as to define what is the true amount which, year by year, the tenant is paying to the landlord for his occupation. Where that can be ascertained, then the rate is to be paid according to the actual amount; where it cannot be ascertained, which is no doubt the case in many cases, then it is to be according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed. Now, it seems to me that these words, taken together with the rest of the section, really are reasonably clear, and that they mean the full amount at which the house to be rated would have been taken, at the time of the 7 Geo. 4, by the persons who were to rate it, before those various heads of allowance, with which we are all familiar, had been deducted by the overseers, and before the actual assessment was made upon any individual; because the actual amount upon which the assessment is computed seems to me to be an entirely different thing from the actual amount of the assessment itself. If the statute had meant to say that the rate should be paid upon the poor rate book, what so easy as to say it? What so easy as to say the rent where the rent can be ascertained, the poor rate valuation where that can be ascertained? But the words are different; they are, the actual amount upon which the poor rate is, in fact, computed. We know historically, and we know by common knowledge, that at that time the general value of the house or premises was ascertained, and the occupier was rated in respect, not of that full value, but of that full value subject to certain deductions, which were always made, even before the Parochial Assessment Act of Will. 4. It is to be observed, and of course everyone acquainted with the subject knows perfectly well, that the poor rate is not a rate, strictly speaking, upon houses, or upon lands, or upon property. Of course, roughly speaking, and for the purposes of general conversation, it is rightly enough described as a charge upon property; but according to the statute of Elizabeth, which never has been altered, it is a charge upon persons, and it is a personal charge to be paid by persons according to, if I recollect the words correctly, their ability, and the way of getting at their ability is to see what they occupy, and what is the value of their occupation. Therefore, this seems to me to show that the words "actual amount upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed" must have, in law, a well-understood meaning; and that they mean the value of the occupation. I think, therefore, that according to the true construction of 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi. s. 27, which, for the reasons that I have given, appears to me to be a still operative section, the rate which the Grand Junction Waterworks Company are entitled to levy is to be upon the actual amount of the rent; that is, the full amount which the tenant pays, where it can be ascertained, but where it cannot be ascertained, the whole and full amount of the property in the hands of the owner before any deductions are made therefrom. This appears to me to be the true view of these two sections: that they now co-exist, that the section in the earlier Act is still operative, and that the true construction of it is what I have said. That being so, it will follow that we are unable to come to the same conclusion at which the court below arrived; and we think the assessment ought to have been made on the sum of 140*l.* a year, and not on the sum of 118*l.* We have not heard an argument at length as to what is the real meaning of the words "annual value," in 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. s. 46. Supposing we had come to an opposite conclusion, and had thought that the earlier section was a repealed section, we might have been driven to consider simply the meaning of the words "annual value" in the later section. We have not heard that argument, and therefore, of course, not having heard that argument, any opinion I pronounce must be considered to be pronounced subject to the disadvantage of not having had the thing fully argued out before us; but I think I may go so far as to say this, that the strong inclination of my opinion is that it makes no difference, and that "annual value" in the second section means the same thing as "actual amount or annual value," in the former Act. I think there are various reasons for this. First of all, there is analogy in favour of this view; and further, as sect. 27 of the Act of Geo. 4 is an existing section, and as the very same words are used in two Acts of Parliament in pari materia, they are to be construed together; therefore the reasons which have convinced me that "annual value" means one thing in the earlier Act, convince me also that it means the same thing in the second Act. Although I have not heard the point fully argued, yet the strong inclination of my opinion is, that it really does not signify for the decision of this case whether we consider the first Act of Parliament or not, because I should come to the same conclusion upon the words "annual value" in the second Act as I have come to upon the former Act. I therefore think, for all these various reasons, that the judgment of the court below cannot be supported, and that this appeal must be allowed.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and I have very little to add. The first question is to what extent the 27th section of 7 Geo. 4, c. cxi. is repealed; it is clearly repealed to some extent by the Act of Victoria, but to what extent? It seems to me that, reading the two sections together, it is abundantly clear that, so far as the percentage rate framed in the former Act is concerned, so far also as special arrangements are made for baths, etc., so far as arrangements are made for high level service, and in any other respect in which there may be a difference between the two Acts, the former Act is repealed by the later; but except so far as the former Act is repealed by reason of there being express provisions in the later Act directed to the very same subject-matter as the former Act, it appears to me that the Act of Geo. 4 must remain. That drives us to consider what is the true interpretation to be given to these words which have been so much the subject of discussion on the present occasion. Now, the test in the Act of Geo. 4 is rent, and the Act goes on to provide in what way the amount of rent is to be ascertained. "Every such rate shall be payable according to the actual amount of the rent, where the same can be ascertained, and where the same cannot be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed in the parish or district where the house is situated." The mode in which the assessment to the poor rate was computed at the time when this Act was passed was well known. The case to which Mr. Sutton drew our attention, following other cases prior to the passing of the Parochial Assessment Act, showed how the assessment was computed to the poor rate, where you had the actual rack rent known, or where you had that rent subject to certain deductions; then on that basis the assessment to the poor rate was computed. In the same way, if there was no actual rack rent known or to be determined upon, then an estimated annual value was put upon the premises by the district, probably not very accurately, but still it was assumed that that was the estimated value or estimated rent, and from that, in a like manner, similar deductions were made as in the case where the rent was known. That was the process by which the assessment to the poor rate was computed at the time when the Act of Geo. 4 was passed, and remained in force up to the time when the Parochial Assessment Act was passed. Now it seems to me that the words of the Act of Geo. 4 are exactly met by the state of circumstances which then existed, and that the words "annual value" mean, not the annual value at which the house is assessed to the poor rate, but the annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed. It appears to me, therefore, that in this view of the case, and if I am right in my view, which I entertain very strongly, that sect. 27 of the Act of Geo. 4 is not repealed by sect. 46 of the Act of Victoria, the assessment is clearly to be made on the basis to which I have referred, and not upon the basis adopted in the court from which this appeal has been brought. So far as regards the other questions, it appears to me that, if we were to treat this portion of the particular section as repealed, you have still got this circumstance. Bearing in mind the provisions of sect. 57 in the later Act, you still have the words "annual value" used in sect. 46, and under these circumstances it appears to me that it would be impossible to give a meaning to those words in the Act of Victoria different to that which we have given to them in the Act of Geo. 4. For these reasons I think that the appeal must be allowed.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I also think this appeal ought to be allowed. The question which we have to solve, broadly stated, is this: how we are to ascertain the price which a consumer of water is to pay for it? The Acts of Parliament do not say that he is to pay by measure or meter; they put it, as it seems to me, upon a different scheme, namely, that he is to pay according to the class of house he occupies, and the class of house he occupies is to be ascertained by a method which is specified by the Act. In the Act of Geo. 4, the rent he pays is made the test or standard of the class of house, and the rent he pays is neither more nor less than the purchase money, payable by instalments. The rent he pays, I apprehend, would include the premium or bonus—that is how I construe the word “rent.” Then it is necessary to ascertain what is to be done where there is no rent payable in that sense, and the Act of Geo. 4 tells us what is to be done then. It is important to examine closely the exact words of the statute; they are: “and where the same cannot be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed.” Upon that, what strikes me at first sight is that there is nothing said about “nett annual value;” it is the “actual amount or annual value,” nett being left out. Neither does it say “rateable value;” if it meant that, I suppose it would have said so; but at all events it does not say so. It does not say, “upon which the assessment is made,” but the language is, “actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed.” Now, in order to understand that, we must look, I think, a little at the state of the law at the time this Act of Parliament was passed; both sides agree as to that state of the law, each invoking it on his own behalf. But I confess, having studied with care the case of Rees v. Adams, which shows the principle upon which property was rated to the poor rate, it strikes me as almost a reductio ad absurdum to say that the price of water is to vary with or to depend upon the rateable value, when you once understand that according to the old law rateable value was or might be a mere proportion; it does strike me as almost ridiculous to suppose that the Act of Parliament could have intended to place in the hands of the overseers the power of fixing the price of water to the occupiers of the houses. I confess this seems to me a formidable difficulty, and a difficulty which cannot be got over except by words which are perfectly unmistakable. Bearing this in mind, I quite feel the force of Mr. Sutton's observation that apparently the object was to enable the parties to appeal to some kind of standard which was ascertainable, and that rateable value has that advantage; but it appears to me that the alternative construction is the preferable one. The section then becomes intelligible, though I admit that sometimes a practical difficulty in finding out the rent may occur. It comes, then, to this—you are to take the rent when you can find it, and you must take what the house would let for when you cannot. That appears to me to be the real meaning of those words. Now I pass on to the second Act of Parliament; whether it repeals this section or not is not very clear—I do not think it does, quite; but the real truth is, the greater part of the section of Geo. 4 has become obsolete, if not repealed by this second Act of Parliament. Without scanning that Act through from end to end, it would be difficult to say how much of this section is obsolete, and how much is not; it is obvious enough that a great deal of it is, but I do not think it is wholly repealed. It appears to me, therefore, having regard to this section in the Act of Geo. 4, that we have a clue to the meaning of the words “annual value,” and that those words in the Act of Victoria must be construed with reference to the same meaning in the Act of Geo. 4, and in either case, I think, the real meaning is, whether the house is let or not, what it would let for. If it should be held that the Act of Geo. 4 is wholly repealed by the Act of Victoria, then we come to the question what “annual value” in that later Act means. We have not heard that point discussed, therefore I say no more about it, except that, so far as I can make out, the words “annual value” in the Act of Victoria have the same meaning as in the earlier Act, and therefore I think the construction contended for by the appellants is made out. It appears to me, for these reasons, that the judgment of the court below is wrong, and must be reversed.

CT. OF APP.] ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND MET. BOARD OF WORKS v. ACTON LOCAL BOARD. [CHAN. DIV.]

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant company, Bircham and Co.

Solicitors for the respondent, Hollingsworth, Tyerman, and Andrewes.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Nov. 15, 20, 21, and 22, 1882.

(Before FRY, J.)

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND THE METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS v. THE ACTON LOCAL BOARD. (a)

Injunction—Sewers—Metropolitan Main Drainage—Adjoining local sewer—Urban Sanitary Authority—Increase of sewage—Metropolitan Management Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 135—Public Health Acts 1848 & 1875 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63; 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55).

Stamford Brook was originally a natural water-course draining the districts of Acton and Hammersmith. It was formed in its upper portion of two streams known as West Branch and East Branch, the greater portion of West Branch being entirely within the parish of Acton, which is itself outside the metropolitan area. The point of junction between East Branch and West Branch, and East Branch itself, and the united streams below the point of junction, were all within the local area which by the Metropolitan Management Act 1855 passed, with the sewers comprised in it, into the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Board of Works. The Metropolitan Board of Works, in pursuance of their statutory duties, intercepted the united streams by a main sewer which carried the flow to a pumping station, instead of to its former natural outfall into the river Thames.

The defendants, as the urban sanitary authority for the parish of Acton, under the provisions of the Public Health Acts 1848 and 1875, had authorised and carried out a system of drainage under which the sewers of new houses constructed in their district were connected with the west branch as the main sewer, and the amount of sewage which the plaintiff board had to dispose of was thus greatly increased.

Held, that the plaintiffs were under no obligation to dispose of the extra drainage, and were entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from causing or authorising any sewage to be discharged through the west branch, or otherwise into the plaintiffs' main drainage system, other than sewage discharged by drains in respect of which a prescriptive right existed.

(a) Reported by J. F. WAGERT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Quere, Whether a local sanitary authority has power to stop up or disconnect a drain which it has once authorised to be made.

THIS was an action brought by the Attorney-General, at the relation of the Metropolitan Board of Works, who were also plaintiffs, against the Local Board of Acton, acting as the Urban Sanitary Authority for the district of Acton. The plaintiffs claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants, their servants and agents, from causing, or permitting, or authorising any sewage, or drainage, or foul or excrementitious matter, to flow or pass, or be poured or discharged, into Stamford Brook, West Branch, or any other stream, ditch, or watercourse, running into or communicating therewith, or otherwise directly in any way to cause a nuisance or be offensive or injurious to health or to the public. They also claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants, &c., from permitting, or causing, or authorising any sewage, or drainage, or foul or excrementitious matter to flow or pass, or be poured or discharged by or through the said Stamford Brook, West Branch, or otherwise, either directly or indirectly, into the metropolitan main drainage system, or any other sewer vested in the plaintiffs. Damages were also claimed for injury and expenses incurred.

The plaintiffs' case was as follows:—

The Metropolitan Board of Works were incorporated by the Metropolis Management Act 1855, and, by sect. 135 of that Act, the main sewers then vested in the Commissioners of Sewers, and specified in a schedule to the Act, were vested in the board, and they were empowered to make such sewers and works as they might think necessary for preventing the sewage within the metropolis from flowing into the river Thames, and all such other sewers as they might think necessary for the effectual drainage of the metropolis. Provision was made by the same section for the board to cause the sewers vested in them to be arranged and kept so as not to be a nuisance or injurious to health or property. The same Act defined the area of the metropolis, in which, however, the parish of Acton was not included. One of the sewers mentioned in the schedule to the Act, and therefore vested in the plaintiff board, and improved and altered by them, was Stamford Brook, East Branch, and another was Stamford Brook, part of West Branch. The upper part of West Branch was in the parish of Acton. West Branch sewer commenced in the parish of Acton and joined East Branch sewer, which commences outside the parish of Acton, and within the metropolitan area, at a point within the metropolitan area. The united streams discharged into a sewer which carried its contents through an intercepting sewer, constructed by and belonging to the plaintiff board, to a pumping station at Pimlico.

In the year 1868 the parish of Acton adopted the provisions of the Local Government Act 1858, and the defendant board was constituted under that Act and the Public Health Act 1848, and, under the Public Health Act 1875, they became the urban sanitary authority for the district of Acton, and had the control and management of the drainage system of the district.

From the year 1861 onwards a large number of houses had from time to time been erected at Acton, and the sewage of those houses had been drained into the upper portion of the West Branch, the consequence being a great increase in the volume of sewage which was discharged into the plaintiffs' sewers, and a consequent overcharging, of their draining and pumping systems.

The alleged nuisance was said to be caused by the fact that parts of the West Branch, both within the plaintiffs' district and within the Acton district, were uncovered sewers, and the increased sewage poured into that sewer under the defendants' system of drainage produced an offensive and dangerous effluvium.

In 1876 the Metropolitan Board formally required the defendants to discontinue the passage of sewage into their main drainage system, calling their attention to the fact that it was not constructed of a capacity to receive sewage from districts other than those comprised in the area under the metropolitan management; but the defendants refused to comply with the notice, and the action was commenced in July 1877.

The defendants' case was, that the East Branch and the West Branch were the old and natural water-shed lines by which the surplus surface water from the parish of Acton passed to the lower lands, and, when united into Stamford Brook, discharged into the river Thames at Hammersmith Creek, and that the inhabitants of Acton had been accustomed from time immemorial to use the West Branch as a sewer, and through it the East Branch also, below the point of junction.

When the Metropolitan Board was constituted and began its sewage operations, namely, in 1856, Acton was already a place of considerable size, and the foul condition of the West Branch had existed for years previously to the constitution of the defendant board, who had expended and charged to the ratepayers a large sum of money in covering over parts of the sewer and otherwise improving their drainage system. They contended that the plaintiff board had acquired their sewers subject to the rights already existing of the parish of Acton; and, further, that anything done by themselves had been in fulfilment of their statutory duties and rights. They claimed, as representing the inhabitants of Acton, the prescriptive right to use the whole of the West Branch as a sewer, and pleaded acquiescence and laches on the part of the plaintiffs, and they put in issue the fact of nuisance. Various expert witnesses were cross-examined upon their affidavits, and in the result the evidence failed to support any case of substantial nuisance caused by the acts or defaults of the defendants, but showed that, if the plaintiffs' pumping system was overtaxed, it was owing to periodical increases in the amount of storm water. Moreover, the counsel for the plaintiffs at the bar abandoned that part of the case which referred to the plaintiffs "permitting" the discharge of sewage, &c.

Cookson, Q.C. and F. Pownall for the informant and plaintiffs.—It is admitted that recent cases preclude us from seeking an injunction to restrain the defendants from "permitting":

Glossop v. The Heston and Isleworth Local Board, 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 736; 12 Ch. Div. 102;

CHAN. DIV.] ATTORNEY-GENERAL AND MET. BOARD OF WORKS v. ACTON LOCAL BOARD. [CHAN. DIV.]

Attorney-General v. Guardians of the Poor of the Union of Dorking, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 573; 20 Ch. Div. 595.

We have, however, a right to an injunction to restrain the defendants themselves from so managing their drainage system as to throw into Stamford Brook any sewage from new houses at Acton; they cannot increase the burden which the plaintiffs' sewers have to bear by reason of their connection with West Branch:

Metropolitan Board of Works v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 830; 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 270; 14 Ch. Div. 521; 17 Ch. Div. 246.

The defendants are justified by no statutory rights in interfering with the rights of other parties, and they are in this respect in the same position as an individual. Whether or not the injunction will or will not inconvenience the defendants or the inhabitants of their sanitary district is not a matter for consideration for the purpose of deciding the plaintiffs' rights:

Attorney-General v. The Council of the Borough of Birmingham, 4 K. & J. 528;

Attorney-General v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 44; L. Rep. 4 Ch. 147.

In addition to the less extensive injunction which we now ask, the plaintiffs are entitled to damages at least from the date of the commencement of the action. The defendants, in fact, became liable from the date of the notice given by the plaintiff board:

Smith v. Day, 13 Ch. Div. 651.

The fact that there has been a gradual increase of sewage, which had by the time the action was commenced become intolerable, is a sufficient answer to the plea of acquiescence. The plea of laches cannot prevail against a public body suing in their corporate capacity:

Staffordshire and Worcestershire Canal Navigation Company v. Birmingham Navigation Company, L. Rep. 1 E. & I. App. 254.

E. K. Karslake, Q.C., W. W. Karslake, Q.C., and Pollard for the defendants.—The natural drainage of the locality must be provided for by those who have acquired the old water-shed lines. The plaintiff board are, by virtue of the Metropolitan Management Act 1855, obliged to dispose of all the sewage of Stamford Brook, and the defendants have a right by prescription to drain the sewage of the inhabitants of their district into that brook, discharging it into the same between points above the district under the jurisdiction of the plaintiff board. The defendants are entitled without interference to fulfil their duties under the Public Health Acts and the Local Government Acts, by discharging the sewage of their district into the natural drain:

Newington Local Board v. Cottenham Local Board, 12 Ch. Div. 725.

If any injunction were granted it could be against future acts only. Where connection between house drainage and the sewer has been already authorised, it is beyond the defendants' power to interfere:

Attorney-General v. Guardians of the Poor of the Union of Dorking (ubi sup.).

The laches of the plaintiffs and the inevitable public inconvenience that would ensue are a sufficient answer to a case asking for such interference.

Cookson, Q.C. replied.

Fry, J., after stating the facts:—The first inquiry is with regard to nuisance, and with regard to nuisance only. By saying that, I mean that, although the 17th section of the Public Health Act of 1875 has been referred to, it has not been insisted on by the informant, or the plaintiffs, as part of their case. If it had been, of course the injunction would have been quite independent of whether a breach of that clause produced the nuisance or not, whereas the injunction sought is in respect of nuisance. The point has not been urged by the counsel for the plaintiffs, and I refer to it only to make it clear that I am not in any way pronouncing any decision under that section of the Act. It appears to me to be plain from the authorities and from principle, that it is impossible to restrain the defendants from permitting the sewage which existed at the time of their coming into existence from flowing into the brook; in fact, the plaintiffs have not urged that they have such a right. It therefore remains to inquire whether the plaintiffs and informant have shown me that the increment of nuisance, between the year 1866 and the commencement of this action, was such as to create a nuisance. That inquiry must be answered in the negative. There is nothing whatever to show me what that increase was. I can only guess at it from the number of houses which have been built in the parish. I do not know how many of them communicate with the brook. I know nothing of the quantity of sewage which has been cast into it, in addition to what was cast into it when the local board took possession of the Acton district, and I have no evidence before me of any valuable character to show how far the increase, which I have no doubt has existed, is enough to produce a nuisance of itself. The result, therefore, is that the plaintiffs fail, both with regard to the permission and with regard to the creation of a nuisance, and the action must be dismissed, so far as it seeks the relief mentioned in the first paragraph of the statement of claim, with costs to be paid by the relators. The next question arises with regard to the sewers or drains which have been made by the defendant board since they have come into existence. There are admissions contained in the answer, and in the evidence which was given before me, which satisfy me of that which has not been denied, viz., that they, in pursuance of their duty, as they considered, caused, or directed, or authorised the construction of drains, from houses which have been newly erected, into this brook. That they have done so is to be found from, amongst other passages, the 22nd paragraph of their answer. They say that, "in compliance with their duties under the Acts, and with a view to promoting the health of the district, they have caused fresh drains to be connected, as occasion has from time to time arisen, with their main sewer, the West Branch sewer." About that, therefore, there has been very properly no dispute. Further than that, they claimed the right to continue to cause drains to be made to the west branch. They allege, and Mr. Wm. Karslake has argued, that the inhabitants of Acton have a right by prescription to drain into this sewer. It appears to me that such a suggestion would clearly be bad. There is no evidence tendered on which I could come to the conclusion that there is any such prescription. There is no evidence by which I can conclude that there is any legal custom authorising such a drainage. Those persons who have drains made, and who have used them for the period of prescription, cannot be interfered with. Other individuals living in Acton, who have no prescriptive right, have done so, according to the evidence before me, not under any prescriptive right or any custom. The local board, therefore, unless restrained, will continue to increase the sewage flowing into the West Branch sewer. Then arises the inquiry, whether the sewage which they have so caused to flow into it, and which they threaten and intend to cause in future to flow into it, is sewage which they are entitled to require the plaintiff board to dispose of. Now it has been argued that, under the Act of 1855, the board was bound to dispose of this sewage. I say nothing with regard to sewage existing in the year 1855. I say nothing with regard to sewage flowing from houses as to which there is any question of prescriptive right; but I am unable to find anything in the statute which casts upon the plaintiffs the burden of disposing of such sewage as the inhabitants of Acton may think fit to create by building houses after the Act of 1855. It is all the more important because the Legislature has thrown upon the plaintiffs the burden of disposing of all the sewage within their district, and of preventing its flowing into the Thames. If, therefore, up to 1855 the defendants had no right to throw their drainage into this sewer, and have the right to do so by force of the Act, the result is that they have the right to put their sewage in the position which casts the burden on the plaintiffs of preventing its going into the Thames. Now what the plaintiffs have done is this: they have, in pursuance of their duty, intercepted the brook in question at two points—it is needless to go into the details and character of the works—but the effect of those interceptions has been to carry, as far as they can, the whole of the sewage of the East and West Branches parallel to the Thames, and to carry all the storm water which they can in the same direction, leaving only the surplus storm water to flow into the Thames. There is plainly, therefore, an increased burden thrown upon the plaintiffs by every increase of sewage passing into this brook. I have already said it appears to me that there is nothing in the statute which throws on the plaintiffs any such increased burden. It has been said that, if the Act of 1855 did not authorise this, the Act of 1848, or the Act of 1853, or the Act of 1875, under which the defendants have been constituted or act, authorises them to do so. In my judgment there is no justification for such a contention. I consider it well established that boards of health are bound to perform their statutory duties without injury to their neighbours. They cannot create a nuisance affecting a neighbour; they cannot, in my judgment, cast upon a neighbour a greater burden than he is bound to bear. I am therefore driven to this inquiry: Irrespective of statute, can the owner of land on the higher part of a stream cast upon the owner of land on the lower part of a stream the burden of disposing of a greater amount of sewage than by prescription has flowed into it? That point appears to me to have been decided by the Lords Justices in the case of the Metropolitan Board of Works v. The London and North-Western Railway Company (44 L.T. Rep. N.S. 270; 17 Ch. Div. 246-249). James, L.J. said: "On the facts it is quite clear there were no such prescriptive rights as were alleged. If a man has an artificial drain or sewer by which he drains anything, either water or sewage, into his neighbour's land, he cannot use that drain so as to drain another close or another house. It seems to me impossible to suppose that there is anything in the English law to say that a man has the right to pour in as much sewage water as can come from anywhere, limited only by the size of the particular drain." Cotton, L.J. expressed the same view. He said: "There is no authority given by the Act to do it"—that is, to increase the sewage—"and according to the general law they have no right to throw any burden on their neighbours, unless by contract, which in this case does not exist, or by long user; that is to say, by prescription, which does not exist here. In my opinion the plaintiffs are right and the appeal must be dismissed." Lush, L.J. entirely agreed with that decision. The plaintiffs, therefore, are right, in my judgment, in saying that they are not liable to any greater burden of sewage than that of those persons who have a prescriptive right to throw it into the brook. But then arises this point: the plaintiffs have not shown to me any substantial damage resulting from an increase of the sewage thrown into the West Brook or the East Brook. According to the evidence of Sir Joseph Bazalgette, the real annoyance and burden of which the plaintiffs complain is that, by reason of the foul state of the brook, they have been bound to cover it over, and that by reason of the storm-water, collected in Acton district, flowing along the intercepted sewer, the plaintiffs' pumping operations are burdened, and at certain times overtaxed. I have, therefore, to inquire whether in this case there has been such substantial damage proved, where the right is involved, that I ought to grant an injunction. In many cases I probably should think myself not bound to grant an injunction; but, in the present case, I confess myself bound to do so, and for this reason—that not only do the defendants insist on their right to maintain the sewer that they have already caused to be constructed, but they insist upon a right in future to construct other drains which they say they are authorised to do by the prescriptive title of the inhabitants of the district over which they preside. It appears to me, therefore, that they insist, not only on maintaining the wrong which they have committed, but they insist on a right to do an increased wrong in future. That is, in my judgment, a circumstance which I must have regard to, and I think that compels me to grant an injunction. I therefore must pronounce an injunction, restraining "the defendants, their servants and agents, from causing or authorising any sewage or drainage, or other foul or excrementitious matter, to flow, or pass, or be poured or discharged by or through Stamford Brook, West Branch, or otherwise either directly or indirectly into the metropolitan main drainage system, or any sewer vested in the plaintiffs." In other words, I grant an injunction according to the second claim, omitting the words "permitting or." The plaintiffs ask for a further injunction. They have asked me to restrain the defendants from permitting sewage to pass into the West Branch, through any sewers or drains constructed or authorised by the defendants after the notice in 1876. In my opinion, I ought not to grant any such injunction. It appears to me that the plaintiffs have not been over diligent or over active in the assertion of their rights. They must

Q.B. Div.]

LANGRISH (app.); ARCHER (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

have known, I think, some time before 1876, that the local board was carrying on operations. They followed up their notice by an action begun some eight months afterwards, and their action, having begun in 1877, has not been brought on for trial until a few days ago. The reason given is, that the plaintiffs preferred to wait the decision of the case pending between themselves and the London and North-Western Railway Company. It is quite true that the defendants might have driven the plaintiffs on. In a general way, the court looks at things as they stood at the date of the writ; but, in the present case, to grant the injunction asked for would have been attended with most serious consequences, because it would require the defendants to stop up all drains or sewers which have been made from houses in Acton ever since Nov. 1876. Those houses, according to the evidence before me, are very numerous, and it appears to me, on the balance of convenience and inconvenience, and bearing in mind that there is no substantial damage shown to have accrued to the plaintiffs, that I should be doing wrong in granting such an injunction. Further than that, I am by no means clear that the defendants have the power to stop up a drain which they have once authorised and directed. I observe that the Master of the Rolls expressed that view in the case of The Attorney-General v. The Guardians of the Poor of the Union of Dorking (ubi sup.). Therefore, on that ground also I should hesitate very long before I granted the injunction which is sought on that part of the case. [His Lordship then dealt with the alleged acquiescence on the part of the plaintiffs, holding that the objection failed.]

Solicitor for informant and plaintiffs, R. Ward.
Solicitors for the defendants, Hemsley and Hemsley.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Tuesday, Nov. 28, 1882.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J. and STEPHEN, J.)

LANGRISH (app.); ARCHER (resp.). (a)

Vagrant Act Amendment Act 1873—Gaming—Railway carriage—Open place to which public have access.

A railway carriage, when being used for the conveyance of passengers on the line, is "an open place to which the public have, or are permitted to have, access" within the meaning of sect. 3 of the Vagrant Act Amendment Act 1873.

The respondent and other persons were found playing a game, known as the "three-card trick," in a railway carriage which was conveying passengers on the London and South-Western Railway Company's line.

Held (reversing the decision of the magistrate), that the respondent ought to have been convicted.

The words "open place to which the public have, or are permitted to have, access," are not confined to those places to which the access is unconditional.

This was a case stated by one of the metropolitan police magistrates under sect. 33 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49).

A complaint was preferred at the police-court by the appellant against the respondent, under the

5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, entitled "An Act for the Punishment of Idle and Disorderly Persons and Rogues and Vagabonds." Sect. 4 of that Act provides that Every person . . . playing or betting in any street, road, highway, or other open and public place, at or with any table or instrument of gaming, at any game or pretended game of chance . . . shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the meaning of the Act . . . and upon conviction shall be liable to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months.

The respondent, Archer, in company with two other men, entered a first-class carriage at the Waterloo Terminus of the London and South-Western Railway Company.

The respondent and the two other men, while the train in which they were travelling was on its journey from Waterloo to Sanbury Station, commenced playing a game which is commonly known as the "three-card trick."

Two other passengers were travelling in the same compartment, and both were induced to join in the game. One of them lost his money at this game.

The respondent was then charged before one of the metropolitan police magistrates with gaming in an open and public place. The magistrate dismissed the charge.

The question for the opinion of the court was, whether such railway carriage, being on its journey and then being used for the conveyance of passengers, was or was not an open and public place, or an open place to which the public have, or are permitted to have, access within the meaning of the 36 & 37 Vict. c. 38, s. 3.

Sect. 3 provides:

Every person playing or betting by way of wagering or gaming, in any street, road, highway, or other open and public place, or in any open place to which the public have, or are permitted to have, access, at or with any table or instrument of gaming, or any coin, card, token, or other article used as an instrument or means of such wagering or gaming, at any game or pretended game of chance, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the true intent and meaning of the recited Act, and as such may be convicted and punished under the provisions of that Act, or in the discretion of the justice or justices trying the case, in lieu of such punishment, by a penalty for the first offence not exceeding forty shillings, and for the second and any subsequent offence not exceeding five pounds.

Danckwerts, for the appellant.—In the case of Re Freestone, 1 H. & N. 93, which was a conviction under 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, for unlawfully playing (at the three-card trick) in a certain open and public place, to wit, in a third-class carriage on the London Brighton and South Coast Railway. Although the conviction was quashed, the learned judges thought that if it had been alleged that the carriage was then and there running and being used for the conveyance of passengers on the line, the conviction would have been good. The Act of Geo. 4 has been extended by the 36 & 37 Vict. c. 38. In Reg. v. Holmes (22 L. J. 122, M. C.) an omnibus, whilst conveying passengers from one place to another, was held to be a public place within the meaning of the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, and a conviction under that for an indecent exposure of the person was held to be good.

Woodgate, for the respondent.—The 36 & 37 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, refers to an open and public place to which the public have, or are permitted to have, access. This, it is contended, must be limited to places to which the public have an absolute and unrestricted right of access. Here access to the railway carriage could only be obtained upon payment of the fare demanded by the railway company for travelling on their line.

(a) Reported by DUNLOP HILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the magistrate was wrong in law, and that he ought to have convicted the respondent. We have to construe a section of an Act of Parliament that most probably was drawn without this question of a railway carriage being present to the mind of the draughtsman. Now the section provides, that if any person is found playing or betting in any street . . . or other open and public place, or in any open place to which the public have, or are permitted to have, access, with any card . . . he shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, &c. In this case the respondent, with two other persons, were playing by way of wagering or gaming, in a first-class railway carriage that was travelling on the London and South-Western Railway Company's line. Is a railway carriage, under such circumstances, an "open place" within the meaning of the Act? I am of opinion that it is, and that the words of the section admit of such an interpretation. An omnibus whilst conveying passengers was expressly held by the Court for Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved, in Reg. v. Holmes (22 L. J. 122, M. C.) to be a public place within the meaning of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. In Ex parte Freestone (1 H. & N. 93) the court seemed to think that if the railway carriage had been in use on the railway the conviction would have been good. That case strongly supports, if indeed it does not directly determine, our decision. The word "open" in the statute means open to the public, and not, of course, open to the sky. Then it was argued, on behalf of the respondent, that it must be a place to which the public have an absolute and unconditional right of access without payment, or other special permission; and hence that a railway carriage cannot be an "open place," as no one can enter it without paying his fare. I confess I cannot assent to that argument. A railway company cannot exclude anyone for whom there is room, and who is willing to pay his fare, though they cannot, of course, take more in one carriage than that is capable of holding. It seems to me, therefore, that a railway carriage while travelling on the line must come within the words "open place to which the public are permitted to have access."

STEPHEN, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. I do not think Mr. Woodgate dealt with the case of Ex parte Freestone at all. Though it may not decide this point, it clearly contains a very strong expression of opinion on it. I fail to find anything in the statute to the effect that the access must be an unconditional access. The magistrate ought certainly to have convicted the respondent.

Decision reversed.

Solicitor for the appellant, Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitor for the respondent, E. Biale.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

April 26, 28, and 29, 1882.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., BRETT and COTTON, L.JJ.)

REG. on the Prosecution of HER MAJESTY'S TREASURY v. THE MAYOR, &C., OF THE BOROUGH OF MAIDENHEAD, AND MORRIS, Treasurer of the Borough. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 60), ss. 14, 19, 20, 22—Election court—Expenses of court—Court of record—Order as to costs—Liability of borough—Certificate of Commissioners of Treasury—Mandamus.

By the Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 60), s. 14, sub-sect. 1, petitions under the Act shall be tried by a barrister; and by sub-sect. 5 the court has, for the purposes of the trial of a petition, the same powers and privileges as a judge on the trial of an election petition.

By sect. 19 the costs of the petition and proceedings consequent thereon shall be defrayed by the parties to the petition in such manner and in such proportions as the court may determine.

By sect. 20 the expenses of the reception and holding of the court upon the trial of a petition are to be paid by the treasurer of the borough out of the borough fund or rate.

By sect. 22 the remuneration and allowances to be paid to the barrister and to any officers, clerks, or shorthand writers employed are to be paid by the Commissioners of the Treasury, and are to be repaid to them on their certificate by the treasurer of the borough; but the court may order that the whole or part of such remuneration and allowances, or the whole or part of the expenses incurred by the town clerk for receiving the court, shall be repaid to the commissioners or to the town clerk by the petitioner, or by the respondent.

On the 11th March 1875, at the hearing of a petition under this Act, the barrister made an order under sect. 19 directing that the costs of the petition and proceedings in court should be paid by the respondents. No order was then made as to the expenses of the court, which are provided for by sect. 22. The Commissioners of the Treasury paid the expenses of the court, and in Aug. 1875 they certified to the treasurer of the borough that such payments had been made, and required him to repay the amount. On the 27th Sept. 1875 the barrister who tried the petition wrote to the Commissioners of the Treasury stating that it was always his intention to visit upon one of the respondents the costs relating and belonging to the inquiry, and that he said so in giving judgment. Thereupon the commissioners withdrew their orders on the treasurer of the borough for payment of the sums which they had advanced. On the 4th Oct. the barrister made an order on the same respondent to pay to the town clerk the expenses incurred by him for receiving the court. The Commissioners of the Treasury having afterwards come to the conclusion that the expenses under sect. 22 must be borne by the

(a) Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[Ct. of App.]

REG. v. THE MAYOR, &C., OF THE BOROUGH OF MAIDENHEAD, &C.

[Ct. of App.]

treasurer of the borough, on the 8th June 1876 they issued a fresh certificate requiring payment within fourteen days, and afterwards obtained a mandamus requiring payment.

Issues were joined on the return to the mandamus, and at the trial the jury found that there was sufficient evidence that the barrister did order the whole of the costs to be paid by the respondent and not by the borough. A verdict having been entered for the prosecution subject to a special case:

Held, that the court of the barrister who tried the petition was a court of record, and the record was the order drawn up by the registrar and signed by the barrister, and this record could not be amended by the Court of Appeal, and could not be varied by evidence of what the barrister said in giving judgment; that any subsequent orders dealing with costs were invalid, because the barrister was functus officio when they were made, and therefore no valid order had been made that the respondent should pay the expenses provided for by sect. 22, and the treasurer of the borough was liable.

Held, also, that the certificate of the Commissioners of the Treasury was not an order or judgment but a ministerial act, and therefore they had power to cancel their first certificate and afterwards issue another, and a mandamus ought to issue.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division affirmed.

This was an appeal from the judgment of a divisional court on a special case stated under an order made by consent at the trial of issues of fact before Mellor, J. and a special jury.

The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the prosecutors or the defendants, or either of the defendants, were entitled to judgment, and if the prosecutors then for what amount.

The following statement of the facts contained in the special case is taken from the judgment of Pollock, B. in the Divisional Court.

A petition having been presented against the return of three town councillors of the borough of Maidenhead, it was tried before Mr. Coleman, the barrister duly appointed under the provisions of the Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act 1872, in March 1875. The inquiry lasted for nine days, during which expenses were properly incurred for providing accommodation for holding and receiving the Election Court, and also for the payment of the barrister, his registrar and clerk, a shorthand writer, and for fees due to the master of the Court of Common Pleas. On the 11th March 1875 the barrister made an order under sect. 19 of the said Act, directing that the costs, charges, and expenses of the petition and proceedings in court by the parties thereto should be paid by the respondents in equal shares. With respect, however, to the expenses of the court, which are provided for by sect. 22, and which form the subject-matter of the decision, no order was then made by the barrister, although, as appears by a letter subsequently written by him, it was his intention to visit upon one of the respondents these costs, and he expressed this intention orally in giving judgment upon the case.

The expenses of the court being thus unprovided for, the Commissioners of the Treasury paid them to the barrister and other persons entitled, and by two certificates dated respectively the 2nd and 25th Aug. 1875, they certified to the defendant Morris, as treasurer of the borough of Maidenhead, that such payments had been made, and required him as such treasurer to repay to them the amount thereof out of the borough fund or rates. At this time the borough fund was overdrawn to a large amount, and no property was then or since available to meet the demand. On the 6th Aug. 1875 a borough rate at 6d. in the pound was made to meet the claim, and this was collected from persons liable to be rated in the borough.

Subsequently to this a correspondence took place between the Commissioners of the Treasury and Mr. Morris, as town clerk, whence it appears that the attention of the Commissioners of the Treasury was called to the judgment delivered by the barrister at the close of the petition, which declared the respondent guilty of personal bribery, and ordered him to pay the costs of the inquiry; and thereupon the commissioners communicated with the barrister, who on the 27th Sept. wrote in reply that it had always been his intention to visit upon Mr. Dawson, the respondent, the costs relating to and belonging to the inquiry, and that he had said so in giving judgment. On receipt of this letter, the commissioners withdrew their two orders upon the defendant for repayment of the sums which they had advanced, and instructed their solicitors to proceed against the respondent Dawson for the amount. Before, however, these proceedings commenced, the commissioners received from the prescribed officer under the Act a copy of an order made by Mr. Coleman, dated the 4th Oct. 1875, in the following terms:

Having upon the hearing of the petition found the respondent William Dawson personally guilty of corrupt practices at the election, I do order that the said respondent William Dawson do pay to the town clerk the expenses incurred by him for receiving the court under the provisions of the above-mentioned Act.

On the 9th Dec. 1875 the commissioners wrote to the defendant Morris calling his attention to the fact that the order related solely to the expenses incurred by the town clerk in receiving the court under sect. 20, and made no mention of the sums advanced by the commissioners under sect. 22, and stating that they were advised that, even if it was the intention of the barrister that the whole costs of the inquiry should be borne by the respondent, it was not then competent to him to make such an order, inasmuch as he was functus officio, and that the remuneration and allowances under sect. 22 must be borne by the treasurer of the borough. In reply to this, on the 20th Dec., the town clerk wrote to the commissioners stating that upon the withdrawal of their first order the town council had abandoned the rate, and had ordered the sums collected to be returned to the ratepayers, which had been done. On the 8th June 1876 the Commissioners of the Treasury issued a fresh certificate by which they required the treasurer of the borough to repay out of the borough fund or rates, within fourteen days, the sums advanced by them for the costs in question, and this amount not being paid they applied to the court for a mandamus ordering the defendants to pay it forthwith. The defendants in their return to this mandamus set forth the above facts,

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. THE MAYOR, &C., OF THE BOROUGH OF MAIDENHEAD, &C.

[CT. OF APP.]

and issues both in law and fact having been joined, the case came on for trial before Mellor, J.

At the trial evidence was tendered on behalf of the defendants in addition to the documents, to show that the barrister did in delivering judgment on the 10th March 1875, orally order that the expenses of receiving the court, and also the allowances, remunerations, and expenses to be paid to the barrister for his services in respect of the trial of the said petition, and to the officers and clerks and others employed under the provisions of the Act should be borne and paid by the said William Dawson, and should be repaid to the said Lords Commissioners by him, and not by the defendants. The said evidence was objected to on the part of the prosecution, but was admitted by the learned judge, subject to such objection. Oral evidence was thereupon given both by the prosecutors and by the defendants. The question of the admissibility of this oral evidence was reserved for the opinion of the court.

On behalf of the defendants, it was further sought to put in as evidence a letter written by Mr. Coleman to the commissioners. On objection being made by the prosecution to the reception of the same, the learned judge ruled that it was inadmissible, and it was accordingly excluded. The letter was, however, inserted by consent in the special case, but subject to the question of its admissibility, and if admissible for any purpose it is to be among the facts submitted to the consideration of the court. It is as follows:

Redcar, Yorkshire, 29th Sept. 1875.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter 14,422. It was always my intention to visit upon Mr. Dawson the costs relating and belonging to the inquiry. I said so in giving judgment.

Dawson was proved to have been guilty to my satisfaction of personal bribery, and I thought that the ratepayers of Maidenhead ought not to be asked to pay the expenses of an inquiry brought about by reason of his having done so.

Mr. Lush, my registrar, is now in London, and will take any further steps, if any, which may be required in the matter.—I have the honour to remain, Sir, your most obedient servant,

CHARLES J. COLEMAN.

William Law, Esq.

At the conclusion of the trial the learned judge left the following question to the jury: "Was there a direction that those costs which are included in and are incident to the inquiry, namely, the remuneration, costs of the judge, officers, and so on, as well as the town clerk's costs, should be paid by Mr. Dawson?"

To this question the jury returned answer as follows: "The jury is of opinion that there is sufficient evidence that Mr. Coleman did order the whole of the costs to be paid by Mr. Dawson, and not by the borough of Maidenhead."

The learned judge, however, directed that a verdict should be entered for the Crown for damages 376*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* and 40*s.* costs, subject to the opinion of the court upon a special case, it being agreed that the court should give judgment upon the demurrers raised on the pleadings as well as on the special case.

The Divisional Court were divided in opinion; Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Pollock, B. held that the prosecutors were entitled to succeed, Manisty, J. dissenting.

Judgment was accordingly given for the prosecutors for 376*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*, and for a peremptory mandamus.

From this judgment, which is reported 8 Q. B. Div. 339, the defendants now appealed.

The following are the provisions of the Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 60), on which the decision mainly turned:

SECT. 22. The remuneration and allowances to be paid to a barrister for his services in respect of the trial of a petition, and to any officers, clerks, or shorthand writers employed under the provisions of this Act, shall be fixed by a scale which shall be made and may be varied from time to time by the election judges on the rota for the trial of election petitions under the provisions of the Parliamentary Elections Act 1868, with the approval of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, or any two or more of them, and the amount of any such remuneration and allowances shall be paid by the said commissioners, and shall be repaid to the said commissioners on their certificate, by the treasurer of the borough to which the petition relates, out of the borough fund or rate.

Provided that the court at its discretion may order that the whole or any part of such remuneration and allowances, or the whole or any part of the expenses incurred by a town clerk for receiving the court under the provisions of this Act, shall be repaid to the said commissioners or to the town clerk, as the case may be, in the cases, by the persons, in the manner following, viz.: (a) When in the opinion of the court a petition is frivolous and vexatious, then by the petitioner; (b) When in the opinion of the court a respondent has been personally guilty of corrupt practices at the election, then by such respondent. And any order so made for the repayment of any sum by a petitioner or respondent may be enforced in the same way as an order for payment of costs.

The other provisions of the Act which are material are sufficiently referred to in the head-note.

H. Matthews, Q.C. and H. D. Greene for the appellants.—It is evident that Mr. Coleman intended that these costs should be paid by the respondent Dawson, who was found guilty of personal bribery. The election court is not a court of record, and therefore there was no necessity for the production of any written order. If this is not so, the record may and ought to be amended. The Commissioners of the Treasury had no power to issue fresh certificates, and the certificates being invalid, the defendants were not liable to pay. Owing to lapse of time, the ratepayers of the borough have changed, and it is unjust that the present ratepayers should now be made to pay. Where there has been such a long delay a mandamus ought not, as a matter of discretion, to be granted. The following authorities were referred to in the course of the argument:

Pare v. Hartshorn, 23 W. R. 138;

Harmer v. Bean, 3 C. & K. 307;

Dyson v. Wood, 3 B. & C. 449;

Williams v. Lord Bagot, 4 D. & R. 315;

Mellish v. Richardson, 7 B. & C. 819;

Ernest v. Brown, 4 Bing. N. C. 163;

Reg. v. Fall, 1 Q. B. 636;

Marianski v. Cairns, 1 Macq. 212, 766;

Woods v. Reed, 2 M. & W. 777;

Reg. v. Garland, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 160; L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 269;

Reg. v. Churchwardens of Wigan, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 381; 1 App. Cas. 611;

Worthington v. Hulton, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 463; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 63;

Nicoll v. Allen, 31 L. J. 283, Q. B.

Sir H. James (A. G.) and A. L. Smith, for the respondents, were not called on to address the court.

JESSEL, M.R.—I have read twice over, and with great care, the judgment of Pollock, B. in this case, which was agreed to by the Lord Chief Justice. The first question we have to decide is an important one, no doubt, not only with reference to this case but to others. It depends on two very short sections of Acts of Parliament, which, I think, are by no means difficult to construe, and in the construction of which I entirely agree with the court below. The question is, is this Commissioners' Court a court of record? That depends entirely on the sections. By sect. 14, sub-sect. 5, of the Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 60) it is enacted that: "The court shall, for the purposes of the trial of a petition, have all the same powers and privileges which a judge may have on the trial of an election petition under the provisions of the Parliamentary Elections Act 1868." Then, when we turn to that Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 125), we see, by sect. 29, "on the trial of an election petition under this Act the judge shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have the same powers, jurisdiction, and authority, as a judge of one of the Superior Courts, and as a judge of assize and Nisi Prius, and the court held by him shall be a court of record." The court, being a court of record, it has all the same powers and privileges. That being so, this municipal election court, having all the privileges of a parliamentary court, which is a court of record, it appears to me to follow, as a matter of clear demonstration, that it is a court of record. We must determine that, therefore, adversely to the appellants. What have we here? We have plainly no record of any order that Mr. Dawson should pay the costs. Then it follows that the Commissioners of the Treasury are entitled to recover. But an issue was directed, and at the trial the jury found a very curious finding. The question was, "Was there a direction that those costs which are included in and are incident to the inquiry, namely, the remuneration, costs of the judge, officers, and so on, as well as the town clerk's costs, should be paid by Mr. Dawson?" The jury answered: "The jury is of opinion that there is sufficient evidence that Mr. Coleman did order the whole of the costs to be paid by Mr. Dawson and not by the borough of Maidenhead." If that verdict is unchallenged, it does appear to me that the jury were of opinion that Mr. Coleman did so order; but why it is put in that form I do not know. That is the substance of it. Then the only question is whether you can take oral evidence that the judge said something more than appears in his order. Of course the oral statement of a judge of a court of record does not make that oral statement an order; indeed, it was not contended before us that you could admit it as regards the entry of the judgment itself. But it was contended that there is power to amend a record in case of mistake. That view was confirmed upon a reference to some very ancient statutes. Then it was urged that the court ceases to exist when the barrister has made his certificate. I do not think that quite concludes the question. It may be that some court has the power to amend. I am by no means prepared to say that, looking to the words of some of the statutes, and looking to the powers conferred on the then Court of Common Pleas, and now transferred to the High Court, that the Common Pleas could not amend the record. It is not absolutely necessary to determine that, according to my opinion. The inclination of my opinion is that it could, considering the wording of the statute.

Considering the fact that the barrister ceases to be the court, which you must always take into consideration, and considering the necessity—not the absolute necessity, but the reasonable necessity—there is that somebody should have power to amend that record, which was erroneous, my impression is (I do not wish finally to decide it) that under the 21st section of the Act (35 & 36 Vict. c. 60) the Superior Court can do it. The words of sub-sect. 5 are these: "The Superior Court shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have the same powers, jurisdiction, and authority with reference to an election petition and the proceedings thereon as it would have if the petition were an ordinary cause within its jurisdiction." Those words seem to me to be sufficient, without giving a final decision upon it. I should not like to do that without having it more fully argued. My present impression is, that in the case of a mistake under this Act the suitor is not without remedy. But whether that be so or not, whether he has a remedy by an application to the High Court, or whether he has any remedy at all, it is clear to me that he has no remedy in the Appeal Court; it must be an original application to amend. There is one consideration to show that, namely, that Mr. Dawson would be a necessary party. The application would be to amend the record by inserting an order that Mr. Dawson should pay the costs. The court would not entertain it in the absence of notice to Mr. Dawson, because it is simply an application to make as against him an order to pay costs which up to that time he is not liable to pay. Besides that, I think it could not be made to the court below for the same reason; it must be an independent application. So that we could not say the court below was wrong in refusing it, if it did refuse it, which I rather think it did. Again, you could not make an application here, if not made to the court below, because this is only a Court of Appeal. But assuming the utmost in favour of the appellants, that they did make the application to the court below and that it was refused, then I am not at all sure that it was not properly refused, having regard to what is stated by Pollock, B. After discussing the question, he says: "For us to amend by this mere expression of intention"—that is, the intention in the letter of Mr. Coleman, so often referred to—"which is contrary to the two written orders signed by the barrister, appears to me to be not only without precedent, but it goes to destroy the very wholesome rule that the judgments and proceedings of a court of record must be proved by the record. For a judge to amend his own record, or for a court before which that record comes to amend it so as to be in accordance with the judge's notes, is reasonable and intelligible; but for another court to amend a record upon the suggestion of a judge's intention, expressed by a mere letter, which is not written in consequence of an application made by one of the parties to the proceedings, nor indeed written to either of the parties, or those who represent them, would lead to consequences tending to produce the greatest uncertainty and inconvenience:" (8 Q. B. Div. 353, 354.) I must say I am not able to dissent from that. I cannot help saying that this case was tried in a manner which is open to observation. It is not now a question of a new trial before us. It is open to observation, and I do not feel satisfied to act merely on the verdict of the jury on a trial so conducted with reference to the amendment. If the application to me were an original application to amend, I should certainly put the case in course for further inquiry. The action was an action to try what were the words uttered by the commissioner in giving judgment on a day long since past. There were two records in "writing," to use the word in its popular and not in its technical sense, of what he then said, made at the time; one was by the Government shorthand writer, whose duty it was to take a shorthand note of what was said, and which shorthand note did not contain the words in question, although there were, as I understand, some words on which an argument was founded, but not these words; and then there was the registrar of the court whose duty it was to make an accurate note of the judge's decision, and draw up the order, and that record does not contain such words. That record was not only drawn up by the registrar, but it was signed by the judge; therefore it was an authentic (I am not now using the word in a technical sense) and contemporaneous reduction to writing, made by a person whose duty it was to record accurately what took place, and like the other one, which is a similar document, does not contain the words in question. Against that several people were called, who did not appear to have made any notes in writing at the time, and whose recollection was as to words uttered by a judge a very long time before, and who said he did use the words. There was also a letter of the judge himself, who was not called. That being the state of matters, I must say, without saying the jury were wrong, I do not see the evidence. The witnesses may have had some extraordinary reason for recollecting accurately, at that distance of time, without a note, exactly what took place. I cannot say. But I must say that, if an application had been made to me to amend a record on such materials, I should have put it in train for further inquiry. That disposes, I think, of the application to amend. Then, to put it shortly; if there is no application to amend, the borough is liable to pay. The Act of Parliament makes the treasurer liable to pay out of the borough fund or rate. The substance of it is that the borough has to pay, and the borough has to get the money, if it has not got it, by means of a rate. The next point argued before us was that there is no authority in this Act of Parliament to enable a borough to make a retrospective rate. I agree it has been decided that under the terms of the 92nd section of the Municipal Corporations Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76) there is no such authority, but the question is whether that authority is not implied and conferred by the terms of the Act of 1872 taken in connection with that? I think it is. When you see that the treasurer is to pay out of the fund, and therefore the rate must or may be retrospective—in fact it must be in order to make this payment—of course Parliament must be intended to enact everything necessary to obtain the payment. Therefore where you see that, in order to obtain payment you must make a retrospective rate, it comes to this, that Parliament has given all the necessary power, by implication if not by express words, to carry out the purpose of the legislation, which is to secure payment of these moneys; and therefore whether or not, as a general rule, a retrospective rate is made, it could be made with a view to complying with the terms of this Act of Parliament. That being so, I think that contention fails. The next question argued by Mr. Matthews was as to the matter of discretion. That depended on two points; one was that the original order or certificate ought not to have been cancelled, and that the second order or certificate was not one which could be acted upon. But I understood him to use that as an additional argument as to the exercise of discretion, and not as an absolute argument, that in no case could a peremptory mandamus issue by reason of the cancellation. At any rate, either way, as the objection is not well founded it does not matter in what way the argument was used. First of all, I am not convinced that the Commissioners of the Treasury could not cancel the certificate or order. I do not see why they could not if they made a mistake. It is not a judgment. I do not see why they could not recall it upon reasonable grounds, or if a mistake were made. It appears to me therefore it is not right to say that the mere withdrawal of it prevented their issuing a fresh certificate for the same sum or for two sums. That I think gets rid of the whole question. But without that I do not think the mere altering of the date, supposing the first certificate were valid and could not be cancelled, to issue a second certificate at a subsequent date, repeating the same sum, would substantially affect the certificate; it might lead to a recital in the mandamus or the writ of the original certificate of the cancellation, and the issuing of the second, but if in substance it came to a certificate for that sum, the fact of the first being treated as cancelled does not appear to me to affect the necessary result; the money is still payable, and payment may be enforced by mandamus. I now come to the last point, that is, that the acts of the commissioners have been such as to disentitle them to the order in our judgment. The first act relied upon was delay, the effect of which has been that, after the issuing of the certificate, the town council made arrangements, and afterwards it was returned and a second certificate was made. It was contended that the ratepayers had changed to a considerable extent, and therefore it was said by reason of the delay of the commissioners, and by reason of their mistake in cancelling the first certificate and issuing a second, the people who would have to pay the rate under the second certificate would not be the same people who would have had to pay it under the first. Supposing that were so, is it a reason for refusing the mandamus? Nobody supposes, should think, that the ratepayers would remain unchanged. This is a mere accident. A good many months may have elapsed between the commencement of the inquiry and its final termination, and a good many of the ratepayers may have left the place, and a good many new people have come into the place, even if there was only one certificate issued. The ratepayers must take their chance of these things. You cannot administer abstract justice in this manner and weigh the liabilities of people with such nicety as these considerations involve. The substance of the matter is that the borough is to pay, and the inhabitants of the borough are, if necessary, to contribute to the borough rate. There is no real injustice in it, and there is no equity between the former and the present ratepayers that will throw

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. V. THE MAYOR, &C., OF THE BOROUGH OF MAIDENHEAD, &C.

[CT. OF APP.]

this burthen necessarily and exclusively on the former to the prejudice of the latter. There is one matter, upon the discretion being subject to appeal, which I ought to say a word about. I think, whatever the law was before the passing of the Judicature Act, the discretion is now subject to appeal by reason of the words of the Act of 1873, s. 19, which says that every order of the High Court shall be subject to appeal, with certain exceptions. But I think also the rule applies that on the question of discretion it is not so easy to succeed on appeal as it is on the question of right. It has been said over and over again, on matters of discretion, that the court requires a very strong and plain case to over-rule the judge's decision in the court below. In this case I think the discretion was rightly and correctly exercised. But if I had any reasonable doubt on the matter I should have still held that the Court of Appeal is not to exercise a discretion in the same way as if it were a court of first instance, but it must be satisfied that the discretion was so wrongly exercised as to cause injustice. Certainly if my opinion had not been that the discretion had not been rightly exercised I should have been clearly of opinion that there was no such error as to alter it. Upon these grounds I think that the careful and elaborate judgment of Baron Pollock was right, and this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

BARR, L.J.—In this case there is a mandamus issued to the treasurer and the borough of Maidenhead to repay to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury certain expenses which they have been obliged to pay in respect of an inquiry into a municipal election. In answer to that mandamus a reply was put in which raised certain issues. Those issues were tried before Mellor, J., and upon those issues the jury found as a fact that at the hearing before Mr. Coleman of the petition he did order that Mr. Dawson, one of the candidates, should pay the expenses which are now in question. No motion was made to set aside that finding of the jury on the ground that it was a verdict against the evidence; therefore, in my opinion, as at present advised, we are bound to take that to be a correct finding of the facts. But that is a finding on the issues taken on the return to a mandamus. Upon that finding it is argued on behalf of the defendants, the Corporation of Maidenhead, that, assuming Mr. Coleman could have ordered, at the hearing before him, that Mr. Dawson should pay the expenses, it follows as a necessary consequence that the borough is not bound to pay them at all. I will, for the purpose of this discussion, assume that the second proposition is true, that if it was an order that Mr. Dawson should pay the expenses thereupon the borough should not, although I do not think it necessary to decide that point on the present occasion. It may be hereafter contended that if there be an order that one of the candidates should pay these expenses and he should fail to do so, nevertheless the borough may be bound to pay them. It is not necessary to decide this. An objection is taken that notwithstanding the finding of the jury that Mr. Coleman did order Mr. Dawson to pay the expenses, yet it cannot be held as a matter of law that he did make such an order, because it was alleged that his court was a court of record, and therefore the judgment which he gave must be a judgment in writing, and on the true construction of it there is no order that Mr. Dawson should pay the costs, and therefore the jury were not at liberty to find that by parol or otherwise the commissioner had made such an order. Against that it was urged that this court of the commissioner at the time he held it was not a court of record. In my opinion the court of the commissioner was a court of record. It appears to me that the 5th subsection of the 14th section of the Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act 1872 makes the court of the commissioner sent down to try cases under that Act the same kind of court as the court of a judge who is sent down under the Parliamentary Corrupt Practices Act to try a petition. I do not think it could be contended that the court of such a judge is not a court of record. Therefore it follows that the court held by Mr. Coleman was a court of record. It is a necessary consequence of its being a court of record that its judgment must be in writing, and of the nature of a record. It seems to me, therefore, notwithstanding the finding of the jury, that in fact Mr. Coleman did order; that is, in other words, he did so by parol, nevertheless his certificate or judgment can only be legally looked for in the record or writing which was the judgment of that court, and the jury cannot find contrary to the legal construction of that judgment. The only way in which the finding of the jury upon the fact can be admissible would be for the purpose of amending that written record, if it could be amended. But I am of opinion, for several reasons, that the record could not upon this trial be amended. In the first place that record of Mr. Coleman's was not merely a record drawn up by an officer of the court, it was a record signed by himself. It must be taken, therefore, that it was his own record; it seems to me clear that Mr. Coleman could not amend it. The moment that he has made that order, and has left the place, it seems to me that he is functus officio, he is no longer the court; he himself could not amend the record however the mistake had been made. I think it is equally clear that no order of his made later on directing these costs to be paid by Mr. Dawson could possibly avail. He was entirely functus officio. It may be that if that record had been brought before the High Court by way of appeal—if there is an appeal from such a decision—or upon motion, that record might have been treated as a record of the High Court, and they might have the power of amending it, and might, upon due evidence, have amended it. But it seems to me that in the present case where the trial is upon the issues taken on the return to a mandamus to enforce that judgment, neither the High Court nor this court can amend the record. These are proceedings taken upon the record to enforce the record, not proceedings in which that record is questioned or can be questioned. It seems to me that in these proceedings the judgment or record could not be amended by any court. If in these proceedings it might have been amended it might have been difficult to say, upon the finding of the jury, that the court ought not to have amended. If the High Court had had power to amend it and had declined, then I think we should have also power to amend it upon this appeal. If that record could not be amended, as I think it could not, and that record does not make Mr. Dawson the person to pay, then it is conceded that it is the borough which in the first instance ought to have been made to pay by the commissioner. But it is said that the borough cannot now by mandamus be made to pay the sum which the court is requested to order them to pay. I certainly understood it to be argued that it could not—for this reason, that there was a certificate given by the Commissioners of the Treasury, but that that certificate was cancelled, or was assumed to be cancelled, and the commissioners had no right to cancel that, and therefore had no right to give a second certificate. Then it was said that if they have no right to give a second certificate this mandamus could not be applied to the first certificate, because this mandamus when it was issued did not ask that the first certificate should be enforced, but asked that the second should. The reason why it was urged that the first certificate could not be cancelled was, it was said to be in the nature of an award or a judgment. If it was in the nature of an award, or a judgment, after that award or judgment was made it is obvious that the persons who made either could not cancel them. But it seems to me that the certificate is certainly not an award, and it seems to me that it was not a judgment; and I agree with Pollock, B. and with the Lord Chief Justice, and with Manisty, J., who does not dissent upon this part of the case, that the certificate is neither an award nor a judgment; it is a mere ministerial act. There is no judicial discretion exercised about the contents of the certificate; there is no judicial inquiry previously as to the contents of it. The certificate merely comes to this: such and such amounts, according to a scale allowed by certain judges, has been found to be due to the commissioner who held this court and to other officers; we have paid, or are liable to pay, the amount, and we certify to you that it is so-and-so. That does not appear to me to be a judicial act, or an award, or anything like the one or the other. I am of opinion therefore that the Commissioners of the Treasury are at liberty to cancel any such certificate and to issue another, and that they may do so whether the mistake as to the first certificate is one made by themselves or by anybody else. There is nothing to prevent them from issuing a second certificate. If that be true, the second certificate in this case was a valid certificate, and one which might be enforced by this mandamus if nothing else occurs to the contrary. But it was said that the High Court exercising the powers of the old court of Queen's Bench ought not to have issued this mandamus on account of injustice and hardship to certain persons if it did issue it, and for another reason, which was that it would order the authorities of the borough to do that which was an illegal thing for them to do. I will take that which I have just stated second first. It was said that this mandamus orders them to make a rate, that if that rate is made it is a retrospective rate, and a retrospective rate is illegal. Now a good deal was said about the doctrine of making a retrospective rate. I apprehend that, as a general rule, both with regard to parishes and with regard to corporations, they cannot make what is called a retrospective rate. But the question here is whether for the purpose of this mandamus the Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act itself does not give the corporation a power and impose upon them the duty, if they cannot otherwise pay these expenses, to make a rate in order to pay them, and to make a retrospective rate. It seems to me that sect. 22 at the end of it does direct that they should pay out of a rate, and it seems to me it is a true proposition that wherever the Legislature says a payment is to be made out of a rate, and where it is a necessary implication that that rate must be retrospective, then the order to pay out of the rate carries with it an order to make the rate and to make a retrospective rate. It seems to me the expenses of such an inquiry as this cannot be ascertained, and it cannot be known whether there should be any payment out of a rate at all, until the inquiry is closed; and that therefore when the Legislature says that that is to be paid out of the rate or out of the borough fund, it seems to me that, if there is no borough fund, and no rate existing at the time, it follows, as a necessary consequence, the Legislature intended that a rate should be made either to fill up the borough fund, or for the purpose of paying these expenses. Therefore a power to make a retrospective rate is given by this very statute. Then with regard to the discretion, it was only put upon the ground of hardship which had occurred by the delay of the commissioners in asking for this mandamus. It seems to me that there was no unreasonable delay in sending in the second certificate. The truth is that the necessity of cancelling the first certificate and of issuing the second certificate were the results of the mistake made by Mr. Coleman, the commissioner, in drawing up his record in a way which, if he intended to make Mr. Dawson pay the costs, did not carry out his intention. It was by the natural result of his mistake. Then it does not seem to me that there was any unreasonable delay in discovering that mistake and issuing the second certificate. The delay after that was the delay of the corporation itself. Of course, after the commissioners had sent in their second certificate, they did not at once ask for a mandamus. They left a certain time to the authorities in the borough to find the money, either by making a rate or otherwise. It does not seem to me there had been an unreasonable delay in asking for the mandamus. If there had been an unreasonable delay in asking for the mandamus—if, for instance, they had held over the application for four or five years—I should have thought the High Court in their discretion would have certainly said (and they would have had a discretion) “after so long a delay as this we will not assist you by a mandamus.” Then it was said that, whatever the court had done, there was no appeal upon this matter of discretion of granting a mandamus, to this court. I must repeat my view, although it does not, I know, accord with the views or perhaps with the wishes, of many judges, that the Legislature meant in the Judicature Act to give an appeal against orders of the High Court, even though those orders are discretionary orders. Therefore, if there had been an undue delay in asking for this mandamus, and the court had exercised, in our opinion, a wrong discretion, we should have been bound to entertain that appeal. But as I think there was no error at all in the way in which the court did exercise it, that does not come before us. I am of opinion that the judgment of all the judges of the Divisional Court, in all points in which they agree, was right, and that on the only point in which Manisty, J. differed from the Lord Chief Justice and Pollock,

B., the Lord Chief Justice and Pollock, B. took the right view.

COTTON, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. After the judgments which have been delivered I shall only deal shortly with one or two points raised in this case. The main point here is that there has been an order made by the election judge, which leaves these costs to be paid by the respondent. I will assume that this is a sufficient defence, and also assume, to which I agree, that the court was a court of record, and therefore this order must be in writing, and his order does not order these costs to be paid. That is undoubted. But I will only add a word on the question as to whether this court can amend the order. Now that is the question which arises here. But I must say that on the facts before us I should not be inclined, if one had the power, to make any order for amending the written order or making a new order of the election judge. This differs essentially from the case which was so much relied upon of Williams v. Lord Bagot (4 D. & R. 315). In that case the court had the order of the inferior court up before it, as before a court of error, for the purpose of deciding whether there was error in that order. Of course, when the order was before the court for that purpose, the court must have the power to see that the court below had in fact returned to it the order which in fact it conveyed. Therefore it was right, when it was suggested that the order before it was not the order in fact made by the court, that the court should send it back for the purpose of directing the judge of the court below to send to them what in fact was his order. Here the order of the election judge does not come before this court in any way except incidentally; it is a mere matter of evidence adduced on behalf of the appellants for the purpose of showing that the court ought not to decide that they are liable under the Act of Parliament, because they say, not that in this proceeding something has been done which makes that order wrong, but that as a matter of evidence the judge has ordered somebody else to pay these expenses, and therefore it only comes before the court incidentally. I am of opinion that in such a proceeding neither the court below nor this court could make any alteration in the order, even if the facts authorised an alteration to be made upon an application properly made to a proper tribunal. Then it is said the Treasury cancelled the first certificate, but that was merely a certificate of the fact that the Treasury had paid the expenses mentioned in the certificate, and considered them proper expenses; it is not a judicial order, but only a certificate of the court of the amount which has been ascertained, and the liability of the corporation to pay which is derived, not from the certificate but from the statute, and it is a demand for repayment. The Treasury had power to withdraw the first certificate and to issue the second certificate. There is then a legal liability on the corporation of the borough; but it is urged that the court will exercise a discretion before it issues a mandamus. That is so; but the order made directing the mandamus to issue is an order, which by the Judicature Act is made subject to appeal. No doubt this court would be slow to interfere with the discretion of the court below, but that discretion must be exercised on regular rules; the discretion to be exercised is that kind of discretion which the Court of Chancery would exercise, not on interlocutory proceedings, but at the hearing of the cause, when it had to decide whether the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction or any other extraordinary relief, that is, relief given only on equitable principles and by the old Court of Chancery. This is really a proceeding for the purpose of giving a person relief to which it has been ascertained that he is entitled, and yet we are asked to deprive him of his rights. It would require a very strong case to cause us to say that the plaintiffs should not have what on the ascertained facts appear to be their rights. In Nicoll v. Allen (31 L. J. 283, Q. B.) the plaintiff recovered damages on the ground that the bridge was out of repair, and the question was whether he ought to have any additional or extraordinary relief. Here, on the contrary, it is not a question whether a mandamus should be granted for the purpose of giving something other than damages, but a proceeding to compel the defendants to put themselves in funds for the purpose of paying damages. It is not a proceeding to give something different from damages, such as specific performance or an injunction; strong reasons would therefore be required to prevent the court from granting a mandamus. The only reason urged here is delay. As to this point I agree that there is not sufficient in the conduct on the part of the Commissioners of the Treasury to enable us to say, as a matter of discretion, that we ought to abstain from granting a mandamus.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for the prosecution, Hare and Fell.

Solicitor for the defendants, G. J. Mander, for B. A. Ward, Maidenhead.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Thursday, July 6, 1882.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., Sir J. HANNEN, and LINDLEY, L.J.)

THE GUARDIANS OF THE MANSFIELD UNION v. WRIGHT. (a)

Rate collector's bond—Default of collector—Loss to the parish—Negligence of overseers.

The sureties to a rate collector's bond are liable to refund to the guardians of the union the amount of any loss incurred by a parish in their union through the default of the collector to duly collect the rate; and the fact that there has been laches on the part of the overseers of the parish does not affect the right of the guardians to recover.

THE plaintiffs, the guardians of the poor of the Mansfield Union, appointed J. B. Carter in March 1876 to be collector of the poor rates for the parish of South Normanton in the county of Derby.

J. B. Carter, and the defendant J. Wright, and V. H. Radford, by a bond dated the 16th May 1876, became jointly and severally bound to the plaintiffs in the sum of 100*l*. The condition of the bond was, that J. B. Carter should faithfully and honestly perform the duties of collector of rates, and diligently collect the rates, and duly, punctually and correctly account for them, and from time to time pay to the person or persons entitled to receive the same all moneys collected and received by him.

The plaintiffs alleged that J. B. Carter had appropriated to his own use moneys received by virtue of his office between April 1877 and Jan. 1878 to the amount of not less than 84*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*, that he had not diligently collected the rates, that he had absconded in Feb. 1879, and that, in consequence of his failure, rates to the amount of at least 15*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, which he could have collected, had not been received by the plaintiffs, and they could not recover the same. They claimed 100*l.*

(a) Reported by W. O. BISS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant alleged in his statement of defence that, with regard to the 15*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, if damage had been sustained, it was damage which might and would have been prevented had the plaintiffs used ordinary diligence in collecting the rates or appointing another person to collect the same within a reasonable time after J. B. Carter's default. The defendant further alleged that the plaintiffs were guilty of laches in allowing the rates to remain uncollected and the duties of the office of collector to remain unperformed, and that he was thereby discharged from his suretyship in respect of such alleged damage.

The defendant paid 84*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* into court.

At the trial of the action at Nottingham, on the 26th July 1881, it was ordered by the court, with the consent of the parties, that the jury should be discharged, and that the issues of fact should be referred to Edmund Lumley, Esq., barrister-at-law, to take evidence and report thereon to the court.

The material portions of the report made by Mr. Lumley were as follows:

I have heard the evidence of the witnesses called on behalf of both parties and examined the rate-books, receipts, correspondence, and other documents put in evidence, and I find, with regard to the issues of fact raised by the pleadings, as follows:

Certain rates for the relief of the poor were made for the parish of South Normanton in the plaintiffs' union for which the said John Bell Carter was collector, which rates it was his duty to collect, viz.: A rate made in April 1877, a rate made in June 1877, a rate made in November 1877, and a rate made in February 1878. The rate-books were made out and kept by John Bell Carter.

It appeared from the summary at the end of the rate-book for April 1877, that the sum of 15*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.*, recoverable arrears of that rate, remained uncollected at the time of balancing that book; from the summary for June 1877, that the sum of 12*l.* 4*s.* 1*d.*, recoverable arrears of that rate and the April rate, remained uncollected; from the summary for November 1877, that the sum of 137*l.* 9*s.* 9*d.*, recoverable arrears of that rate and the previous rates remained uncollected; and it appeared from the summary for February 1878 that the sum of 201*l.* 7*s.* 9*d.*, recoverable arrears of that and the previous rates, remained uncollected at the time of balancing that book.

After investigating in detail each of the items specified in the particulars with regard to which evidence was laid before me, I find that John Bell Carter did not diligently collect the said rates, more especially the rates made in June and November 1877 and February 1878; and I find that, by reason of his not collecting the rates diligently, damage was occasioned to the extent of at least 15*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.* (in addition to the sum of 84*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*), as alleged in the statement of claim, and that, in consequence of such neglect of John Bell Carter diligently to collect the rates, poor rates amounting to not less than the said sum of 15*l.* 10*s.* 6*d.*, which John Bell Carter ought to have collected, have not been received and cannot be recovered, and so are lost to the parish.

No evidence was given before me to show that the attention of the plaintiffs was called to the neglect of the collector diligently to collect the rates prior to a communication addressed to them by the Local Government Board, dated the 30th Aug. 1878, calling their attention to the fact that the auditor had, after the audit for the half-year ending Lady-day 1878 of the accounts of the said collector, reported unfavourably with regard to the state of his accounts and his mode of performing his duties. John Bell Carter resigned his office of collector in September 1878, and left Normanton in or about February 1879. A new collector was appointed in October 1878. The overseers, who were called as witnesses, admitted and I find as a fact that, previously to the resignation of the collector, they left the collection of the rates to the collector and did not see from time to time that he got in the arrears of the same.

After the resignation of the collector, the overseers of the parish repeatedly applied to him for the delivery to them of his books. They did not obtain the books from him till the end of December 1878, when he was ordered to deliver up the same by the auditor at the Christmas audit 1878. I find that, previously to that date, the overseers were not aware that there had been embezzlement on his part, though they knew at or about the time of his resignation that he had not kept his books satisfactorily to the auditor.

In January 1879 the overseers began to go into the accounts of the late collector and to make inquiries in the parish for the purpose of ascertaining what sums had been collected and of collecting the arrears of the rates, one of the overseers personally going round the parish for that purpose. They took several months in doing this, and it was urged before me that they or the guardians ought to have employed assistance for the purpose.

So far as it is a question for me, I find, with regard to the steps taken by the overseers after they received the books from the collector, that all reasonable diligence was used by the overseers to collect the arrears, and that, considering the circumstances of difficulty arising from the dishonesty of the collector and the irregularity of his accounts and that the arrears were of long standing and consisted of a great number of small amounts due from a fluctuating population of poor persons, as much of the arrears of the said rates was collected as was then reasonably practicable.

I have stated the facts specifically, but if and so far as they raise questions of fact for me, and so far as, any other ground for the allegation against the plaintiffs of negligence or laches conducing to the damage is concerned, I find that there was not any negligence or laches on the part of the plaintiffs, in respect of the collection of the said rates or otherwise, as alleged in the statement of defence.

E. LUMLEY.

On Aug. 6, 1881, the case came before Watkin Williams, J., on further consideration.

Alexander Glen, for the plaintiffs, referred to

Dawson v. Laves, 22 L. T. Rep. O. S. 254; 23 L. J. 434, Ch.;

Mactaggart v. Watson, 10 Bli. 618, 625; 3 Cl. & F. 525.

Morton Daniel, for the defendant, referred to 8 & 9 Viet. c. 101, s. 32;

Wulf v. Jay, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 118; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 756;

Polak v. Everett, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 128; 1 Q. B. Div. 669, 675.

WATKIN WILLIAMS, J.—If Mr. Daniel can show that this report is not satisfactory and that Mr. Lumley ought to add a postscript containing the evidence, I might send it back to him; otherwise he ought to have moved to upset it, and cannot question it now. I decline to hear what was proved before Mr. Lumley, and I will not review his report in any way. This was an action upon a bond for 100*l.* given by John Bell Carter, John Wright, and Vaughan Hobbs Radford, to the guardians of the poor of the Mansfield union for the faithful and diligent execution of his duties by Carter as a rate collector. The statement of claim alleges that the conditions of the bond had been broken. That being the case, it is only the actual damage which was sustained that can be recovered. That damage resulted from the following alleged breaches, viz., embezzlement by Carter of 84*l.* and a neglect on his part to collect rates, which made up the balance to 100*l.*; 84*l.* odd has been paid into court, and the only question is as to the remainder.

Mr. Daniel makes two answers to the claim. The first is, that there was no breach of the conditions of the bond at all, because it was the duty of the collector to observe the orders and obey the directions of the guardians and overseers in collecting the rates; that the overseers left the collection to him, and he therefore neglected no orders, and there was therefore no breach. But, in my opinion, he was a public officer, whose duty it was to collect the rates; and that branch of the conditions of the bond was undoubtedly broken. The second answer made is that, assuming there was a breach of the conditions, no damages can be recovered except those which were occasioned by the default of the collector. That is perfectly clear, and if it is made out that the collector could not have collected the rates and that no real loss occurred, then no damages could have been recovered. From the nature of the case and the necessity of examining the rate collection accounts in detail, it was impracticable to try the case before a jury, and the parties agreed to refer it to Mr. Lumley, who has great experience in these matters. He has reported that there was neglect on the part of the collector, but no neglect on the part of the guardians, and that the loss of the 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ odd has not been occasioned by any omission on the part of the overseers since they discovered the default of the collector. I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover, and the verdict and judgment must be entered for the plaintiffs.

The defendant appealed.

Morton Daniel for the appellant.—In omitting to see that the collector passed his accounts, the plaintiffs were guilty of laches. A surety has a right to expect that the guardians will act according to law and discharge their duties:

Macaggart v. Watson, 10 Bli. 618, 625; 3 Cl. & F. 525.

Carter could only collect the rates by the directions of the guardians. [JESSEL, M.R.—If people made default in paying their rates, it was his duty to report them and get directions. The finding is against you that the rates were lost by his default.] The court has power to deal with the report and the whole matter under sect. 57 of the Judicature Act 1873 and Order XXXVI., r. 34. [JESSEL, M.R.—You are bound by sect. 58; the report is equivalent to the verdict of a jury.] By the order of reference the referee was to report on the evidence. [JESSEL, M.R.—No; "thereupon" refers to the issues of fact. Under sect. 56 a particular question may be referred for inquiry, but that is not what was done here. The issues of fact were referred. A report under sect. 56 requires confirmation, but one under sect. 58 can only be set aside, like a verdict, on the ground that it is against the weight of evidence.] The evidence did not justify the finding that there was a loss, and I ask for leave to move to set aside the report as being against the weight of evidence. [JESSEL, M.R.—On the present occasion you have to show that Williams, J. was wrong on the materials before him.] What then are the duties of the guardians and overseers? The collector has to collect and proceed against defaulters under their direction. The guardians only incurred damages resulting from their breaches, and such breaches could not have happened if the overseers had done their duty as prescribed by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, ss. 32, 33. The money was payable to the overseers. The guardians sue as trustees for them, and have no greater rights than if the overseers themselves sued; the loss arose through their default, and the surety is discharged. There was actual embezzlement in all the cases in which strong expressions were used as to the liability of sureties, and the surety is responsible for the honesty of the collector. [JESSEL, M.R. read the observations of Lord Brougham in Macaggart v. Watson (ubi sup.): "The error in the present case arises in supposing that any want of care on the party's side, in making the trustee do that which the surety had covenanted that he should do, was like a postponement of the surety's equities or diminution of his rights at law."] Story's Equity Jurisprudence, s. 325, is in the defendant's favour. [JESSEL, M.R.—That is a defective statement taken from Watts v. Shuttleworth (7 H. & N. 353; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 58; 29 L. J. 229, Ex.), abridged so as to become inaccurate.] A surety is discharged where, in consequence of neglect on the creditor's part, a security, to the benefit of which a surety is entitled, is lost or is not properly perfected:

Strange v. Fooks, 4 Giff. 408, 412;

Wulff v. Jay, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 118; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 756, 765.

[JESSEL, M.R.—The very point was decided against you by Lord Kingsdown in Black v. Ottoman Bank (6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 763; 8 Jur. N. S. 801); and Creighton v. Rankin (7 Cl. & F. 325) is also in your way.] That again was a case of embezzlement. It was not a case on the present point.

Alexander Glen, for the plaintiffs, was not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—This is an appeal from a decision of Williams, J. in an action against a surety who had entered into a bond for the due discharge by a collector of rates of his duties as such collector. The collector embezzled some of the rates and neglected to collect others. The defendant did not dispute his liability as regarded the sums embezzled, but he insists that he is not liable as regards the sums omitted to be collected, for that the overseers ought to have looked more diligently into the proceedings of the collector. It was urged that the guardians are in fact suing on behalf of the overseers, to whom the sum recovered is payable, and are therefore not entitled to any greater rights than if it was the overseers who were suing. It was urged that the overseers could not sue because the amount lost was lost by their default. The referee states in his report facts very unfavourable to the defendant. He finds that the collector's default caused the loss of certain sums payable for rates. It is quite consistent with the report that, if the collector had applied for these rates, he would have received them, and even if there were reason to doubt the accuracy of the finding that they were lost owing to the neglect of the collector, which reason I do not see, we still should not be able to go behind the report. Then as to the right to sue, I cannot agree that the guardians are in the same position as the overseers. The people who lose if this money cannot be recovered are the other ratepayers, and the guardians sue on their behalf. The measure of damages is not what the obligees named in the bond lose, but what is lost to the rates. I am of opinion, therefore, that the appeal fails. I am further of opinion that it would have failed even if the overseers had been the plaintiffs. The case made by the defendant is that, if the overseers had duly called on the collector to render his accounts, the loss would not have occurred. But mere negligence on the part of the obligee does not discharge a surety, and the mere omission to call on the collector to account cannot exonerate the defendant.

Sir JAMES HANNEN.—I shall confine myself to one point, viz., whether the guardians are affected by the alleged laches of the overseers. I am of opinion that they are not. The guardians appointed the collector, and then the bond was given to them. They are not answerable for the conduct of the overseers. The report is inconsistent with the view that they were guilty of any laches. It finds that the money was lost by the default of the collector, and that it was not shown that the guardians knew anything of his negligence till the 30th Aug., and his resignation took place in the next month. The report of the referee, which stands on the same footing as the verdict of a jury, is decisive against the defendant. Whether, if the overseers had been the plaintiffs, their laches would have been a defence, is a point which we have not, in my opinion, sufficient materials to decide. It is clear that mere passive negligence on the part of the obligee does not discharge a surety. It is shown, however, by Watts v. Shuttleworth (ubi sup.), that a neglect of duty by the employer may in some circumstances be set up as a defence, and if the action had been by the overseers and it was shown that they had neglected a duty imposed upon them by statute, I think the principle of that case would have applied. I rest my judgment on this, that the guardians are not responsible for the negligence of the overseers.

LINDLEY, J.—I am of the same opinion. The bond is given to the guardians, the action is by them, and no negligence is imputed to them. The collector was guilty of default in two respects; he embezzled some moneys, and allowed others to be lost by not collecting them. It is urged that the action is in substance an action by the guardians as trustees for the overseers. I think that is a mistake, and that there is no ground for saying that only nominal damages can be given because they suffer no individual loss. They sue, in my opinion, as trustees for the parish. I do not think that the facts are sufficiently before us to enable us to form an opinion how the case would stand if the overseers had been obligees and plaintiffs; nor is it necessary for the decision of the case that we should form any opinion on that point.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Hardisty and Rhodes.
Solicitors for the defendant, Stevens and Co.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Dec. 19, 1882, and Jan. 11, 1883.

(Before FIELD, J.)

BRADLAUGH v. ERSKINE. (a)

Parliament—Power to exclude Member—Assault—Justification—Jurisdiction of Courts of Law.

To a claim for damages for an assault committed on plaintiff, a member of Parliament, whilst attempting to enter the House of Commons for the purpose of taking his seat, the defendant pleaded in justification thereof that the House had previously resolved and ordered that the defendant (one of its officers) should "remove the plaintiff from the House until he should engage not further to disturb the proceedings of the House," and that, acting in pursuance of such order, the defendant resisted and removed the plaintiff.

Held, on demurrer, that the plea was good.

Stockdale v. Hansard (9 Ad. & E. 1) and Burdett v. Abbot (14 East 1) commented on.

THIS was a demurrer to a statement of defence. The action was brought by the plaintiff as member of Parliament for the town of Northampton against the Serjeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons for an assault committed by the defendant in forcibly preventing the plaintiff from entering the House of Commons.

The statement of claim alleged:

1. That on the 9th April 1881 the plaintiff was duly elected by the burgesses of the borough of Northampton one of their members in the Commons House of Parliament.

2. That the defendant, at the time of committing the grievances hereinafter mentioned, was the Serjeant-at-Arms of the said Commons House of Parliament.

3. That on the 3rd August 1881 the plaintiff went to the outer door of the said House quietly and peaceably for the purpose of entering the House and taking his seat as being a duly elected member entitled to sit in the said House.

4. The defendant was, together with a number of policemen and other persons, standing outside the said doors, and such policemen and other persons acted as hereinafter mentioned, in obedience to the orders and in accordance with the direction of the defendant.

5. The defendant thereupon, and the said policemen and other persons, assaulted and beat the plaintiff, whereby he became sick and ill and suffered great pain for a long time, and incurred great expense in medical and surgical attendance.

The statement of defence alleged:

1. That the defendant is the Deputy Serjeant-at-Arms and an officer of the House of Commons, and as such is bound to obey and carry out the lawful orders of the said House and of the Speaker of the said House, to act as deputy or assistant Serjeant-at-Arms of the said House, and in his absence to do all such things that the Serjeant-at-Arms might or could do.

2. On the 10th May 1881, while Parliament was in full Session, the House of Commons, having duly considered certain matters and things that had arisen and occurred before it, duly resolved and ordered in relation thereto, that the Serjeant-at-Arms do remove the said plaintiff from the said House until he shall engage not further to disturb the proceedings of the said House.

3. That afterwards, on the 3rd Aug. 1881, while Parliament was in full Session, and the House of Commons was sitting, the plaintiff not having engaged not further to disturb the proceedings of the said House, and while the order aforesaid was in full force and effect, attempted to force his way into the said House and assaulted the

Q.B. Div.]

BRADLAUGH v. ERSKINE.

[Q.B. Div.]

defendant, then duly acting as the Deputy Serjeant-at-Arms, as aforesaid. Whereupon, for the purpose of preventing the plaintiff from forcing his way into the said House, and for the purpose of preventing noise and disturbance at the doors of the said House and within the precincts thereof, and of preventing the proceedings of the said House from being disturbed, the defendant, duly acting as Deputy Serjeant-at-Arms as aforesaid, together with other persons in the said House whom he called to his assistance, acting in obedience to the orders of the said House, and by virtue of the authority vested in the defendant as such Deputy Serjeant-at-Arms, and by the orders of the said House, and in order to carry out the said orders, resisted and removed the plaintiff as he lawfully might for the causes aforesaid.

4. That the House, having duly considered all the circumstances of the case and heard the report of the Speaker, thereupon resolved as follows: That this House approves the action of Mr. Speaker and of the officers of this House acting under his orders.

5. Save as aforesaid defendant denies each and all the paragraphs 3 and 4 of the statement of claim.

To this statement of defence the plaintiff demurred.

Plaintiff, in person, in support of the demurrer.

—It must be taken to be admitted on the pleadings that I was, at the time of the happening of the assault alleged, a duly elected member of the House of Commons, and entitled to sit and entitled to every privilege lawfully enjoyable by a member of Parliament. It must also be taken to be admitted that the assault alleged was committed outside the House of Commons. It is not alleged in the statement of defence that the order of the 10th May 1881 was a lawful order of the House. It is for the court to examine into the nature of the order and into the matters immediately preceding the order, and upon which it is based, to see whether the order is such a one as the House of Commons has authority to make. It is necessary, therefore, that such matters should have been set out. The court is bound to inquire what was the matter considered before it gives any force to this order as a defence. In Reg. v. Pate (2 Raym. 1114) Holt, L.C.J. said that when a matter of privilege comes in question in Westminster Hall, the judges must determine it as they did in Binyon's case—that is to say, they must determine whether the House has the privilege it claims of making the order relied upon as a defence. I admit that the House has unlimited power to commit for any contempt it chooses to allege. If the House had said that I had committed contempt and had ordered imprisonment, I admit I should not have had the right to ask this court to go behind the consideration of the House. Paragraph 3 of the statement of defence says that while the said order was in force, the defendant did so-and-so, but it does not state what the order was. [FIELD, J.—It clearly must be the order of the 10th May.] Then that order does not authorise the defendant outside the House to assault me, admittedly a person duly elected to Parliament. The House had no right to prevent me from entering the House. The House might, when I am within its walls, order me into arrest, if it is displeased with me. It may also suspend me from the service of the House for a limited period for disobedience to the rules of Parliament. But it has no power to stop me entering the House. What is the effect of stopping me? The return is rendered nugatory and the franchise made useless. The duty of every member of Parliament, and the right and privilege of every voter is thereby interfered with. Every person returned as a member of Parliament is bound to attend the House. In Coke's Institutes, vol. 4, chap. 1, it is laid down, "Every lord, spiritual and temporal, and every knight, citizen, and burgess, shall upon summons come to Parliament, except he can reasonably and honestly excuse himself, or else he shall be amerced." The right and privilege of a member duly elected has two foundations: First, the right and privilege of the electors to be duly served in Parliament by a man whom they have duly returned; and, secondly, that of the person elected. [He cited passages from the judgment of Holt, C.J. in Ashby v. White (2 Lord Raym. at pp. 950-58.) I consider that the court has the right and duty to inquire whether the House of Commons had any jurisdiction to make the order of the 10th May 1881. In Burdett v. Abbott (14 East, 1) which was an action of trespass by a member of Parliament against the Speaker of the House of Commons for forcibly entering into the plaintiff's house and arresting him there, and for imprisoning him in the Tower, the defendant justified himself on the ground that Parliament was sitting during the period of the trespasses complained of, and had resolved that a certain letter (which the plaintiff admitted having published) was libellous and scandalous, and reflected on the rights and privileges of the House of Commons, and that the plaintiff had thereby been guilty of a breach of the privileges of the House, the House had ordered that the plaintiff should be imprisoned for such conduct. Further, that the defendant, in pursuance of such resolution and order, and according to the laws and customs of Parliament, did commit, &c., the acts complained of. It was there expressly pleaded that the order was made according to the "laws and custom of Parliament." There is no such allegation here. [FIELD, J.—I think that is sufficiently shown by the insertion of the words "duly considered."] Next, what was the order of the 10th May? It was an order that was either executed on that day, or it was not. The order does not say that the defendant shall take steps to prevent the plaintiff from re-entering the House. The words of the order are, "Do remove the plaintiff from the House until he shall engage not further to disturb the proceedings of the House." But in order that I might have been able to give that undertaking, which I submit must have been given within the precincts of the House, I must have had the right to re-enter the House. I could not give the undertaking except from my place in the House. Again the order does not say the plaintiff shall give his undertaking to the defendant or the Serjeant-at-Arms. There is no process by which a member can give such an undertaking except by his speech in his place in the House. I contend that known or established laws cannot be superseded, suppressed, or altered by any resolution or order of the House of Commons, and that the House cannot by any resolution or order of themselves create any new privilege to themselves inconsistent with the known laws of the land. I rely upon Stockdale v. Hansard (9 Ad. & El. 1) which was an action against the Parliamentary printers for libel. It was held that it is no defence in law to an action for publishing a libel, that the defamatory matter is part of a document, which was, by order of the

[Q.B. Div.]

BRADLAUGH v. ESKINE.

[Q.B. Div.]

House of Commons, laid before the House, and thereupon became part of the proceedings of the House, and which was afterwards, by order of the House, printed and published by the defendant, and that the House of Commons heretofore resolved, declared, and adjudged, "that the power of publishing such of its reports, notes, and proceedings as it shall deem necessary or conducive to the public interests is an essential incident to the constitutional functions of Parliament, more especially to the Commons House of Parliament as the representative portion of it." On demurrer to a plea suggesting such a defence, it was held that a court of law is competent to determine whether or not the House of Commons had such privilege as would support the plea. There is no power on the part of the House to adjudicate upon what occurred outside the House, not being a matter of privilege. Further, if the House has power to adjudicate, they must adjudicate on those matters only within their privileges. There has been no such adjudication here. This not being a case of commitment for contempt, the court has the power to say, and ought to say, that the facts which warrant the order should be stated. The privilege claimed here is that of making the order of the 10th May, and the proof of it is grounded upon three principles, viz.—necessity, practice, and universal acquiescence—for these are the only matters which can be put forward to justify a claim of privilege on the part of the House. Per Lord Denman, C.J. and the other judges in Stockdale v. Hansard (sup.). Practice and universal acquiescence cannot be shown, for there are no authorities on an order of the kind under consideration. Then where was the necessity? [FIELD, J.—That the engagement had not been given by you. Is not that a necessity?] There could be no necessity for an assault when the House has the power of commitment, imprisonment, or expulsion. The reason stated in the pleadings is "that the proceedings should not be further disturbed." There is no allegation that they had been disturbed.

Sir H. James, A.G. (A. L. Smith with him) for the defendant.—The defendant alleges that as an officer of the House of Commons he is bound to obey the orders given to him personally, or to his superior officer, the Serjeant-at-Arms, whose deputy he is. Next that an order was made by the House on the 10th May. With all respect to the court, that order must be taken to be a valid and binding order, and one not open to review by any court of law. We contend that that which is alleged does not contain matter cognisable within the courts of law; that it is matter which has arisen within the House of Commons; that the House has dealt by its resolutions, and by its servants, with one of its own members, on a matter affecting the procedure of the House; and that the House of Commons has the right, as one of the Houses of Parliament, to deal as it will with all matters that may arise within its own walls in relation to its own procedure. That claim is not one of arbitrary power—it springs from the constitution of the Houses of Parliament as the highest court of the realm. It is no higher right than that which would be claimed by the judges of the land in dealing with what occurs in the courts over which they preside. So long as it appears that a judge is acting within the area of his judicial power, he has the right to regulate the procedure of his court. There is no power on the part of any court, either in Westminster Hall or in this country, to enter into the question of whether the things of which the plaintiff complains have been rightly done, or whether there is any ground for the course that the House of Commons thought it right in its discretion to take. As to the order of the 10th May being without precedent, we contend that, inasmuch as it is not open to review by a court of law, it is sufficient to say that it has been made. But in answer to the plaintiff's contention that there must be precedent for what is done, there is ample precedent for it. In Fry's case (6 Com. Jour. 124) in 1648 the order was "that Mr. Fry do continue suspended from sitting in this House . . . till he shall give better satisfaction to this House." Orders similar in effect were made in Love's case (8 Com. Jour. 289) and Gilbert's case (10 Com. Jour. 146), in 1692. These orders being either of suspension or removal, were orders uncertain in their extent. As to the plaintiff's distinction that the House has authority to suspend a member for a period, after he has taken his seat, but not before, it is contended the point does not arise here, for the plaintiff is undoubtedly a member of the House. He can claim privilege against arrest; and he can sit on committees of the House, as Baron Rothschild did. If, however, he be not a member, he had no right to be where he was, and the House had the power to remove him. With regard to the three objections raised by the plaintiff, viz. (1) that the order of the 10th May should have been set out in terms; (2) the facts upon which that order was founded should have been stated; and (3) the pleading should further state that the resolution was arrived at according to the law and custom of Parliament, it is clear the only object there could be in setting out the views of the order and the facts which led to the making of it, is that they may be reviewed both by jury and by the judge. It is sufficient to say that Parliament has the right to determine what its own laws are; it is within the walls of Parliament, and by Parliament only, that the determination of what are its rights and what is its law can be arrived at. This is not a question of privilege of Parliament, but only one of its inherent authority, which rests in this respect upon the same ground as the authority of the courts themselves. That both the courts of law and the Houses of Parliament have the power to prevent disturbance cannot of course be doubted. This power, however, is not exercised by virtue of any privilege, but by virtue of the inherent authority which they both possess to maintain order. We rely on Burdett v. Abbott (14 East 1, in Cam. Scacc. 4 Taunt. 402, in House of Lords, 5 Dow. 165), in which the arrest on the Speaker's warrant of a person outside the House was held to be justified. In Re v. Hubbard (2 Chitty 207), the power of the House to commit for contempt was clearly recognised. The plaintiff admits that the House has power to commit for contempt; but surely the power to send to prison for contempt involved the lesser power of excluding a member from its walls. Stockdale v. Hansard (9 Ad. & El. 1) has no application here. That was an interference with the ordinary law of the country, inasmuch as it was a defence of the right to libel a person by virtue of an order of the House of Commons that the libel should be published. Howard v. Gossett (10 Q. B. 359 and 411) is in point, for it decided that the House had authority to arrest for contempt of its order strangers outside the precincts of the House, and that the House alone has the power to judge where the power is to be exercised. He cited also

Q.B. Div.]

BRADLAUGH v. ERSKINE.

[Q.B. Div.]

Entick v. Carrington, 19 Howell St. Tr. 1047;
Brass Crosby's case, 3 Wilson, 305;
Hawkins' Pleas of the Crown, vol. 8;
Reg. v. Paty, 2 Raym. 1.

The power to make this order does not depend upon the power to commit. In Colonial assemblies there was no power to commit for contempt; yet the power to exclude persons was held to exist:

Doyle v. Falconer, 4 Moore P.C. 203.

The plaintiff replied.

Our. adv. vult.

Jan. 11, 1883.—FIELD, J.—This is a case which was argued before me on demurrer. The plaintiff, who is one of the elected burgesses of the borough of Northampton, but who has not yet taken his seat, brings this action against the defendant, the Deputy Serjeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, to recover damages for an assault committed upon him as he was, as he alleges, about to enter the House of Commons for the purpose of taking his seat. The defendant admits the allegation in question, but states that he did that which amounts to an assault upon the plaintiff, and seeks to justify the wrong by alleging that he did so under the authority of, and in obedience to, the House, which on the 10th May 1881 resolved and ordered the Serjeant-at-Arms, whose deputy the defendant is, to remove the plaintiff from the House until he should engage not further to disturb its proceedings. Then the defendant alleges that because the plaintiff had not given any such engagement, but was, nevertheless, attempting to force his way into the House, the defendant, as Deputy Serjeant-at-Arms, resisted and removed him. To these pleadings the plaintiff demurs, alleging that the defendant shows no justification for committing a personal wrong. In support of the demurrer the plaintiff contends, firstly, that although the House, when any breach of its privileges has been committed, has the undoubted power of arresting, of imprisoning, and of removing any of its members, or any stranger so offending, yet that that power does not extend so far as a member of the House is concerned to one who like the plaintiff, although duly elected and returned, has not taken his seat, and is in fact, as alleged, in the act of entering the House for the very purpose of completing his qualification for sitting and voting. The plaintiff did not cite any case or authority in support of this alleged distinction, but there are precedents the other way which show that an elected burgess, although he has not taken the oaths required by law, is still a member of the House, and that he may be called on to serve upon committees of the House. There is the case of Sir Joseph Jekyll in 1715, and the case of Baron Rothschild in 1858, in which the Baron not only served on a committee, but was also appointed a member of a committee to confer with the Upper House. As a member, too, he may remain in the House below the bar, although at that time strangers are ordered to withdraw. Another case occurred in 1851, when Alderman Salomons, having refused to take the oath in the form then required by law, but having taken his seat within the bar, was ordered to withdraw. He, however, still remained sitting within the bar, whereupon the Speaker ordered the Serjeant-at-Arms to remove him. This was done by the officer of the House placing his hand on the Alderman and conducting him below the bar. This was an unquestionable assault in point of law, but no doubt was ever raised that the House has as full power over a member in that position as over a member who by taking the oath, has qualified himself to sit and vote. There is no foundation, therefore, either in authority or principle in support of this objection, and I pass therefore to the second, which is that in the statement of defence it was not alleged that the plaintiff had in fact committed any breach of the privileges of the House, or that the House had so adjudged. In answer to this objection, however, the Attorney-General cited and relied upon a long line of precedents and authorities to the effect that in the case of proceedings by the House of Commons for breach of its privileges, the House is the sole judge of what is, or is not, a breach of its privileges, and also of the mode of prevention or punishment—in fact that the House of Commons is a portion of the highest court of the realm, and is clothed with all those rights and privileges for the protection of its proceedings which belong to every court of record in the kingdom. Its one undoubted and clear privilege is that no other court has power to examine into the effects of the authority of the House, or to question the form in which that authority is exercised. In the case of Burdett v. Abbott Lord Ellenborough states the origin of, and the necessity for, this power in the clearest terms. He said: "The privilege which belongs to each House seems at all times to have been, and necessarily must be, inherent in it, independent of any precedent. It was necessary that they should have the most complete personal security to enable them freely to meet for the purpose of discharging their important functions, and also that they should have the right of self-protection. I do not mean merely against acts of individual wrong, for poor and impotent indeed would be the privileges of Parliament if they could not also protect themselves against injuries and affronts offered to the aggregate body which might prevent or impede the full and effectual exercise of their parliamentary functions. This is an essential right necessarily inherent in the supreme Legislature of the kingdom, and of course as necessarily inherent in the Parliament assembled in two Houses as in one. The right of self-protection implies, as a consequence, the right to use the necessary means to render such self-protection effectual. Independently, therefore, of any precedents or recognised practice on the subject, such a body must a priori be armed with a competent authority to enforce the free and independent exercise of its own proper functions, whatever those functions may be. On this ground it has been, I believe, very generally admitted in argument that the House of Commons must be and is authorised to remove any immediate obstructions to the due course of its proceedings." Lord Ellenborough then goes on to apply the question of power to the case then before him, which was the case of an alleged libel. I have cited the first part for the purpose of showing the foundation of the jurisdiction and practice. "It is," Lord Ellenborough points out, "the general admission that the House of Commons must be, and is authorised to remove any immediate obstructions to the due course of its own proceedings." Several other authorities were also cited in support of the Attorney-General's proposition. One of them, and one that bears strongly on the present case, is the well-known case of the five men of Aylesbury, reported in 2 Raym. 1105 under the title of Reg. v. Paty and others. The House of Lords, in the case of Ashby v. White, held that an action would lie in the case of a person entitled to vote at the election of a member against a returning officer who had improperly refused to allow him to do so. The action was one brought by five Aylesbury electors against the constable, complaining of the rejection of their votes. The House of Commons, however, resolved that in so doing they had committed a breach of the privileges of the House, and ordered them into custody. Upon this, a writ of habeas corpus having been obtained, the return was in the following words:—"By virtue of an order of the House of Commons of England in Parliament assembled, these are to require you forthwith, upon sight hereof, to receive into your custody the body of John Paty, who, it appears to the House of Commons, is guilty of commencing an action at law against the constable of Aylesbury for not allowing his vote, in breach of the known privileges of this House." Now to this return several objections were taken at different times, but it is not necessary for me to go into them; but among them was an objection to the general nature of the return—a similar objection, in point of fact, to that which Mr. Bradlaugh takes in the present case to these pleadings or to this order; and upon that Justice Gould, in giving judgment, said it was the first case of habeas corpus that ever brought up parties committed by the House of Commons. He said that "if this had been a return on a commitment by an inferior court it would have been nought, because it did not set out a sufficient cause of commitment; but this return being a return by the House of Commons, which is superior to this court, it is not reversible." He then went through certain objections, and the result was that the prisoner's discharge was refused. Now it is perfectly true, as was pointed out by Mr. Bradlaugh in arguing the question, that Holt, L.C.J. differed from the other judges in that case; but then, even in regard to that, it is to be observed that he made no question of the power of the House of Commons. He said (page 1115) they might commit any man for offering affront to a member, as a breach of privilege; and he drew a distinction between Lord Shaftesbury's case and this. He said: "The commitment was for a contempt done in the House, and the cause of commitment being expressed in the warrant excluded any intendment that it might be for any other cause than that expressed in the warrant." In the case of Lord Shaftesbury the warrant was, if I remember rightly, in the same general terms, if not more general, than those of the warrant in this case of Aylesbury. Now, in addition to that case, there is the modern case of Howard v. Gossett (10 Q. B. 359), which is also strongly in favour of the same view. In that case the plaintiff had sued the Serjeant-at-Arms for arrest, and the Serjeant-at-Arms justified himself under the orders of the House and the warrant of the Speaker. Now, the resolution and the warrant are pleaded in that case at pages 361 and 362. They are in these words; the pleadings go on to say: "Thereupon, in order to compel the attendance of the plaintiff at the bar of the House, it was ordered and resolved by the House of Commons, in pursuance of, and in accordance with, the ancient usages and privileges of the House and the law and custom of Parliament, as follows: 'The plaintiff should be sent for and brought before the said House of Commons in the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms attending the House of Commons, and that the Speaker of the House should issue his warrant accordingly.'" It is to be observed that there the order is in the most general of all possible terms—a simple order that the Serjeant-at-Arms is to bring the body of the plaintiff before the House. It then goes on to allege the warrant, and says: "It is issued in these terms: 'By his warrant in that behalf made in respect thereof, that the House of Commons had to-day ordered that the plaintiff should be sent for in the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms attending the House does require and order the Serjeant-at-Arms attending the House to take into custody the body of the plaintiff.'" The warrant equally there, with the order and resolution, does not allege in any shape or way what contempt had been committed, or that the House had in terms so adjudged, but simply directed their officer to take the body of the subject of the order into his custody, and bring it before the House. Now when this case was argued in the Court of Queen's Bench, the learned judges of that court were of opinion that the warrant was a bad one, on various grounds—some on one ground, some on another—but the majority of them thought the plea was bad, and the plaintiff had judgment. However, in the Exchequer Chamber, that judgment was unanimously reversed, and the grounds of this reversal bear so strongly on the various points in this case, that I will go very shortly through the material parts of the judgment: "On the argument on demurrer the Court of Queen's Bench was divided, and the judgment was given by a majority for the plaintiff on the ground of a defect in the warrant; and the question we have to decide is whether the warrant is good or not. Firstly, it cannot be disputed that the House of Commons has by law the power to take into custody. That House, which forms the great inquest of the nation, has the power to institute a trial, and to order the attendance of witnesses; and secondly, if there be a charge of contempt and breach of privilege and an order for the person charged to attend and answer for wilful disobedience of that order has been made, the House has the undoubted power to cause the person charged to be taken into custody, and to be brought to the bar to answer the charge; and further"—and this is the important passage—"the House, and that alone is the proper judge, that these powers of commitment should be exercised. These are the only questions of privilege involved in this inquiry. The first proposition was rightly decided in the judgment of the court below, and

Q.B. Div.]

BRADLAUGH v. ERSKINE.

[Q.B. Div.]

was not disputed; and the second proposition was equally clear, for it belongs at least to every superior court, as in the present case it is the House of Commons, and that House alone, who is the proper judge, and has the power to commit where a disobedience has been committed, and to say whether the power of preventing or punishing should be exercised." Then, in going through certain objections to the warrant, the court proceeded to say: "The answer to the question as to the validity of the warrant depends on the preliminary point, on what principle the instrument is to be construed. Is it to be examined with the strictness with which we look at the warrants of a magistrate acting by statutory authority and out of the course of common law? Is it to be regarded as a mandate or writ of a superior court according to the course of common law? The judges who composed the majority of the Court of Queen's Bench seemed to think that the Speaker's warrant was to be strictly construed, and Lord Denman thinks that, as in the case of a writ of a justice of the peace, the same rules of construction should be applied. All the three judges held it to be void because it did not show sufficient authority on the face of it to justify the defendant in all he attempted to have done, although they did not agree in the nature of the defence. If this had been a case of a magistrate, acting under some statute which gave him special authority to take a man into custody, we should no doubt have agreed with the learned judges that a warrant in the same terms would be void. But the circumstances are not similar, for in cases of special authority given to justices of the peace acting out of the ordinary course of common law, the instruments by which they act, whether warrants to arrest or for commitment, show their authority on the face of them, by direct averment or reasonable intendment. Not so the processes of superior courts acting by authority of the common law. The rule has been well expressed in the case of Peacock, that the rule for jurisdiction is that nothing shall be intended to be without the jurisdiction of the superior court but that which specially appears to be so, and that nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of the inferior court but that which is expressly alleged. Therefore the majority of the court resolved that it was within their jurisdiction. In like manner in the present case it is to be presumed in respect of such writs, which are actually issued by superior courts, that they are duly issued, and in cases where they have jurisdiction, unless the contrary be clear on the face of them. Both writs from the Court of Common Pleas and writs issued from superior courts without any further allegation are sufficient protection for all officers and others in any way acting as ordered." A still more remarkable case, perhaps, bearing on the present question, was the well-known case of the Sheriff of Middlesex (11 Ad. & El. 288). In that case it appears in one of the numerous actions brought by Mr. Stockdale against Messrs. Hansard, he recovered 600*l.* by default. Thereupon the Sheriffs of Middlesex having levied on a writ of execution issued by the Court of Queen's Bench, the sheriffs were committed by the House for contempt for so doing. Although it appeared on affidavit that the act alleged to be contempt was really an act of obedience by the sheriff to the process of the court, still the court refused to discharge. The grounds are stated very clearly in accordance with what is stated in Howard v. Gossett. In the judgment Lord Denman says: "The great objection remains behind that the facts which constitute the alleged contempt are not shown by the warrant. It may be admitted that the words containing this kind of statement have appeared in most of the former cases, indeed there are few in which they have not." Then he goes through the various cases, that of Sir F. Burdett and Mr. Hobhouse, and says, in Lord Shaftesbury's case the averment was general, and it was held unnecessary to set out the facts under which the contents arose." He then refers to Reg. v. Pate in which he says: "Three judges held that the court should not inquire into the ground of commitment." Holt, L.C.J. differed on that occasion, but did not question that the commitment should not be inquired into. Then the learned judge referred to Burdett v. Abbott and the result of it was that the court held, although they knew perfectly well that what the sheriff did was done in obedience to their own process, that, inasmuch as it appeared on the face of the warrant that it was a commitment for contempt, still it was not competent for the court to interfere with the process of execution by a superior court, and they, therefore, refused to discharge. Now, in the present case, it was said that the present warrant did contain sufficient averments even to supply what was supposed to be a defect, and for that purpose it is necessary to see exactly what it is that the pleadings allege on the matter. Now the plaintiff's statement of claim merely says that he was going quietly and peaceably to enter the House for the purpose of taking his seat, and the justification is in these words. The defendant says, "On the 10th May 1881, while Parliament was in full session, the House of Commons having duly considered certain matters and things which had arisen and occurred there, it was duly resolved and ordered in relation thereto that the Serjeant-at-Arms should remove the plaintiff from the said House until he should engage not further to disturb the proceedings of the said House." Now, applying the rules which I have just read in language far better than I can express it, as to the mode in which the proceedings and orders of this branch of the Legislature is to be construed and regarded, let us see what this order really does in its substance allege. It is perfectly clear that any objection on the ground of want of direct averment is without foundation at all. It has been over and over again decided in other cases. Therefore let us see what the pleadings allege: The defence alleges that at the time the order was made, Parliament was "in full session," and it then says that "the House having duly considered certain matters and things which had arisen and occurred" before it; and it is to be observed that the order and resolution was in reference to and in relation to those matters and things which the House was then discussing and considering. Therefore there is an averment there and an allegation on the very face of it, that what they had done was a matter relating to their own proceedings. It then proceeds to order "that the Serjeant-at-Arms should remove the plaintiff from the said House until he shall engage not further to disturb the proceedings of the House." Surely it is a fair inference to be drawn from the terms of the order that the House

[Q.B. Div.]

BRADLAUGH v. ERSKINE.

[Q.B. Div.]

adjudged, and by the terms of the resolution did, in point of fact, adjudge that something had happened within its own walls in reference to the proceedings before itself, while engaged in the important deliberations and discussions which it is its duty to undertake on the part of the country; something which amounted in their judgment—I do not say whether it was a fact or not—to a disturbance of its proceedings, and rendered it necessary, in the language of Lord Ellenborough, that the plaintiff should be removed from the House. Now I am unable, having carefully considered the pleadings here in this case, and a great many more cases than those I have referred to, to distinguish the present case from them. I now proceed to consider what the plaintiff says in answer to the pleadings of the defendant. He does not deny the authority of the House, but relies principally on the case of Stockdale v. Hansard (9 Ad. & El.), and also on what many of the learned judges said in their judgment in that case. That was an action brought by Mr. Stockdale for libel against Mr. Hansard, who had by authority of the House published a libel on the plaintiff—a personal wrong, just as the assault in the present case, if unjustifiable, is a personal wrong. In justification the defendant set up the order of the House, and the Court of Queen's Bench held that this order was no justification. It is perfectly true, as Mr. Bradlaugh says, that that decision has never been reversed; it was never carried to a Court of Appeal. That is an observation which is often made with regard to what weight is to be given to a decision of a court of law; but a great deal of the weight of that observation is lost in the present case, because it is well known—I do not say it was the reason why it was not carried to the Court of Appeal—that the Legislature afterwards stepped in and gave by Act of Parliament that authority to the House of Commons which the House of Commons in that case claimed to have by reason of the lawful exercise of its own privileges. There is no doubt whatever that in the judgment of the very eminent and learned judges who decided the case in the Queen's Bench there are passages which go strongly to the fact that the mere existence of the order of the House is not of itself a justification for any of its officers committing a personal wrong; but then it must be recollected that that case was a very different one from the present. The present action appears on the face of the pleadings to be for an alleged breach of the privileges of the House committed within its walls and committed in the face of the House. I have always understood, and I have no authority to the contrary—though a great deal is reported of these cases—that it would be highly unjust and contrary to the great advantages which this country possesses, both in its legislature and its judicial system, that either Parliament or any other court, even the lowest court of record in the realm, should not have in itself the power not only of deciding effectively and immediately upon all questions whether its privileges had been broken or contempt had been committed, but also it should not be the sole and final judge of the contempt. Mr. Bradlaugh said, and I do not know whether truly or not, that it might be possible that that which the House had judged to be a contempt was merely a lawful act on his part of going into the House for the purpose of completing his qualification and enabling him to perform the duties of his position in the House. He said how unjust it is and how wrong it will be in such a case, that it should be in the power of any man to declare that to be a contempt which, under these circumstances, would be merely a simple performance of his duty. That argument has received its answer in many of the cases to which I have referred. In the first place it is not to be presumed that any court, whether it be a High Court of Judicature or this court will do that which in itself is flagrantly wrong. There were three other objections of a minor character with which I can deal shortly. I do not think Mr. Bradlaugh relied very strongly upon them because unquestionably his main object was to endeavour to force the defendants to set out in greater particularity than they had done the matters and things in relation to which the order was made. It is evident, and he frankly confessed, that his desire was to force the defendant to state that which the House had adjudged to be a contempt. His object in doing so was plain; he wished to take the issue either in fact or law, as the case might be, and to have that issue determined either by the jury or the court. But the authorities cited show that it would be incompetent for either to decide such questions; and desirous as the plaintiff was to make the defendant make some such allegation, equally determined was the defendant to make no such allegation. The statement of defence was carefully prepared for the purpose of asserting the privileges of the House to conduct its proceedings in the way alleged in the order, and upon that issue he stood either to succeed or fail. The other objections which the plaintiff takes are shortly these. He first says that the order of the 10th May was no longer in force at the time when the Serjeant-at-Arms sought to put it into force. He says that the terms of the order were that the Serjeant-at-Arms do remove Mr. Bradlaugh, and that that order was satisfied by the removal as soon as it had taken place; but he does not refer to the fact that the order contains words which suspend it if he engages not further to disobey. No such engagement having been given, it seems perfectly clear that it was a subsisting order when it was acted upon, and therefore is free from the objection made to it. Another objection taken was this: Mr. Bradlaugh admits the power of the House to imprison or arrest, but he says they have no power to make such an order as this of the 10th May in this respect, that it was not an absolute order to conduct him to prison, or to bring his body in custody, nor was it an order to remove him from the House, but it made his removal or the having of him removed conditional on some engagement which he might enter into. The Attorney-General cited several cases to show that the House had made such conditional orders; but even without any such precedents, I am at a loss to see what possible objection there could be to it. If it is admitted that the House had power to send Mr. Bradlaugh to prison, surely it will be admitted that they had power to say to him, you must keep out of the House unless you promise not further to disturb the proceedings. So far from that being a ground of complaint, it seems to me a most moderate and judicious exercise of its power, which I assume to be necessary from the terms of the order and resolution. The last point, is one which I hardly know how to dispose of without a smile. It is that the Deputy Serjeant-at-Arms was not justified in doing what he did, because Mr. Bradlaugh was outside the House at the time; it could only justify him in removing Mr. Bradlaugh from the House when he was in it. I know nothing of the facts of the case but from the pleadings, and the pleadings are that on this occasion, this order being still in force, Mr. Bradlaugh was forcing his way into the House at the door of it, and in order to prevent his forcing his way into the House the defendant lawfully resisted and removed him. I suppose the contention must be that the duty of the Serjeant-at-Arms was to allow Mr. Bradlaugh to come into the House and then take him and put him out. I confess that that is not my view of the matter. I think he acted very judiciously and legitimately in preventing what would have been a flagrant scandal. On the whole, therefore, I give judgment for the defendant with costs.

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. WEIL.

[CT. OF APP.]

Demurrer overruled.

Solicitor for the defendant, The Solicitor for the Treasury.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT LINCOLN'S INN.

Thursday, July 13, 1882.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., BRETT and COTTON, L.JJ.)

REG. v. WEIL. (a)

Extradition—"Apprehension"—Detention of person already in custody—Extradition Act 1870, s. 8—Court of Appeal—Jurisdiction—Habeas Corpus—Judicature Act 1873, ss. 19, 47.

Where a fugitive criminal is arrested without a warrant, he may be detained in custody for an offence coming within the Act on a warrant for his apprehension under sect. 8 of the Extradition Act 1870, as the word "apprehension" in that section includes "detention."

Quære, whether, having regard to the provisions of the Judicature Acts, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear an appeal from the refusal of a divisional court to issue a writ of habeas corpus in such a case.

JACOB WEIL on his arrival on the 25th May 1882 at Queenstown, Ireland, in the ship Servia, from the United States of America, was arrested before he landed by James Maguire, an Irish police constable, on a charge of having committed a forgery at New York. The arrest was made without any warrant, on the receipt of a telegram from George Kendal, a private inquiry agent in London, who had received a telegram from a private detective office in New York, stating that Weil had, on the 24th May, been indicted there for forgery.

The prisoner was then taken before Mr. Starkie, the resident magistrate at Queenstown, who, committed him for further examination by a warrant addressed to the sub-inspector of the Royal Irish Constabulary.

On the 28th May the prisoner was brought up for further examination, when the depositions of Kendal and Maguire were taken, and the magistrate reported the arrest to Sir William Harcourt, the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

On the 31st May the magistrate issued a warrant for the conveyance of the prisoner to London and taking him before the chief magistrate at Bow-street, to show cause why he should not be surrendered under the Extradition Act 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52).

On the 2nd June the prisoner was brought before Sir James Ingham, the chief magistrate at Bow-street, and was remanded till the 8th June. On that day he was again remanded till the 15th June, on which day he was brought up and again remanded till the 22nd. Sir James Ingham then reported the matter to the Home Secretary.

On the 19th June the Home Secretary issued an order addressed to the chief magistrate, stating that, in pursuance of the Extradition Acts of 1870 and 1873 a requisition had been made to him by Mr. J. R. Lowell, the diplomatic representative of the United States of America for the surrender of Weil, and requiring that magistrate to proceed in conformity with the provisions of those Acts.

On the 22nd June the prisoner was brought up at Bow-street for further examination, when it was objected by his counsel that he was illegally in custody, because he had been arrested without any information or complaint being made and without any warrant. Sir James Ingham expressed an opinion that the error (if any) was rectified by the order of the Home Secretary, and issued a warrant for the prisoner's apprehension. The warrant was read over to the prisoner whilst in the dock, and on the 29th June the magistrate issued a warrant for the prisoner's committal which was in the form in the second schedule to the Extradition Act 1870. This warrant was not addressed to any particular constable by name, but was in blank. Under it the prisoner was lodged in Clerkenwell prison.

Application was made on the 10th July on his behalf to the Queen's Bench Division for a writ of habeas corpus.

Mead appeared for the prisoner.

The Divisional Court (Lord Coleridge, C.J. and Field, J.) refused the application.

The prisoner appealed.

W. G. Harrison, Q.C. for the appellant.—There has been irregularity in the proceedings throughout. The prisoner was originally arrested without any warrant, which was illegal, and the magistrate did not issue a warrant for the "apprehension" of the prisoner within the meaning of sect. 8, sub-sect. 1 of the Extradition Act 1870 (a)

(a) Sect. 7 of the Extradition Act 1870 provides that:

A requisition for the surrender of a fugitive criminal of any foreign State, who is in or suspected of being in the United Kingdom, shall be made to a Secretary of State by some person recognised by the Secretary of State as a diplomatic representative of that foreign State. A Secretary of State may, by order under his hand and seal, signify to a police magistrate that such requisition has been made, and require him to issue his warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive criminal.

If the Secretary of State is of opinion that the offence is one of a political character, he may, if he think fit, refuse to send any such order, and may also at any time for the prisoner was then in custody. If a prisoner is illegally in custody he must be liberated before he can be properly apprehended under the statute. The evidence before the magistrate was not sufficient to justify him in issuing a warrant at all, even if he had issued a proper one. [BRETT, L.J.—Does an appeal lie in such a case? Is not this a criminal matter? JESSEL, M.R. referred to the Judicature Act 1873 s. 19, 47.] This is not a criminal matter. It resembles a case of prohibition. Appeals are allowed in these cases. The Court of Appeal discharged a prisoner in Ex parte Dile (43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 769; 6 Q. B. Div. 376), and it can issue a habeas corpus. [JESSEL, M.R.—If an appeal lies.] The appellant says that he is not a criminal. This is a question of the liberty of the subject. The proceedings are entirely collateral. [JESSEL, M.R.—We will reserve this point. I do not see how we can determine it till we know more about the case.] The requisition which the Home Secretary made was not in the form in the schedule to the Act. The magistrate was not required or authorised to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the prisoner, but only “to proceed in conformity with the provisions of the Acts.” The warrant of committal ought to have been addressed to some constable by name, in order to make it regular.

(a) Reported by W. C. BISS, Esq. Barrister-at-Law

JESSEL, M.R.—There will be a serious question to be considered at some time, if the case should ever arise, whether, having regard to the provisions of the Judicature Acts, the court has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from a divisional court in a case like the present. The question whether we have jurisdiction depends on a very careful consideration of various sections of the Acts, and it is far too serious and grave a matter for me to give an opinion upon it off-hand. If it were necessary to decide it, I should take time to consider it, and I should require to hear further argument. For the purpose of deciding the present case, I will assume that we have the jurisdiction. But it does not appear to me that the only objection to the prisoner's committal which can be fairly argued is of such weight as to justify us in interfering by granting a habeas corpus. The question turns upon the proper construction of order a fugitive criminal accused or convicted of such offence to be discharged from custody.

Sect. 8 provides that:

A warrant for the apprehension of a fugitive criminal, whether accused or convicted of crime, who is in, or suspected of being in, the United Kingdom, may be issued:

(1.) By a police magistrate on receipt of the said order of the Secretary of State, and on such evidence as would, in his opinion, justify the issue of the warrant if the crime had been committed or the criminal convicted in England; and

(2.) By a police magistrate, or any justice of the peace in any part of the United Kingdom, on such information or complaint and such evidence or after such proceedings as would, in the opinion of the person issuing the warrant, justify the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the criminal convicted in that part of the United Kingdom in which he exercises jurisdiction.

Any person issuing a warrant under this section without an order from a Secretary of State shall forthwith send a report of the fact of such issue, together with the evidence and information or complaint, or certified copies thereof, to a Secretary of State, who may, if he think fit, order the warrant to be cancelled and the person who has been apprehended on the warrant to be discharged.

sect. 8 of the Act of 1870. In the present case the applicant was accused of committing forgery in the United States. He was arrested on board a steamer at Queenstown Harbour by an Irish police constable without any warrant, and was brought before a magistrate there, who then issued a warrant ordering his detention in prison; after further inquiry he issued another warrant for taking the prisoner before the chief magistrate at Bow-street, who then reported the arrest to the Secretary of State for the Home Department. The prisoner having been brought before Sir James Ingham, the chief magistrate, he directed the usual reference to the Secretary of State, and within the time limited by the Act he received a requisition from the Secretary of State requiring him to proceed in conformity with the Act. A warrant was then issued for the prisoner's apprehension; afterwards an order was made for his committal. All the proceedings were strictly regular, with this exception, that the prisoner was originally arrested without any warrant; and the whole objection is this, that the Irish magistrate's warrant was not a warrant for the “apprehension” of the prisoner within the meaning of sect. 8 of the Act. It appears to me that this would be to give too narrow a meaning to the word “apprehension.” The word, strictly construed, means the seizing or taking hold of the man, and literally and truly you can do that although he may be already in custody. It means the taking hold of him and detaining him with a view to his ultimate surrender. I am not inclined to limit the word “apprehension” to taking hold of a man who is not already in custody. It would follow that, if a man was already in lawful custody, you could not take him at all under the Act; the word “apprehension” would not apply. You would be compelled to restore him to liberty before you could apprehend him. It appears to me that this would not be a rational mode of construing the Act. I think, therefore, that the whole proceedings were regular. Another point suggested was this, that the evidence on which the Irish magistrate issued his warrant was not such as would have justified the issue of a warrant if the crime had been committed or the criminal convicted in Ireland. But all that the Act requires is that the evidence should be sufficient “in the opinion of the person issuing the warrant.” That is a matter of judicial discretion. There must be some evidence, but very little will do, for it is merely for the purpose of detaining the man. It is very different from the evidence which is required under sect. 10 (a) to justify the committal of the prisoner. There the evidence must be such as would, “according to the law of England, justify the committal for trial of the prisoner, if the crime of which he is accused had been committed in England.” There is nothing in the present case to show that the evidence was not sufficient in the opinion of the magistrate. Assuming, therefore, that we have

(a) Sect. 10 of the Extradition Act 1870 provides that: In the case of a fugitive criminal accused of an extradition crime, if the foreign warrant authorising the arrest of such criminal is duly authenticated, and such evidence is produced as (subject to the provisions of this Act) would, according to the law of England, justify the committal for trial of the prisoner if the crime of which he is accused had been committed in England, the police magistrate shall commit him to prison, but otherwise shall order him to be discharged.

CT. OF APP.]

COOMBER (app.) v. THE JUSTICES OF BERKS (resps.).

[CT. OF APP.]

jurisdiction, I think that in the present case we ought not to interfere.

BRETT, L.J.—I desire to give no opinion on the very important question whether there is any jurisdiction in the court to consider whether, in a case of this kind, a writ of habeas corpus should or should not issue. What we are doing to-day must not be construed as a decision that we have any jurisdiction. But, assuming that we have jurisdiction, I think there is no ground for our exercising it in the present case. I doubt whether there has been any irregularity whatever in the proceedings. I doubt much whether a policeman is not justified in arresting a man, without a warrant, on reasonable grounds of suspicion of his having done that which would be a felony if committed in this country. But, assuming that the Irish policeman was wrong in making the arrest, the Irish magistrate issued a warrant that the prisoner should be detained in custody, and afterwards a second warrant that he should be taken before the chief magistrate at Bow-street. It seems to me that the Irish magistrate's first warrant was a warrant for the "apprehension" of the prisoner within the meaning of the Act. I cannot think that the Act ought to be construed in the way suggested. It is necessary that the magistrate should issue a warrant for the "apprehension" of the criminal, but, if he is already in custody, a warrant for his detention is a warrant for his "apprehension." And, if it was necessary to do more, Sir James Ingham issued a warrant for the detention of the prisoner, and it seems to me that it was a warrant for his "apprehension" within the meaning of the Act. If he was already wrongfully in custody, and there was proper evidence to justify his apprehension, Sir James Ingham was justified in issuing a warrant for his detention. It is said that the warrant of committal was wrong, because it was not addressed to any particular policeman by name; but in my opinion, when the warrant was handed to a particular policeman for execution, it was as good as if it had been addressed to him by name. I am inclined to think that there was no irregularity in the proceedings. If there was any, it was in the original arrest. But that is immaterial, when the subsequent proceedings have been right.

CORROX, L.J.—I desire in no way to intimate an opinion whether we have or have not jurisdiction to entertain an appeal in such a case as the present. But, assuming that we have jurisdiction, I think no ground has been shown for our interference. I give no opinion on the point whether the original arrest was lawful, or on the point whether, assuming that there was no lawful arrest before the prisoner was brought before Sir James Ingham, there was a valid apprehension. In my opinion the first warrant of the Irish magistrate was, within the meaning of the Act, a warrant for the apprehension of the prisoner. I am of opinion that in substance the requirements of the Act have been complied with.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor: W. D. Smyth.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Nov. 30 and Dec. 21, 1882.

(Before BAGGALLAY, BRETT, and LINDLEY, L.JJ.)
COOMBER (app.) v. THE JUSTICES OF BERKS
(resps.). (a)

Revenue—Income tax—Justices—Assize courts—Police stations—5 & 6 Vict. c. 35—16 & 17 Vict. c. 34; Schedules A. and B.

The justices of a county, in the due exercise of statutory powers, erected assize courts with the usual rooms and offices, and a county police station with the usual offices and accommodation for constables living there, and for prisoners. The courts and police stations were contained in one building, and were used for the administration of justice, and for police purposes.

Parts of the building were also used for holding county and committee meetings and various other occasional purposes, but no rent or profit was received or made in respect of the building or any part of it.

Held, that income tax was not payable in respect of the building under schedules A. or B. of the Income Tax Acts.

The judgment of Grove, J. and Huddleston, B. affirmed.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of Grove, J. and Huddleston, B., upon a case stated for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division under part 3 of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 16. The justices of the county of Berks having been assessed, under schedule A. of the Income Tax Acts, in respect of certain buildings in the parish of St. Lawrence, Reading, described in the assessment as "assize courts, &c." of the alleged annual value of 300*l.*, appealed against the assessment to the commissioners appointed under the Income Tax Acts, who discharged the assessment subject to a case. Their Lordships were of opinion that the decision of the Income Tax Commissioners was right, and gave judgment in favour of the justices; from this judgment the present appeal was brought.

The material facts stated in the special case were as follows:—

1. There was no separation in the assessment, and no description of the different buildings included therein under the name of "assize courts, &c."

2. The assize courts and the county police station form one block of buildings within the same walls, and covered by the same roof. They were erected at the same time, though under different statutory powers.

3. The erection of the assize courts was considered and resolved upon by the county justices in 1858, and the present site, adjoining land the purchase of which had been already authorised for the erection of constabulary buildings, was then approved. The erection of the buildings was pursuant to public general statutes and not to any private Act.

4. The cost of building the courts was provided for by money borrowed upon mortgage of the county rates, under 7 Geo. 4, c. 63, s. 11, and the maintenance of the building is provided for out of the county rates. The erection took place, and the maintenance and control of the whole block are regulated (if at all) by public general statutes only.

(a) Reported by A. A. HOPKINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

5. The ground floor of the block consists of the following premises, namely: two assize courts opening out of a large hall and corridor, with retiring rooms for judges and juries, counsel's robing and consultation rooms, an office for the use of the county treasurer during the sittings of the assize and quarter sessions, offices for the clerks of indiotments at assizes, and for other officers attending upon the judges, and also a room for the use of the clerk of the peace, as hereinafter mentioned. There are also on the ground floor offices for the chief constable of the county and the chief superintendent of police and one divisional officer of police. The first floor consists of rooms for the grand jury, for witnesses in waiting, for committees, and for the living and accommodation of the superintendent of police. Over the jury and counsel's robing rooms before mentioned there is a police dormitory with sleeping accommodation for six or seven men. In the basement, and below what has been described as the ground floor, there are cells for the reception of prisoners detained in custody by the police, or kept, owing to the distance from the gaol, immediately before and after trial at the courts. There are a refreshment room for the use of the public at the assizes and sessions, and washing-houses and store-rooms in connection with the refreshment room, &c. A police guard room is situated below the jury rooms and counsel's robing and consultation rooms. This is used by the resident constables for purposes of duty, and for cooking the food of prisoners during their detention. A married constable, as part of his duty, is required to reside in some of the rooms below the offices of the assize courts, having his sleeping accommodation on the second floor over the committee or grand jury rooms, with access by means of the staircase leading to those rooms. Some of the rooms originally designed for the offices of the clerk of the peace during the quarter sessions are occupied by another married constable who performs the duties of hall-keeper. The clerk of the peace has no use whatever, or at any time, of any rooms for his private purposes or business. The one room reserved for him is used by him only as a depository for the statutes and books required in connection with the courts, and for deposited railway plans, and other records in his possession as deputy custos rotulorum of the county. He has no vested interest in his room, and the use he makes of it is official only, and was not considered as of any benefit or value to him in adjusting his salary. He does not, in fact, use the room except at quarter sessions and when attending committee meetings of justices. There are a subterranean passage and several doorways and openings affording complete communication between various parts of the block, so that although the uses to which the parts are applied are distinct the structure is one and entire. Unmarried constables inhabit the dormitory before mentioned, subject to written regulations for discipline. The constables of the division are bound to live upon the premises, but are liable to be removed for duty to any other place, and they are at all hours liable to be called out on service.

6. The courts are used for holding the assizes, and for holding the county quarter sessions and the county divisional petty sessions, and also for the purposes of the County Court. The commissioners of public works pay 1*l.* per month for the lighting, warming, and cleaning of the courts when used for County Court purposes, as provided by the statutes. Rooms in the building are used for meetings of committees of justices appointed by the Court of Quarter Sessions, and the police committee of justices meet in the chief constable's office.

7. The Recorder of Reading is allowed to hold the borough quarter sessions in one of the courts. The Income Tax Commissioners have occasionally sat in one of the committee rooms. The entrance hall is used as a polling station for the county elections, and the grand jury room for casting up votes by the returning officer. In 1864 the officers of the Berks Militia were allowed, upon special application to the Court of Quarter Sessions, to use the grand jury room as a mess-room and the basement as a kitchen during their month's training. An amateur musical society has occasionally practised in the grand jury room. The committee of management of the Berks Friendly Society has occasionally met in one of the committee rooms. Twice since the erection of the courts general county meetings called by the high sheriff have been held in the entrance hall. The under-sheriff has occasionally held writs of inquiry in one of the courts. On no occasion has any payment or remuneration been received for the use of the building, or any part of it, and no profit whatever has been made out of it.

8. Since 1861 the entire charge of the whole block of buildings has been vested in the chief constable by a resolution of the Court of Quarter Sessions. The chief constable provides a hall-keeper to attend to the ventilating, lighting, and warming apparatus, &c., and the county allows one guinea a week to the credit of the police fund to be applied to those purposes at the discretion of the chief constable. The uses of the building mentioned in par. 7 have been by the allowance of the chief constable. On the two occasions when the hall was used for county meetings the chairman of the quarter sessions gave permission on his own responsibility. Except in the case of the militia the justices in quarter sessions have never authorised or sanctioned, nor been asked to authorise or sanction, the use of the buildings in the manner specified in par. 7.

9. The county police station was erected under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88, s. 12, on lands purchased by the justices. The cost of the land, and of erecting the police station, was provided by money borrowed on mortgage of the police rate. The land on which the assize courts and also the central police station are built was conveyed, under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 92, in 1859, by the direction of quarter sessions (two justices having at a previous sessions been authorised to enter into a contract for its purchase) unto G. B. Morland (the then clerk of the peace) to have and to hold the same premises unto and to the use of the said G. B. Morland and his successors for ever, upon trust to permit a police station-house to be constructed on the premises at the expense of the justices, and otherwise to permit the premises to be used, appropriated, and disposed of, as the justices of the peace of the county should from time to time order.

11. The police station is used as the central police station for the county for the temporary confinement of persons taken into custody by the constables. It is necessary that two superintendents and a certain number of constables should be always on the spot available for duty; and

CT. OF APP.]

COOMBER (app.) v. THE JUSTICES OF BERKS (resps.).

[CT. OF APP.]

sleeping and living accommodation is provided for them as hereinbefore mentioned. Their residence on the premises is part of their duty. No rent is paid by them for the accommodation given. Some unmarried constables, who are compelled as part of their duty to sleep at the station, are required to contribute one shilling each per week to cover the expense of gas and fuel for their cooking in the guard room, and for washing. The superintendent and married constables pay for their gas and coals themselves. No more or better accommodation is provided than is absolutely required for the proper maintenance of the constabulary, and no profit or pecuniary benefit is derived from the use of the building.

14. So far as it was a matter of fact for their determination, the commissioners found that neither the justices of the peace, nor the clerk of the peace, nor the members of the constabulary derived any benefit whatever from, nor had they any beneficial nor indeed any occupation of, the premises by reason of their use thereof, and that their use thereof was solely official, and for purposes of duty, and that (except the clerk of the peace as herein appears) they were not the owners, nor were any of them occupiers, thereof; that the buildings were not adapted for any purposes but those for which they were used, and no rent ever had been received for them or any part of them. No evidence was given before or tendered to the commissioners as to the alleged annual value of the assessed premises or any part thereof.

The questions for the opinion of the court were :

1. Whether the buildings were, or any and what part thereof was, properly assessable to income tax?

2. If the buildings were (or any part thereof was) properly assessable to income tax, were the justices of the county for the time being chargeable with income tax in respect of the said buildings under schedule A.?

3. If the buildings were (or any part thereof was) properly assessable to income tax, and the justices were not chargeable with income tax in respect thereof, whether the clerk of the peace, or the inhabitants, or ratepayers of the county, or any other person or body of persons, was or were chargeable with such income tax?

4. If part only of the premises were chargeable, what part was chargeable, and who was to be charged, and in what capacity, and under what schedule, and how was the amount to be ascertained?

5. Whether the assessment could in law be maintained, or whether the commissioners' decision was, under the circumstances, lawful?

Upon the case thus stated, the learned judges in the Divisional Court affirmed the decision of the Commissioners of Income Tax, and gave judgment in favour of the respondents. The surveyor of taxes appealed.

Sir F. Herschell, S.G. and A. V. Dicey (Sir H. James, A.G., with them), for the appellant, cited

Bent v. Roberts, 3 Ex. Div. 68;

Clark v. Dumfries Commissioners of Supply, 7 So. Sess. Cas. 4th Series, 1157.

H. Matthews, Q.C. and Gorst, Q.C. (H. D. Greene with them), for the respondents, cited

Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Cameron 11 H. L. C. 443;

Reg. v. St. Martin's, Leicester, L. Rep. 2 Q. B. 493;

Reg. v. Justices of Worcestershire, 11 Ad. & E. 57;

Reg. v. Overseers of Manchester, 3 E. & B. 336;
Justices of Lancashire v. Overseers of Stretford, 5 E. B. & E. 225; Justices of Lancashire v. Chestham, L. Rep. 3 Q. B. 14;
Corporation of Worcester v. Droitwich Assessment Committee, 2 Ex. Div. 49.

A. V. Dicey in reply.

Our. adv. vult.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—This appeal has been brought under the following circumstances:—The trustees of the county of Berks, having been assessed, under schedule A. of the income tax assessment for the parish of St. Michael, Reading, for the year ending the 5th April 1879, in respect of certain buildings described in the assessment as "assize courts, &c.," of the alleged annual value of 300*l.*, appealed against such assessment to the Commissioners for General Purposes under the Income Tax Acts. The buildings so described as "assize courts, &c." comprised the county assize courts and the county police station, which formed one block of buildings within the same walls and covered by the same roof. The commissioners, being of opinion that the assessment could not be lawfully maintained, discharged it, but, upon the application of the surveyor, stated a special case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. The special case came on to be heard in the Queen's Bench Division, on the 24th March 1882, when the decision of the commissioners was affirmed; from that decision the present appeal is brought. The material statements in the special case are set forth in the report of the proceedings in the Queen's Bench Division, and I deem it unnecessary to refer to them further than to note that it appears from such statements that the assize courts and police station were erected at the same time, though under different statutory powers; that the land on which they were built was conveyed in 1859, under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 92, to the then clerk of the peace, to hold to him and his successors for ever, upon trust for the public uses or purposes of the county; and that no profit or pecuniary benefit was derived from the use of the building. In the course of the arguments on the present appeal, the case of The Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Cameron (ubi sup.) has been much discussed, and the principles enunciated or recognised in the decision of that case have been quoted and relied upon by both sides. Fully recognising the important bearing which the principles so enunciated and recognised have upon the case now under consideration, I propose, in the first instance, to direct attention to the purport and effect of what was then decided. The Mersey Docks and Harbour Board were constituted trustees by Acts of Parliament, and were specially appointed to have the control of certain docks and other property vested in them as such trustees, in order to maintain those docks for the benefit of the shipping frequenting the port of Liverpool: and the question involved in the then appeal to the House of Lords was whether they were rateable to the relief of the poor as occupiers of the docks. The previous decisions upon the statute of Elizabeth had been numerous, and by no means consistent, and the object of the appeal was to obtain a definite declaration of the principles on which the statute was to be construed. In answer to certain questions put to the judges by the Lord Chancellor at the close of the arguments, Lord

[CT. OF APP.]

COOMBER (app.) v. THE JUSTICES OF BEES (resps.).

[CT. OF APP.]

Blackburn, then Blackburn, J., on behalf of five of the six judges who attended, traced, in great detail and with great care, the progress of the decisions on the question of the liability to contribute to the relief of the poor of those occupiers of valuable property, who in their own persons derived no benefit from such occupation, or, in other words, occupied in a merely fiduciary character; and, after pointing out that for a long series of years, when Lord Mansfield, Lord Kenyon, and Lord Tenterden presided in the Court of King's Bench, the current of authority was favourable to the exemption of such persons from liability to be rated, but that such decisions had been subsequently to some extent broken in upon, he referred to the case of the Tyne Improvement Commissioners v. Chester, decided in the Court of Queen's Bench in 1859, as indicating what in the opinion of himself and the other judges who concurred with him was the principle upon which alone exemption from liability, upon the ground that the occupation was by bare trustees, could be maintained; viz., that the property was occupied for the purposes of the Government of the country. In an earlier part of the answer Lord Blackburn had drawn attention to a long series of cases, which had established that no one was rateable in respect of the occupation of property which was occupied for the purposes of the government of the country, and that under that head were included the police and the administration of justice, and he had gone on to say that this rule applied not only to property occupied for such purposes by the servants of the great departments of State, such as the Post Office, the Horse Guards, and the Admiralty, in all of which cases the occupiers might strictly be called the servants of the Crown, but also to property occupied by local police, and to county buildings occupied for the assizes and for the judges' lodgings, as to which he made the following comment: "In these latter cases it is difficult to maintain that the occupants are, strictly speaking, servants of the Sovereign, so as to make the occupation that of Her Majesty; but the purposes are all public purposes of that kind which by the constitution of this country fall within the province of Government, and are committed to the Sovereign, so that the occupiers, though perhaps not strictly servants of the Sovereign, might be considered in consimili casu. And the decisions are uniform that the exemption applies so far." The views thus expressed by Lord Blackburn were adopted by the Lord Chancellor and Lords Cranworth and Chelmsford, by whom the appeal was heard. In moving the judgment of the House, Lord Westbury (Lord Chancellor) said: "The only ground of exemption from the statute of Elizabeth is that which is furnished by the rule that the Sovereign is not bound by the statute, and that consequently where valuable property is sought to be exempted on the ground that it is occupied by bare trustees for public purposes, the public purposes must be such as are required and created by the Government of the country, and are therefore to be deemed part of the use and service of the Crown." Upon this point Lord Cranworth expressed himself as follows: "The Crown not being named is not bound by the Act. It follows, therefore, that lands or houses occupied by the Crown, or by servants of the Crown, for the purposes of the Crown, are not liable to be rated; and I conceive that it is from a confusion between property occupied for public purposes and property occupied by servants of the Crown that this mistake has arisen. This principle exempts from rates not only Royal palaces, but also the offices of the Secretaries of State, the Horse Guards, Post Office, and many similar buildings. On the same ground police courts, county courts, and even county buildings occupied as lodgings at the assizes for the judges have been held exempt. These decisions have, however, all gone on the ground, more or less sound, that those buildings might all be treated as buildings occupied by servants of the Crown and for the Crown, extending in some instances the shield of the Crown to what might be more fitly described as the public government of the country." Applying the principles thus enunciated and recognised, the House of Lords held that the Mersey Dock trustees were liable to be rated to the relief of the poor in respect of their occupation of the docks on the ground that such occupation did not come within the only class of exemptions which the Act of Elizabeth, when properly construed, recognised. But upon an application of the same principles to the occupation of the Berkshire Assize Courts and police station, the occupiers must be held entitled to exemption from liability to be rated to the relief of the poor, upon the ground that the occupation is for public purposes which, to use the language of the Lord Chancellor, "are required and created by the Government of the country, and are therefore to be deemed part of the use and service of the Crown." That this view has been acted upon appears from the statement in the special case, that the block of buildings comprising the county assize courts and the county police station has not, nor has any part thereof, ever been assessed to the poor rates. If, then, the justices are to be regarded as the occupiers of the assize courts and police station—a view, however, to which they do not assent—and if, as such, they are not rateable to the poor rate in respect of such occupation, on the ground that their occupation is for the purposes of the government of the country, as explained in the Mersey Dock case, the question at once suggests itself, are they to be assessed in respect of the same premises to the income tax? This brings me to a consideration of the provisions of the Income Tax Acts. By the statute 42 & 43 Vict. c. 21, the income tax for the year commencing on the 6th April 1879, is charged upon the property, profits, and gains made taxable by the statute 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, and by sect. 5 of the latter Act the duties are to be assessed and raised under the regulations and provisions of the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35. Consequently we have to look to 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, for the subject matters of the tax, and to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, for the mode in which it is to be assessed and raised. First, then, as to the subject matters of the charges to be made. For the purpose of classifying and distinguishing the several properties, profits, and gains for and in respect of which the duties are granted by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, the duties are classified under five several schedules, marked respectively, A., B., C., D., and E., of which schedules A. and B. are in the following terms: A. "For and in respect of the property in all lands, tenements, hereditaments, and heritages in the United Kingdom and to be charged for every twenty shillings of the annual value thereof."

[OT. OF APP.]

COOMBER (app.) v. THE JUSTICES OF BERKS (resps.).

[OT. OF APP.]

B. "For and in respect of the occupation of all such lands, tenements, hereditaments, and heritages as aforesaid, and to be charged for every twenty shillings of the annual value thereof." It is immaterial to our present purpose to refer to the other schedules, save only to note that they, as well as schedules A. and B., indicate that the subject-matters of charge are such as are productive of benefit to the persons who are to bear the charge. Mr. Justice Grove, in the course of his judgment in the Queen's Bench Division, is reported to have said, in reference to these schedules: "The language tends to show that the tax contemplated is a contribution to the revenue of the country in respect of annual profit or benefit;" and again, "the object the statute aims at is to make each person pay the tax according to the aid he may receive either from his property or from his labours in profession, trade, or employment." In the view so expressed I entirely concur. Let us now turn to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, and note the mode which is provided for assessing the property thus made chargeable. Sect. 60 provides that the duties on schedule A. are to be assessed and charged under certain rules which are arranged under separate consecutively numbered headings. The heading of No. 1 is in the following terms: "General rule for estimating lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages, mentioned in schedule A.;" and the rule is as follows: "The annual value of lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages charged under schedule A. shall be understood to be the rent by the year at which the same are let at rack rent, if the amount of such rent shall have been fixed by agreement commencing within the period of seven years preceding the 5th day of April next before the time of making the assessment, but if the same are not so let at rack rent, then at the rack rent at which the same are worth to be let by the year, which rule shall be construed to extend to all lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages capable of actual occupation of whatever nature and for whatever purpose occupied or enjoyed, and of whatever value, except the properties mentioned in No. 2 and No. 3 of the schedule." It is immaterial to notice the exceptions. The heading of No. 9 is entitled: "Rules for charging the said duties under schedules A. and B." There are three rules under this heading, the first and second of which are as follows: First, "The said duties, except where other provisions are made, as aforesaid, for estimating particular properties, shall be estimated according to the general rule contained in schedule A., and shall be charged on and paid by the occupier for the time being, his executors, administrators, and assigns." Second, "Every person having the use of any lands or tenements shall be taken and considered for the purposes of this Act as the occupier of such lands or tenements." Sect. 70 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, provides that the several duties shall be assessed on all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whether occupied at the time of assessment or not, but that the assessment on houses shall be discharged for the period they are unoccupied. The counsel for the appellant insist that the portions of the several Income Tax Acts, to which I have referred, establish the liability of the justices to be assessed to the income tax in respect of their alleged occupation of the assize courts and police station, but I am unable to adopt this view. Even if it is to be assumed, as contended on behalf of the appellant, that the premises in question were at the date of the assessment in the beneficial occupation of the justices, there is nothing in the Income Tax Acts to negative or even to throw a doubt upon the proposition which I have already advanced, that the purposes for which they were so occupied were public purposes of a kind which, according to the authorities cited by Lord Blackburn and recognised by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Cranworth in the Mersey Dock case, entitled them to exemption. The provision in rule No. 1., that it shall be construed as applying to lands or tenements "for whatever purpose occupied or enjoyed," has been relied upon; but, the Crown not being named in the Act, such a provision is inoperative as regards the Crown, or as regards the servants of the Crown strictly so called, or as against those occupiers for public purposes to whom the like benefit of exemption is accorded as is accorded to the servants of the Crown strictly so called. For the reasons which I have assigned I am of opinion that the appellant has failed to establish the liability of the justices to be charged with income tax in respect of the county assize court and the county police station, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed. But some propositions have been pressed upon us in argument, which I desire not to pass over. I assent to the proposition that, in order to establish a liability to the charge, it is not essential that there should be a beneficial ownership or occupation; but, if the ownership or occupation is not beneficial, the property must, in my opinion, be capable of being made a source of benefit to the owner or occupier. Again, as at present advised, I adopt the view which has been pressed upon us, on behalf of the appellant, that the justices might be regarded as the occupiers of the premises within the meaning of the statutes, as having the use of them, but I deem it unnecessary to express a positive opinion upon that point. I am, however, unable to assent to the proposition that there is any beneficial occupation or enjoyment by anyone. In my view of the case it can hardly be disputed that the justices have not any present beneficial occupation or enjoyment of the premises, and inasmuch as by virtue of 21 & 22 Vict. c. 92, and of the conveyance made thereunder in 1859, the assize courts and the police station were on the 6th April 1879, and have been ever since, vested in the clerk of the peace, upon trust for the public uses or purposes of the county, they have been and are incapable of any such beneficial ownership or occupation as would render the owner or occupiers liable to be charged in respect thereof. There is but one more suggestion, it can hardly be called an argument, on behalf of the appellant to which I will advert. It was urged before us, and it was apparently urged in the Divisional Court, that if the Legislature had desired to exempt assize courts and police stations from the operation of the Acts, they would have been included amongst the exemptions mentioned in or provided for by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35. This suggestion may be met by another of at least equal materiality. If it was intended that justices should be charged in respect of this description of property, it is somewhat strange that, from 1842, when 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35 was passed, until 1879, no attempt was made to enforce or even to assert any such liability. The costs of the appeal must of course follow the event.

[OT. OF APP.]

COOMBER (app.) v. THE JUSTICES OF BERKS (resps.).

[OT. OF APP.]

BRETT, L.J.—During the argument I confess I was under the impression that, even if everything else was in favour of the Crown, it was impossible that this assessment could be upheld on the ground that the persons assessed are the justices. I was under the impression that Mr. Dicey had hardly urged that they could be, and that what he asked the court to determine was, not whether the justices could be properly assessed, but whether anybody could—whether this was, in fact, assessable property. The reason why I think it impossible to hold that the justices can be assessed under any view of the case is, that the justices are not a corporation, and that the justices are not an aggregation or association of persons at all unless they be assembled at quarter sessions. The justices have no property on which anything could be levied, and it can hardly be maintained, I should think, that this tax could be recovered from the justices individually and personally, either by action against them or by seizure of their goods. The justices, as justices, are persons not capable of having property belonging to them, therefore it seems to me that this assessment must, in any view of the case, fail, and that the judgment must be for the respondents. But Mr. Dicey asked us to give an opinion as to whether the clerk of the peace or some other person might not be legally assessed for this tax. I am of opinion that nobody can be assessed for this tax in respect of these buildings. It would be impossible now, after the long series of decisions and after the long lapse of years, for any court to hold that buildings in the position of these buildings could be assessed to the poor rate, and it would be impossible to say that it was not a good ground of exemption that they are considered in point of law to be in the nature of Crown property. That was not only determined by a long series of decisions before the case in the House of Lords, but it was enunciated without objection and stated to be the law in the opinion of Blackburn, J., given to the House of Lords, and which was, in terms, as to that point, adopted by the Lords who gave judgment in the case. Now it seems to me that that is the only application which the case cited in the House of Lords has to the present case. The only way in which it can be applicable at all to the present case is with regard to the enunciation of that part of the law in respect of such buildings. Now, if these buildings are to be considered as in the nature of Crown property within the Poor Law Acts, that is to say, that if they are to be exempted from rating to the poor rates on the ground that they are buildings in the nature of Crown property, is it possible to say, with regard to the present statute, that they are not buildings in the nature of Crown property? Is it possible by any logical mode of reasoning to say it is the law that, when you are considering the poor rate assessment, these buildings are to be considered as in the nature of Crown property, but that, when you are considering a land tax, you are to consider that they are not buildings in the nature of Crown property? I cannot follow such an argument so as to adopt it. Therefore I agree upon that ground, not that these are Crown property, but that they are in law considered as in the nature of Crown property, and that, therefore, they are not within but are exempt from the present statute by reason of that privilege. That of itself would be sufficient to decide the case, but it seems to me that there are other and strong reasons why it ought to be held that this property is not assessable under these statutes. Mr. Dicey ingeniously asked us to divide the argument into two heads, and to consider the matter under one head without any reference to the other. He asked us to consider whether this was assessable property without at the same time considering who it was (if anybody) who could be assessed in respect of it. I admire the ingenuity, but I think I see through the meaning of it. It was in order to avoid the difficulty, which would certainly present itself, of determining who could possibly be assessable in respect of this property. Mr. Dicey asked us to consider whether this property was assessable, and to consider that without reference to anything else. The immediate result of so considering it was laid bare by the Solicitor-General in his proposition, which was, that every foot of land in this kingdom, according to his argument, whatever be the circumstances under which it exists, is assessable to this tax. Of course, if you consider the question without reference to anything else, every foot of land is assessable; but it seems to me, that in order to decide this case, we are bound to consider whether it is possible, under any circumstances which we are entitled to examine, to apply to the buildings in question the machinery of these statutes, and if it is not possible, under any circumstances which we are entitled to examine, to apply the machinery of these statutes, it seems to me that it follows that these buildings are not assessable. Now the statutes, as to the subject-matter, no doubt begin by settling that all lands are to be assessed. If you confine yourself to those words alone, it is true to say that every foot of land in the kingdom is assessable, but then you are immediately thrown upon this—in respect of what is it that all lands are to be assessed? In respect of the annual value thereof. Therefore, if there be any land in this kingdom existing physically—if that land be land which cannot under any circumstances have any annual value, it is obvious that the incidence of the tax fails at once. If the land has no annual value, and cannot have any, there is nothing on which the tax can be imposed. In my opinion these buildings, considered to be lands, are lands which cannot, under any circumstances which we have a right to consider, have any annual value whatever, they are struck with sterility by statute, they cannot by law have any annual value any more than if they were barren rock which could not under any circumstances possibly have any annual value. These buildings are erected under and by virtue of an Act of Parliament which declares that nobody shall legally ever enjoy any benefit from the use of them. It is true to say that some person might take into his possession these buildings and, by breaking the law and disregarding the statute, obtain an annual value from them. If such a person, so breaking the law, were to be in possession of these buildings he could not be heard to say: "Though I obtain a profit from these buildings, yet by an Act of Parliament I have no right to do so, and therefore I shall not pay the tax." He could not set up his own wrongful act, and, therefore, under those circumstances he might be assessable, but as long as these buildings are used legally, according to the Act of Parliament, not only cannot the justices have any benefit from the use of them,

[CT. OF APP.]

SMITH v. LAMBETH ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE.

[CT. OF APP.]

but nobody can; the statute is express that nobody can have any benefit from the use of them. It seems to me that we are not entitled until the fact actually arises, to consider that anybody will break the law; we must consider these buildings as they are under their legal disability: their legal disability is that nobody can receive any benefit from the use of them. It follows, as I say, that they are by law struck with sterility as to their annual value, and that, as long as the law is observed, they cannot in the hands of anybody have any annual value; if so, then there is nothing upon which the statute can act. But more than this it seems to me that, as long as these buildings are used legally, there cannot be any occupier of them. That there could be any occupier of them in the ordinary sense of the word "occupier," is hardly contended, but it is said that the word "occupier" in this statute is enlarged by the definition clause, which says that "anybody who has the use of them is an occupier." That is a phraseology in an Act of Parliament of so large and indefinite a nature that it immediately gives rise to a difficulty. Now, it cannot mean that anybody who has the use of them is a person who has the use of them within the meaning of that phrase in the Act of Parliament. It cannot mean that the judges who sit in the assize courts—though in one sense they have the use of the courts—are persons who have the use of them within the statute. It cannot be said the witnesses, the public, and the prisoners, who all use these courts, are the occupiers. It is absurd; it does not mean that. It cannot mean that a person who is there as a mere servant is a person who has the use of them, because, if that were true, why then in every house, though the master was living in the house, it might be said that each servant in the house had the use of it within the meaning of this statute, and was a person who could be assessed. The person who within the meaning of the statute is the person who has the use of the house is, though from some technical difficulty he may not be called an occupier, a person who has the same use of the house as the occupier of the house has. Now, the justices have no such use of these buildings; the judges have no such use of them; the inhabitants of the county, the public, have no such use of them; the servant has to take care of them; the policemen who have to sleep in them for the purpose of doing their duty have no such use of them. As long as these buildings are legally used there is no person who can have the use of them within the meaning of the Act of Parliament; there is no person who can be the occupier within the same meaning. Therefore you have these buildings, as long as they are legally used, struck with sterility as to annual value, and unable to have any occupier; if that be so, there is nothing upon which the machinery of this Act can, under any circumstances, be brought to bear. Therefore I decline to consider this case as to the property itself alone. I say that you must consider it with regard to the property itself, and with regard to the persons who could, under proper circumstances, be made liable to assessment, and if you find that, taking these two together, this property is in such a position that the machinery of the Act can never be applied to it, it follows logically that this Act does not apply to it, and that this property cannot be assessed. Therefore I am of opinion that the judgment of the court below was right, and ought to be affirmed.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and I have nothing to add. With regard to the judgment of Baggallay, L.J., I quite concur in it, as also I do in the judgment of my brother Grove, which I have studied with great attention.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, The Solicitor for Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the respondents, Newman, Stretton, Hilliard, and Williams.

Thursday, Nov. 23, 1882.

(Before BAGGALLAY, BRETT, and LINDLEY, L.JJ.)

SMITH v. LAMBETH ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Poor-rate — Bookstands at railway station — Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67).

The London and South-Western Railway Company, in consideration of a yearly rent or sum, by deed granted to W. H. Smith and Son the sole right to sell newspapers, books, &c., at the company's stations for a term of seven years, together with liberty, subject to the approval of the engineer of the company, to erect bookstands, &c., on the platforms.

Held, on a case stated, that W. H. Smith and Son were not liable to be rated to the relief of the poor in respect of their bookstands erected under this agreement at Waterloo station.

Judgment of Field and Cave, JJ. affirmed.

ON a return to a mandamus to the General Quarter Sessions for the county of Surrey, commanding them to enter continuances, and to hear and determine the merits of certain appeals against a rate or assessment for the relief of the poor of the parish of Lambeth, a special case for the opinion of the Divisional Court was stated by consent under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 11.

In the case the present respondents, Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son, are described as "the appellants," and the present appellants, the assessment committee, as "the respondents."

The following are the material parts of the special case:—

1. The appellants are booksellers, librarians, stationers, and news and advertisement agents, carrying on business under the style or firm of W. H. Smith and Son, their principal place of business being at No. 186, Strand.

2. The respondents are the assessment committee for the parish of Lambeth, and the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of that parish, The Waterloo station of the London and South-Western Railway Company, hereinafter mentioned, is situate within the parish of Lambeth.

3. Shortly after the 18th Feb. 1880 the appellants received notices of that date in respect of the several bookstalls hereinafter mentioned, which are situate at the Waterloo station, to the effect that the assessment committee for the parish of Lambeth had had laid before them a provisional list wherein the bookstalls were included for assessment.

4. These bookstalls had never before been included in any valuation or provisional list, nor had they been rated or assessed to the relief of the poor or otherwise, nor had the names of the appellants appeared in any valuation or provisional list, nor had the appellants been rated to the relief of the poor or otherwise in the parish.

5. On the 26th Feb. 1880 the appellants gave notice to the assessment committee of their objection to the insertion of the bookstalls in the provisional list. On the 9th March 1880 the assessment committee overruled the objections. No copy of such provisional list, or notice thereof, was afterwards served on the appellants.

6. The rate or assessment for the relief of the poor and other purposes, in respect of which the appeals were brought, was made by the respondents, and allowed on the 20th March 1880, and such rate purports to be made in accordance with the provisional list.

7. The bookstalls in question are in possession of and used by the appellants under the terms of an indenture dated the 25th April 1872 (set out in the appendix).

8. The terms of the indenture were in full force and effect at the date of the rate; and, in pursuance of the provisions in the indenture contained, the spaces occupied by the appellants' bookcases were set apart, and so far as the bookstalls are erected and placed upon the platforms of the station, they have been erected and placed with the approval of the engineer and general manager of the company.

9. From the date of the indenture the appellants have exercised their rights thereunder, partly by attendants who have exhibited and vended newspapers, books, &c., carried by hand or carried by such assistants in baskets or other convenient articles to passengers at the stations or in the trains at the station, and partly by means of portable bookstalls or in the spaces so assigned as aforesaid. At the commencement of the grant under and by the indenture, and for some time afterwards, spaces for one movable stall on the main line platform, and for one movable stall on the line then called the suburban line, were assigned by the company to the appellants; but, as the station has from time to time been enlarged and the business and traffic thereat increased, other spaces have been assigned to the appellants. From time to time, at the request of the company, the appellants have closed their stalls and suspended the exercise of their rights and privileges.

[Paragraphs 10, 11, 12, and 13 described the four bookstalls in question, and the mode of placing them. Three of them were fixed to the platform and walls of the station; the fourth rested by its own weight on the platform.]

14. The bookstalls are used exclusively by the appellants and their servants, and only for the purposes authorised by the indenture. They are closed at night with shutters and locked up, and the keys are kept by the appellants' servants.

15. Alterations at the instance of the company have from time to time been made in the position of the bookstalls since the date of the indenture.

16. No rights of ingress and egress to and from the station, or of access to the bookstalls, are exercised by the appellants, or their agents or servants, except under the provisions and for the purposes of the indenture.

17. In or about the year 1871, when the assessment of the London and South-Western Railway Company was made for the poor rate in respect of the station at Waterloo now under consideration, the assessment surveyor to the parish of Lambeth included in his estimate for such assessment an item of 1000*l.* in respect of annual profit to the railway company arising from bookstalls and advertisement spaces. The company did not admit in their estimate such a source of profit, and appealed against the whole assessment, and upon the hearing of that appeal the assessment sessions, without deciding as to any particular items, fixed a lump sum as the rateable value of the station.

The following are the material parts of the indenture referred to in paragraph 7 of the case, and set out in the appendix, which was dated the 25th April 1872, and made between the London and South-Western Railway Company (hereinafter called "the company") of the one part, and Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son (hereafter called "the tenants") of the other part:

In consideration of the yearly payments hereinafter reserved, and of the covenants and stipulations hereinafter contained, and on the part of the tenants to be observed and performed, the company hereby give and grant to the tenants, as is hereinafter restricted, for the term of seven years, to be computed from the 1st day of April 1872, and thereafter from year to year (subject as hereinafter mentioned), the sole and exclusive licence and privilege (subject only to the reservations, covenants, provisoes, restrictions, and agreements hereinafter contained) to vend, sell, lend, and exhibit for sale and loan newspapers, books, periodicals, pamphlets, prints, stationery, travelling caps, wrappers, and such other like articles required for the convenience of passengers by railway as shall be approved by the secretary of the company at all the stations now existing and used, or which shall hereafter, during the continuance of this grant, be made, or existing, or in use for passengers on the several lines of railway belonging to, or leased, or worked by the company, &c., and at the expense of the tenants to canvas for place, post, &c., in proper frames, advertisements, &c., upon such parts of the interior platform and station wall and fences of all the said stations as may be approved of by the company, subject also to the reasonable regulations of the company with respect thereto, &c., not interfering with the space required for any notices, advertisements, &c., which the company may think proper to affix relating to or in connection with the business or traffic of their line of railway, . . . together with full liberty for the tenants, subject to the approval of the engineer of the company, to erect, place, and continue on such part of the platforms of the said several stations of the company, as may be approved by the general manager or engineer of the company, all necessary bookstands, cases, cupboards, and drawers, or other convenient places for exhibiting, keeping, and preserving their stock of papers, books, periodicals, pamphlets, &c., and to remove or alter the position from time to time, if necessary, and also full and free ingress and egress at all reasonable times for the tenants, their servants or agents, to and from the several stations for the purposes of this present grant. And it is expressly understood and agreed that the company shall not be in any way responsible for any stock or other property of the tenants which may be placed or left by them at the said several stations of the company pursuant to the licences and privileges hereby granted, and that such person employed by the tenants at the several stations of the company in the exercise of the licences and privileges hereby granted is, during the time of such employment, to be under the control, and to abide by, obey, and perform all the lawful and reasonable orders and directions of the station master at the station at which such person may be employed, and is to be liable, in case of insobriety or misconduct, to immediate removal from such station. And the tenants hereby covenant with the company, their successors and assigns, that in consideration of the licence and privilege hereby granted by and of the covenants herein contained

[Ct. of App.]

SMITH v. LAMBETH ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE.

[Ct. of App.]

on the part of the company, they the tenants will pay to the company for each and every year of the term the rent or sum of £. by twelve equal monthly payments on the first day of each month in the year, and in addition to the yearly rent or sum of £. hereby reserved, pay or cause to be paid to the company quarterly . . . in each and every year such a sum of money as shall be equal to a clear per cent. of the gross amounts from time to time received by the tenants from the public for placing, affixing, &c., all such advertisements, &c., at the several stations before referred to. . . . Provided always, and it is hereby expressly agreed that in case any monthly payment of the said yearly rent or sum of £. or any quarterly payment of such additional sum as is hereinbefore mentioned shall be in arrear and unpaid for the space of fourteen days after notice in writing, the same shall be recoverable by the company in addition to any other remedies by distress as in the case of rent in arrear. . . . And further, that the tenants will not assign or demise the benefit of the grant, licence, or agreement hereby made, or any part thereof, to any person or persons whomsoever, except to any person or persons who may become a partner or partners with the tenants without the written consent of the secretary or general manager. And further, that the tenants will, in the exercise of the licence and privilege hereby granted, cause all such bookstalls, &c., to be of neat and suitable appearance, &c., and shall abide by, obey, and observe the regulations which may be from time to time made by the company, touching or concerning the placing on the platforms of the said several stations of any of the necessary bookstands, &c., and that such bookstands, &c., shall be of neat and suitable elevation, &c., and shall be constructed in every way to the satisfaction of the engineer." . . . Covenant by the company not to permit other persons to vend newspapers, books, &c., or exhibit advertisements, &c., at their stations (except their own train books, time tables, &c.).

"And the company do hereby warrant unto the tenants the quiet and peaceable enjoyment and benefit of the grant, licence, powers, privileges and benefits hereby granted for the period upon the terms and stipulations and in manner aforesaid according to the true intent and meaning of these presents. Provided always, and it is hereby agreed . . . that if any of the said monthly or quarterly payments of the said yearly rent, or sum of £., or of such additional sum as aforesaid respectively, or any part or parts thereof, shall be in arrear and unpaid for the space of eight days after the same shall have become due, or if the tenants shall wilfully break or neglect to fulfil or observe any of the covenants herein contained on their part to be observed, it shall be lawful for the company to put an end to the grant hereby made" (by a month's notice in writing) "of the intention of the company to put an end to the said grant, and at the determination of such notice the said term hereby granted shall cease and determine, but without prejudice to the rights of the company under the covenants, and agreements herein contained up to such determination. And it is hereby further agreed that on the expiration of the said term of seven years the licence and privilege hereby granted shall" (unless determined at the end of the term by three months' previous notice) "continue in full force and effect and subject to the stipulations and conditions herein contained and provided" (until determined by three months' notice), "and at the expiration of such notice the said licence and privilege shall cease and determine."

The questions for the opinion of the court (who were to be at liberty to draw inferences of fact) were: first, whether the appellants (W. H. Smith and Son) were liable to be rated in respect of the bookstalls, or any of them; secondly, whether the rate was a good and valid rate.

The Divisional Court (Field and Cave, JJ.) gave judgment against the rate, answering both questions in the negative.

From this decision (which is reported 9 Q. B. Div. 585) the Lambeth Assessment Committee now appealed.

E. Clarke, Q.C. and Archibald, for the assessment committee, in support of the appeal.—On the true construction of the agreement under which the bookstalls are held, Messrs. Smith and Son are liable to be assessed to the poor rate. They are in exclusive possession and occupation of the spaces occupied by the bookstalls, which distinguishes the present case from Willing v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee (37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 126; s. c. nom. Reg. v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee (2 Q. B. Div. 581). The stalls are structurally of a character which renders the occupier rateable. In The Electric Telegraph Company v. The Overseers of the Poor of Salford (11 Ex. 181; 24 L. J. 146, M. C.) the telegraph company was held liable to be rated in respect of telegraph wires and posts, and the land in which the posts were fixed. In that case Sir Fitzroy Kelly, arguing on behalf of the telegraph company, contended that they had only a qualified right or easement, as in the case of a licence to put a bookstall on a platform, on which Pollock, C.B. said: "Is not a bookstall rateable, like a refreshment room?" (24 L. J. M. C., at page 149). They also referred to

The London and North-Western Railway Company v. Buckmaster, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 835; L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 70, 444;

Reg. v. Morris, 32 L. J. 245, M. C.;

Cory v. Bristol, 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 797; 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 624; 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 564; L. Rep. 10 C. P. 504; 1 C. P. Div. 54; 2 App. Cas. 262;

Reg. v. Ponsonby, 3 Q. B. 14;

Pimlico Tramway Company v. Greenwich, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 605; L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 9.

McIntyre, Q.C. and Prosser, for Messrs. W. H. Smith and Son, in support of the judgment of the Divisional Court, were not called on.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division, who have held that Messrs. Smith and Son are not rateable in respect of the bookstalls at Waterloo Railway Station, which are held by them under a grant from the London and South-Western Railway Company, the terms of which have been brought before us in the course of the argument. No question is raised as to whether these bookstalls are rateable, in the sense that a rate must be paid by somebody in respect of them. It is admitted that they are rated as a portion of the station. It is now suggested on behalf of the appellants that Messrs. Smith and Son's possession of the bookstalls is such as to make them rateable. In delivering judgment in the court below, Field, J. stated that the real question to be considered is whether the grant gives exclusive occupation, or exclusive enjoyment. In stating the question in this way, he was following in substance a series of decisions of many judges of great experience in rating cases. Having set before him that as the question to be decided, he does what it is our duty now to do, that is, he proceeds to consider what is the effect of the deed. He says: "From the beginning to the end of this document the parties carefully avoid all expression of intention to create a tenancy." (9 Q. B. Div. at page 594.) I entirely agree with this observation. It is true that, for the sake of convenience, Messrs. Smith and Sons are referred to as "the tenants," but the agreement is in reality a grant of a sole and exclusive licence and privilege. I concur with Field, J.'s criticism, and I think that, on the true construction of the agreement, the railway company does not grant to Messrs. Smith and Son exclusive possession o occupation of the bookstalls, but only exclusive enjoyment, so as to enable them to carry on their trade in the most convenient manner. If that is the right view of the construction of the agreement, as I think it is, it follows that Messrs. Smith and Son are not rateable in respect of these bookstalls, and that is Field, J.'s construction. He considers the authorities in the course of his judgment, and I do not think it necessary now to comment on them in detail, but I may observe that the same question has been proposed in each case, and where the judges have come to the conclusion that there was exclusive occupation, they have held that the persons so occupying were rateable, and where they have come to the conclusion that there was no such exclusive occupation they have decided against the rate. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal fails, and the judgment of the Divisional Court ought to be affirmed.

CT. OF APP.] GUARDIANS OF SALFORD UNION v. OVERSEERS OF TOWNSHIP OF MANCHESTER. [Q.B. DIV.]

BRETT, L.J.—The question in these cases is not always whether there is a demise, for there may be exclusive occupation without a demise, but here the question is whether this agreement is a demise or a licence to sell books and the other articles referred to in the agreement, with subsidiary leave to display such books and other articles on such parts of the platform as may be approved of by the company. This question turns on the construction of the indenture. There are parts of the deed which look like part of an agreement for a tenancy. It is a fallacy to take singly each part of the deed which is opposed to the view that there is a tenancy, and argue that the expressions there used are not absolutely inconsistent with the existence of a tenancy. You must take all these parts of the deed together, and see on the whole whether the deed amounts to a demise or is a mere licence to sell. I find that Messrs. Smith and Son can only go to these stalls at particular times and for a limited purpose. This is consistent with a licence, and inconsistent with a tenancy. Again, the money payable under the agreement is paid for the whole licence, and what is supposed to be a demise of a particular place is more like what might be called a movable demise, for the position of the bookstalls may be changed. It is clear that this is not a demise of a particular place, and consequently that it is only a licence to sell books and other goods, together with an auxiliary right to display such goods at different places upon the railway company's premises. I am therefore of opinion that there is no occupation within the meaning of the Act of Elizabeth (43 Eliz. c. 2). The only way in which these bookstalls are brought within the purview of rating is that the railway company is rated in respect of the increased value of their premises which is caused by the payment they receive for the use of the bookstalls. As to the cases which have been referred to, I do not think it necessary to consider them all in detail, but I wish to say that, with regard to the case of The Electric Telegraph Company v. The Overseers of Salford (11 Ex. 181), I reserve my opinion as to whether I agree with that decision or not.

LINDLEY, L.J.—When this deed is looked at carefully, it is impossible to hold that it amounts to a demise. On the contrary, the language is chosen as if for the purpose of excluding that view. It is true that the words "tenants" and "rent" are used, but there is no reddendum, and there are no appropriate words to create a tenancy. Messrs. Smith and Son have the right of going into the station and erecting stalls where the officers of the company point out. This right is movable, and there is no grant of an exclusive right over any portion of the railway company's premises. If this is a grant of an easement and nothing else, there is an end of the case. The cases which have been referred to—Electric Telegraph Company v. Overseers of Salford (11 Ex. 181), Oory v. Bristow (2 App. Cas. 262) and Pimlico Tramway Company v. Greenwich (L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 9)—are all distinguishable. Here the parties have intentionally avoided creating a tenancy. I am therefore of opinion that the judgment of the court below is correct, and the appeal should be dismissed. Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for W. H. Smith and Son, Harvey, Oliver, and Capron.

Solicitor for the assessment committee, G. W. Barnard.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Dec. 13 and 21, 1882.

(Before HAWKINS and WATKIN WILLIAMS, JJ.)

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE SALFORD UNION v. THE OVERSEERS OF THE POOR OF THE TOWNSHIP OF MANCHESTER. (a)

Poor law—Settlement—Illegitimate pauper—Idiot—Residence for three years—Divided Parishes Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 34.

By a residence for three years in a parish, an illegitimate idiot above the age of sixteen years acquires a settlement in such parish, notwithstanding that she is incapable of taking care of herself, and that she resides with her mother and her mother's husband as part of their family.

A. G., an adult illegitimate idiot, and a person incapable of taking care of herself, resided with her mother and her mother's husband in the appellant union for more than three years. All three then removed to the respondent township, where A. G. (before three years had expired) became an inmate of the workhouse. An order of justices adjudicating the settlement of A. G. to be in the appellant union having been made:

Held, that such order was right.

Reg. v. The Leeds Union (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 521; 4 Q. B. Div. 323) followed.

THIS was an appeal by way of special case, stated by consent and by the order of North J., in pursuance of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45 s. 11.

On the 31st July 1882 the respondents obtained an order of the justices of the city of Manchester, adjudicating the settlement of Alice Gerard, an idiot pauper, to be in the township of Pendleton in the county of Lancaster, and in the appellant union.

1. The pauper, a single woman, is the illegitimate daughter of Margaret Gerard (afterwards Margaret Harding), and was born at Warrington, in the said county of Lancaster (not in the appellant union), on the 18th Jan 1854, and she is now, and always has been, an idiot.

2. The mother of the pauper, before the pauper had attained the age of sixteen years, videlicet in

(a) Reported by DUNLOP HILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

1864, intermarried at Warrington aforesaid with one George Harding, a glass cutter, who was born at Birmingham, and served seven years legal apprenticeship there, and is now dead.

3. In the year 1875 the pauper and her mother and the said George Harding came to reside in the said township of Pendleton, where they resided together until Sept. 1881, when they removed to Manchester, where they resided together until the pauper became an inmate of the Manchester workhouse.

4. Previously to and since 1875 the pauper has always resided continuously with her mother and the said George Harding, as part of their family, and has never separated herself therefrom.

5. The pauper is now, and always has been, incapable of taking care of herself, through imbecility of mind.

The respondents contend, and the appellants deny, that the pauper upon the above facts is settled in the township of Pendleton in the appellant union by reason of her residence therein for three years, under the provisions of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 34, which provides:

Where any person shall have resided for the term of three years in any parish, in such manner and under such circumstances in each of such years as would, in accordance with the several statutes in that behalf, render him irremovable, he shall be deemed to be settled therein until he shall acquire a settlement in some other parish by a like residence or otherwise; provided that an order of removal in respect of a settlement acquired under this section shall not be made upon the evidence of the person to be removed, without such corroboration as the justices or court think sufficient.

The question for the opinion of the court is, whether, on the above facts, the legal settlement of the pauper is in the township of Pendleton.

If the court should be of opinion in the affirmative, the order of justices is to stand; if otherwise, to be quashed.

Marshall for the appellant.

Smyly for the respondents.

The judgment of the court (Hawkins and Watkin Williams, JJ.) was delivered by HAWKINS J.—The question for our decision is whether the pauper was legally settled in Pendleton and removable thereto. We are of opinion that she was, and that her settlement in that township was acquired by her residence therein for three years, under the provisions of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 34. It was not denied by the appellants that the pauper's residence in Pendleton from 1875 to 1881 was such as to confer upon her a status of irremovability from that township from the expiration of the first year of that residence until her removal with Harding and her mother to Manchester in Sept. 1881, under the statutes 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, s. 1, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55, s. 1, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79, s. 8; nor that such status of irremovability for upwards of three years gave her a settlement in Pendleton, under 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 34, if under the circumstances of such residence she was capable of acquiring a settlement in her own right; but it was contended that she was not so capable, because during all the time of such residence she was an idiot unable to maintain or take care of herself, and that such residence was a mere residence as a member of the family of Harding and her mother, and conferred upon her no independent status; and that she ought to be looked upon in the same light as an unemancipated infant of tender years, who could not be removed from her mother. The effect of the argument was to invite us to treat the pauper as legitimate for the purpose of incapacitating her to obtain either a settlement or a status of irremovability, but to treat her, as we are bound to do, as illegitimate for the purpose of preventing her from taking the settlement acquired by Harding by reason of his residence in Pendleton, as she would have done had she been legitimate. In support of his contention, Mr. Marshall cited passages from Nolan, vol. 1, p. 320, and vol. 2, p. 369: Rees v. Much Cowarne (2 B. & Ad. 861), and Reg. v. St. Mary Arches, Easter (5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 637; 31 L. J. 77, M. C.). We do not in the least degree dissent from anything which is to be found in either of those passages or authorities; on the contrary, we entirely assent to them; but, in our opinion they have no applicability to the present case, for those authorities had reference to legitimate children, whilst we are dealing with an illegitimate pauper of full age. We take it to be clear law that, so long as a child, legitimate or illegitimate, is within the age of nurture, which covers the whole period from birth to the age of seven years, it cannot be legally, by any order of removal, separated from its mother. "It is entitled to remain with its mother so long as the purposes of nurture require" (per Bayley, J., Rees v. St. Nicholas, Leicester, 2 B. & C. 889); and even the consent of the mother cannot justify such a separation, for the rule is made for the benefit of the child: (E. v. Birmingham, 5 Q. B. 210; 13 L. J. 1, M. C.) The statute 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, s. 3, extended this period of non-separation of a child from its parents by enacting that no child under the age of sixteen, whether legitimate or illegitimate, residing in any parish with his or her father or mother, shall be removed in any case in which such father or mother may not lawfully be removed. At this point there is a wide difference between the status of a legitimate and an illegitimate child. In the case of a legitimate child, the liability of its parents to maintain it is not limited to the age of sixteen, but extends to an indefinite period if the child, whether from imbecility of mind or of body, is unable to maintain or provide for itself. So long as it remains an unemancipated member of its father's family, no matter what its age may be, it follows and takes in law its father's settlement; it gains no independent status by reason of any residence in a parish so long as such residence is merely as a member of its father's family; and its right to take such newly-acquired settlement of its father ceases only upon its becoming emancipated or acquiring a new settlement for itself. After the happening of either of those events, even though residing with its father, its residence is for all purposes of settlement and removal an independent residence. See, among other cases, Reg. v. Everton (1 East, 526); Reg. v. Bleasby (3 B. & A. 377). The case of an illegitimate child is totally different. It is true its maintenance to the age of sixteen is provided for by statute 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 71, enacting that its mother shall maintain it as part of her family till it attains the age of sixteen; and if before that time arrives she marries, the liability to maintain such child as part of his family until it reaches that age is imposed on the husband of its mother. On the arrival, however, of an illegitimate child at the age of sixteen, all legal obligation towards it on the part both of the mother and her husband ceases: it is no longer legally attached to, and ceases to be a member of the family, in its legal sense, of either; and though, as an act of kindness, they may permit it to live with them and maintain it as one of the family, in the popular sense of the term, such residence amounts to no more than would the residence of a total stranger to whom food, lodging, and raiment might be voluntarily given as an act of pure Christian charity; and, as regards its settlement, that is by law (until it acquires one for itself) established in the place of its birth or in the place of its mother's settlement, if she have one which the child is capable of taking; but in no case does it take any settlement the mother's husband may acquire, even during the time the child is a legal member of his family: (see 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 71; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 35; Reg. v. St. Mary, Newington, 4 Q. B. 581; Manchester v. St. Pancras, 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 218; 4 Q. B. Div. 409.) The case of Rees v. Much Owarns (2 B. & Ad. 861) would have been in point in favour of the appellants had the pauper in the present case been legitimate; but it is no authority, the pauper being illegitimate. The same observation may be made upon the case of Reg. v. St. Mary Arches, Exeter (5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 637; 31 L. J. 77, M. C.), for the doctrine of emancipation is altogether inapplicable to illegitimate children, whose unfortunate position is such that, after arriving at the age of sixteen, they have no title to be ranked as members of any family, and are in law looked upon in no other light than as mere strangers. The case of Reg. v. The Leeds Union (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 521; 4 Q. B. Div. 323) seems to me to be directly in point in favour of the respondents. We are unable to distinguish it from the present. In each case the pauper was illegitimate; in each case it was in fact separated from its mother. In the Leeds case it was away from its mother and was in the hands of strangers to it; in the present it was an inmate of the Manchester workhouse. In each case it was unable to choose a residence for itself, the one pauper being a mere infant, the other being an idiot. If any distinction can be pointed out, it is the fact that in the Leeds case the pauper was within the age of nurture, whilst here the pauper is upwards of twenty-one years old. In principle the cases are identical. Our judgment, therefore, is for the respondents.

Judgment for the respondents.

Solicitors for the appellants, Ohester and Co., for Hulme, Foyster, and Waddington, Salford.

Solicitors for the respondents, Johnson, Wetherall, and Co., for Lings, Manchester.

Thursday, Jan. 25, 1883.

(Before POLLOCK, B. and MANISTY, J.)

Ex parte PIOT. (a)

Extradition—Foreign warrant—Warrant of committal—Sufficiency of description of offence—"Fraud by an agent"—Extradition Act 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52), s. 10—Treaty with France 1876—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 75.

A French subject and fugitive criminal was apprehended in England upon a warrant issued by the chief metropolitan police magistrate, after notice from the Home Secretary that a requisition had been made for his extradition under the treaty with France (1876) for the surrender of fugitive criminals, and he was committed under sect. 10 of the Extradition Act 1870.

In the foreign warrant issued in France the prisoner was accused of the crime of "abus de confiance;" and by Article 3 of the treaty one of the crimes for which extradition is to be granted is "abus de confiance ou détournement par un banquier, commissionnaire, administrateur, &c."

In the police magistrate's warrant of committal the offence was described as "fraud by an agent."

Held, that the description of the offence in the warrant was sufficient, and that the facts upon the depositions disclosed a prima facie case of fraud by an agent within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 75, to justify the prisoner's committal for trial if the offence had been committed in England, and therefore the magistrate was right in committing him under the Extradition Act.

HABEAS CORPUS.

A rule nisi for a writ of habeas corpus was granted on the 22nd Jan. directed to the Governor of the Middlesex House of Detention at Clerkenwell, commanding him to bring up the body of one Felix Auguste Piot (who had been committed under the Extradition Act 1870) with a view to his discharge from custody.

On the 22nd Nov. 1882 the Home Secretary had, under sect. 7 of the Extradition Act, signified to Sir James Ingham, the chief magistrate of the Metropolitan Police Courts, that a requisition had been made to him by the diplomatic representative of the French Republic, for the surrender of Piot, accused of the commission of the crime of fraud within the jurisdiction of the French Republic, and thereupon Piot was arrested, and subsequently committed.

In the French warrant which was issued for the arrest of Piot he was accused of the crime of fraud (abus de confiance), and in the warrant of committal by Sir James Ingham the offence was described as "fraud by an agent."

Piot had formerly carried on the business of a banker at Reims, and had been adjudicated a bankrupt by the Tribunal de Commerce of Reims. The case for the prosecution was that one Maucière, a commercial clerk residing at Elbœuf, had purchased through Piot twenty-five shares in the Société des Immeubles, and that Piot had misappropriated the sum of 3000*fr.*, which Maucière had sent to him after writing the following letter:

Reims, June 1, 1881.

Mons. F. Piot,—I pray you to be so good as to cause to be taken up at the next settling day the twenty-five Immeubles of which I am buyer through you (chez vous). I will forward to you the funds either to-morrow or the day after.—Accept, Sir, my friendly greetings.

(Signed)

MAUCIÈRE.

The receipt of this letter was denied by Piot, who also denied that he had acted as the agent of Maucière.

By the Extradition Act 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52), s. 10, it is enacted that:

In the case of a fugitive criminal accused of an extradition crime, if the foreign warrant authorising the arrest of such criminal is duly authenticated, and such evidence is produced as (subject to the provisions of this

(a) Reported by H. D. BONSRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

Ex parte PIOT.

[Q.B. Div.]

Act) would, according to the law of England, prove that the prisoner was convicted of such crime, the police magistrate shall commit him to prison, but otherwise shall order him to be discharged.

By the treaty with France for the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals, article 3, one of the crimes for which extradition is to be granted is as follows :

18. Abus de confiance, ou détournement par un banquier, commissionnaire, administrateur, tuteur, curateur, liquidateur, syndic, officier ministériel, directeur, membre ou employé d'une société, ou par toute autre personne.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 75, it is enacted that :

Whosoever having been entrusted either solely or jointly with any other person, as a banker, merchant, broker, attorney, or other agent, with any money or security for the payment of money, with any direction in writing to apply, pay, or deliver such money or security or any part thereof respectively, or the proceeds or any part of the proceeds of such security, for any purpose, or to any person specified in such direction, shall in violation of good faith, and contrary to the terms of such direction, in anywise convert to his own use or benefit, or the use or benefit of any person other than the person by whom he shall have been so intrusted, such money, security, or proceeds, or any part thereof respectively, &c., shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

Sir Henry James, A.G. (A. L. Smith with him), for the Crown, showed cause.—There are three objections raised to the prisoner being held in custody : First, it is said that the French warrant is insufficient in form for not disclosing with certainty the offence for which extradition can be maintained ; secondly, that the depositions before Sir James Ingham disclose no offence cognisable by our law, and therefore neither by the treaty nor the Act can the extradition be supported ; and thirdly that the form of the warrant of committal under the hand of Sir James Ingham is insufficient for not disclosing with certainty the offence with which the prisoner is charged. The second objection is of course the substantial one upon which my friend will be disposed to rely. As to the form of the French warrant in which Piot is accused of fraud, the French words being abus de confiance, I submit that the case is concluded by authority and it is quite sufficient statement of the offence. It is a mistake to suppose that the foreign warrant need disclose any of the details of the offence ; it is simply an authority for arrest. There is nothing in the Extradition Act requiring the foreign warrant to be in any particular form, or that it should enter into any particulars of the offence. In the case of Ex parte Terras (39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 502 ; 4 Ex. Div. 63) the warrant was in the most general form, describing the offence as being the commission of a crime against the bankruptcy law, and that warrant was held to be good. Then there are two cases, one of which is almost identical : one is Reg. v. Gans (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 592 ; 9 Q. B. Div. 93 ; 51 L. J. 419, Q. B.), and the other Reg. v. Jacobi, reported in the same place in the LAW TIMES Reports as a note to Reg. v. Gans. Jacobi's case is almost identical with this on the point of the sufficiency of the foreign warrant. There is also the case of Reg. v. Weil (47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 630 ; 9 Q. B. Div. 701), where it was held that a fugitive criminal already in custody may be detained for an offence within the Act, even though he was originally arrested without any warrant. Then as to Sir James Ingham's warrant, the words are, that the prisoner was accused of "fraud as an agent." There is no authority for saying that the warrant of committal should set out the nature of the crime with particularity ; there is nothing in the statute to that effect, the form of warrant of committal given in the schedule leaves it in blank. But after the judgment of Pollock, B. in Jacobi's case I do not think it is necessary to discuss this point any further. As to the other objection, which is the only substantial one, the only point is whether there is any evidence to put this man upon his trial, upon the depositions before Sir James Ingham. I submit that there was ample evidence to show that this accused person had been guilty of an offence which was parallel to the offence that would have been committed under the Act of 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 75. The letter written by Maucière before he sent the money for the payment of the twenty-five shares in the Société Immenblés which he had purchased through Piot, is a sufficient direction in writing within the meaning of this statute. The direction to apply the money need not be in express and formal terms, and in support of this proposition I will refer to Reg. v. Christian (L. Rep. 2 C. C. R. 94). It may be said by my friend that the amount sent was only 3000 francs, whereas the price of the shares was 3271 francs ; but that could not make any difference and allow the person who receives it to appropriate the money to his own use. The receipt of the letter is denied, but there is strong evidence to show that it was received, and all that is necessary is to show some evidence. There is clearly a prima facie case which ought to be inquired into, and this court will not look beyond that. I submit that the prisoner is lawfully in custody, and all the objections raised on his behalf must fail.

Bealey (W. A. Metcalfe with him) in support of the rule.—It should not be forgotten that, before the treaty with England, France insisted upon the right to try a man for anything, and if a French subject was once extradited he might be tried for any number of crimes. By Article 6 of the treaty it is provided that, "the ambassador or other diplomatic agent of Her Britannic Majesty in France shall send to the Minister for Foreign Affairs, in support of each demand for extradition, an authenticated and duly legalised copy either of a certificate of conviction or of a warrant of arrest against a person accused, clearly setting forth the nature of the crime or offence on account of which the fugitive is being proceeded against." There must be sufficient indication of the nature of the offence to show that it is an extradition crime before the English court can say that the person shall be surrendered. The treaty shows that there is no such crime as abus de confiance. The terms are, Abus de confiance, ou détournement par un banquier, commissionnaire, &c. What the treaty says, therefore, is that persons are to be delivered up who have committed the offence of abus de confiance in a particular capacity, and the man is not to be tried for any other than the extradition crime. The treaty does not include the crime of fraud in a general sense, but only when committed by persons in a particular position. In the case of Reg. v. Jacobi, which is relied upon by the Attorney-General, Stephen, J. clearly lays down that the whole proceeding must be begun with reference to the law of England, that it must be followed by proof that it is according to the law of England, and that it must be concluded by a warrant according to the law of England. Then I say that this commitment is a violation of the treaty, and of our laws as contained in the Acts of Parliament. Persons are not committed in this country without the depositions naming the actual charge which is made, which they may verbally answer themselves or call witnesses to answer; there is no such thing as a general commitment. It would be a most serious violation of the liberty of the subject. "Fraud by an agent" is not a description of one crime, but it is a description of a dozen different crimes. It is the most general term that can possibly be applied, and it is not competent for a magistrate to send abroad upon an extradition warrant a person to be tried there under the authority of the treaty, for any general offence. In the case of Reg. v. Gans the question was not so much as to the character of the warrant, as whether there was any warrant at all. When the depositions are looked at narrowly, it will appear that no offence has been disclosed. The money was never ordered to be applied specifically to the purchase of the twenty-five Immeubles. It was taken in current account. In England there could be no committal for trial, because there is no such thing as giving a direction in writing six days before you have the money. [POLLOCK, B.—I entirely dissent from that.] I submit there must not be an interval of time and a change of circumstances to enable a person to couple with a letter of the 1st June a payment on the 7th June, where the person paying on the 7th June pays 270 francs short of the object with which he wrote the letter on the 1st June, and accepts that by a receipt taken on account. [POLLOCK, B.—I cannot assent to that unless you give me very strong authority.] With regard to the case of Reg. v. Christian, it really supplies the strongest possible evidence that where money is sent on general account you cannot charge a person with violation of good faith unless the money is sent specially with reference to the particular purchase that is made. [MANISTY, J.—Suppose the letter had been, "I will send money which you will apply towards taking up these shares," and it had been short of the exact amount and the broker appropriated the money to his own use, would you say he was not guilty of the offence?] I say it would not do. You cannot legally force a man to put his hand into his pocket and provide money. [MANISTY, J.—No; but you can if the man puts the money into his own pocket and uses it for another purpose.] It comes to this, that to give effect to the statute the money must accompany the direction, and I venture to say that there has never been a case decided to the effect that you can send a direction one day and the money the next. There is no proof of appropriation. There is no suggestion throughout the case that this man squandered the money upon himself, or used it for his own purposes. I hope that the court, looking at the depositions, will come to the conclusion that no magistrate has a right to commit him for trial in England for any such offence; and I submit, therefore, that the magistrate, having exceeded his jurisdiction—and he has assuredly exceeded it if there was no ground for committing him for trial—this man ought to be discharged.

POLLOCK, B.—This is an application made to the court by way of habeas corpus in order to test the validity of proceedings that were taken before Sir James Ingham, in London, first upon an extradition summons, and then upon an extradition order made by him. Now the first two questions that were raised very clearly by Mr. Beesley are questions no doubt to some extent of form, but they are questions upon which every person, whether a subject of this country or a foreigner, is entitled to have a clear decision of the court in favour of the liberty of the subject, and the two questions are these: First, it is said that the foreign warrant which was issued in France for the detention of the prisoner does not disclose any offence sufficient to bring him within the extradition statute. Next it is alleged that the form of warrant made by Sir James Ingham also discloses no offence known to the law of England, so as to make it a good warrant in respect of something that the prisoner was going to be indicted for in this country. Now with regard to the first of these two points there is, I think, very little indeed to be said in favour of it, because both by the extradition treaty and also by the statute itself, it is quite clear that a distinction is preserved throughout between the substance of the offence committed and the form of the warrant whereby the prisoner is apprehended. The prisoner was charged by the foreign warrant, and apprehended for simply an abus de confiance. Sitting in an English court of law it is no part of our duty to say what is meant by those words, because we do not know the foreign law except as a question of fact. It seems to me perfectly clear that neither under the Extradition Act nor under the treaty can it be supposed that the matter should not be all dealt with by such a warrant. The Extradition Act provides this, "that the ambassador or other diplomatic agent of Her Britannic Majesty in France shall send to the Minister of Foreign Affairs in support of each demand for extradition an authenticated and duly legalised copy either of a certificate of conviction, or of a warrant of arrest against a person accused, clearly setting forth the nature of the crime or offence." That is abus de confiance, but whether that is a crime or an offence within the extradition treaty is another matter. Now we go to the next point, namely, what was done by Sir James Ingham. When the prisoner is brought before him, not only the warrant, but the depositions are brought before him, which according to the articles of the treaty must clearly set forth the acts relied on, contain a description of the person claimed, and any other information which may serve to identify him. Now the only question is, had Sir James Ingham before him depositions clearly setting forth the said acts? I will allude to that presently, but so far as the form of Sir James Ingham's warrant is concerned it seems to me to be abundantly sufficient. The form of the warrant of Sir James Ingham is this, "Fraud by an agent." Mr. Beesley argues that there ought to be contained in the warrant a specific description of the offence as if the prisoner were about to be indicted in this country. Now the terms of the Act of Parliament, on which of course Sir James Ingham alone could act, are these: Sect. 10 of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, which is the Act of 1870, provides, "In the case of a fugitive criminal accused of an extradition crime if the foreign warrant authorising the arrest of such

Q.B. Div.]

Ex parte Piot.

[Q.B. Div.]

criminal is duly authenticated, and such evidence is produced as (subject to the provisions of this Act) would, according to the law of England, justify the committal for trial of the prisoner if the crime of which he is accused had been committed in England, the police magistrate shall commit him to prison, but otherwise shall order him to be discharged." The first question is, what was the nature of the evidence brought before Sir James Ingham? If there was enough to satisfy him that the crime of which the prisoner was accused, if committed in England, justified his committal, then he is to commit the prisoner to abide the order for his surrender. Now comes the question whether Sir James Ingham should do more than say, "Fraud as an agent." No doubt fraud as an agent might or might not, according to the particular facts proved, constitute a crime which would justify the committal of the prisoner for trial in this country; but there is nothing in the statute which requires that the crime which would justify his committal in this country should be stated specifically in the warrant of detention. It seems to me that in this case the warrant was perfectly sufficient for the purpose which was intended by the statute, and, if any decisions were necessary to sustain that view, those cited by the Attorney-General go to my mind the whole length, because we find that by the chief case decided on this point, of Ex parte Terras (ubi sup.), it was decided that a commission of crime against bankruptcy laws is a sufficient description in a warrant for the apprehension of a prisoner under the extradition treaties. In Reg. v. Jacobi, reported in the note to Reg. v. Gans (ubi sup.), one of the prisoners was detained upon a warrant which only charged him as "Suspected of fraud," and nothing could be more in violation of good faith, according to our notion of English law, than to say, not that he was guilty of fraud, but suspected of fraud. There it was unnecessary to insert the legal definition of such a crime. Again in Reg. v. Wail (ubi sup.) the Court of Appeal held that the prisoner might be detained even where there was no warrant. On these grounds, so far as those two points are concerned, I think this rule ought to be discharged. Then comes what no doubt is a much more serious matter, namely, were the facts which were brought before Sir James Ingham sufficient to enable him to arrive at the conclusion that he was justified, or would he be justified, in the committal for trial of this prisoner if the crime of which he was accused had been committed in England? That opens the whole facts of the case before Sir James Ingham, always remembering that he had not to consider what might be the ultimate result of the trial, or in any way to take upon himself such a responsibility, but simply to sit there and to see whether upon the prima facie evidence laid before him there was sufficient to justify the committal of this prisoner if he was to be tried in England. Now, the words of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 75, so far as they are material to this case, are these: "Whosoever having been intrusted either solely or jointly with any other person as a banker, merchant, broker, attorney, or other agent, with any money or security for the payment of money with any direction in writing to apply, pay, or deliver such money or security, or any part thereof respectively, or the proceeds, or any part of the proceeds of such security for any purpose or to any person specified in such direction, shall, in violation of good faith and contrary to the terms of such direction, in any case convert to his own use," and so on, shall be guilty of an offence. Now, had the prisoner Piot in this case committed an offence within that statute? It was proved before Sir James Ingham, upon the depositions, that the prosecutor had paid to Piot, who kept a bank in Reims, on the 7th June, 3000*fr.*, and that the same had not been paid over by Piot according to the directions given to him, and the mode in which it was sought to show that Piot, as regards this 3000*fr.*, came within the meaning of the statute was in this way: It was shown, as is now admitted on the affidavit of Piot himself, that he received instructions to deal with certain shares. He says that those shares had been sold by him as a principal; the prosecutor Maucière says, "No, you were dealing with those shares for me as a broker, and I paid you this money in order to take up those shares on settling day." Piot received the money in pursuance of a letter which was in these terms, written on the 1st June 1881: "I beg you to be good enough to take up at the next settling day the twenty-five Immeubles, the purchase of which I concluded with you" (I believe the words are chez vous, and whether that would make any difference or not it is not necessary to say). "I will forward you the cash either to-morrow or the next day." Now Maucière asserts, and Piot admits, that there was paid in pursuance of that letter, within a few days, 3000*fr.*; the only question is whether in the first place that letter was a direction in writing to apply or pay this particular sum for any purpose specified in the direction; and secondly, whether the money had been converted to the use and benefit of Piot. As to the first point I can have no manner of doubt that, if I was called upon to state what was the effect of this evidence under the statute in an English court of justice—if a direction of this kind had been given to a banker in respect of money about to be paid into his hands, that it would be amply sufficient to satisfy the statute. That being so, in this case I have no doubt whatever that there was a sufficient direction to bring it within the statute. The next point is, did Piot, within the provisions of the statute, convert the money to his own use or benefit? Sir James Ingham had ample evidence to make out a prima facie case to show that Piot had received the money under the terms of this letter, and that he had not applied it in taking up the shares. That seems to me sufficient to show that during the month of June, without going any later, there was prima facie evidence of an improper appropriation of that money to the use of Piot himself. Under these circumstances I think this rule ought to be discharged, and the prisoner must be remitted to custody.

MANISTY, J.—I am of the same opinion. I shall not go over the ground so fully gone over by my learned brother, but I shall just make one or two additional observations. Mr. Besley contends strenuously that the particular crime for which the prisoner is detained must appear upon the warrant, for this reason, that it is that crime alone for which he can be tried. As I understand the argument it is, that the crime must be so specified in the warrant that the man can be indicted for no other. Now, if you look at the Act of Parliament you will find that it is not the warrant that is to be looked to for ascertaining what the offence or crime is for which the man is to be detained. Sub-sect. 2 of sect. 3 is in these terms: "A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered to a foreign state, unless provision is made by the law of that state, or by arrangement, that the fugitive criminal shall not until he has been restored, or had an opportunity of returning to Her Majesty's dominions, be detained or tried in that foreign state for any offence committed prior to his surrender other than—" Other than what? Not other than the offence stated in the warrant, but, "other than the extradition crime proved by the facts on which the surrender is grounded." Now, where do you find the facts? You find the facts in the depositions and not in the warrant. I think it is unnecessary to repeat the observations which my learned brother has made with regard to the form of either of the two warrants. If it were necessary I would refer to the judgment of Huddleston, B., in the case of Ex parte Terras, because there the definition is clearly pointed out, but this is not the case of a warrant of commitment after trial, but a warrant for detaining a person until trial. I think, if authority were necessary, there is authority for holding that these warrants were sufficient. As to the other point on the depositions, I think there is abundant evidence on which Sir James Ingham was justified in issuing his warrant.

[H. OF L.]

MEWS v. THE QUEEN.

[H. OF L.]

Rule discharged.

Solicitor for the prisoner, S. B. Abrahams.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor to the Treasury.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Dec. 6, 7, and 13, 1892.

(Before Lords BLACKBURN, WATSON, BRAMWELL, and FITZGERALD.)

MEWS v. THE QUEEN. (a)

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND.

Maintenance of criminal lunatic—Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), ss. 4 and 57.

The effect of sect. 4 of the Prison Act 1877 is to transfer the liability for the maintenance of a criminal lunatic from the county to the Consolidated Fund.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal reversed.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Lord Selborne, L.C., Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Brett, L.J.), reported in 6 Q. B. Div. 47, and 43 L.T. Rep. N. S. 403, affirming on appeal a decision of the Queen's Bench Division (Denman, J. and Pollock, B.) making absolute a rule for a mandamus to two justices of the county of Surrey to make an order on the treasurer of the county for the maintenance of a prisoner who had become insane, pursuant to the statutes 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, s. 2, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 29, s. 2.

The justices had refused to make such order, contending that the liability for the maintenance of the lunatic was removed by the Prisons Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21).

The Solicitor-General (Sir F. Herschell, Q.C.) and Baggallay appeared for the appellants.

The Attorney-General (Sir H. James, Q.C.) Poland, and A. L. Smith for the respondent.

The argument turned on the wording of the sections of the Acts of Parliament which are set out in the reports in the court below, and also in the judgment of their Lordships. The following cases were referred to:

Mullins v. Treasurer of Surrey, 7 App. Cas. 1; 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 625; Prison Commissioners v. Corporation of Liverpool, 5 Q. B. Div. 333; 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 838.

At the conclusion of the argument their Lordships took time to consider their judgment.

Dec. 13.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

LORD BLACKBURN.—My Lords: In this case a rule was obtained for a mandamus to the appellants, two justices of the county of Surrey, commanding them to proceed to hear and determine, pursuant to the statutes in that behalf, the matter of an application for an order on the treasurer of the county of Surrey for the maintenance of Mary Bray, a lunatic confined in the Surrey Lunatic Asylum. Mary Bray was convicted of felony in 1879, and was sentenced to imprisonment in the House of Correction at Wandsworth, in the county of Surrey. While undergoing her sentence she became insane, and was, by order of the Secretary of State, made under the provisions of the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 29, amending the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 59, removed from the prison to the County Lunatic Asylum. Mary Bray had no settlement in England, and no property applicable to her maintenance. The provision in the 2nd section of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, is that in such a case "two justices shall make an order upon the treasurer of the county, borough, or place where such persons shall have been imprisoned," to pay "all reasonable charges for inquiring into such persons' insanity, and for conveying him or her to such county lunatic asylum or receptacle for insane persons, and to pay such weekly sum as they or any other two justices shall, by writing under their hand, direct for his or her maintenance in such asylum in which he or she shall be confined." The appellants did not dispute that they were bound to make the order unless the Prisons Act 1877 made a difference. They maintained that by that Act these expenses were to be defrayed out of moneys to be provided by Parliament. And if they were right in this contention it necessarily followed that they were no longer to make an order on the treasurer of the county to pay those expenses, that portion of the Act of 3 & 4 Vict. being abrogated by subsequent inconsistent legislation, though the Act was not repealed. The answer to the question thus raised depends on the construction of a very ill-penned Act (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), and chiefly upon that of two sections, the 4th and 57th. The Queen's Bench Division made the rule absolute, and the Court of Appeal affirmed their decision on the 8th Nov. 1890, giving a very short judgment, reported in 6 Q. B. Div. 47 and 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 403. Shortly afterwards, on the 7th Dec. 1890, the case of Mullins v. The Treasurer of Surrey came before the Court of Appeal, and in that case an elaborate judgment was pronounced as to the construction of the Prisons Act 1877, with reference to expenses of a different kind, which it was held were no longer to be borne by the treasurer of the county (6 Q. B. Div. 156; 43 L. T. Rep. N. S. 786); and that was affirmed in this House (7 App. Cas. 1; 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 625). The Court of Appeal had no power to overrule the decision in Mews v. The Queen, and, as two of the members of the court were the same, I think they cannot have forgotten their former decision, and must have thought that the two decisions could well stand together, but they do not explain how they were different. In this House Mews v. The Queen was not cited or considered at all. Now, when the question comes to be decided, I think (not certainly without great doubt and difficulty, but with as much certainty as can ever be felt in construing such draftsmanship as that in 40 & 41 Vict. c. 21) that the meaning of the enactments is what the appellants contend for, and consequently that the rule should have been discharged, and, therefore, that this appeal must be allowed. I think that the decision in Mullins v. The Treasurer of Surrey decides that, notwithstanding the very awkward way in which the word "therein" is inserted in sect. 4, the enactment is not confined to the maintenance of prisoners while actually in the prison, and further that when it is established that the expenses are such as fall within the description of maintenance of a prisoner as defined in sect. 57, they are brought within the phrase "as would if this Act had not been passed have been payable by a prison authority," if they were such as would have been payable by the treasurer of the place to which the prison belonged, and for which the prison authority acted. And consequently, if the expenses now in question are within the definition of "maintenance of a prisoner," they were formerly payable by the prison authority. The question therefore is, as it seems to me, reduced to this, whether the lunatic still detained under her sentence, and not entitled to her discharge, though she becomes sane, but relieved from suffering punishment, is while she is insane within the meaning of sect. 57, "a prisoner in custody, and in a place of confinement." I do not doubt that, in the ordinary sense of the words, all these things are true of her case. This is fortified by the language of 27 & 28 Vict. sect. 21, where such a lunatic is spoken of as being in custody, but I put no more stress on this than as showing that such is the natural language to use in such a case. I therefore move that this appeal be allowed, with costs, and that the rule appealed against should be discharged.

H. OF L.]

Mews v. THE QUEEN.

[H. OF L.]

Lord WATSON concurred.

Lord BRAMWELL.—My Lords: If I thought that the consideration on which I have founded my opinion in this case had been present to the minds of those whose judgment is appealed from, I should entertain the greatest doubt as to the soundness of that opinion. As it is, I am, with great hope that I am right, compelled to say that I cannot agree with that judgment. I advise your Lordships to allow this appeal. One would think that when the local prisons were taken from the prison authorities they would be relieved of their expense. No doubt it might have been otherwise provided, but one would certainly suppose that, if the bulk of those expenses was undertaken by the State, the whole would be, and I am at a loss to see why the expense of a criminal pauper lunatic, and no other, should continue to be borne by the prison authorities. It seems to me that the Legislature has enacted what, as I say, I should expect, because it seems to me that the words in sect. 57, "or otherwise," are not to be read in connection with "place of confinement," but generally with the whole sentence—thus, expenses of "food, &c., or otherwise." I think so as a mere matter of construction, but I think so also because otherwise many expenses, which doubtless are to be borne by funds to be provided by Parliament, are not provided for, the doctor and medicines, burial, the chaplain, materials for prisoners to work on, tools, &c. If so, there seems no difficulty in saying that the expenses now in question are within the enactment, because it is clear by the interpretation clause, and has been decided by this House, that "prisoner" does not exclusively mean a person who at the time spoken of is in prison, but it means a prisoner as interpreted—viz., a person who has been committed, &c. I should come to the same conclusion if the words "or otherwise" were limited to a "place of confinement," for, as I have said, this lunatic is a "prisoner" as interpreted. Then, as to the first item—namely, the expense of the inquiry as to the prisoner's sanity—I think the argument of the Solicitor-General irresistible—viz., that if the prisoner is not found a lunatic the expense of the inquiry must be borne by the Consolidated Fund, and it cannot have been intended otherwise when the prisoner is so found. Then, the conveyance is clearly to a place of confinement, "or otherwise," if those words are so limited, and the food is undoubtedly within sect. 57. Now, what is the objection to this? It is said that it would be piecemeal legislation. Now, to my mind, that is precisely what it is not; on the contrary, the construction of the Crown makes piecemeal legislation. On the construction I submit, the Legislature has dealt with all expenses to which the prison authority as such is liable. It has not dealt with all cases of lunatics, nor with all county expenses, because the subject-matter of the legislation was not lunatics generally, nor county expenses, but prisons. But then some objection is taken, which, I honestly confess, I do not understand, to the effect that there will be no machinery for getting these expenses from the estate of the lunatic or his parish, and that a petition of right against the Crown will be necessary to get the expenses which may be incurred. I cannot see that the machinery that existed before will not continue. If not, so much the worse for the Consolidated Fund. It is not a reason for misconstruing the Act. As to the petition of right objection, it is not practical. The Secretary of State will do his duty or will have to pay ready money. Moreover, your Lordships have already disregarded this objection. As to the judgments delivered in the court below, I think it right to make some respectful comments. It is said that this is not strictly an expense paid by the justices as a prison authority, because it is not an expense incurred on the part of or by persons who are being treated in prison. But if I am right in my application of the interpretation clause as to a prisoner, the statute is not limited to expenses incurred in a prison. It is said that the Act of 177 is not inconsistent with the prior Act, and that it is still in force. But this is to beg the question. If it provides for a new mode of paying the expenses, it abrogates the former on a well known principle. To say that the statute deals with the whole question of prisons and prisoners, leaving the criminal lunatics aside, is really to say that it does not deal with the whole question of prisoners, as it omits to deal with lunatic prisoners. I think that it is unreasonable to read the statute of 1877 as applicable only to the case of prisoners who remain sane. Its language is comprehensive enough to include all prisoners, and, if I am right, the reason of the thing is this—that it should do so. In the Queen's Bench Division the decision proceeded mainly on the ground that the lunatic was not a prisoner. On this I have already expressed my opinion. I advise your Lordships to allow this appeal.

[Ct. of App.]

REG. v. THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD AND GEORGE TAYLOR.

[Ct. of App.]

Lord FITZGERALD concurred.

Appeal allowed—Rule discharged with costs.

Solicitor for the appellants, H. H. Smallpeice.

Solicitor for the respondent, Solicitor to the Treasury.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

SITTINGS AT WESTMINSTER.

Nov. 3, 4, and 6, 1889.

(Before BAGGALLAY and BRETT, L.JJ.)

REG. on the prosecution of THE PENARTH LOCAL BOARD OF HEALTH v. THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD AND GEORGE TAYLOR. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 257, 268—Expense of paving street—Appeal to Local Government Authority—Prohibition.

By the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 150, the urban sanitary authority may give notice to the owners of premises to pave the street, and if such notice is not complied with may execute the works required, and recover the expenses of so doing from the owners in default, according to frontage, in the proportion settled by the surveyor of the urban authority, or (in case of dispute) by arbitration, or may declare the expenses to be private improvement expenses.

By sect. 257 the surveyor's apportionment is binding on the owner unless disputed by written notice within three months from the service on him of notice of the amount settled.

By sect. 268: "Where any person deems himself aggrieved by the decision of the local authority in any case in which the local authority are empowered to recover in a summary manner any expenses incurred by them, or to declare such expenses to be private improvement expenses, he may within twenty-one days after notice of such decision address a memorial to the Local Government Board, stating the grounds of his complaint, and shall deliver a copy thereof to the local authority; the Local Government Board may make such order in the matter as to the said board may seem equitable, and the order so made shall be binding and conclusive on all parties."

An urban sanitary authority gave notice to an owner of premises under sect. 150 to pave, and on his default did the work. Afterwards the surveyor served a notice of apportionment. After this a notice was served demanding payment of the sum apportioned, and stating that unless the amount was paid within fourteen days proceedings would be taken for its recovery.

Within twenty-one days after the service of the last notice, but more than twenty-one days after the service of the notice of apportionment, the owner addressed a memorial to the Local Government Board under sect. 268 complaining that some of the work was unnecessary, and the claim excessive.

A rule nisi was obtained to prohibit the Local Government Board from proceeding further in the matter of the owner's appeal.

Held, that notice of a decision within the meaning of sect. 268 was first given to the owner when the notice demanding payment was served on him, and therefore his memorial to the Local Government Board was in time, and, assuming that prohibition to the Local Government Board would lie (which the court did not decide), there was no ground for a prohibition.

Judgment of Grove and North, JJ. discharging the rule affirmed.

APPEAL by the Penarth Local Board of Health from the judgment of Grove and North, JJ. discharging a rule calling on the Local Government Board and George Taylor to show cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue directed to them to prohibit them from further proceeding in the matter of a certain appeal by George Taylor against a demand made upon him by the Penarth Local Board for payment of several sums amounting in the aggregate to 252l. 10s. 9d., alleged to be due from him for private improvement works in respect of premises in Bradford-lane and certain other streets within the parish of Penarth in the county of Glamorgan.

On the 4th May 1881 the Penarth Local Board of Health served a notice in writing under sect. 150 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) (a) on George Taylor and certain other per-

(a) By the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 150: "Where any street within any urban district (not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large) or the carriageway, footway, or any other part of such street is not sewered, levelled, paved, metalled, flagged, channelled, and made good, or is not lighted to the satisfaction of the urban authority, such authority may, by notice addressed to the respective owners or occupiers of the premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting on such parts thereof as may require to be sewered, levelled, paved, metalled, flagged, or channelled, or to be lighted, require them to sewer, level, pave, metal, flag, channel, or make good or to provide proper means for lighting the same within a time to be specified in such notice."

If such notice is not complied with the urban authority may, if they think fit, execute the works mentioned or referred to therein; and may recover in a summary manner the expenses incurred by them in so doing from the owners in default, according to the frontage of their respective premises, and in such proportion as is settled by the surveyor of the urban authority, or (in case of dispute) by arbitration in manner provided by this Act; or the urban authority may by order declare the expenses so incurred to be private improvement expenses.

By sect. 257: "Where any local authority have incurred expenses for the repayment whereof the owner of the premises for or in respect of which the same are incurred is made liable under this Act or by any agreement with the local authority, such expenses may be recovered, together with interest at a rate not exceeding 5 per cent. per annum from the date of service of a demand for the same till payment thereof, from any person who is the owner of such premises when the works are com-

(a) Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS and H. LEIGH Esqrs., Barristers-at-Law.

CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD AND GEORGE TAYLOR.

[CT. OF APP.]

sons, as the owners and occupiers of premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting upon a street called Bradford-lane, requiring them to level, pave, metal, flag, kerb, and channel the same within twenty-one days.

This notice was not complied with, and the Penarth Local Board executed the works themselves; the expenses incurred amounted to 375*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.*

On the 21st Sept. 1881 a written notice of apportionment, dated 19th Sept. 1881, and signed by the surveyor of the Penarth Local Board, was served on George Taylor; this notice contained the following words:

Wherefore take notice that I the undersigned, being the surveyor of the said urban sanitary authority, in pursuance of the 150th section of the Public Health Act 1875, do hereby apportion the sum of 75*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* as the proportion of the said sum of 375*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.* to be paid by you as such owner as aforesaid, such apportionment being according to the frontage of your said premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting upon the said lane. Further take notice, that the aforesaid apportionment will be binding and conclusive upon you, unless within the expiration of three months from the day of the date of this notice you shall by written notice to the urban sanitary authority dispute the same.

No notice disputing the apportionment was given by George Taylor.

On the 20th Dec. 1881 the collector of the Penarth Local Board made a demand in writing, signed by the collector, on George Taylor; the following were the words of the demand:

I hereby demand payment of the sum of 75*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* due from you to the Penarth Local Board, for private improvement works in respect of premises in Bradford-lane, in accordance with the apportionment made by the surveyor of the said board, notice of which has been duly served upon you, and I am directed to inform you that, unless the amount be paid before the expiration of fourteen days from the date hereof, proceedings will be taken for the recovery of the same. I also demand interest on the said sum from the date hereof until payment at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum.

Within twenty-one days from the 20th Dec. 1881 George Taylor presented a memorial to the Local Government Board, objecting to the above demand and other similar demands, and stating that some of the work was unnecessary, and that pleted for which such expenses have been incurred, and until recovery of such expenses a d interest, the same shall be a charge on the premises in respect of which they were incurred. In all summary proceedings by a local authority, for the recovery of expenses incurred by them in works of private improvement, the time within which such proceedings may be taken shall be reckoned from the date of the service of notice of demand. Where such expenses have been settled and apportioned by the surveyor of the local authority as payable by such owner, such apportionment shall be binding and conclusive on such owner, unless within three months from service of notice on him by the local authority or their surveyor of the amount settled by the surveyor to be due from such owner he shall by written notice dispute the same.

By sect. 268: Where any person deems himself aggrieved by the decision of the local authority in any case in which the local authority are empowered to recover in a summary manner any expenses incurred by them, or to declare such expenses to be private improvement expenses, he may, within twenty-one days after notice of such decision, address a memorial to the Local Government Board, stating the grounds of his complaint, and shall deliver a copy thereof to the local authority; the Local Government Board may make such order in the matter as to the said board may seem equitable, and the order so made shall be binding and conclusive on all parties.

the total sum was extremely heavy; the demand concluded in these words:

Under the above circumstances I address this memorial to the Local Government Board, so that I may learn whether the local board consider that it is equitable that I should pay the heavy sums sought to be enforced against me, which I submit for the foregoing reasons are excessive.

Cause was shown against the rule for a prohibition by the Local Government Board and by Mr. Taylor.

The Solicitor-General (Sir F. Herschell, Q.C.) and Channell for the Local Government Board, and Hannen for the defendant Taylor, showed cause against the rule, and submitted that prohibition would not lie here, as the Local Government Board was not a "court," in the proper meaning of that term, at all, but if it would lie the question would then be—was the appeal in time? They contended that, under sect. 268 of the Public Health Act 1875, it was, and that until notice of demand on the 20th Dec. 1881 there was no "decision" of the urban authority which could be appealed against; nor were the two previous notices, notices of any such decision at all. The Local Government Board had very wide powers and discretion in such matters, and were empowered to make an "equitable" order in the case of an appeal brought before them under sect. 268, and might then enter into a consideration of the whole matter.

Charles, Q.C. and A. T. Lawrence, for the Penarth Local Board, contra, supported their rule, and argued that the appeal was clearly out of time, and should have been brought, if at all, within twenty-one days from the date when notice to do the work, or at all events when notice of the expense incurred, was served on Taylor. The Local Government Board was a tribunal with judicial functions and discretion, as was shown by sect. 268, and therefore prohibition would lie to them as in the case of an ordinary inferior court.

During the arguments the following authorities were cited:

Hesketh v. The Atherton Local Board, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 530; L. Rep. 9 Q. B., 4; 43 L. J. 37, Mag. Cas.;

Grece v. Hunt, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 404; 2 Q. B. Div. 389; 46 L. J. 202, Mag. Cas.;

Simcox v. The Handsworth Local Board, 8 Q. B. Div. 39; 51 L. J. 166, Q. B. Div.;

The Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 887; 1 Ex. Div. 504; 46 L. J. 432, Ex.;

Cook v. The Ipswich Local Board, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 579; 40 L. J. 169, Mag. Cas.; L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 451;

Bayley v. Wilkinson, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 543; 16 J. B. N. S. 161; 35 L. J. 161, Mag. Cas.;

Wilson v. The Mayor of Bolton (the judgment of Hannen, J. there), 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 597; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 105; 41 L. J. 4, Mag. Cas.;

The Mayor, &c., of London v. Cos (in the House of Lords), L. Rep. 2 F. & I. App. 239; 36 L. J. 225, Ex.

GROVE, J.—The rule nisi in this case asks the court, in very general terms, to prohibit the Local Government Board and George Taylor from proceeding by way of appeal against a demand of the Local Board of Penarth, for payment by George Taylor of an aggregate sum of 252*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.* Now, if we were to grant a prohibition in the terms of the rule, it is clear that we should prohibit Taylor from any appeal at all. I am of opinion, however, that this rule should be discharged. In the first place, I think the rule, if made absolute in the terms asked for, would amount to an absolute prohibition against Taylor's proceedings in any way. Now he has, and it was admitted by the learned counsel in support of the rule that he has, a right of appeal under sect. 268 of the Public Health Act 1875. That section says, "Where any person deems himself aggrieved, &c. [His Lordship read the section and proceeded:] Now Taylor has complied with the requirements of that section. He has, within twenty-one days after notice given to him of some decision (I will not at this moment say what decision) of the Local Board of Penarth, addressed a memorial to the Local Government Board, and therefore he has brought himself within that clause. It has been admitted that he undoubtedly has a right of appeal, and that he was within time as to that appeal, upon the question whether the Penarth Board could recover the amount of the apportionment from him, as they say they can do, in a summary manner, or whether they should declare the expenses to be "private improvement expenses," in which case they would be a charge upon the land, and the repayment of them would be spread over a great many years. We are asked to grant this prohibition because, in his memorial to the Local Government Board, he has not stated—either has not stated at all, or at all events not with sufficient accuracy—that the ground upon which he seeks to appeal against these expenses is, that the amount of them is not recoverable from him in a summary manner. I am of opinion, however, although perhaps it may be unnecessary to go so far, that the memorial is not conclusive against him in that respect, and that if he is within the proper time for appealing, and has a right to appeal, he is not bound by the fact that he may not have stated with perfect accuracy in his memorial the right ground of appeal, or even may have stated it incorrectly. Nothing has been brought before us during the arguments in this case to show that, if any mistake has been made in the memorial, the appellate tribunal, if I may so term it, might not allow him to amend such mistake. The memorial is necessary in order to fix the time within which the appeal has been brought; it is in fact a notice of appeal, and the appealing party must give that notice, as it were, within twenty-one days after notice to him of the decision appealed against. After that, as it appears to me, the memorial is a matter of procedure only, and is not binding and conclusive upon the person memorialising; nor is it always to be taken as the only matter upon which the Court of Appeal can decide. To hold otherwise would be very dangerous, and liable to cause great hardship and injustice, for we might, in the present and other cases similar to it, deprive persons of their right to appeal unless their memorials were so skillfully and technically drawn that the statement of their grounds of appeal should be able to stand the critical examination of an astute lawyer—a state of things which would be a most unreasonable hardship upon persons having otherwise a clear and good right of appeal. I am therefore of opinion that the Local Government Board would not have been prevented from allowing Taylor to go into the matter, even although he had altogether omitted to state in his memorial the true ground of appeal, if he were able to satisfy them that he was fairly entitled to go into it; but it is not necessary for us to decide that point here, and for two reasons: first, because I think his memorial, though not perhaps in the best possible terms, does include the admitted ground of appeal; because, at the conclusion of it, having given a detailed narration of the facts, he says, "Under the above circumstances I address this memorial to the Local Government Board, so that I may learn whether they consider that it is equitable that I should pay the heavy sums sought to be enforced against me, which, I submit, for the foregoing reasons, are excessive." Now that, no doubt, coupling the last part, would seem to show that he objects to the excess of the sums; but it seems equally, I think, to be a complaint that he is called upon to pay the heavy sum of 252*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.*, and that, under sect. 268, he may fairly ask the Local Government Board, even if they should not deem the total amount excessive, to allow him to pay it by instalments, or, alternatively, to declare the amount to be "private improvement expenses," as he would then not have to pay the whole sum down, but would have the payment of it spread over a number of years. Then, secondly, upon the main point which has been argued before us in this case, with regard to the construction of sects. 257 and 268, upon which that point turns, I do not read sect. 257 quite in the same way as the learned counsel in support of their rule construe it. But here it is necessary to refer to that portion of sect. 268 which applies to this case. It says: "Where any person deems himself aggrieved by the decision of the local authority, in any case in which the local authority are empowered to recover in a summary manner any expenses incurred by them, or to declare such expenses to be private improvement expenses, he may, within twenty-one days after notice of such decision, address a memorial to the Local Government Board." Now it is observable that there is nothing in this procedure which can be called a "decision" in the ordinary sense of the word. The whole matter is a series of consecutive steps. First, the local board have to give notice to the owner of the property that he is to do certain repairs. That may be in some sense of the word a "decision," but it is not done by anything like an order or judgment of a tribunal. It is merely to give him notice to do the work; but that perhaps may be said to import a decision that he shall do it; but it is very difficult to say that it does necessarily do so, because they may give him a notice to do certain repairs, and the next day or week afterwards that they want either more or less repairs, and so each of these would be a "decision," if we are to count the former a decision. Then again, they are to give him notice of apportionment, that is to say of the share of the repairs to which his property is liable, because, if he does not do the work upon their notice, they are empowered to do it themselves, and of that, too, they may give him notice. Now, in each of these steps a "decision" or a notice of a "decision" it is indeed very difficult to say what the particular "decision" referred to in the section is, when there is nothing in the Act, except perhaps the order which is spoken of with regard to private improvement expenses, which in ordinary legal construction can be called a "decision." The Act, however, must mean something, and therefore we must take it that there is something which imports a decision. Now, certainly, with regard to the first of the three notices which were given in this case, the first was a notice to do the paving work, the second was a notice that the surveyor had apportioned a certain sum as Mr. Taylor's share of doing that work, and the third was a demand for payment of the amount of the surveyor's apportionment, and a notice that in default of payment they would proceed summarily to recover the amount. Now this last notice is a notice of some "decision," and it is the first time that he received any notice that he was required to pay the sum with which they alleged him to be chargeable. Now, within twenty-one days from that last notice Mr. Taylor appealed, and addressed a memorial to the Local Government Board, and as to that he is in time. It has been argued by counsel for the local authority before us that each of these steps is a "decision," and that, in order to entitle him to appeal, he should have appealed against each of such steps, but more particularly against the apportionment, within twenty-one days, and the learned counsel have contended, in support of their rule, that he cannot now appeal in any way against either the apportionment—that is the decision of the sum which is apportioned as his share—or against the total sum for expenses, for which all the different contributories, if I may so call them, would be liable, because, under sect. 257, the time has expired for any possible appeal, because not only is the surveyor's apportionment binding and conclusive, but the actual sum upon which he does apportion is also binding. The words of the portion of the section referring to this are: "Where such expenses have been settled and apportioned by the surveyor of the local authority as payable by such owner, such apportionment shall be binding and conclusive upon such owner, unless within three months from service of notice on him by the local authority, or their surveyor, of the amount settled by the surveyor to be due from such owner, he shall by written notice dispute the same." Now, it has been argued that these words "shall be binding and conclusive" apply not only to the apportionment—that is to say, to the relative share which is apportioned to the particular owner—but also to the total amount of expenses out of which the sum so apportioned is applied to him as the share upon which he is to pay. I have, I own, felt some doubt as to the meaning of this clause, but I have come to the conclusion that all that the clause does mean is, that it is binding as to the apportionment, but that it is not binding, at all events, as to the total sum. He must take the apportionment as final, and if the total sum be admitted and the apportionment is proper, then of course the share of the sum also becomes binding. But, in my judgment, the section is not applicable to the assessment of the total expenses for the district, but only to the relative proportion which all owners will have to pay, assuming that such expenses for the work to be done are correct, and the works themselves proper to be done. Now, if the words "such apportionment shall be binding and conclusive upon such owner" stood alone, there could be no doubt, at least in my mind, that such apportionment would mean the apportionment, and that alone. But then is that altered by the subsequent words of the section, which say, "unless within three months from service of notice on him by the local authority, or their surveyor, of the amount settled by the surveyor to be due from such owner, he shall by written notice dispute the same?" In my judgment that only refers to the provisions of what the notice must contain, because the notice of apportionment must give him notice of what sum is claimed, otherwise he would not know what was demanded of him, and therefore it is necessary that it should give him notice of the amount of the sum claimed; but it does not alter the previous part of the clause, which says, not that such apportionment shall be binding both as to the apportionment and as to the sum, but only that such apportionment shall be binding; and it seems to me, therefore, that the latter half of the section does not alter the grammatical meaning of the term "such apportionment," but is only a proviso of what the notice shall contain. In other words, the notice is not to be, "I hereby give you notice that you are apportioned to pay one-tenth of the total expenses incurred," but "that you are required to pay 200*l.*," or whatever other sum it may be, being one-tenth of the total expenses, and being, in fact, a proviso that the notice shall be explicit as to the sum as well as to the apportionment. Now, if we look at the actual notice of apportionment, it certainly does not look like a "decision." It is framed as follows: "Whereas the expenses incurred by the said urban sanitary authority in levelling, paving, metalling, making, flagging, and channelling the said lane, amount to the sum of 375*l.* odd." There is no "decision" there, nor any statement how the amount is arrived at. All that is said is, "We have incurred these expenses; we have paid this money." It is extremely difficult to say that this is a decision from which Mr. Taylor is to appeal within twenty-one days. What is he to appeal from? The only question upon such an appeal would be, "Have you or have you not incurred expenses?" The local board would say, "We have incurred expenses to the amount of 375*l.*, and here are the vouchers, and therefore this appeal must be decided in our favour." According, therefore, to the terms, it is only a notice that they have spent those sums of money. It then goes on to say, "I, the undersigned, being the surveyor, in pursuance of the 150th section, do hereby apportion" so much. Possibly that may be a "decision." It may be a notice that the surveyor, at all events, has decided that he apportioned the sum named to the particular owner. It does not touch the rectitude or otherwise of the first clause, viz., whether the expenses incurred are proper expenses or not. It is a notice of, and in that sense may be, and I think is, a "decision" of the apportionment. Now, that the term "apportionment" bears the meaning that I have put upon it, and which was my first impression on the subject, though I confess it was somewhat shaken by Mr. Charles's argument, is clear, prima facie at all events from the opinion of the learned judges in the case of Hesketh v. The Atherton Local Board (29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 530; L. Rep. 9 Q. B. 4; 43 L. J. 37, Mag. Cas.). In that case the owner disputed his liability, and said that the highway was repairable by the inhabitants at large, and therefore the question was undoubtedly not quite the same as in the present case; but in giving judgment there, and speaking of sect. 63 of the Local Government Act 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), which was then under discussion, and which I may take it is in the same words as sect. 257 in the present Act,—the word “proportion” is used, but the section is really admitted by the learned counsel in argument to be substantially the same as sect. 257 here,—Blackburn, J. says: “Sect. 63 is confined to the apportionment, and it is that, and that alone, that is made conclusive and binding. The justices were therefore wrong in deciding that it was not open to the appellant to prove that the street was an ancient highway.” But the words of Quain, J., in the same case, are stronger still. He says: “I am quite of the same opinion. It is clear that by sect. 63 all that is made binding and conclusive upon the owners is the apportionment according to their frontages. And if a notice had been given by the appellant that he disputed the apportionment, and the matter had gone before an arbitrator, it is clear that this question of highway or no highway could not have been raised before him.” Then Archibald, J. said: “The language of the section is quite clear. It is the apportionment only that is made conclusive and binding on the owner, assuming the liability to exist.” All those learned judges say that the apportionment is binding only as to the apportionment, but Archibald, J. adds, “assuming the liability to exist.” Now, without taking that as a judgment binding upon me, it is to my mind a very strong authority to show that those learned judges construed the section in that case as I construe the similar section in the present case, and that the only binding and conclusive qualification of the section is as to the apportionment, the words being, “such apportionment shall be binding and conclusive.” There are, many parts too, of the Act of Parliament which make it very improbable that it could have been intended to be made binding not only as to the apportionment, but also as to the actual expenses which the local board may have thought fit to incur; and there is also a very grave doubt, to my mind, whether, if that be so, there is any decision in this case to that effect. There is the surveyor’s decision as to his apportionment, but there is no decision of the board, and no notice of demand upon Taylor bearing upon the total amount of the expenses which they say they have incurred, of which they do not even say they “have decided to be the proper expenses for these repairs,” but merely that they are expenses which they have incurred. There are other cases which have been cited before us in argument, which bear perhaps, more or less, directly upon the matter. There is, for instance, the case of Greco v. Hunt (86 L. T. Rep. N. S. 404; 2 Q. B. Div. 389; 46 L. J. 202, Mag. Cas.), to which I called Mr. Charles’s attention yesterday. What was decided in that case was that, “Where works are executed by a local authority for the improvement of a street under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 69, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 63, and the expense is charged upon the owners fronting the street, it is necessary, before summary proceedings can be taken for the recovery of the amount apportioned upon any such owner, that a demand of payment of the sum so apportioned should be served upon him, and the six months within which the summary proceedings must be taken under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43 are to be reckoned from such notice of demand.” Now, there was no notice of demand in the present case until within three weeks of the time when this memorial of appeal was presented; and in a subsequent case (Simcoe v. The Handsworth Local Board, 8 Q. B. Div. 39; 51 L. J. 168, Q. B. Div.), where an earlier notice had been served upon the appellant, stating that the board surveyor had settled that a certain sum was due from him in respect of his premises, and that the board required payment of that amount, such notice was held not to be in fact a notice of demand under this very same sect. 257. I see I said in my judgment in that case: “The notice of demand is made three months after the service of the notice, and an unnecessary demand made before this period has elapsed is immaterial.” In the present case, until the third notice was given Mr. Taylor had not had any notice of demand served upon him, and he had not been called upon to pay this money. I am of opinion that that is the “notice of a decision” in this case, and the only one which has been given. The others, in my opinion, do not really amount to a “decision” for the purpose of this appeal. Upon these two grounds therefore: first, that he is undoubtedly entitled to some appeal, and is not precluded by this memorial from stating the admitted grounds; and secondly, upon the construction of the section. I am of opinion that this prohibition should not issue. Of course, if, ex debito iustitie, the party aggrieved is entitled to the writ, we could not refuse it, however injurious we might think it to be to the general interests of justice; but certainly I am not sorry that we can come to the conclusion at which we have arrived, seeing that the tribunal in question, the Local Government Board, is a valuable and important one, and one having wide powers to look equitably into the matter; and it is of great importance to persons who are saddled with considerable expenses, all depending practically upon the surveyor who has to look into these expenses, and who probably is frequently not the most economical person, that their power of appealing should not be restricted. Upon the question whether prohibition would lie to an equitable tribunal of this nature, I entertain grave doubts, but it is not necessary that I should express any more definite opinion on that point.

NORTH, J.—One of the points in this case appears to me to be an important one, viz., the construction of the Public Health Act 1875; and inasmuch as our decision here may possibly affect other cases besides the present one, I will briefly state the view which I take of it. The first important section is sect. 150. That, read shortly, provides that, where any street within an urban district, not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, or the carriageway, footway, or any other part of such street is not sewered, levelled, paved, &c., to the satisfaction of the urban authority, such authority may, by notice addressed to the respective owners or occupiers of the premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting on such parts thereof as may require to be sewered, levelled, paved, and so on, “require them to sewer, level, pave, metal, flag, channel, or make good, or to provide proper means for lighting the same, within a time to be specified in such notice.” Before giving that notice certain plans are to be prepared, but that is not material here. Then comes this important part of the section, “If such notice is not complied with the urban authority may, if

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD AND GEORGE TAYLOR.

[CT. OF APP.]

they think fit, execute the works mentioned or referred to therein, and may recover, in a summary manner, the expenses incurred by them in so doing from the owners in default, according to the frontage of their respective premises, and in such proportion as is settled by the surveyor of the urban authority, or (in case of dispute) by arbitration in manner provided by this Act; or the urban authority may by order declare the expenses so incurred to be private improvement expenses." Now, in proceeding under that section, what "decision" has the board to arrive at? It is only suggested, in the present case, that there are three, or at most four points on which any "decisions" are come to at all. The first is a decision said to be arrived at on notice of it being given to Mr. Taylor, the owner, when notice was given to him in the first instance requiring him to do the work. But is that a "decision" of anything? The notice recites, first of all, that the street is not levelled, paved, &c., to the satisfaction of the board. If that be a decision of any sort, it is simply that the street is not paved, &c., to their satisfaction, and I do not think that any appeal could possibly lie from that. That is a matter of which they are the persons to judge, and if they say that it is not levelled or paved to their satisfaction, it would be impossible for any court to whom an appeal is directed to say that it was levelled or paved to the board's satisfaction. The notice then goes on, "Whereas your premises front, adjoin, or abut on certain parts of the said street which require to be levelled," &c. That is no decision, but a mere statement of a fact as to which there could be no possible appeal. It then proceeds, "and therefore the said local board give you notice to level, pave, &c., within twenty-one days from the date hereof," and it then goes on to recite, in full detail, the exact nature of the works that are required to be done under the notice. But, I may remark, there is nothing whatever in this notice indicating any "decision" by the board that they would do the necessary work if the owner did not do it. Not a word is there about that at all. At that time of course they could not tell whether or not they would have to do it, or whether or not the owner would do it. But there is no decision there, in any sense of the term, that he should do it. It is quite optional on his part to do it or leave it alone, and if he does not do it there is no penalty which they can enforce against him. He cannot be compelled to do it, and the only alternative is that the local board may, in particular cases, do the work themselves, if they so please, instead of leaving it undone. So far, therefore, as this notice goes, it seems to me to be no notice of any "decision" on any point whatever, except that the street was not paved, &c., to the board's satisfaction, as to which point nobody has suggested that there could be an appeal. The next thing that happens is that, Mr. Taylor not having done the work, the board proceed to do it themselves; and the work having been done, they then, some little time afterwards, by their surveyor, give Taylor the notice to which my brother Grove has referred. I notice, with regard to this, that sect. 150 gives no power to the surveyor to settle anything whatever except the proportion which each owner is to pay out of the total amount. He is not to settle what works are to be executed; that is to be done by the board; and all that he has to do is a matter which is deputed to him and not to the board, viz., to settle the proportions which owners in default are to pay according to the frontage of their premises. He is to settle that. In the notice here given all that he did was, in my opinion, that which was, under the section, exactly his duty, and in that notice there is only one thing which can be called a "decision" of any sort. There is no decision there as to what the expenses incurred would be, but only a mere statement of what they had been; but there is a decision by him of what Taylor's proportion of the total sum actually incurred was, and that, in my view, is the only thing the surveyor could possibly settle. Such then being the 150th section, the question arises as to its effect under sect. 257 of the same Act. That section says, "Whereas such expenses have been settled and apportioned by the surveyor of the local authority as payable by such owner"—and there "settled and apportioned" means such settlement and apportionment as is mentioned in sect. 150; that is to say, not a settlement of what expenses shall be incurred, but merely of what the particular proportion of that expenditure is out of the total amount—"that apportionment shall be binding and conclusive on such owner, unless within three months from service of notice on him by the local authorities or their surveyor, of the amount settled by the surveyor to be due from such owner, he shall by written notice dispute the same." Now, all the words in that section which I have read seem to me to indicate one thing. What the surveyor has to do is simply to settle the apportionment of the amount; and nothing, except what he has so to settle, is dealt with by this section at all. But then it is said that, although no doubt that is the patent meaning of the section and the notice given under it, yet the notice given by him operates in two ways: First of all, there is the patent notice of the exact proportion which Mr. Taylor has to pay; but there is also another notice latent in that, viz., a notice that the board has arrived at the conclusion that the total expense is 375*l*. Now, I cannot find any such notice at all of such a decision contained in the notice that was delivered. In the next place, I do not think that the surveyor is the person on whom the duty of giving any such notice lies. It is to be given, if at all, by the board. This is a notice of the surveyor's having performed his duty, and he has nothing to do with giving notice on behalf of the board. Then, further, I find that, in this particular case, notice is to be given by the surveyor of apportionment, and an express time for appeal is given if any party considers himself aggrieved by that notice, or wishes to complain of it, viz., three months in which he may dispute it. Had it been intended that the surveyor's notice was to operate in a double way—first to be binding unless notice were given to the local authority within three months, and also to operate directly by being binding in another respect unless notice were given within three weeks to a different tribunal—I do not think that this section would have dealt with both these matters; but, inasmuch as I find that sect. 257 deals simply with an appeal by way of arbitration in case of the surveyor having settled the amount wrongly, I do not think that it contemplates in any way whatever a notice being given under it which is to have the effect of bringing into operation the commencement of the three weeks necessary for an appeal under a totally different section. It further strikes me as being improbable that the Legislature ever intended to give three weeks only to appeal on the important question of liability, and three months on the far less important question of whether the proportion of the charge were correct or not. And further than that, the notice itself is, to my mind, very significant, for it ends by saying, "Take notice, that the aforesaid apportionment will be binding and conclusive upon you, unless within the expiration of three months from the day of the date of this notice you shall, by written notice to the urban authority, dispute the same." Therefore, if it were intended to operate as a notice which would bring the three weeks' time into operation as well as the three months, it would, I think, be a most unfair thing to the person to whom the notice was given that his attention should not be expressly called to that point. I read the notice as showing clearly that the intention and understanding of the parties who gave it was simply that it should have the effect of making the three months' time for appeal given under sect. 257 begin to run, and was not intended to affect in any way the time for appealing within twenty-one days given by sect. 268. As I have already said, I do not consider that it amounts to any "notice of any decision" by the board that the total amount of the expenses is 375*l*. Further, again, sect. 268, which deals with the question of appeal, says: "Where any person deems himself aggrieved by the decision of the local authority in any case in which the local authority are empowered to recover in a summary manner any expenses incurred by them, or to declare such to be private improvement expenses," he may address a memorial in the way which has already been pointed out. With regard to that I do not think that there has been any decision in respect of which Mr. Taylor can say that he was aggrieved in this case, until the final notice was given to him on the 20th Dec. requiring him to pay his apportioned aliquot proportion of the 375*l*. In my opinion, therefore, sect. 257 does not apply to this case at all; but sect. 268 does apply to it, and Taylor had three weeks from the 20th Dec. when that third notice was given him within which to memorialise the Local Government Board, on the ground that he was aggrieved by what had been done by the local board; and the only thing, so far as I can see, which could prevent his going back beyond a certain time in respect of his appeal would be to show that, antecedently to that notice, some other notice had been given to him which gave him a right of appeal within twenty-one days, and no more, from the service of such other notice. Now I find no such "other notice" here, because, as regards the two only documents which have been suggested as notices, viz., the notice requiring him to do the work, and the notice of the surveyor's apportionment, neither of them, in my opinion, is a notice coming within the provisions of sect. 268. But, assuming that I am wrong in that view, and that the notice to do the work and the notice of apportionment were good notices of a decision from which Taylor ought to and should have appealed, the question arises, is there, or is there not, any right of appeal now? It seems to me that there is, because the memorialist has a right, where, as here, a notice is given, to complain of being aggrieved by a decision that the 252*l*. odd is to be paid by him in a summary manner. It is said that the memorial which he presents to the Local Government Board does not raise that case at all; but, in my opinion, it does. Looking at the memorial, it seems to me that, even if it were to be construed strictly, it does suggest and does ask relief on the ground that the sum which he is required to pay at once (for an immediate demand for payment is made) is excessive in amount; and although I think from the memorial itself that the grounds which he wishes to raise particularly are not simply that the sum ought to be charged by way of "private improvement expenses" instead of by a summary demand for a total sum down, yet it would be perfectly open to him to say that he was aggrieved by reason of the sum being required to be paid by him at once instead of being spread over an extended period of time. That appears to me to be specially raised by the memorial, and to be a ground perfectly open to him to dispute, and certainly for an appeal at any time. Assuming the view which I have taken as to the appeal to be wrong, yet, inasmuch as there was a memorial presented upon which the memorialist can get some relief in case he makes out a case for it, it seems to me to be impossible for us to grant the order for a prohibition which is now asked for, which would be a prohibition restraining the operation of that appeal altogether. As to the point whether the Local Government Board is a body to which, assuming them to be a kind of inferior court, prohibition would lie, I have not formed any opinion, and do not intend to express any at present, nor is it necessary now that I should. Before doing so I should require to have the matter more fully argued, and to take time to consider it.

The Penarth Local Board appealed.

Charles, Q.C. and A. T. Lawrence, for the Penarth Local Board, in support of the appeal.—The entertaining of the memorial by the Local Government Board is a judicial proceeding, and therefore prohibition will lie. It is apparent from the provisions of sects. 150, 257, and 268 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), that the Local Government Board had no jurisdiction to entertain that memorial. The apportionment, not having been disputed by a written notice within three months from the 21st Sept. 1881, is binding and conclusive by sect. 257. If, however, the effect of this memorial is not to dispute the apportionment within the meaning of sect. 257, then by sect. 268 Mr. Taylor should have appealed within twenty-one days after notice of the decision of the local board that he was liable to pay, that is, within twenty-one days after the 21st Sept. 1881. This being so his appeal was out of time, and ought not to be entertained.

Sir F. Herschell, S. G. (Channell with him), for the Local Government Board, in support of the decision of the court below.—Prohibition does not lie except to a tribunal deciding legal rights and exercising the functions of a court. Here the Local Government Board were not exercising judicial functions. The notice of decision within the meaning of sect. 268 was the notice demanding payment which was served on the 20th Dec. 1881. Until that notice was served there was no decision by the local board to appeal from. The apportionment is not such a decision; it is made, not by the local board, but by the surveyor.

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD AND GEORGE TAYLOR.

[CT. OF APP.]

A. L. Smith for George Taylor.—Until service of the notice of the 20th Dec. Mr. Taylor was not a person "aggrieved by the decision of the local authority" within the meaning of sect. 268. He had, therefore, twenty-one days from that date within which to address his memorial to the Local Government Board.

A. T. Lawrence replied.

The following further authorities were referred to:

Dryden v. The Churchwardens and Overseers of Putney, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 69; 1 Ex. Div. 223; Attorney-General v. Wandsworth District Board of Works, 6 Ch. Div. 539; Tunbridge Wells Local Board v. Akroyd, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 640; 5 Ex. Div. 199; Comyn's Digest, "Prohibition"; Breedon v. Gill, 5 Mod. 269; Hammersmith Railway Company v. Brand, L. Rep. 4 H. L. 171; Ex parte Death, 18 Q. B. 647; Cooper v. Wandsworth Board of Works, 18 C. B. N. S. 180; Reg. v. Local Government Board, 2 L. Rep. Ir. 316; South-Eastern Railway Company v. Railway Commissioners, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 203; 6 Q. B. Div. 586.

BAGGALLAY, L.J.—In this case a question arises under the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), and it depends on the construction of sects. 150, 257, and 268. By sect. 150, if the notice requiring the owners or occupiers to repave or repair the streets is not complied with, power is conferred (not an obligation imposed) on the urban authority, if they think fit, to execute the works mentioned and referred to in the notice; and if they execute the works they can either recover in a summary manner the owner's proportion of the expenses incurred by them in so doing, or they can declare such expenses to be private improvement expenses, and they may also by sect. 257 declare any such expenses to be payable by annual instalments. In the present case the Penarth Local Board of Health gave notice to Mr. Taylor under sect. 150 to do certain works; he did not do the works, and the board had the works done, and gave him notice to pay. Within twenty-one days after service of the notice demanding payment Mr. Taylor appealed to the Local Government Board under sect. 268. Sect. 257 makes this provision, that where the expenses have been settled and apportioned by the surveyor as payable by the owner, "such apportionment shall be binding and conclusive on such owner, unless within three months from service of notice on him . . . of the amount settled . . . he shall by written notice dispute the same." By this clause power is given to the owner within three months to dispute the amount; if he does so, there is to be an arbitration to settle the amount which he is to pay; if he does not do so within the time limited, then the amount apportioned is binding on him. Then there is a general clause as to appeal contained in sect. 268, by which a person aggrieved by the decision of the local authority may, "within twenty-one days after notice of such decision," appeal by memorial to the Local Government Board. In this case, after the works had been done and the amount ascertained, a demand of payment was made on Mr. Taylor on the 21st Dec. Then he first moves in the matter. He sends in a memorial to the Local Government Board, and particularises his grounds of complaint, alleging that there was no necessity for the paving which had been done, and that too much expense has been incurred. A rule nisi was obtained for a prohibition to the Local Government Board to prohibit them from proceeding in the matter of the appeal; that rule was discharged by the Divisional Court, and the present appeal is from this decision. The rule was resisted partly on the ground that no prohibition would lie to the Local Government Board, and partly because it was said that there were no grounds for a prohibition in the present case. I am of opinion that the argument of the respondents must prevail, because there are no grounds for a prohibition. It therefore becomes unnecessary to say anything as to whether prohibition lies or not. It is said here on behalf of the appellants that there were three decisions by the urban authority: the first when they gave notice to Mr. Taylor requiring him to pave; the second when they gave him notice of the amount apportioned; and the third when they demanded payment, at the same time threatening to proceed in a summary manner. I cannot take the view suggested as to the two first of the alleged decisions. On the construction of the sections, I think there is no decision until the urban authority have decided whether they will proceed in a summary manner to recover the expenses incurred or declare them to be private improvement expenses. There is no decision when the owner is called on to execute the works, for the urban authority are not bound to do what he has neglected to do; therefore there is no decision from which he can appeal. I pass on to the notice of the amount settled. That is no decision by the urban authority, for the notice is a notice of the amount settled by the surveyor; therefore it is no decision from which there could be an appeal under sect. 268. An argument was forcibly addressed to us by Mr. Charles and Mr. Lawrence, that, inasmuch as there could have been an appeal from the apportionment of the expenses, and the time for that appeal had expired, there could be no appeal now. Also it might be urged that on the 21st Sept. there was a decision by the urban authority, but, for the reasons which I have already assigned, I think this is not so. The three months having expired, the apportionment is absolutely binding as to the proportion of the total sum which the owner is to pay. Then there is a decision as to the mode in which payment of the amount claimed is to be enforced, and that decision is communicated to Mr. Taylor by the notice of the 21st Dec. demanding payment of the sum apportioned by the surveyor. This seems to me to be a decision by the urban authority as to whether they would enforce payment of the expenses incurred by summary proceedings, or would declare them to be private improvement expenses. From the time of the receipt of that notice I think Mr. Taylor had a right of appeal, and I am unable, having regard to the terms of sect. 268, to see that the subject of the appeal is restricted. I have felt a little doubt as to whether the board should travel beyond the grounds of complaint stated in the memorial; but I gather from the argument that the only questions to be raised are whether the work should be done, and as to the amount. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

BRETT, L.J.—I agree that no writ of prohibition should issue, but I do not agree with the grounds of the decision of the court below. Mr. Taylor had a notice, on the 4th May 1881, from the urban authority that they were dissatisfied with the way in which the street was paved, and requiring him to pave the portion of the street adjoining his premises. I am inclined to think that notice expressed a decision on the part of the urban authority, for they must have decided that the condition of the street was unsatisfactory. It seems to me, therefore, that he then had notice of a decision, and a demand was then made that he should pave the street. On the 21st Sept. 1881 he received a second notice from the urban authority stating that they had expended a sum of 375*l.* 0*s.* 11*d.* in executing the works, and that his proportion was 75*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, and the apportionment would be binding on him unless he disputed it within three months. He received a notice, therefore, on that occasion, but it was not a notice of a decision, for they had not decided that they had paid the money, nor had they decided that they apportioned a certain amount to Mr. Taylor, for that apportionment was made not by the urban authority but by the surveyor. Then on the 20th Dec. he receives a third notice. Now it seems to me that the collector, in serving that notice, is giving notice as the servant and on behalf of the board, and therefore this is a notice by the board. It is a notice of a decision, for it is a notice that the urban authority had decided that the expenses incurred were not to be treated as private improvement expenses, but were to be recovered summarily. Within twenty-one days from the receipt of this notice, but long after twenty-one days from the receipt of either of the former notices, Mr. Taylor sent in a memorial addressed to the Local Government Board, to the effect that the demand made upon him was inequitable, on the grounds that the work which had been done was unnecessary, and the amount expended unreasonable. He did not claim in the memorial that the apportionment as between him and the other owners was wrong. I think we must take it that the Local Government Board were prepared to consider the two questions set out in the memorial, and intended to consider both those questions in order to see whether the demand made on Mr. Taylor was equitable. The appellants ask for a prohibition to the Local Government Board to prohibit them from proceeding further in the matter of Mr. Taylor's appeal to them. Now it is said that the appellants ought to have limited the grounds of their claim, and that because their application was too large, therefore no rule ought to be granted. As I understand the judgment of the court below it went on that ground. Assuming that the decision proceeded on that ground, I cannot agree with it, for it seems to me that, if a person asks for too much in applying for a prohibition, the court should mould the prohibition, and limit it to those points as to which the applicant is entitled. I think the Solicitor-General did not contest this. It is said on behalf of the appellants that there were three successive decisions, and against each of these, as they arose, Mr. Taylor had a right of appeal, but he did not appeal against the first two decisions in time, and therefore his right of appeal is gone. It is said that on the last decision there is only one ground on which he has a right of appeal (namely as to whether these expenses ought to be recovered summarily, or ought to be declared private improvement expenses), and that this ground of complaint is not stated in his memorial, and therefore the Local Government Board has no power to hear his appeal. It was said by the Solicitor-General that, if it were wrong on the part of the Local Government Board to entertain an appeal on two of the questions, still they are not persons against whom prohibition will lie. In my view it is not necessary to determine this question. I am sorry it is not to be decided, because it is very important, and if the Lord Chief Justice were here, possibly we might have thought it right to give our opinion on the question, but in his absence, (a) as the court consists of only two judges, I think it is right not to enter into the consideration of the question. My own view is, that the court should not be chary of prohibition, and where the Legislature has intrusted power to a public body to impose an obligation, the court should exercise their discretion widely if such public body exceed the jurisdiction so intrusted to them. Then, on the assumption that a prohibition might go, is there any ground for it in this case? The question arises on the construction of the sections of the Public Health Act, and we have to determine what appeal lies, and what matters may be gone into. This depends mainly on sect. 268. I cannot agree with the Solicitor-General that the heading of the group of sections is not part of the Act of Parliament. I take it that the word "appeal" at the head of sect. 268 is part of the Act, and may be used for the purpose of construing the two sections forming that part of the Act at the head of which it stands. I take it there is an appeal given by sect. 268. It is said that it is not an appeal against a judicial decision, and that the proceedings of the local board are not judicial. It is not necessary to decide this, but I have a strong opinion that the proceedings are judicial, and that it is the duty of the Local Government Board to hear the party presenting the memorial. It is obvious that the Local Government Board are bound to hear the other board against whose decision the appeal is brought, because the section directs the delivery of a copy of the memorial to the local authority. It is not necessary to say whether the Local Government Board are bound to hear the parties to the appeal orally, but that they are bound to give the appellant an opportunity of answering the answer of the local authority to his memorial, to my mind, is obvious. Now, against what decision is the right of appeal given by sect. 268? The words are, "The decision of the local authority" in certain cases, not "any decision," and the appeal is to be brought "within twenty-one days after notice of such decision." The decision is "in any case in which the local authority are"—not "shall be"—empowered to recover expenses summarily, or declare them to be private improvement expenses. The wording of the section shuts out cases of notices given before any expenses have been incurred; therefore it shuts out cases where notice

(a) Lord Coleridge, C.J., who had heard part of the argument, was prevented by illness from taking part in the decision.

CT. OF APP.]

HARBOTTLE (app.) v. TERRY (resp.).

[Q.B. DIV.]

is given to do the work. Also it must be where they are empowered to recover in a summary manner, and to see how this provision affects the question we must look at sect. 150, and see the effect of the notice there mentioned; after that notice the urban authority are not in a position to recover any expenses summarily, for there is nothing to recover. Next take the case where they procure the work to be done. They are not then in a position to recover anything, and the next act is done not by them but by their surveyor, whose decision is as to the proportion only, and the board cannot determine this, but it has to be determined by the surveyor; he gives notice of his apportionment, and for what purpose is this notice served on the owners? In order that, if they are dissatisfied with the apportionment, they may complain to the local authority, and if they do not so complain within three months the rate of apportionment is binding. The decision of the surveyor has nothing to do with the amount expended, but only settles the apportionment if the amount expended is right. Therefore there is then no appeal under sect. 268, because, if there has been any order of the board, it is an order of a board which is not in a position to recover any expenses summarily. Then what are they to do in order to get into a position to recover the expenses summarily? This is not expressly enacted. Sect. 257 is the only enactment as to the necessity for notice of demand. What is the necessary inference to be drawn from the words of that section? That they must proceed by notice of demand, and that until then they are not in a position to recover the expenses. On that notice being given there is an appeal, but there is none before; there is none when it is determined that the street is to be paved, and there is none when the amount payable by each owner is determined. The right arises only on the making of the demand, after the expenses have been incurred and the apportionment has been made, because not until then is it a case in which the local authority are empowered to recover the expenses summarily. After the demand the memorial can be presented within twenty-one days. Here it was presented, and the only question then is, what questions could the Local Government Board inquire into? What words are there in the Act to oblige us to come to the narrow conclusion that there could be no appeal as to either the necessity for the work or the reasonableness of the expenditure? Yet it is said that the local board of health have no control over these matters. According to this argument there is only one complaint which the owner can make; then why should he state it as sect. 268 says he shall? That section says "the grounds of his complaint" (in the plural), and, if there can only be one ground of complaint, what is the necessity for this provision? The section assumes that there may be several grounds of complaint, and that they may be grounds which could not be anticipated by the local authority. I think the construction suggested is too narrow, and would lead to absurd, inconvenient, and unjust results. It seems obvious that, on the true construction of sect. 268, the Local Government Board has power to inquire into every circumstance connected with the subject of the appeal. They may take into their consideration the former matters, not as decisions, but as facts, in order to inquire whether the sum demanded is equitable. I should be loth to fetter the Local Government Board in the exercise of the powers conferred upon them. Therefore it seems to me that, assuming prohibition will lie, there is no reason for assuming that the Local Government Board are about to inquire into matters beyond their jurisdiction. I cannot see that they would be exceeding their jurisdiction if they were to inquire into all the matters which relate to the question in dispute. I think therefore that there is nothing which we ought to prohibit. I do not agree with one of the grounds of the decision in the court below, but I agree that the rule was rightly discharged, and this appeal ought to be dismissed.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors for Penarth Local Board, Torr and Co., for Griffiths and Corbett, Cardiff.

Solicitors for Local Government Board, Sharpe, Parkers, and Pritchard.

Solicitors for Mr. Taylor, Ingledeu and Ince, for Ingledeu, Ince, and Vachell, Cardiff.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Wednesday, Dec. 6, 1882.

(Before FIELD and STEPHEN, JJ.)

HARBOTTLE (app.) v. TERRY (resp.). (a)

Fishery district—Certificate of Secretary of State—Tributary—Waterworks reservoir—River Tyne—Salmon Fisheries Acts 1861-1873 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121; and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 71)—The Freshwater Fisheries Act 1875 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 39).

Under the Salmon Fishery Act 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 121), s. 5, the fishery district of the river Tyne was described by a Secretary of State's certificate to be "so much of the river Tyne and its tributaries as is situate within the counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, Durham, &c." Before 1845 the Whittle Dean Burn in the county of Northumberland was a tributary of the Tyne. In that year 8 & 9 Vict. c. lxxi. empowered a local water company to take the water of this stream, and under that and two subsequent Acts a reservoir was formed by placing a dam across it, an outlet from the reservoir communicating by an artificial watercourse with the ancient watercourse of the stream. Sometimes all the water of the stream flows direct to the Tyne, sometimes a part flows through the reservoir into the Tyne, sometimes (frequently in summer) all the water is impounded in the reservoir. Salmon and trout can only pass into the reservoir when the stream is in flood, and the sluices drawn up. On an information charging the respondent with attempting to take trout in the reservoir by means other than a properly licensed instrument: Held, that the justices were right in dismissing the information, as the reservoir was not a tributary of the Tyne within the meaning of the certificate of the Secretary of State.

THIS was a case stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43 by justices for the county of Northumberland

(a) Reported by J. SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

HARBOTTLE (app.) v. TERRY (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

on the hearing of an information preferred before them, under the Salmon Fishery Acts 1865 to 1873 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121; and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 71) and the Freshwater Fisheries Act 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 39), by one George Harbottle against William Terry, for an offence against the 22nd section of the Salmon Fishery Act 1873. Upon the evidence then brought before them the justices dismissed the information, but stated the following case for the opinion of the court:—

1. Upon the hearing of a certain information preferred by the appellant against the respondent charging for that "on the 29th May last, at the parish of Ovingham, in the division of Tindale Ward, in the county aforesaid, and within the fishery district of the river Tyne, in which said district licences are payable under the provisions of the Salmon Fishery Acts 1865 to 1873 and the Freshwater Fisheries Act 1878, the respondent unlawfully did attempt to take trout by means other than a properly licensed instrument for catching trout—to wit, a stick and two lines—contrary to sect. 22 of the Salmon Fisheries Act 1873."

2. The following facts were either proved or admitted by both parties:

3. That by a certificate under the hand of Sir George Grey, one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, dated the 1st May 1866, the fishery district of the river Tyne was formed, and the limits of the district were described to be so much of the river Tyne and its tributaries as is situate within the counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, Durham, and the town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and also the "estuary of the said river, and so much of the coast as lies between Souter Point, in the county of Durham, and Cray Point, in the county of Northumberland, and all rivers flowing into the sea between the said points and being within the said counties, as laid down on the annexed map deposited in the office of the clerk of the peace in the county of Northumberland."

4. That a board of conservators for the said district had been duly appointed, and that a scale of licences had been duly approved by the Secretary of State in pursuance of the Salmon Fisheries Act 1865, s. 34, which is incorporated in the Freshwater Fisheries Act 1878, by sect. 7 of the last-mentioned Act.

5. That a stream of water, locally called the Whittle Dean Burn, was, previous to the year 1845, a tributary to the Tyne.

6. That on the 30th June 1845 the Act of Parliament of 8 & 9 Vict. c. lxxi. was passed, and on the 2nd June 1854 the Act of Parliament of 17 & 18 Vict. c. lx. was passed, both of which Acts the respondent relied on. The Act of 26 & 27 Vict. c. xxxiv. also bears on this case.

7. That by virtue of the powers conferred by the said two Acts of Parliament several reservoirs, one of which is called "The Great Southern Reservoir," have been formed, which are supplied with water from the said stream.

8. That the Great Southern Reservoir was formed by placing a dam across the stream.

9. That an outlet from the said last-mentioned reservoir has been formed by which the said last-mentioned reservoir communicates by an artificial watercourse with the ancient watercourse of the said stream.

10. That at the present date all the water of the said stream sometimes flows directly to the river Tyne, partly by an artificial watercourse and partly by the ancient watercourse; at other times a portion of such water flows through the said reservoirs into the Tyne, and at other times all the water of the said stream is impounded in the said reservoirs, and no water flows into the river.

11. That no waste water had been passed out of the said reservoirs since 27th April last.

12. That it is a frequent occurrence in summer for no waste to be passed out of the said reservoirs.

13. That when the said reservoirs are full all the surplus water is sent into the river Tyne.

14. That salmon, the young of salmon, and trout can pass from the river Tyne into the Whittle Dean Burn, and thence into the said reservoirs; but the stream must be in flood and the sluices drawn up.

15. That trout have been caught in the said stream, and trout, bull trout, kelts, and smelt (the young of salmon) have been caught in the said reservoirs.

16. That the respondent did, on the 29th May 1882, fish for trout in the said reservoir, called the Great Southern Reservoir, with a stick and two lines, an instrument not properly licensed by the Board of Conservators of the fishery district of the river Tyne.

17. That the stream called the Whittle Dean Burn, both above and below the said Great Southern Reservoir, is at present a tributary to the river Tyne.

18. That fishing in the said reservoirs has gone on for twenty years; that the witness on the part of the respondent who proved this had been superintendent of the said reservoirs for that period, and had never seen any salmon, or the young of salmon, in the reservoirs, or taken out, except one, caught on the 23rd June 1882.

19. Upon these facts the counsel for the appellant contended that, it being admitted that the stream called the Whittle Dean Burn was once a tributary to the river Tyne, it remains so still; that the Great Southern Reservoir, through which the said stream is permitted to flow at certain times, and out of which trout and fish of the salmon kind have been taken, is also a tributary to the river Tyne within the meaning of the said statute.

20. It was contended by the counsel for the respondents, that there is a difference in law between water which flows past land and water which is impounded by Act of Parliament; and, while admitting that there was a stream of water called Whittle Dean Burn, which was at one time a tributary to the river Tyne, he contended that the Legislature had altered the character of the stream and taken away all rights. He referred to the preamble of the Act of 1861 as evidence that the Act extended only to public waters, or quasi-public waters, and not to private fishponds. He defined the term "tributary" as that which pays tribute, and contended that, under the said statutes, the said water company were not bound to contribute any of the water flowing in the said stream to the river Tyne; that the said company had power to impound all the water flowing in the said stream; and that, if the Great Southern Reservoir is a tributary, it is a tributary to a tributary, inasmuch as it contributes to the natural and ancient stream called Whittle Dean

Q.B. Div.]

HARBOTTLE (app.) v. TERRY (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Burn, in its course between the latter reservoir and the river Tyne, between which points it is a tributary to the river Tyne; and he summed up his case into two points: first, that the Great Southern Reservoir is private water, and not a tributary within the meaning of the said certificate; second, that a tributary must be "frequented" by trout.

Upon the evidence above set forth we decided that a stream, locally called the Whittle Dean Burn, was, previous to the date of the first statute put in evidence by the respondent, a tributary to the river Tyne; that by the operation of the said two last-mentioned statutes (8 & 9 Vict. c. lxxi. and 17 & 18 Vict. c. lx.) and of the 26 & 27 Vict. c. xxxiv the reservoirs formed under the provisions of those statutes are no longer tributaries to the river Tyne, and therefore not within the jurisdiction of the Tyne Salmon Conservancy, and thereupon we dismissed the information.

The question for the decision of the court is, whether the said Great Southern Reservoir is a tributary to the river Tyne within the meaning of the said certificate.

If the court should be of opinion that the Great Southern Reservoir was not such a tributary, then the order of the justices dismissing the information was to stand. If the court should be of the contrary opinion, then the case was to be remitted to the justices to be dealt with according to the decision of the court.

The 3rd and 5th sections of the Salmon Fishery Act 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 121) so far as they are material, are:

3. In this Act the word "river" shall include such portion of any stream or lake, with its tributaries, and such portion of any estuary, sea, or sea coast as may from time to time be declared, in manner hereinafter provided, to belong to such river.

5. The limits of a river shall be defined for the purposes of this Act, and a fishery district shall be formed, by a certificate under the hand of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, describing the limits of the river or district.

The 22nd section of the Salmon Fisheries Act 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 71), is:

22. In all fishery districts in which licences are payable under the provisions of the Salmon Fisheries Act 1865, or this Act, any person fishing for, taking, killing, or attempting to take or kill, salmon by any means whatsoever other than a properly licensed fishing weir, fishing milldam, fixed engine, instrument, net, or device for catching or facilitating the catching of salmon, or assisting any person in so doing, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds.

The material sections of the Freshwater Fisheries Act (41 & 42 Vict. c. 39), are:

2. This Act shall, so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, be read as one with the Salmon Fishery Acts 1861 to 1876.

6. The provisions of the Salmon Fishery Acts 1865 and 1873, which relate to the formation of fishery districts and to the appointment, qualification, proceedings, and powers of conservators, shall extend and apply to all waters within the limits of this Act, frequented by trout or char.

7. In any fishery district, subject to a board of conservators, the conservators shall have power to issue licences for the day, week, season, or any part thereof, to all persons fishing for trout or char, and, in the event of the power being exercised in any fishery district, the provisions of the thirty-third, thirty-fourth, thirty-fifth, thirty-sixth, and thirty-seventh sections of the Salmon Fishery Act 1865, and of the twenty-first, twenty-second, twenty-fourth, and twenty-fifth sections of the Salmon Fishery Act 1873 (relative to licences) shall, with respect to such district, be construed as if the words "trout or char" were inserted throughout after the word "salmon."

The Act of Parliament 8 & 9 Vict. c. lxxi, relied upon by the respondent, is a local Act for supplying the borough and county of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and the borough of Gateshead, in the county of Durham, and the neighbourhoods thereof, with water from Whittle Dean, in the parish of Ovingham, and other places in Northumberland; the Act 17 & 18 Vict. c. lx. is for enabling the Whittle Dean Water Company to extend their works and to obtain a further supply of water from certain rivers and streams; and the Act 26 & 27 Vict. c. xxxiv. is the Newcastle and Gateshead Waterworks Act 1863.

Willis Bund for the appellant.—The Whittle Dean Burn was formerly a tributary to the Tyne, and is stated in the case to be so at present both above and below the reservoirs. By the Waterworks Acts the waterworks company were authorised to place a dam across the stream, and so turn the water into (among others) a reservoir called the Great Southern Reservoir, and this was done before the Salmon Fisheries Acts were passed. Under them the Secretary of State formed the fishery district of the Tyne, which was described to include so much of the river Tyne and its tributaries as was situate within certain counties. The fact that the stream is dammed across, and the water by these means held up in a reservoir for the use of the waterworks company, does not cause the water so held up to cease to be tributary. In Merricks v. Cadwallader (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 29) the wording of the certificate of the Secretary of State was different, and the decision is based on a rule of construction which does not apply here. In Hall v. Reid (a)

(a) HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.—QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Monday, June 12, 1882.

(Before FIELD and CAVE, JJ.)

HALL (app.) v. REID (resp.).

THIS was a case stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43 by justices for the county of Derby on the hearing of an information preferred before them at Bakewell on the 21st April 1882 by the appellant, a water bailiff to the Board of Conservators of the Trent Fishery District, against the respondent for unlawfully attempting to take trout in the river Wye at Bakewell, in the county of Derby, by means other than a properly licensed instrument for catching trout, contrary to the 22nd section of the Salmon Fisheries Act 1873.

The Trent Fishery District is a fishery district duly formed under the provisions of the Salmon Fishery Acts, by a certificate under the hand of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and the limits of the district are therein described to be "so much of the river Trent and its tributaries" as is situate within the counties of Stafford, Nottingham, Derby, &c.; and the Board of Conservators for the district was duly appointed, and a scale of licences duly approved under the provisions of the said Acts.

The respondent had, as a fact, fished for trout without a licence in the river Wye, which is a river flowing into the Derwent, which flows into the Trent.

The justices were of opinion that the word "tributaries" in the Secretary of State's certificate meant direct tributaries, and did not include the tributary of a tributary, the case of Merricks v. Cadwallader (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 29) being conclusive on that point; and they therefore dismissed the information, but stated a case for the opinion of the court, the question being whether the respondent required a licence from the Board of Conservators to fish in the river Wye.

Willis Bund for the appellant.

Woolf for the respondent.

Q.B. Div.]

HARBOTTLE (app.) v. TERRY (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

"tributary" was defined by Field, J. as "that which contributes to." [STEPHEN, J.—The question there was as to whether a tributary of a tributary was itself a tributary, and it was decided that it was.] In this case the reservoir is a tributary of the stream which is found to be a tributary of the Tyne. [STEPHEN, J.—Would the Serpentine and Hendon reservoir be tributaries of the Thames?] Yes; but the Secretary of State has full powers in the formation of the districts, and it would be for him to consider whether he would include them in the Thames district or not:

Reg. v. Sir George Grey, 14 L. T. Rep. 477; L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 469.

[FIELD, J.—Is not the definition in Hall v. Reid too wide? If pressed it would include water taken from a stream for domestic purposes, and afterwards returned through the drains, and licences would be required for private fish ponds in all cases where the water is derived from, and the surplus returned to, a tributary in a fishery district. Must not a tributary be ejusdem generis with its parent river?] A mountain stream dry in summer is most important for fishing purposes for breeding, and this is an exactly similar case; the reservoirs take all the water in summer, and when there is too much the sluices are opened and a part is allowed to flow away. [STEPHEN, J.—Does not this case differ from that of a stream across which dams have been placed so as to form ponds, the water flowing in at the top and out at the bottom? In this case there are watercourses on each side, and the reservoir between impounds the water, and it is only when it becomes too full that the sluices are opened and some of the water let off.] The tributary watercourses at the side are artificial like the reservoir. The company has received no rights from the Legislature beyond that of taking the water for the purpose of supplying the town, FIELD, J.—I see no necessity whatever for putting any limitation, as it is suggested that we ought, upon the word "tributary." What we have to do is to construe the language of the certificate and see what it means. The general object of the Act is that persons fishing for fish within certain districts shall be under the control of boards of conservators, who shall grant licences so as to preserve the fish for consumption to the use of the inhabitants at large. The Home Secretary is to state what the limits of these districts are. In this case he says they are "the Trent and its tributaries." Why are we to put a limitation on this word and not read it in its natural sense? A tributary is that which contributes to; and can anyone doubt for a moment that the Wye is a tributary of the Trent. If you did not turn on in aid the water of the Derwent, it would be the whole and sole tributary of the Trent, and would be the Trent; and if this were the case, the whole difficulty would be got over. The magistrates appear to have thought that the decision in the Severn case (Merricks v. Cadwallader, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 29) was decisive on this point; but really and truly it is not so, because that was a judgment upon the construction of the certificate in that case, applying the well-known maxim that, if you find an Act of the Legislature or document describing a particular case, and other cases as the alternative of that case, it must be taken to include only the same class of case. The certificate there named the rivers Teme and Vyrynw, which are direct tributaries of the Severn, and then went on, "and all other tributaries of the river Severn;" and the court held that the words must be confined to "all other tributaries like the Teme and Vyrynw," and that it was the intention of the Secretary of State that all tributaries other than those which, like the Teme and Vyrynw, flow direct into the Severn, should be excluded.

CAVE, J. concurred.

Case remitted.

and there is no reason why the right of fishing the water they take for this purpose should be given to them, especially when the result will be to throw great difficulties in the way of carrying out the objects of the Act. The case of Lyne v. Leonard (18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 55; L. Rep. 3 Q. B. 156) shows the strictness with which, in the opinion of Blackburn, J., these Acts ought to be construed, and the inconvenience of holding that this reservoir is no part of the district, and that no licence is required to fish for trout in it.

J. Edge, for the respondent, was not called upon.

FIELD, J.—I am unable to say that the conclusion at which the justices arrived in this case is wrong, and am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed. The question submitted to us is purely one of the construction of the statute. Now, this is one of those statutes for the construction of which it is necessary to look at the objects the Legislature had in view in passing it, and the consequences of the powers they gave under it. We may then be able to see whether they intended to include under the name of "tributary" such a piece of water as that under consideration in this case. The object of this statute, as stated in the preamble, was to prevent the destruction of migratory fish. These fish go to the sea, and then come up at a certain season to deposit their spawn, and then the young fish come down in their turn, and they form a sort of food supply, which the statute was intended to preserve for the good of the community against the cupidity of particular owners of land or others, who might prevent the young fish from getting out of the river, or otherwise destroy them. To carry out this object a fishing district of the river Tyne was duly formed with certain limits, as set out in the case, and a board of conservators was appointed, and powers to enter on the land and various other powers were given to their water bailiffs. Then the facts of this case are that, previous to the year 1845, the stream in question was a tributary to the Tyne. In that year the waterworks company obtained an Act empowering them to appropriate the water of the stream for the purposes of their undertaking. Under the powers of this Act the undertakers formed a series of reservoirs, and various connections between them and the stream, and took all the water they wanted from the stream. They also formed a channel for the surplus water, and if they want all the water the stream supplies they take all; if some only, they take what they want, and allow the rest to flow down the surplus channel. During some summers no water passes down this channel, and at the time of the circumstances on which the information is laid no water was passing down. Of course I agree that the mere circumstance that at one time the stream is full and at another empty does not prevent it from being a stream; but at the same time I cannot help thinking, without laying down any precise definition, that a tributary must be something in the nature of a stream. I should have some hesitation, for instance, in saying that an artesian well was a tributary. The question, however, to be decided in this case is, whether this reservoir is a tributary or not. The justices have come to the conclusion that it is not, and I am not satisfied that they are wrong. On the contrary, if I had had to decide the point in the first instance, I should have said that it was not a tributary. Otherwise, if reservoirs such as this are to be tributaries within the meaning of the Act, I do not know where I should be able to stop in the definition of the word. I think that the language I used in Hall v. Reid was too broad, and cannot be applied to the present case. I cannot say that all water which has once been in a tributary stream continues to be tributary. If so, I should be obliged to say that all fishponds constructed on private properties, and fed by tributary streams, are tributaries. The primary object of the Legislature was to protect migratory fish, but these fish can only get into the reservoir in question when the stream is in flood and the sluices are drawn up. Besides, the water is impounded in this reservoir for a commercial purpose, to be supplied to the town of Newcastle for domestic and other purposes, and the great bulk of the water impounded is so supplied, and only returns to the Tyne after passing through the water company's pipes and the houses of the town, and I can hardly think that it was intended to bring water impounded in this manner and for this purpose under the operation of the statute, or that it falls within the natural meaning of the word tributary; and on these grounds I think that the appeal must be dismissed.

Q.B. Div.] LOCAL BOARD OF BISHOP AUCKLAND v. BISHOP AUCKLAND IRON, & CO., CO. LIM. [Q.B. Div.]

STEPHEN, J.—In this case the question is whether this reservoir is a tributary of the Tyne or not. The magistrates are of opinion that it is not, and I am of the same opinion. The question is a very simple one. Is a pond, inclosed by and fed from a stream which runs into a larger stream, to be considered a tributary of that larger stream? Now, if you were to ask anyone, without reference to the Act, whether it were so, any person, speaking in ordinary language, would say that it was not. When one speaks of a tributary in ordinary conversation, one means a stream which runs into another stream. It is not an exact word, and no technical meaning has been assigned to it; but, on the other hand, its popular meaning is not very indefinite or profound, and it requires much ingenuity to support the interpretation which the appellants desire to put upon it. I should be sorry, however, to attempt to lay down a complete definition of the word. There are many circumstances which might distinguish other cases from this, and it would be very difficult to frame a definition which would apply to all cases. I think, for instance, that where a stream is dammed across so as to form a succession of pools, through all of which the stream runs, flowing into the upper one and out at the bottom of the lowest, or where a stream widens into lakes at no great distance from the sea, with a strong stream running through them and out to sea, it might very well be that all the pools and lakes would be "tributary." But these reservoirs are quite differently situated. Two streams which are tributary run round the reservoirs, and by means of pipes part of the water is impounded, and turned into the reservoirs; but, according to the ordinary usage of language, I do not think that these reservoirs can, under these circumstances be called tributaries of the Tyne. My opinion is that this case is more like that of private fishponds in private grounds. It would be a strong use of language to say that the Serpentine or the Round Pond at Kensington are tributaries of the Thames, and the only difference between them and this reservoir is, that in one case the connection is slightly clearer than in the other. There are reservoirs also by the side of the Thames above Kingston, into which the Thames runs, and I have no doubt most of the water comes back into the river; but it would be absurd to say that they are tributaries of the Thames. I think, therefore, that the decision of the magistrates is correct, and must be upheld.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, E. Flux and Lead-bitter, for Gibson, Hexham.

Solicitors for respondents, Pattison, Wigg and Co., for G. Armstrong, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Friday, Dec. 8, 1882.

(Before FIELD and STEPHEN, JJ.)

THE LOCAL BOARD OF HEALTH FOR THE DISTRICT OF BISHOP AUCKLAND (apps.) v. THE BISHOP AUCKLAND IRON AND STEEL COMPANY LIMITED (resps.). (a)

Nuisance—Injurious to health—Iron company—Accumulation of cinders—Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 91, sub-sect. 4.

By the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 91, sub-sect. 4, "any accumulation or deposit which is a nuisance or injurious to health shall be deemed to be a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily."

Held, that an accumulation destructive of the personal comfort of the neighbourhood came within the section, although not injurious to health.

The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop (26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 905; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 550) distinguished.

THIS was a case stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, by justices for the county of Durham, and was, so far as material, as follows:—

1. At a petty session holden at Bishop Auckland in and for the north-west division of the Darlington ward, in the county of Durham, on the 10th July 1882 a complaint was preferred by the Local Board of Health for the district of Bishop Auckland, hereinafter called the appellants, against the Bishop Auckland Iron and Steel Company Limited, hereinafter called the respondents, under sub-sect. 4 of the 91st section of the 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55 (Public Health Act 1875), charging that in or upon the premises of the said respondents, situate at Bishop Auckland aforesaid, in the district of the appellants, the following nuisance existed, namely, "An accumulation or deposit of cinders, ashes, and refuse," which was a nuisance or injurious to health, and which nuisance was caused by the act and default of the respondents, and was determined by us, the said parties respectively being then present or represented, and upon such hearing we dismissed the said complaint.

4. Upon the hearing of the said complaint the following facts were either proved before us or admitted by both the parties: That the respondents are the occupiers of certain premises within the appellants' district in which the manufacture of iron and steel is carried on. The works are in the town of Bishop Auckland, and are surrounded by dwelling-houses on three sides. In the course of carrying on their business the respondents produce or make large quantities of cinders and ashes, which are not removed from the premises, but which are deposited there and allowed to accumulate. The heaps so accumulated are on fire and continually smouldering, and from them are thrown off in large quantities fumes, or effluvia.

Q.B. DIV.] LOCAL BOARD OF BISHOP AUCKLAND v. BISHOP AUCKLAND IRON, &C., CO. LIM. [Q.B. DIV.]

The appellants called their surveyor, who stated that he had had complaints of the nuisance caused by the effluvia. He also stated that a portion of the burning heaps stand upon certain sewers belonging to the said appellants, and the fumes from such heaps found their way into and along the said sewers, through the water-closets, into the dwellings of certain of the inhabitants of the said appellants' district. The appellants also called their medical officer, who stated that although he had no doubt of the effluvia complained of being a nuisance to some people, he had never known the health of any of the inhabitants to suffer therefrom, and further, that it was not a nuisance injurious to health.

5. At the close of the appellants' case it was contended for the respondents, that, as the medical evidence had failed to prove injury to health, the prosecution must fail, and The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop (26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 905; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 550) was cited in support of such contention.

6. For the appellants it was contended that it was not necessary to prove that the nuisance complained of was injurious to health, and that if we were satisfied there was a nuisance caused by the effluvia we ought to convict the respondents. The Malton Local Board v. The Malton Farmers' Manure Company (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 755; L. Rep. 4 Ex. Div. 302) was cited in support of this view. We, however, found as a fact that, although the effluvia from the smouldering ashes might be a nuisance, it was not injurious to health, and we accordingly dismissed the said complaint in manner before stated.

The question of law arising from the above statement for the opinion of the court is "Was it necessary for the appellants to prove not only that a nuisance was caused by the effluvia in question, but also that such nuisance was injurious to the health of the inhabitants of the district?"

The court is humbly solicited according to the power vested in the court by the said statute (20 & 21 Vict. c. 43), to remit the case to us the said justices, with the opinion of the court thereon, or to make such other order as the court may deem fit.

The following statutes and sections became material in the course of the argument:—

The 8th section of the Nuisances Removal and Diseases Prevention Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 121), is:

8. The word "nuisances" under this Act shall include. . . Any accumulation or deposit which is a nuisance or injurious to health.

Part 3 (ss. 13-143) of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) is entitled "Sanitary Provisions." The 47th section, belonging to the group (ss. 42-50) entitled "Scavenging and Cleansing," is:

47. Any person who in any urban district (1) Keeps any swine or pigstye in any dwelling house, or so as to be a nuisance to any person; . . . shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty, &c.

The 91st section, belonging to the group (ss. 91-111), entitled "Nuisances," is:

91. For the purposes of this Act. . . (4) Any accumulation or deposit which is a nuisance or injurious to health. . . shall be deemed to be nuisances liable to be dealt with summarily in manner provided by this Act.

The 114th section, belonging to the group (ss. 112-115) entitled "Offensive Trades," is:

114. Where any candle house, melting house, melting place, or soap house, or any slaughter house, or any building or place for boiling offal or blood, or for boiling, burning, or crushing bones, or any manufactory, building, or place used for any trade, business, process, or manufacture causing effluvia, is certified to any urban sanitary authority by their medical officer of health, or by any two legally qualified medical practitioners, or by any ten inhabitants of the district of such urban sanitary authority, to be a nuisance or injurious to the health of any of the inhabitants of the district, such urban authority shall direct complaint to be made before a justice . . . and . . . the person so offending . . . shall be liable to a penalty, &c.

W. A. Meek for the appellants.—The magistrates were wrong in dismissing the complaint in this case on the ground that the matter complained of was not shown to be injurious to health. The case of The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop (26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 905; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 550) is distinguishable from the present. In that case the information was laid under the 8th section of the Nuisances Removal Act 1855 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 55), and, although the words are nearly the same, the object of the earlier Act was much narrower than that of the Public Health Act. The Act of 1855 was purely sanitary, and the nuisance complained of in The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop being a mere common law nuisance, the court held that the Act did not apply. In the present case the complaint is laid under the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), which certainly deals with other matters than those directly injurious to health. One group of sections (ss. 112-115) is entitled "Offensive Trades," and it has been decided in The Malton Board of Health v. The Malton Manure Company (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 755; L. Rep. 4 Ex. Div. 302), which was brought under the 114th section, that it is not necessary to prove injury to health under that group. The 91st section is one of a group (secs. 91-111) entitled "Nuisances," and there can be no reason for limiting the meaning of the word to nuisances injurious to health. The ratio decidendi in the case of The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop (ubi sup.) was that any other decision would lead to absurd consequences, and bring in obstructions to highways, and other offences not intended to come within the scope of the Act, and that it was therefore necessary to draw a line somewhere, and this was done by reference to the title of the Act. Under the present Act there is no reason why the words "nuisance or injurious to health" should not be construed literally.

B. Henn Collins for the respondents.—This case is undistinguishable from The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop (ubi sup.). The words of the Act are practically the same in that case as in this. Further, that case was not affected by the decision in The Malton Local Board v. The Malton Manure Company (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 755; 4 Ex. Div. 302). The last-mentioned case is in favour of the respondents, inasmuch as it was brought under sect. 114 of the Act of 1875, one of the group headed "Offensive Trades," and nevertheless both judges rest their judgments on the fact that sick persons were made worse by the matter complained of. Even in the "Offensive Trade" sections it is provided that the certificate of the medical officer of health shall set the urban sanitary authority in motion. [STEPHEN, J.—I think the words used by the court in The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop have a larger meaning than was intended by the court. I should feel obliged to follow that case under the same Act, but not in the case of another Act.] I contend that the construction adopted in that case is the correct and natural construction to put upon the words.

Q.B. Div.] LOCAL BOARD OF BISHOP AUCKLAND v. BISHOP AUCKLAND IRON, &C., CO. LIM. [Q.B. Div.]

FIELD, J. delivered a judgment to the effect that he was unable to find a valid distinction between the case of The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop (ubi sup.) and the case before him, and that he could not say that the justices were wrong in following that case, but having, during the time Stephen, J. was delivering judgment, read the case of The Banbury Urban Sanitary Authority v. Page (45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 759; 8 Q. B. Div. 97), he afterwards said that, as Grove, J. had in that case taken the view held by Stephen, J. in the case under discussion, he no longer felt himself bound by The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop, and therefore concurred entirely in the judgment of Stephen, J.

STEPHEN, J.—I am of opinion that the justices were wrong in dismissing this information. I stand by the judgment which I gave in the case of The Malton Board of Health v. The Malton Manure Company (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 755; 4 Ex. Div. 302), and I do not feel that the earlier case of The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop (26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 905; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 550) is in point in this case. In both these Acts of Parliament which it has been necessary to examine in this case a definition of "nuisance" is given. Under the Nuisances Removal Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 121), it is provided that the word "nuisances" (sect. 8) "shall include any premises in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health." Now the particular nuisance under consideration in the case of The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop (ubi sup.) was not only not injurious to health, but in no kind of way related to the health or comfort of any person in the neighbourhood, but was simply a common law nuisance, similar, for instance, to a neglect to repair a highway. It was, in fact, the nuisance of having a railway bridge out of repair, so that water dripped on to those who happened to be passing underneath, and the decision there was to the effect that such a nuisance as that did not come within the words of the Nuisances Removal Act, which was a sanitary Act dealing with nuisances which were injurious to health. That is what that case says, but it does not say what the court would have done had the nuisance been, not precisely injurious to health, but one which interfered with the comfort of the neighbourhood. There is a great difference between a railway bridge out of repair, so that the water dripped from it, and heaps of cinders throwing off fumes and effluvia in large quantities. On looking closely into the circumstances of the two cases, that seems to me to be the difference between The Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop and this case. The nuisance, in fact, in that case was of an entirely different kind from that to which the Act referred. In the case of The Malton Board of Health v. The Malton Manure Company (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 755; 4 Ex. Div. 302) the nuisance was distinctly injurious to health, inasmuch as it made sick people worse; but, apart from that, as I put it in my judgment in that case, even if it were not shown to be injurious to health, yet if it were destructive of the present comfort of the neighbourhood and very near to being injurious to health, it seemed to me exactly the thing to which both the present and the old Act referred. I do not find in the case of the Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop an authority which governs this case. On the contrary, the proper mode of interpreting the Act is, in my opinion, to take the natural sense of the words. I understand them as meaning not a common law nuisance, but something destructive of present comfort or something injurious to health without interfering with present comfort. A man, for instance, may catch diphtheria without being exposed to any present loss of comfort, and it is also possible to destroy a man's comfort in his home without injury to his health, on the same principle that consumptive patients used to imagine that their health was benefited by exposing themselves to the disagreeable smells of a tanner's yard. This seems to me to be the only method of interpretation which gives a proper sense to the words of the Act, and it is at the same time not inconsistent with the case of the Great Western Railway Company v. Bishop. The case of Banbury v. Page (45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 759; 8 Q. B. Div. 97), which was handed up after the close of the argument, is also in agreement with this view. It was there held that keeping swine so as to be a nuisance to any person, in the ordinary sense of the word, came within the meaning of the 47th section of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), although it was not proved that the keeping of the pigs was injurious to health. When, that is to say, you complain of a man's pigs as a nuisance, he is not at liberty to say, "You have had no typhoid, therefore do not interfere with my pigs." "It appears to me," says Grove, J., "that the word 'nuisance' here is used in the ordinary legal sense, and includes, in addition to matters injurious to health, matters substantially offensive to the senses," and Lopes and Bowen, JJ. agree. I feel, therefore, especially now that my brother Field agrees with me, that this is the correct interpretation of the statute.

Case remitted.

Solicitors for appellants, Harvey, Oliver, and Capron, for J. T. Proud, Bishop Auckland.

Solicitors for respondents, Van Sandau, Cuming, and Armitage, for Bell and Farrington, Middlesbrough.

Wednesday, Feb. 14, 1883.

(Before MANISTY and MATHEW, JJ.)

HISCOCKS v. JERMONSON. (a)

Industrial Schools Act 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 118), s. 14, and Industrial Schools Amendment Act 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 15), s. 1—Child under fourteen—Living with her mother—House resided in and frequented by prostitutes.

By the Industrial Schools Act 1866 and the Industrial Schools Amendment Act 1880, a magistrate has power to send a child, under the age of fourteen, to an industrial school in certain cases, one of which is if the child is "lodging, living, or residing with common or reputed prostitutes, or in a house resided in or frequented by prostitutes for the purpose of prostitution, or that frequents the company of prostitutes."

Held, that the fact of a child living with her mother in a house within the meaning of the statute, made no difference, and such child might be taken from the custody of her mother and sent to an industrial school.

THIS was a case stated by one of the metropolitan police magistrates, the material part of which was as follows:—An officer of the School Board of London, named William Hiscocks, applied for an order under the Industrial Schools Act 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 118), s. 14, and the Industrial Schools Amendment Act 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 15), s. 1, that one Minia Jermonson should be sent to the Alresford Industrial School, and the magistrate declined to make such order, believing that the facts as stated did not bring the case within the Acts above mentioned.

The school board officer, accompanied by a police officer, went to the house where the girl was living with her mother, and in a room in which the mother and girl were alone he took possession of the girl, although the mother objected to her daughter being taken away.

The mother of the said girl was not a party to the proceedings, nor was she summoned or had notice to appear, neither was she present in court, nor was there any evidence that she was aware of the proceedings.

Upon the application the said William Hiscocks and a police sergeant deposed that the girl lived with her mother in a room in a house which they knew as a brothel; that the mother was then a lodger there, and that seven other women of the lowest character lived in the same house. No evidence was given of any act of prostitution on the part of the mother, or that she was conducting herself as a prostitute.

It was contended on the part of the applicant that the child in question was within the words and meaning of the 1st section of the Industrial Schools Amendment Act 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 15) as "living or residing in a house resided in or frequented by prostitutes for the purpose of prostitution."

The magistrate was of a contrary opinion, and thought, first, that the section was meant to meet the case of a child referred to in the second description contained in the Industrial Schools Act 1866, who, though having a home or settled place of abode or proper guardianship, nevertheless has that home, abode, or guardianship with common or reputed prostitutes, or in a house frequented by prostitutes for the purpose of prostitution, and that it does not apply to a child living with and under the care and protection of its mother, who is its lawful guardian; and, secondly, that the section does not contemplate the taking of a child from the custody of its mother for the purpose of sending it to an industrial school without her consent, or without giving her an opportunity of showing cause to the contrary.

By the Industrial Schools Act 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 18), s. 14, it is enacted that Any person may bring before two justices or a magistrate any child apparently under the age of fourteen years that comes within any of the following descriptions, namely: That is found begging or receiving alms (whether actually or under the pretext of selling or offering for sale anything) or being in any street or public place for the purpose of so begging or receiving alms: That is found wandering and not having any home or settled place of abode or proper guardianship, or visible means of subsistence: That is found destitute, either being an orphan or having a surviving parent who is undergoing penal servitude or imprisonment: That frequents the company of reputed thieves.

The justices or magistrates before whom a child is brought as coming within one of these descriptions, if satisfied on inquiry of that fact, and that it is expedient to deal with him under this Act, may order him to be sent to a certified industrial school.

By the Industrial Schools Amendment Act 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 15), s. 1, it is enacted

That sect. 14 of the Industrial Schools Act 1866, and sect. 11 of the Industrial Schools Act (Ireland) 1868, shall be respectively read and construed as if after the four several descriptions therein respectively contained there were added the following description, namely: That is, lodging or residing with common or reputed prostitutes, or in a house resided in or frequented by prostitutes for the purpose of prostitution: That frequents the company of prostitutes.

Jeune for the appellant.—There is nothing in the statutes to show that the child may not be taken from the custody of the mother under the circumstances. If the child is living in a place frequented by prostitutes, it makes no difference whether the mother lives there also. The intention of the Legislature was to afford protection to young children; that is to say, children under fourteen years of age, in certain cases described in the Act, one of which is where the child is living, lodging, or residing in a house resided in or frequented by prostitutes. There is clear evidence that the house was within the meaning of the Industrial Schools Act 1880, and I think this was just one of these cases contemplated by the Legislature. I submit that the magistrate ought to have made the order.

No cause was shown.

MANISTY, J.—This case must be remitted to the magistrate, and we are of opinion that he ought to have made the order asked for. We are to give effect to the plain and ordinary meaning of language used in Acts of Parliament. The Industrial Schools Act of 1866 provided protection for young children in several cases described in the 14th section, and "the justices or magistrate before whom a child is brought as coming within one of these descriptions, if satisfied on inquiry of that fact, and that it is expedient to deal with him under this Act, may order him to be sent to a certified industrial school." In 1880 the Legislature thought that the Act of 1866 should be extended, and by the Industrial Schools Amendment Act of that year, sect. 14 of the Act

(a) Reported by H. D. BOWSER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

GAGE v. ELSEY.

[Q.B. Div.]

of 1866 is "to be read and construed as if after the four several descriptions therein contained there were added the following description, namely, that is, lodging living, or residing with common or reputed prostitutes, or in a house resided in or frequented by prostitutes for the purpose of prostitution; that frequents the company of prostitutes." Here there is abundant evidence that the child was living in a house "resided in or frequented by prostitutes," and she was under fourteen; she was nine years of age. It is said that the child was living with her mother, and therefore that makes a distinction. But I can see no exception in the Act to that effect. The case must be remitted, with an intimation that we think the order should have been made.

MATHEW, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is quite clear that the magistrate attributed to the Legislature an intention to make an exception in the case of children living with their parents, but I see no such exception in the statutes.

Case remitted accordingly.

Solicitors for the appellant, Gedge, Kirby, Millett, and Co.

Wednesday, Feb. 14, 1883.

(Before MANISTY and MATHEW, JJ.)

GAGE v. ELSEY. (a)

Adulteration—Gin—More than 35 degrees under proof—Notice posted up—Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 8—Sale of Food and Drugs Act Amendment 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 30), s. 6.

The appellant sold to the respondent three pints of gin, which was found, when analysed, to be 40½ degrees under proof. At the time the appellant sold the gin he drew the attention of the respondent to a notice hanging up in the room to the effect that all spirits sold in the establishment were sold as diluted spirits.

Held, that the magistrates were wrong in convicting the appellant under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, as the purchaser knew at the time, from the notice, that the gin was diluted.

Case stated by justices, the material part of which is as follows:—

The respondent Thomas Elsey, who was a superintendent of police and inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act 1875, laid an information against William Gage, of Braintree, inn-keeper, the appellant, for unlawfully selling to the said Thomas Elsey, to the prejudice of the purchaser, three pints of gin which was not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded.

It was proved that the respondent went to an inn kept by the appellant, and asked for some gin. The appellant said, "What sort do you want?" Respondent said, "The same as you sell to the public." Appellant said, "I have different sorts." Respondent pointed to a cask, and said, "What is that?" Appellant said, "Gin." Respondent said, "I will have three pints of that." Appellant said, "That is what we sell to the public, and there is our notice." The appellant thereupon pointed to a notice hanging up in the room, which was to the following effect:

NOTICE.

All spirits sold in this establishment are of the same superior quality as heretofore, but to meet the requirements of the Food and Drugs Adulteration Act they are now sold as diluted spirits, no alcoholic strength guaranteed.

Appellant then supplied three pints of gin, and respondent paid 5s. for it. The gin was analysed by the county analyst, who stated that it contained 59½ per cent. of proof spirit, and was therefore 40½ degrees under proof; that is, it had been diluted with water so as to reduce its strength to 5½ degrees under the minimum strength allowed by the sale of Food and Drugs Act Amendment Act 1879. It was contended on behalf of the appellant, that inasmuch as at the time the respondent purchased the gin a notice to the effect that it was sold as diluted spirit was hanging up in the room, and the attention of the purchaser was specially directed to it, the sale was not to the prejudice of the purchaser, and the appellant was entitled to have the information dismissed.

The magistrates held that the notice hanging in the room and defendant's statement with regard to it did not justify the sale, and convicted the appellant.

By 38 & 39 Vict. c. 63, s. 6:

No person shall sell to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of food or any drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser, under a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds; provided that an offence shall not be deemed to be committed under this section in the following cases, that is to say:

(1) Where any matter or ingredient not injurious to health has been added to the food or drug because the same is required for the production or preparation thereof as an article of commerce, in a state fit for carriage or consumption, and not fraudulently to increase the bulk, weight, or measure of the food or drug, or conceal the inferior quality thereof:

(2) Where the drug or food is a proprietary medicine, or is the subject of a patent in force, and is supplied in the state required by the specification of the patent:

(3) Where the food or drug is compounded as in this Act mentioned:

(4) Where the food or drug is unavoidably mixed with some extraneous matter in the process of collection or preparation.

By sect. 8:

Provided that no person shall be guilty of any such offence as aforesaid in respect of the sale of an article of food, or a drug mixed with any matter or ingredient not injurious to health, and not intended fraudulently to increase its bulk, weight, or measure, or conceal its inferior quality, if at the time of delivering such article or drug he shall supply to the person receiving the same a notice by a label distinctly and legibly written or printed on or with the article or drug, to the effect that the same is mixed.

By 42 & 43 Vict. c. 30, s. 6:

In determining whether an offence has been committed under sect. 6 of the said Act by selling to the prejudice of the purchaser spirits not adulterated otherwise than by the admixture of water, it shall be a good defence to prove that such admixture has not reduced the spirit more than 25 degrees under proof for brandy, whisky, or rum, or 35 degrees under proof for gin.

U. E. Jones for the appellant.—The magistrates decided that the appellant was guilty of an offence under sect. 6 of the Act of 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), but the 8th section of that Act expressly provides that no person shall be guilty of an offence in respect of the sale of an article of food or a drug mixed with any matter or ingredient not

(a) Reported by H. D. BORSBY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.] WINYARD (app.) v. TOOGOOD (resp.). HANCE (app.) v. FORTNUM (resp.). [Q.B. Div.]

injurious to health if at the time he supplies to the purchaser a notice by a label distinctly or legibly written or printed to the effect that the same is mixed. In the case of Sandys v. Small (39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 119; 3 Q. B. Div. 449) it was held that a notice put up on the wall was sufficient. Cockburn, C.J., in giving judgment, said: "I do not think that the affixing of the label is to be the only mode of bringing knowledge home to the purchaser. I think, for instance, if a man puts up in a conspicuous position a notice in large letters, as was done here, and it is clear that it must have come under the observation of the customer, that the 6th section would not apply." In the present case the notice was not only put up in a conspicuous place, but the purchaser's attention was called to it. I submit that the conviction is wrong.

Grubbe for the respondent.—The law has been altered since the case of Sandys v. Small (ubi sup.) by the Act of 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 30). By the 6th section of that Act the seller has a good defence if the gin is not less than 35 degrees under proof, but it is found in the case that it was 40½ degrees under. The purchaser did not get what he asked for. The mere fact of putting up a notice cannot allow the seller to sell a mixture of gin and water without regard to the Act of 1879, which fixes the minimum at 35 degrees under proof. He cited

Pashler v. Stevenitt, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 162;
Horder v. Huggins, 44 J. P. 284.

MANISTY, J.—This is an appeal against the decision of the magistrates, who convicted the appellant for selling adulterated gin. Now it is necessary to look at what the magistrates acted upon. The county analyst found that the gin sold to the respondent was forty and a half degrees under proof, and that it was diluted with water so as to reduce its strength five and a half degrees under the minimum strength allowed by the amending Act of 1879. I think it is very plain the magistrates thought that upon that finding of the county analyst Gage had no defence. Now, what has been the course of legislation? By sect. 6 of the Act of 1875, "No person shall sell to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of food or any drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser." And by sect. 8 of the same Act it is provided, "that no person shall be guilty of any such offence as aforesaid in respect of the sale of an article of food or a drug mixed with any matter or ingredient not injurious to health, and not intended fraudulently to increase its bulk, weight, or measure, or conceal its inferior quality, if at the time of delivering such article or drug he shall supply to the person receiving the same a notice by a label distinctly and legibly written or printed on or with the article or drug to the effect that the same is mixed." It was decided in the case of Sandys v. Small (ubi sup.) that where the seller of an article brings to the purchaser's knowledge the fact that the article sold to him is not of the nature, substance, or quality of the article he demands, it is not a sale to the prejudice of the purchaser, and therefore no offence within the meaning of the 6th section of the Act of 1875. By sect. 6 of the Act of 1879 it would be a perfectly good defence in a case of this kind to show that the gin was not reduced to more than thirty-five degrees under proof; but here the analyst has found that it was forty and a half degrees under proof, and therefore the appellant could not avail himself of this defence. But he is not deprived of any defence which he might have shown under the Act of 1875. I am of opinion that the conviction cannot stand.

MATHEW, J.—I am of the same opinion. Sect. 6 of the Act of 1879, which says that in the case of gin it shall be a good defence to prove that the adulteration has reduced the spirit to more than thirty-five degrees under proof, does not say that there shall not be a good defence on other grounds, and in this case the purchaser cannot say the gin was sold to his prejudice. I think the magistrates were wrong, and the conviction must be quashed.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitor for the appellant, Randall and Angier; agents for Jones and Son, Colchester.

Solicitors for the respondent, the Clerk of the Peace for Essex.

Tuesday, Dec. 19, 1882.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., FIELD, HAWKINS, STEPHEN, and WATKIN WILLIAMS, JJ.)

WINYARD (app.) v. TOOGOOD (resp.).

HANCE (app.) v. FORTNUM (resp.). (a)

Elementary Education Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79), s. 11, sub-sect. 1, s. 8—Child prohibited from full-time employment—Child above the age of thirteen—Attendance order—Construction of statute—41 Vict. c. 16, s. 102.

By sect. 5 of the Elementary Education Act 1876 the employment of any child is forbidden who (1) is under the age of ten years, or (2) who being of the age of ten years or upwards, has not obtained any certificate either of proficiency in education or attendance at school, or is not employed and attending school under the Factory Acts. By sect. 48 a child is defined to be a child between the ages of five and fourteen years. By sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, if the parent of any child above the age of five years, who is under this Act prohibited from being taken into full-time employment, habitually and without reasonable excuse neglects to provide efficient elementary instruction for his child, a court of summary jurisdiction may order such child to attend school.

It was proved that the respondent had habitually and without reasonable excuse neglected to provide instruction for two of his children aged nine and thirteen respectively, and that the latter had not acquired any exemption under sect. 5.

Held, that sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, applies to children who are by sect. 5 prohibited either wholly or partially from being taken into employment, and is not intended to be limited to children who were by sect. 8 prohibited only from being taken into full-time employment; and that attendance orders ought therefore to be made.

Saunders v. Crawford (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 420; 9 Q. B. Div. 612) dissented from.

Winyard v. Toogood was a case stated by one of the metropolitan police magistrates sitting at Southwark, for the opinion of the High Court, under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 43.

(a) Reported by DUNLOP HILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.] WINTYARD (app.) v. TOOGOOD (resp.). HANCE (app.) v. FORTNUM (resp.). [Q.B. Div.]

A complaint was made by the appellant, an officer of the London School Board, to the magistrate of the Southwark Police Court, under sect. 11 of the Elementary Education Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79), that the respondent had habitually and without reasonable excuse neglected to provide efficient elementary instruction for his two children aged nine and thirteen respectively.

At the hearing of the summons it was proved that neither of the children had received certificates of proficiency in reading, writing, and elementary arithmetic, or of previous due attendance at a certified efficient school, as would exempt them partially or wholly from the obligation to attend school. It was also proved that neither of them were in any employment, and that the respondent habitually and without reasonable excuse had neglected to provide efficient elementary instruction for both of them. The magistrate held that he was unable to make an attendance order, being bound by the decision in Saunders v. Crawford (48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 420; 9 Q. B. Div. 612); but, inasmuch as the School Board desired to have the whole question re-argued, he consented to state a case for the opinion of the Superior Court.

If the magistrate had power to make an order with respect to both or either of the children, he would have done so.

The questions for the court were:

First, Had the magistrate the power to make an attendance order in respect of the elder child?

Secondly, Had he the power to make an attendance order in respect of the younger child?

If the court was of opinion that he had the power in respect of either or both of such children, the case was to be remitted to him for him to make such order or orders.

Hance v. Fortnum was also an appeal by case stated by the justices of the city of Liverpool upon dismissing a complaint of non-compliance with an attendance order made under sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, of the Act 1876, in respect of a child of the respondent. As the facts and the questions raised were substantially the same as in Wingard v. Toogood, it was agreed that both appeals should be argued together.

The following are the provisions of the sections of the Acts of Parliament referred to in the argument, and which it is necessary to set out:—

The Elementary Education Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 79), reciting by its preamble that "it is expedient to make further provision for the education of children, and for securing the fulfilment of parental responsibility in relation thereto, and otherwise to amend and to extend the Elementary Education Acts:—

Sect. 4. It shall be the duty of the parent of every child to cause such child to receive efficient elementary instruction . . . and if such parent fail to perform such duty, he shall be liable to such orders and penalties as are provided by this Act.

Sect. 5. A person shall not . . . take into his employment (except as . . . in this Act mentioned) any child—(1) who is under the age of ten years; or (2) who being of the age of ten years or upwards, has not obtained "a" certificate either of . . . proficiency in reading, writing, and . . . arithmetic, or of previous due attendance at . . . school . . . unless such child, being of the age of ten years or upwards, is employed and is attending school in accordance with the . . . Factory Acts or . . . and by law . . . made under sect. 74 of the Elementary Education Act 1870 as amended by the Elementary Education Act 1873, and this Act. . . .

Sect. 6. Every person who takes a child into his employment in contravention of this Act shall be liable . . . to a penalty

Sect. 7, enacting that the "provisions of this Act respecting the employment of children" are in general to "be enforced" by a school board or a school attendance committee, incidentally speaks of "every such school board and school attendance committee" as being "in this Act referred to as the local authority."

Sect. 8. Whereas by sects. 14 and 15 of the Workshop Regulation Act 1867 provision is made respecting the education of children employed in workshops, and it is expedient to substitute for the said sections the provisions respecting education of the Factory Acts 1844 and 1874: Be it . . . enacted that sects. 31, 38, and 39 of the Factory Act 1844 and sects. 12 and 15 of the Factory Act 1874 shall apply to the employment and education of all children employed in factories subject to the Factory Acts 1833 to 1871, and not subject to the Factory Act of 1874 or in workshops subject to the Workshop Acts 1867 to 1871. . . .

Sect. 8 is repealed, with the enactments referred to in it, by sect. 107 of the Factory and Workshop Act 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), which, however, enacts by sect. 102, that any enactment referring to the repealed enactments shall be construed to refer to that Act and to the corresponding enactment thereof. Sect. 12 of the Factory Act 1874 enacted " . . . in the case of a factory to which this Act applies, a person of the age of thirteen years and under the age of fourteen years shall be deemed to be a child, and not a young person, unless he has obtained" a certain certificate of proficiency.

Sect. 9. A person shall not be deemed to have taken any child into his employment contrary to . . . this Act if . . . (1) . . . there is not within two miles . . . from the residence of such child any . . . school open which the child can attend; or (2) . . . such employment by reason of being [while] the school is not open, or otherwise does not interfere with [child's] instruction . . . ; or (3) the employment is exempted by a notice of the local authority as to temporary employment of children above the age of eight years in husbandry.

Sect. 11. If either (1) the parent of any child above the age of five years, who is under this Act prohibited from being taken into full-time employment, habitually and without reasonable excuse neglects to provide efficient elementary instruction for his child; or (2) any child is found habitually wandering, or not under proper control or in the company of rogues, vagabonds, disorderly persons or reputed criminals, it shall be the duty of the local authority, after due warning to the parent . . . to complain to a court of summary jurisdiction; and such court may . . . order that the child do attend some certified efficient school . . . being . . . if "the parent" "do not select any . . . such public elementary school as the court think expedient, and the child shall attend that school every time that the school is open, or in such other regular manner as is specified in the order. An order under this section is, in this Act referred to as an attendance order." It "shall be a reasonable excuse (1) that there is not within two miles . . . from the residence of such child any public elementary school open which the child can attend; or (2) that the absence of the child from school has been caused by sickness or any unavoidable cause."

Sect. 12. Where an attendance order is not complied with, without any reasonable excuse . . . a court of summary jurisdiction, on complaint made by the local authority, may, if it thinks fit, or as follows: (1) In the first case of non-compliance, if the parent . . . fails to "show" that he has used all reasonable efforts to enforce compliance . . . the court may impose a penalty . . . but if the parent does show that, the court may without inflicting a penalty, order the child to be sent to "an industrial school;" and (2) in . . . any subsequent case of non-compliance, the court may order the child to be sent to "an industrial school, and may further inflict a penalty;" or it may for each such non-compliance inflict a "penalty . . . without ordering the child to be sent to an industrial school.

Q.B. Div.] WINYARD (app.) v. TOOGOOD (resp.). HANCE (app.) v. FORTNUM (resp.). [Q.B. Div.]

Sec. 48. A child in this Act means a child between the ages of five and fourteen years . . . The term "Factory Acts" in this Act, where the Factory Act of any particular year is not referred to, means [the Factory Acts 1833 to 1874 as amended by this Act, and includes the Workshop Acts 1867 to 1871, as amended by this Act, and] any Acts for the time being in force regulating factories and workshops.

The words within brackets are repealed by sect. 107 of the Factory and Workshop Act 1878, of which see sect. 102 already mentioned.

The Elementary Education Act 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 23):

Sec. 4. . . . Proceedings may, in the discretion of the local authority or person instituting the same, be taken for punishing the contravention of a bye-law, notwithstanding that the . . . alleged . . . contravention constitutes habitual neglect to provide efficient elementary education for a child within the meaning of sect. 11 of the Elementary Education Act 1876. . . .

Sir F. Herschell, S. G. (Jeune with him) for the appellant in Winyard v. Toogood.—The case of Saunders v. Crawford (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 420) was no doubt binding on the magistrate, and had it not been for the decision of that case, he would have made the attendance orders applied for. It is submitted that that case was wrongly decided, and should, if possible, be overruled. Both of the children in this case were within the terms of sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, of the Elementary Education Act 1876, viz., any child above the age of five years who is under this Act prohibited from being taken into full-time employment. They were both also within the definition of child as provided by sect. 48, viz., between the age of five and fourteen years. Further, both of them were children who could not by sect. 5 have been taken into employment—the younger because he was under the age of ten years, and the elder because he had not obtained a certificate of proficiency in the subjects mentioned therein or of previous attendance at school, and was not employed and attending school in accordance with the Factory Acts, or with the bye-laws under the Elementary Education Acts. It is submitted that sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, clearly refers to sect. 5, and that the words "any child above the age of five years who is under this Act prohibited from being taken into full-time employment," must refer to the class of children mentioned in sect. 5. In Saunders v. Crawford (sup.) it was held that sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, refers to sect. 8. Now it is important to observe that there formerly existed three classes of statutes dealing with the employment of children. There were: (1) the Textile Factory Acts; (2) the Non-Textile Factory Acts; and (3) the Workshops Acts. The Textile Factory Acts dealt with children up to fourteen all alike. The Non-Textile Acts and Workshops Acts dealt with children up to the age of thirteen only. Above the age of thirteen they became young persons. The effect of sect. 8 is to repeal the provisions contained in the Non-Textile and Workshops Acts, and to substitute the laws relating to textile factories, and so in the case of all three Acts to put the children upon the same footing. That section has been repealed by the Factory and Workshop Act 1878, but its provisions are in effect re-enacted by the present Factory Act, so that, even if repealed, and the decision of the court in Saunders v. Crawford is right, it may be contended that sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, can be held to refer to such re-enacting section. The main point, however, is that sect. 11 is clearly intended to apply to all children between the ages of five and fourteen. Does sect. 11 refer to sect. 8? Suppose that it does, then it can only apply to those children who are by the 8th section put into the general factory class, and does not relate to the general factory class itself. This would lead to an absurd result, and one that could not possibly have been intended. The sole intention and object of sect. 8 is to put all children employed in factories of any kind in one category, whether textile, non-textile, or workshop. Sect. 11 is correlative to sect. 4, and applies to all children, unless they have arrived at such an age and received such instruction as to entitle them to be taken into full-time employment, in which case the law no longer insists on any education. So long as children cannot be taken into full-time employment, that is, so long as the education duty exists upon the parent, then every parent who neglects to cause such children to receive education, that is, neglects to perform the duty in terms imposed by sect. 4, comes under sect. 11. This is the natural construction of the Act. Sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, cannot be read as confined to children prohibited only from being taken into full-time employment. The words "full-time" are to be read as having been used (though they might well have been omitted), so as to include a child prohibited from being taken into full-time, though permitted to be taken into half-time employment, and not in order to exclude a child prohibited from being taken into half-time as well as from being taken into full-time employment. A child prohibited from being taken into employment at all is necessarily prohibited from being taken into full-time employment. If the construction contended for by the respondents, and adopted by the court in Saunders v. Crawford, viz., that sect. 11 only applies to children who are prohibited under sect. 8, and that sect. 8 being repealed, sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, is gone also, is right, this absurdity necessarily follows, that sect. 11 only applies to children between the ages of thirteen and fourteen who, by sect. 8, are put into the same position as Factory Act children, and does not apply to Factory Act children themselves. By sect. 8 all children in non-textile factories and workshops are put into the same position as Factory Act children; and then sect. 11 is held to relate only to those children who are put into the same position as the others, and not to those into whose position they have been put. There could be no conceivable object or purpose in such legislation. Another reason for holding that sect. 11 should, if possible, apply to all children within the age of fourteen is, that prior to the Education Act 1876 the only remedy against a parent who neglected to send his child to school, was by summoning him before the magistrate and imposing a fine. This was found to be practically useless, as the parent often defied the authorities, and since the Summary Jurisdiction Act the payment of the fine could not be enforced by distress.

Q.B. Div.] WINYARD (app.) v. TOOGOOD (resp.). HANCE (app.) v. FORTNUM (resp.). [Q.B. Div.]

But now by sect. 11 the ultimate power that exists in the case of a parent who habitually neglects his duty in providing education for his child is to send such child to an industrial school. The possession by the magistrate of such a power as a last resort has had the effect in many cases of enforcing the attendance of the child. In the case of Re Murphy (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 698; 2 Q. B. Div. 397) a point arose whether after the Act of 1876 was passed the option of proceeding under the bye-laws under the Act of 1870 still continued, or whether the new remedy had taken away the old remedy. The Queen's Bench Division (Cockburn, C.J. and Mellor, J.) held that "where upon application to a magistrate by a school board for a summons against the parent of a child for not causing it to attend school, contrary to bye-laws made by the board under the Elementary Education Act of 1870, it appears that the parent has habitually neglected to provide instruction for the child within the meaning of the Elementary Education Act 1876, s. 11, the magistrate is entitled, and it is his duty, to refuse to grant the board a summons under the bye-laws, and to require them to take out a summons under sect. 11; for the option given by the Elementary Education Act 1876, s. 50 of proceeding either under the statute or the bye-laws applies only to offences 'punishable' under the Act, and the offence of habitual neglect is not so punishable." In consequence of that decision, and because it was found that it would be a convenient practice for the School Board to have the option left to them of resorting to either remedy, the Act of 1880 was passed, sect. 4 of which expressly declared that proceedings might be taken for punishing the contravention of a bye-law, although there was habitual neglect within the Act of 1876. Further, the court, in Saunders v. Crawford, in holding that sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, only applies to sect. 8, and that sect. 8 having been repealed, therefore sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, was gone also, was clearly wrong upon this ground: Sect. 8 was repealed by sect. 107 of the Factory and Workshop Act 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), and yet, sect. 11 being gone, the Legislature in 1880 declared that school boards may take their option between the section and the bye-laws. Lastly, it is submitted that, even if Saunders v. Crawford is right, and sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, applies to sect. 8, which is repealed, yet sect. 8, having been re-enacted as it were by sect. 102 of the Act of 1878, sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, applies to such re-enactment. The Factory Act 1878, which is a consolidation Act, repeals the whole of the Factory Acts. Sect. 102 provides that any enactment or document referring to the Acts repealed by this Act, or any of them, or to any enactment thereof, shall be construed to refer to this Act, and to the corresponding enactment thereof. Now, sect. 11, ex hypothesi, according to Saunders v. Crawford, referred to the enactment contained in sect. 8. Then why does not sect. 11 refer to the corresponding enactment of the new Factory Act, which does what sect. 8 did before? This, however, is a minor point.

W. B. Kennedy, for the appellant in Hance v. Fortnum, did not desire to be heard.

Danckwerts (Sir H. James, A.G. and A. L. Smith with him) for the respondents in Winyard v. Toogood.—By reason of the repeal of sect. 8 there is now no child prohibited from being taken into full-time employment, and therefore there is no parent upon whom an order can be made. If, however, this view should be considered erroneous, then it is submitted that an order cannot be made, because the two children in question are not in any employment whatever, and the Factory Act 1878 only applies to children where they are employed in a factory. Sect. 11 is substantially only a step in the procedure, the ultimate result of which is the landing a child in an industrial school. Industrial schools are those provided for by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 118. By sect. 14 the class of children which may be sent to such schools is defined, and includes those children under fourteen who are found wandering and begging in the streets, and destitute, and also those who are either orphans, or whose parents are undergoing penal servitude or imprisonment, or those children who frequent the company of reputed thieves and criminals. Therefore the utmost application which sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, can reasonably be supposed to have been intended to have is to factory children and children in workshops. It is a strong measure to send any child, even if it is idle and not properly instructed, from a respectable home to an industrial school, where it will consort with the children of vagabonds and thieves. The insertion of the words "above the age of five years" in sect. 11 clearly shows that that section was intended to refer to sect. 8, because there was no necessity to insert those words at all if it was not so intended, as "child" is expressly defined by sect. 48 to be a child between five and fourteen. Saunders v. Crawford was rightly decided. He also referred to Mellor v. Denham, 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 395; 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 498; 4 Q. B. Div. 241; 5 Q. B. Div. 467.

R. S. Wright (J. V. Austin with him) for the respondent in Hance v. Fortnum.—Saunders v. Crawford ought to be followed unless it is clearly shown to be wrong. Being a previous decision of this court, the court will be slow to depart from unless it is clearly proved that it was wrongly decided: Hadfield's case (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 901; L. Rep. 8 C. P. 313). It cannot be shown to have been wrongly decided, for there are difficulties in either view of the matter. Sect. 5 is very wide in its terms, whereas sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, is a narrow provision using words applicable to the subject of factory employment. The words "prohibited from being taken into full-time employment" are taken from the Factory Acts, and would seem to refer to questions of the Factory Acts. In construing this Act it is more natural to refer a narrow enactment, such as sect. 11 is, to a similar narrow enactment such as sect. 8 is, rather than to a wide enactment such as sect. 5 is.

No reply was heard.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.—It has been thought proper in the present case to hear this particular argument, raising, no doubt, a point of considerable importance, by a court consisting of five judges. This has been done in pursuance of an express statutory provision (see Appellate Jurisdiction Act 1876, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 59, s. 17), and the reason why we thought that that provision should be acted upon on the present occasion is obvious, because a desire is entertained on the part of the appellants to question a decision of my brothers Grove and Huddleston on a very important subject; I mean the decision in Saunders v. Crauford. I may say that both those learned judges are desirous that their decision should be reconsidered; but even were that not so, no objection to our reconsidering that decision could be maintained. There is no constitutional objection to it, and I entirely assent to the principles laid down in Hadfield's case, which were properly brought before us. The substance of that case I take to be this—that every deference is due to the judgment of a court, and that perhaps more deference is due when that judgment is the judgment of the same court itself, but that in any case an authority of a co-ordinate court upon any point should not be differed from or disregarded except upon the clearest view that it is wrong. In former days, before the power of appealing was enlarged as in latter days it has been, there were many extremely important questions which by law could not be considered in a court of appeal, upon which the judgments of the then Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer were final and conclusive as between the parties; but nevertheless those courts, amongst themselves, felt themselves at liberty under exceptional circumstances either to distinguish, or if need be to differ, though strictly speaking the term "overruled" could not properly be applied to them because they were co-ordinate courts. Now, if I for one moment considered that the decision in Saunders v. Crauford was one which according to a fair construction of the Act of Parliament could be maintained, I should at once defer to the authority of that case, and should desire to dismiss this appeal; but, with every deference, I cannot bring my mind to see that this is anything but a perfectly clear case, and that the decision of the magistrate is therefore erroneous and must be reversed. In saying that his decision is erroneous, I desire in justice to him to observe that he only came to his decision, as he was of course bound to do, upon the authority of the judgment of this court. Now the facts in this case are few and simple. The respondent is the father of two children, who are both between five and fourteen years of age, as to whom nothing has happened to enable either of them to be taken into full-time employment, and for whom the respondent has habitually, and without reasonable excuse, neglected to provide efficient elementary instruction. Was he then breaking a duty in so neglecting? It seems to me he was breaking a clear duty imposed upon him in plain terms by the 4th section of the Act of 1876, which enacts that "It shall be the duty of the parent of every child to cause such child to receive efficient elementary instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic." It then goes on to state what is to happen if the parent refuses to perform such duty, viz., that he shall be liable to such orders and penalties as are provided by this Act. An order was applied for, called in the Act an attendance order, ordering the child to attend in a particular place at a particular time under certain specified circumstances defined in the Act, and to be embodied in the order. The duty of the respondent being clear, and the breach of that duty being also clear, the question is why should not that order be made?

Q.B. Div.] WINYARD (app.) v. TOOSOOD (resp.). HANCE (app.) v. FORTNUM (resp.). [Q.B. Div.]

It is contended that the words of sect. 11, sub-sect. 1, refer only to a person over the age of five years being prohibited from being taken into full-time employment, and it is suggested that that section means to say that it is only where by virtue of this Act there is a provision in terms from being taken into full-time employment that the remedies are to be applied. If the Act had so limited its expressions, of course we should have had nothing to do but to defer to them, but it has not done so. The Act was passed expressly to extend, as the definition in the 48th section shows, the age of elementary instruction from thirteen to fourteen. It is admitted that, if the narrower construction contended for on behalf of the respondent is placed upon the words of the Act, the effect is and must be, that the very children for the purpose of instructing whom this Act was passed, and in respect of whom in terms the definition of a "child" is extended by the interpretation clause, may be habitually and without reasonable excuse neglected as to elementary instruction, and that nevertheless the parent of such a child is not subject to the orders and penalties relating to a person who neglects to perform the duty of making his child receive a sufficient elementary education. I see no ground for so limiting the effect of the Act. Whether the draftsman may or may not have had in his mind the 8th section, and may or may not have intended in his mind by the words that he used, when he used them, so to limit the enactment, I really neither know nor care. I should think it extremely unlikely; but if that was his intention, he has failed to express it, and it is quod dicit lex, and not quod voluit parliamentum, that the court has to look at. For the reasons I have given, I am of opinion that the judgment of the learned magistrate must be reversed. I purposely abstain from going into any other questions than those I have already dealt with, as they do not appear to me to be essential for the determination of this case. As to the question whether sect. 8 of the Act of 1876 has been kept alive by the Factory and Workshop Act 1878, I confess I am by no means satisfied; but I do not think the point material one way or the other.

FIELD, J.—I have arrived at the same conclusion, and substantially upon the same grounds; and should not desire to add anything, but for the fact that we are called upon here to come to a conclusion conflicting with the decision in Saunders v. Crauford. It seems to me that I ought therefore, out of respect to the learned judges who decided that case, to state my reasons. If I entertained any serious doubt at all about the true construction of the sections of the Elementary Education Act 1876 under consideration, I should think it right to follow Saunders v. Crauford; but, after carefully following the arguments in this case, I am bound to say I think this case is a very clear one. One of the children is under ten, and unquestionably is prohibited from being employed, because sect. 5 is clear, sub-sect. 1 being that no person shall take a child under the age of ten into his employment. If that be so, how is it possible to say that a child who is prohibited and cannot be taken into employment at all is not prohibited from being taken into full-time employment? He is prohibited from being taken into any employment half-time, full-time, or any other. As to the second child, who is above ten, and over thirteen years of age, that child may go into employment; but what are the elements of the permission? They are that he either shall have acquired a certain degree of education, of which a certificate is the proof; or that he shall be engaged in factory employment, where he will receive a certain amount of education also. It did not come within either of those two provisions, and consequently that child was equally prohibited from being taken into full time employment. The object of the Act is to provide for education of children between the ages of five and fourteen, and to impose upon the parent, first of all, the duty of giving that education, and then to provide that, if that parent fails, an attendance order shall be made so as to secure the education of the child. It may be that the consequence pointed out on behalf of the respondent might follow, viz., that a child of respectable people and of honest habits may ultimately find itself in an industrial school, where it will be obliged to associate with a certain class of the population, the reverse of respectable; but, although that may be the consequence, which we should endeavour to mitigate as far as possible, it is no ground whatever for holding that the plain meaning of the Act ought not to be carried out.

Q.B. Div.]

TIPPETT (app.) v. HART (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

HAWKINS, J.—I am of the same opinion.

STEPHEN, J.—I am also of the same opinion. The arguments urged on behalf of the respondent have not succeeded in raising any doubt in my mind as to the construction and meaning of the Act. At the same time I feel strongly the necessity for the utmost caution being used with regard to the exercise of the power of sending a child to an industrial school.

WILLIAMS, J.—I entirely concur, for the reasons given by the Lord Chief Justice.

Appeals allowed without costs.

Solicitors for appellants in Winyard v. Toogood, Gedge, Kirby, Millett, and Morse.

Solicitor for respondents in Winyard v. Toogood, Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for appellants in Hance v. Fortnum, Gregory, Rowcliffes, and Co., for Stone and Co., Liverpool.

Solicitors for respondents in Hance v. Fortnum, F. Venn and Co., for J. Rayner, Town Clerk, Liverpool.

Friday, March 9.

(Before POLLOCK and HUDDLESTON BB., and NORTH, J.)

TIPPETT (app.) v. HART (resp.). (a)

Brewing—Duty, payment of—Exemption—Occupation of brewer—Inland Revenue Act 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 20), ss. 33, 34.

By the Inland Revenue Act 1880, s. 33, sub-sect. 3, beer brewed by a brewer, other than a brewer for sale, is not chargeable with duty if the annual value of the house occupied by such person does not exceed 10l.

Held, that this refers to the annual value of the house occupied and inhabited by the brewer, and not of the house in which the beer is brewed.

The respondent occupied two houses of the annual value of 20l. and 10l. respectively. He resided in the former, and brewed beer in the latter.

Held, that the beer was chargeable with duty.

(a) Reported by DUNLOP HILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

THIS was a case stated by way of appeal from a decision of magistrates dismissing an information instituted by the appellants, the Inland Revenue authorities, against the respondent, under the provisions of the Inland Revenue Act 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 20). By sect. 32 of that Act it is provided that a paper in the prescribed form shall be delivered by an officer to every brewer, other than a brewer for sale, if chargeable to the duty on beer under this Act, and that the brewer shall enter in such paper the quantity of malt, corn, and sugar which he intends to use in the brewing.

By sect. 33:

(1.) The commissioners may, when they think fit, require a brewer, other than a brewer for sale, to verify the entries in the paper delivered to him, by a declaration to be made by him before a justice of the peace or an authorised officer.

(2.) The charge of duty shall be made, and the duty shall be paid, at such times as the commissioners shall appoint.

(3.) Provided that if the annual value of the house occupied by the brewer does not exceed 10l., the beer brewed by him shall not be charged with duty.

By sect. 34:

(1.) A brewer, other than a brewer for sale, shall only brew beer for his own domestic use, or for consumption by farm labourers employed by him in the actual course of their labour or employment.

(2.) The brewer shall only brew on premises occupied by him, or in case the brewer occupies a house of an annual value not exceeding 10l., on premises gratuitously lent to him by a brewer other than a brewer for sale.

(3.) If the brewer contravenes either of the foregoing provisions of this section, or sells, or offers for sale, any beer brewed by him, he shall incur the penalty of 10l.

The respondent was a farmer in Suffolk, and occupied two distinct houses in the same parish, one of the annual value of 20l., in which he himself resided, and the other of the annual value of 10l., which was inhabited by the respondent's bailiff. In respect of both of these houses the respondent had taken out a licence to brew beer, but declined to pay duty imposed upon him in respect of the smaller house, relying on the words of sect. 33, sub-sect. 3. The magistrates dismissed the information.

A. L. Smith for the appellants.—The exemption provided by sect. 33, sub-sect. 3, was intended to apply to the poorer classes, and to persons who actually occupied houses the annual value of which does not exceed 10l. Occupation in this section must mean personal occupation. The respondent did not occupy the smaller house. The 10l. limit was never intended to refer to the house where the beer is brewed, but to the value of the house actually occupied by the person who brews the beer. If this is not so, any occupier of a house of a value far exceeding 10l. might brew in a lodge or cottage on his estate, and entirely evade the duty.

Grafton for the respondent.—The combined effect of sect. 33 and sect. 34 is to exempt the occupier of any house of 10l., or less than that amount, in which beer is brewed, from the obligation to pay duty. This is a penal enactment, and ought to be construed strictly as against the appellant. Upon the strict construction of the two sections the value of the house in which the beer is brewed is the test whether the beer is to be chargeable with duty.

POLLOCK, B.—The question reserved for our determination is, whether the magistrates were right in dismissing the summons. It was argued on behalf of the respondent that he was not liable to be charged with duty in respect of beer brewed by him in a house occupied by his bailiff, the annual value of which did not exceed 10*l.*, and he relied upon the sects. 33 and 34 of the Act. It was said on behalf of the appellant that that is not sufficient; that the value of the house where the beer is actually brewed is not material, and that the whole question depends upon the value of the house which the brewer actually occupies. It seems to me that what the Legislature intended to get at was the status of the person who brews. If a man occupies a house, the annual value of which does not exceed 10*l.*, he comes within the exemption and is not to be troubled; but where he occupies a house the annual value of which exceeds that amount, it is immaterial where he brews the beer. This being so, I am of opinion that the respondent was liable to the payment of the duty, and that the decision of the magistrates was wrong.

HUDDESTON, B.—I have arrived at the same conclusion, though not without considerable doubt. I was inclined to think that, looking at the grammatical construction of the Act, there was great force in the view adopted by the magistrates. Those doubts, however, are not strong enough to entitle me to dissent from the opinion of my learned brothers, and I agree therefore that this appeal should be allowed.

NORTH, J. concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, The Solicitor to the Inland Revenue.

Solicitor for the respondent, J. Mills, Ipswich.

CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Saturday, March 3.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., POLLOCK and HUDDESTON, BB., MANISTY and STEPHEN, JJ.)

REG. v. SAMUEL BROWN. (a)

Attempt to murder—Taking out a pistol from pocket—Pistol seized by bystander—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 14, 15.

B. was indicted for attempting to discharge a loaded pistol at S., with intent to murder. B., having a grudge against S., went to S.'s house. B. was observed to draw a pistol from his pocket, a third person snatched the pistol away, and B. was arrested.

Held, that this was not an offence within sect. 15 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100.

Quere, whether the case was within sect. 14.

The cases of Reg. v. St. George and Reg. v. Lewis (9 Car. & P. 483 and 523) commented upon.

Case reserved for the opinion of this Court by Stephen, J.

At the December Session of the Central Criminal Court, Samuel Brown was convicted before me upon the first count of an indictment then preferred against him.

The count (omitting formal parts) was in these words:

Samuel Brown, on the 23rd Nov. 1882, "feloniously did attempt to discharge certain loaded arms (to wit, a certain pistol loaded in the barrels with gunpowder and divers leaden bullets) at and against one William Sutton, with intent, in so doing, feloniously, wilfully, and of malice aforethought of him, the said Samuel Brown, to kill and murder the said William Sutton."

The facts were as follows: Brown had a quarrel with Sutton. On the day in question he went to Sutton's house, and desired to speak with him in private. Sutton told Brown to go into the back shop for that purpose, but, having some suspicion, made Brown go first. Brown, as he went into the shop, was observed to draw from his pocket a loaded revolver. Sutton's nephew, Collins, immediately snatched it from his hand, and he was arrested by Sutton and Collins. On his way to the police-station he said that he had not forgotten the way in which Sutton had previously treated him.

In order to explain my direction to the jury it is necessary to observe that though it concludes "against the form of the statute," the count on which Brown was convicted does not follow the words of either of two sections of the "Offences against the Person Act," each of which bears upon the subject. The material parts of these sections are as follows:

24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 14, punishes several different ways of attempting to commit murder, one of which is, "Whosoever shall by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person with intent to commit murder."

Sect. 15 punishes every one who "by any means other than those specified in any of the preceding sections of this Act attempts to commit murder."

In R. v. St. George (4 C. & P. 483) it was held that the words "by drawing a trigger or in any other manner," meant in any other manner like drawing a trigger, as, e.g., by striking a percussion cap with a hammer, and that an attempt to discharge a pistol by attempting to pull a trigger was not an offence within the Act then in force, which was in the same words as sect. 14.

I held, accordingly, that there was no evidence to go to the jury of any offence under sect. 14.

I thought there was evidence to go to the jury of an offence against sect. 15, but I doubted whether the prisoner could be convicted of such an offence upon the count as drawn.

In these circumstances I directed the jury to find as follows: I told them that an attempt to commit a crime might, at least for the purposes of the case, be defined as an act done with intent to commit a crime so closely connected with the actual commission of the crime as to form one of a series of acts which, if not interrupted, would constitute collectively the actual commission of the crime; and, in reference to the particular case, I told them that if they thought Brown intended to murder Sutton, and drew the pistol from his pocket for that purpose, and was prevented from murdering Sutton, or from firing the revolver at him for that purpose, only by its being taken from his hand, they ought to convict him on the count above mentioned, which I held, for the purposes of the trial, to be a count charging an attempt to murder by means other than those specified in sects. 11, 12, 13, and 14 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100.

The jury convicted the prisoner, and I reserved judgment and committed him to prison until this case should have been decided by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

CR. CAS. RES.]

REG. v. SAMUEL BROWN.

[CR. CAS. RES.]

The questions for the Court are :

1. Whether, assuming the sufficiency of the indictment, my direction to the jury was right ?
2. Whether the indictment sufficiently charged an offence under sect. 15 ?

If either of these questions is answered in the negative, the conviction must be quashed; if both are answered in the affirmative, it must be confirmed.

J. F. STEPHEN.

No counsel was instructed to argue for the prisoner.

Poland for the prosecution.—It is submitted that the first count of the indictment is good, and the direction of the learned judge to the jury correct. On the direction and verdict these facts must be taken to have been found, that the prisoner intended to murder Sutton and drew the pistol from his pocket for that purpose, and was prevented only from murdering Sutton by the pistol being taken from his hand. This was, therefore, an attempt to murder. The count is framed upon the 14th section (a section under the heading "Attempts to murder") of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, which enacts : "Whosoever shall attempt to administer to, or shall attempt to cause to be administered to, or to be taken by any person any poison or other destructive thing, or shall shoot at any person, or shall, by drawing a trigger or in any other manner, attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person, or shall attempt to drown, suffocate, or strangle any person, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to commit murder, shall, whether any bodily injury be effected or not, be guilty of felony." At the trial the learned judge ruled that the evidence was not sufficient to bring the case within sect. 14, upon the authority of Reg. v. St. George (9 Car. & P. 483), which was a charge of attempt to murder upon the 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 3 : "Whoever shall, by drawing a trigger or in any other manner, attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person, with intent to commit the crime of murder, shall, although no bodily injury be effected, be guilty of felony." The prisoner in that case put his hand into his coat pocket and took out a pistol, put his finger on the trigger, and pointed the end of the pistol to his chest to cock it, and was prevented from cocking it. Parke, B. said : "It appears to me that the charge of felony cannot be supported, as it is not proved that the prisoner drew the trigger. The words 'in any other manner' in the statute mean something analogous to drawing the trigger, which is the proximate cause of the loaded arm going off. Suppose, for instance, you had a matchlock and put a match to it, and the gun did not go off, that would be a case within the Act of Parliament; but here is no proof that the prisoner drew the trigger, though he put his finger to it, and he cannot therefore be convicted on those counts which charge him with so doing, or which charge him with a felonious attempt to discharge the pistol, for it must be an attempt ejusdem generis. The consequence is, he cannot be convicted of a felony, but he may be convicted of an assault." [Lord COLERIDGE, C.J. referred to the case of Reg. v. Lewis (9 Car. & P. 523), a similar charge upon the same enactment. On the refusal of the prosecutor to give him up some title deeds, the prisoner rose up and said, "Then you are a dead man," and unfolded a great coat and took out a blunderbuss. Before the blunderbuss was pointed at the prosecutor the prisoner was seized and prevented doing anything. It was found that there was no flint in the blunderbuss, the flint being found between the lining of the coat. On the objection being made that the charge was not proved, Serjt. Arabin, after consulting with Patteson, J., told the jury that to sustain the indictment there must be something more than the mere presenting of the blunderbuss, and that some act must be shown to have been done by the prisoner to satisfy them that the prisoner did in fact attempt to discharge the blunderbuss.] The statute in this part aims at acts done approximating to the crime of murder with intent to murder. [HUDDLESTON, B.—I am inclined to think that this was a case within sect. 14. STEPHEN, J.—Sect. 14 includes attempts to shoot, which this would be, if anything; and the general clause (sect. 15) covers all attempts to murder not covered by the preceding sections.]

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—I am of opinion that the conviction cannot be sustained. The indictment is clearly framed on the words of, and with reference to sect. 14 of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, and it having been held by the learned judge at the trial, in obedience to the decision of Reg. v. St. George (4 Car. & P. 483), that the evidence did not bring the case within that section, and the only question reserved for us being whether the indictment sufficiently charges an offence within sect. 15, I think that it is not a case within sect. 15. If the draftsman who framed that statute meant to do what Mr. Poland contends was the object of sect. 15, he has failed to effect it. The true construction of the sections under the heading "Attempts to murder" is that they show a variety of means and things which might be done with an intent to commit murder; as, e.g., sect. 11, administering poison; sect. 12, destroying buildings by gunpowder or other explosive substances; and sect. 13, setting fire to a ship with intent to commit murder. Sect. 14 provides, among other things, for the attempting to discharge firearms at any person with intent to commit murder. Then comes sect. 15, which enacts that, "Whosoever shall, by any means, other than those specified in the preceding sections of this Act, attempt to commit murder, shall be guilty of felony," clearly intending such means as are not pointed out in the earlier sections of the Act. It was deemed impossible to specify every mode of committing murder, and therefore a general clause was inserted that if a person attempted to commit murder by any other means than those previously specified, he should be guilty of felony. But it seems to me that these other means must not be means ejusdem generis as those mentioned in sect. 14. The present case, I think, is one ejusdem generis with one mentioned in sect. 14. It has, however, been held in the two cases cited, not to be within sect. 14. I, however, think that sect. 15 was not intended to extend the operation of sect. 14, for sect. 14 says : "Or shall, by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner, attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms" that is, "in any other manner" not ejusdem generis with those specified. Therefore, I am clearly of opinion that this is a case within sect. 14, but it has been held not to be within the section, and the question is not submitted to us whether it was rightly so held. This case cannot be within sect. 15, which deals with other matters than those within the previous sections. I desire to add that on a fit occasion when the cases of Rea v. St. George and Rea v. Lewis (ubi sup.) come up for further consideration I reserve to myself the right to reconsider those decisions, though sitting alone, I might, as my brother Stephen has done, deem myself bound by them.

POLLOCK, B.—I have arrived at the same conclusion. If it had been open to us now to consider whether the present case is within sect. 14, I should like to reconsider the two cases cited, but the only question open to us is to consider whether the case is within sect. 15. I think that it would be a wrong construction of the words of sect. 15 to say that this comes within it when it seems to me to come within sect. 14.

HUDDESTON, B.—I think it would be desirable to reconsider the two cases cited, and I also think that this conviction should be quashed. Sect. 14 treats of attempts to murder by shooting, and three attempts are specified. Then sect. 15 says: "Whoever shall, by any means other than those specified in any of the preceding sections of this Act, attempt to murder shall be guilty of felony." This was an attempt to shoot a person within sect. 14, but the evidence did not go sufficiently far to bring the case within sect. 14. If so, it is not a case within sect. 15.

MANISTY, J.—I am of the same opinion. This is a case of attempting to discharge loaded arms within sect. 14. Then sect. 15 provides for other cases than such as are within sect. 14. I should also wish to reconsider the cases cited.

STEPHEN, J.—I reserved the case because I thought there was some obscurity in the language of sect. 15, but when you read that section, together with the others, the matter becomes clear. It is made a felony by sect. 14 to shoot at any person, or by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner, to attempt to discharge loaded arms at any person with intent to commit murder. It is also made a felony by sect. 15 to attempt to commit murder by any other means than those specified in the preceding sections, that is than by shooting at a person or attempting to discharge loaded firearms at a person. If the prisoner in the present case attempted to commit murder at all it was by attempting to discharge a loaded pistol. The offence therefore does not come within sect. 15, but within sect. 14. The case does not come within sect. 14, because he did not draw the trigger or attempt to shoot in a mode specified in that section, according to the authority of the two cases cited. I pronounce no opinion as to the authority of the two cases cited.

Conviction quashed.

Saturday, March 3.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., POLLOCK and HUDDESTON, BB., MANISTY and STEPHEN, JJ.)

REG. v. FREDERICK HORN. (a)

False pretences—Previous conviction—Term of penal servitude—Amendment of sentence.

The prisoner was convicted on an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretences, and also pleaded guilty to a previous conviction for false pretences charged in the indictment. He was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude.

Held, that the sentence was wrong, and it was amended by reducing it to five years' penal servitude.

CASE reserved by the Recorder of the City of London.

At a session holden for the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, on Monday, the 8th Jan. last, Frederick Horn was convicted before me upon an indictment, framed under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 88, charging him with obtaining goods by false pretences, and he pleaded guilty to a previous conviction for obtaining goods by false pretences charged in the same indictment.

By this section the misdemeanour of obtaining goods by false pretences is punishable with penal servitude for the term of three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

By sect. 4 of the same statute simple larceny is punishable with penal servitude for the term of three years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, and if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping.

By sect. 7 of the same statute the punishment for the offence of simple larceny after a previous conviction for felony is, at the discretion of the court, penal servitude for any term not exceeding ten years, and not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen, with or without whipping.

By sect. 8 of the same statute it is provided that whosoever shall commit the offence of simple larceny, or any offence thereby made punishable like simple larceny, after having been previously convicted of any indictable misdemeanour punishable under that Act, shall be liable to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years.

By sects. 31, 32, 33 and 36 of the same statute, it is provided that whosoever shall commit the felonies mentioned in those sections shall be liable to be punished "as in the case of simple larceny."

By sect. 116 of the same statute provisions are contained for the form in which a previous conviction for felony or misdemeanour shall be charged in indictments for offences punishable under that Act.

By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47, s. 2, it is provided that no sentence of penal servitude shall be for less than five years.

The prisoner was above the age of sixteen years.

[Ct. of App.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. VESTRY OF BERMONDSEY.

[Ct. of App.]

Under these circumstances I held that the prisoner had committed an offence made punishable by the Larceny Act like simple larceny after having been previously convicted of an indictable misdemeanour punishable under that Act, and I accordingly sentenced him to seven years' penal servitude.

It was contended on the part of the prisoner that I had no power to pass the said sentence for the offence of which the prisoner was convicted on the ground that the words "any offence thereby made punishable like simple larceny," in sect. 8 of the Larceny Act, were only intended to apply to the offences referred to in sects. 31, 32, 33, and 36 of that Act, and this contention was supported by the fact that if the previous conviction had been for felony, there would clearly be no power to pass a sentence of seven years' penal servitude.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the sentence of seven years' penal servitude was right.

If this question is answered in the affirmative, the sentence is to stand; if in the negative, the sentence is to be amended to five years' penal servitude. Prisoner is undergoing his sentence.

THOMAS CHAMBERS,
Recorder of London.

Blackwell for the prisoner.

Poland for the prosecution.

By the COURT.—This case is too clear for argument. The sentence was wrong, and must be reduced to five years' penal servitude, and it will be amended under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 73, s. 2 accordingly.

Sentence to be amended accordingly.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

Friday, Feb. 9.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., LINDLEY and BOWEN, L.JJ.)

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. VESTRY OF BERMONDSEY. (a)

Practice — Costs — Action against corporation — Individual corporators joining as defendants.

A vestry incorporated under the Metropolis Management Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), having resolved to incur certain unauthorised expenditure, an action for an injunction was commenced by the Attorney-General, at the relation of a ratepayer, against the vestry and the movers and seconders of the resolutions passed by the vestry and some of their supporters. On motion, on which the individual defendants were unrepresented, the vestry consented to a perpetual injunction without costs, and the plaintiffs then moved for judgment against the individual defendants in default of pleadings, and asked that they might be ordered to pay the costs of the action. The statement of claim did not ask for costs against the vestry.

Held (affirming the decision of Fry, J., 46 L. T. Rep. N. 8. 852), that it was irregular to make the individual members of the vestry defendants for the sole purpose of making them pay costs, and that the action must be dismissed as against them.

Attorney-General v. Compton (1 Y. & O. Ch. 417) distinguished.

This action was brought by the Attorney-General, at the relation of F. Mortimore, a Bermondsey ratepayer, and by F. Mortimore against the Bermondsey Vestry, William Shepherd, Oliver Norval Swann, Henry William Revill, John Porter, Robert Bonny, and Henry George Philcox, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from paying or applying any portion of the rates or parish funds in or towards defraying the expenses of the celebration of the opening of a new vestry hall, or of a certain dinner and ball; and for an order on the defendants other than the vestry to pay the costs of the action, and further relief.

By the statement of claim it appeared that the Bermondsey Vestry, being a body incorporated under the Metropolis Management Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), erected a new vestry hall. At a vestry meeting, on the 25th Jan. 1882, it was resolved that the churchwarden for the time being should be presented with a key, and that he should open the hall, accompanied by the board. It was also moved and seconded by the defendants Shepherd and Swann, and resolved, that an expenditure of 100*l.* for the celebration of the opening should be authorised.

It was also moved and seconded by the defendants, Swann and Revill, and resolved, that a ball should be held on the next evening, and 25*l.* and a band be provided. At another vestry meeting on the 6th March 1882 it was moved and seconded by the defendants Porter and Revill, and resolved, that an additional sum of 50*l.* should be voted towards the expenses. The defendants Bonny and Philcox voted in favour of the resolutions. The vestry clerk advised the vestry that they had no power to spend the parish funds in the way proposed, but the resolutions were passed. The vestry hall was opened on the 15th March 1882, and on that occasion the defendant Bonny, who was the churchwarden for the time being, was presented with a small gold key studded with diamonds, a dinner was given by the vestry on that day to about a hundred persons, and a ball was given by them on the following day, and refreshments provided, about six hundred and fifty persons being present. The statement of claim further alleged that the expenses of such festivities would far exceed the 175*l.* which had been voted, and that the vestry intended to pay the expenses so incurred out of the rates or parish funds in their hands, unless restrained by injunction.

On the 1st April 1882 the writ in the action was issued, asking that "the defendants" might pay the costs; and on the same day an interim injunction was granted by Fry, J. in the terms afterwards embodied in the statement of claim, and notice of motion for an injunction till the hearing was served on the vestry alone.

On the 27th April 1882 the motion was heard, and, by consent of the vestry, a perpetual injunction was granted, no order being made against the vestry in respect of costs. The other defendants were not represented on this occasion, not having been served with notice.

The statement of claim, which was delivered on the 24th April 1882, prayed, as above stated, for costs against the defendants other than the vestry.

(a) Reported by FRANK EVANS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[CT. OF APP.]

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. VESTRY OF BERMONDSEY.

[CT. OF APP.]

No statement of defence was put in by any of the defendants, and on the 12th May 1882 notice of motion for judgment was served on the individual defendants.

The motion for judgment was heard on the 24th June 1882, by Fry, J., who then dismissed the action as against the defendants other than the vestry, without costs: (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 852.) The plaintiff appealed.

S. Dickinson for the appellant.—No defence having been put in, the facts alleged in the statement of claim must be taken to be admitted. I do not say that these defendants are the majority of those who voted for the illegal resolutions, but it is not necessary to bring all the persons constituting the majority before the court. It was proper, however, to make some of them parties, as otherwise, if the relief had been granted with costs, the vestry would have paid the costs out of the rates, to which the plaintiff, as a ratepayer, is a contributor. [JESSEL, M.R.—Why should not the vestry pay the costs? Vestrymen ought not to be made to pay the costs because they have made a mistake as to the law; they are not like railway directors.] They intended to misapply the funds, and it was no fault of theirs that the funds were not actually misapplied. [JESSEL, M.R.—They are not liable because they voted wrongly.] The property of the vestry is held by the vestrymen upon trust for public purposes, and the court will prevent them from misapplying it:

Attorney-General v. Compton, 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 417.

[JESSEL, M.R.—There the money had been actually paid over. Here they have not paid the money, and they could not shield themselves under their character as corporators against the consequences of a wrongful act.] These defendants were part of a majority which had the disposal of the funds. Was the plaintiff to wait until the money was spent before coming to the court? The defendants might be paupers and unable to repay the amount spent. They are trustees not only of the funds but of the powers of the vestry conferred on them by Act of Parliament, and if an abuse of those powers is threatened, the persons who will be injured may come to the court and ask that it shall be prevented. The legal liability has been incurred. Voting for illegal purposes is as unlawful an act as improperly spending money. The court can only dismiss the appeal on the ground that the defendants have done no unlawful act. If they have done such an act they are liable for the consequences. Any other decision will throw on a person injured part of the costs of the proper remedy. [JESSEL, M.R.—It does not follow that a rate can be made to pay the expenses incurred.]

Russell Roberts, for the defendant Swann, and Ingle Joyce, for the other defendants, were not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—This is an appeal from Fry, J., which raises an important question, which he did not decide or consider because he decided the case on a technical ground. I am not saying that it was wrong for him to do so, but it prevented him from deciding this question on the larger ground. There is in the statement of claim a sort of allegation that some of the defendants voted in favour of resolutions involving, if carried into effect, the misapplication of part of the funds under the control of the vestry. Of course vestries have no right to give balls, and dinners, and gold keys out of the rates, and in this case they were properly restrained by injunction from so doing. But the Attorney-General, or whoever was responsible, joined as co-defendants six vestrymen, all of whom, to put it in the most favourable way for the appellant, I will assume to have voted in favour of the resolutions in favour of this illegal application of the parish funds. I will also assume that they formed part of the majority which carried the resolutions; I am not going to base my decision on the bare technicality that it is only alleged that they moved or seconded resolutions, and did not actually vote for them. But assuming that the defendants formed part of the majority, are they proper parties to the action? Can the Attorney-General sue them at all, the money not having been actually misapplied? In my opinion he could not properly make them parties. If the money had been actually misapplied, then of course they would have been liable, and would have been bound, whether in their corporate capacity or not, to repay the money misapplied. If they had merely directed the money to be paid, and the money had been paid, whether by drawing a cheque or otherwise, they would have been liable for the misapplication of the funds. But when that has not been done, and the Attorney-General sues them merely to prevent its being done, it appears to me that he must allege two things—first, that these persons actually threatened to do an illegal act; and, secondly, that the act was threatened to be done by persons who had it in their power to do it. It is only alleged here that these people were about to do it acting as the vestry, and the vestry are also made parties. It might have been different if the defendants had had the control of the funds independently of their being vestrymen. Why, then, were they made parties? Only that they might be made to pay the costs of the action. The parties properly liable to pay the costs would be the vestry, who threatened to misapply the money. The reason that it was not asked that the vestry should pay the costs was, that the plaintiff as a ratepayer would be one of those who would have to pay. In a recent case before the Court of Appeal Mathias v. Yette (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 497) the old rule called the rule of three A's was discussed, under which an attorney, an agent, or an arbitrator, might have been joined as a party in order to make him liable for costs only. Ever since Lord Cottenham's time it has been held that rule ought not to be extended, and I am sure it ought not to be extended to corporators or vestrymen. But there is another ground in this case. You cannot do complete justice as to costs. If the appellant is right these defendants would be liable to indemnify the vestry from the consequences of their resolutions; and if these defendants can be made to pay the costs of the action, they will also be liable to pay the costs of indemnifying the vestry. But that liability could not be investigated in this action because the other vestrymen are not parties, and therefore complete justice could not be done. If these defendants are made liable in an action at all it should be in an action of indemnity which will cover every point, and if they ought to pay these costs, they ought also to pay the costs of the vestry. These vestrymen ought not to have been made parties at all, and the action ought to have been dismissed with costs against them. The plaintiff got off better than he ought to have done in the court below, and was fortunate in not having the action dismissed with costs.

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. NASH.

[CT. OF APP.]

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. This appears to me to be an interesting experiment, and if I had been one of the vestrymen joined as defendants I should have demurred with a prospect of success. The action to restrain the vestry was right to that extent, but it went too far in including these vestrymen, simply because they voted. It was not said that they got control of the money de facto. There is no authority that they are liable in an action merely for voting. In Attorney-General v. Compton the ground was that there had been active participation in the breach of a public duty. But the unlawful act was not committed in this case. The experiment has failed. It does not follow that there is no remedy, or that a rate made for improper purposes cannot be quashed.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. These vestrymen should not have been joined as defendants. They were not themselves, apart from the vestry, doing anything, or threatening to do anything illegal. The only reason for joining them as parties was that they might be ordered to pay the costs. JESSEL, M.R. has said all that need be said on that point. I am not so well acquainted as he is with the rule of equity which allowed persons to be made parties simply to obtain costs from them, but I am satisfied that these vestrymen ought not to have been made parties.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Wilkinson and Drew; B. Chapman; J. Harrison, A. G. Ditton.

Wednesday, Feb. 14.

(Before JESSEL, M.R., LINDLEY and BOWEN, L.JJ.)

REG. v. NASH. (a)

Infant—Bastard—Custody of.

A girl of fifteen was seduced and delivered of an illegitimate child, and left it (hoping to be able to pay for its maintenance) in the custody of the defendants, who were strangers. The mother became unable to maintain the child, and, after the defendants had maintained it for six years, the mother (being then the mistress of a gentleman, who was not the father of the child) applied for delivery of the child to her sister and brother-in-law, who were respectable people.

Held (affirming the decision of the Queen's Bench Division), that the mother was entitled to the order asked.

ROSE CAREY, spinster, applied to North, J. at chambers for a writ of habeas corpus for delivery to her of her illegitimate female child, aged seven years, by Mr. and Mrs. Nash, in whose care the child was.

It appeared from the mother's evidence, in support of her application, that the child was born in May 1876; that the putative father denied that she was his child; that shortly after the birth of the child she was put out to nurse with Mr. and Mrs. Nash, with whom, except for one short interval, she had since remained; that Mr. and Mrs. Nash were poor people, subsisting partly on charity, and partly on what Mr. Nash got from odd jobs as a day labourer.

On the other side affidavits were produced alleging that Rose Carey gained her living by prostitution; that Mr. and Mrs. Nash were not living upon charity; that the child was being well brought up; and that Mr. and Mrs. Nash's reasons for keeping her were their affection for her, and their wish to preserve her from an immoral life.

North, J. refused to order the writ to be issued on the ground that Rose Carey was not a proper person to have the custody of the child.

Rose Carey then applied to a divisional court of the Queen's Bench Division for a writ of habeas corpus requiring the child to be brought up and delivered over to the custody of Mr. and Mrs. Wright, a brother-in-law and sister of the applicant.

In a further affidavit, filed by Rose Carey, in support of this application, she stated that she was seduced, when living with her parents and under the age of fifteen years, by an officer in the army; that her father, who was a gardener, insisted on her taking proceedings against the father of the child, and on her refusing to do so turned her out of doors; that her mother died two months before the applicant's confinement; that, her sister being out at service, Mr. and Mrs. Nash, whom she had known since she was six years old, and who lived near her father's house, were the only persons she could think of or turn to to mind the child; that she afterwards got a situation as waitress in an eating-house, which she retained until it was proved the work was too much for her, and she was laid up for three months in an infirmary; that when she came out she was offered the protection of a gentleman, and under such protection had "since lived in a respectable way."

Mr. Wright also made an affidavit stating that for the past eleven years he had been a clerk in the employ of the Press Association; that he was married to the applicant's sister, and had one child, who was then living; that he was acquainted with the manner of living of Rose Carey, and that she was not a prostitute; that he was quite willing to take the guardianship of the child and bring her up with his own child.

On this evidence the Divisional Court directed the writ of habeas corpus to issue for delivery of the child to Mr. and Mrs. Wright.

Mr. and Mrs. Nash appealed.

H. Lacy Fraser, for the appellants.—The child, being illegitimate, is in the view of the law nullius filia, and in strictness neither the father nor the mother is entitled, legally, to its custody. [JESSEL, M.R.—Equity, which now prevails in all divisions of the court, has regard to natural relationship.] In one case Wightman, J. refused to order an illegitimate child, eight years of age, to be restored to its mother, when the parties against whom the application was made had had the custody of it for seven years with the mother's consent, and the child was well cared for, and wished to remain with its present protectors:

Re White, 10 L. T. Rep. O. S. 349.

Wightman, J. said: "In point of law, the child being illegitimate, neither the father nor the

(a) Reported by FRANK EVANS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. NASH.

[CT. OF APP.]

mother has any particular right to its custody." In another case the court refused to allow the mother of an illegitimate child between eleven and twelve years of age to take her from the custody of her putative father, the child being unwilling to go with her mother:

Re Lloyd, 3 M. & G. 547.

The court will only have regard to the interests of the child, who, if she remains where she is, will be educated at the expense of a district visitor, who has undertaken to pay for her schooling. It would not be for the child's benefit to deliver her to the custody of her mother, who is admittedly living an immoral life, and the court will not make such an order. [JESSEL, M.R.—That must be taken subject to this, that there must be injury to the child. There would be no injury to the child if she were sent to school. Besides, the application is that the child shall be delivered to her aunt.] That would be, practically, giving her into her mother's charge. He also referred to Simpson on Infants, 126, 127.

Herbert Reed, for the mother, was not called upon.

JESSEL, M.R.—If ever a judgment was right, it is the one now appealed from. This unfortunate young woman was seduced when she was fourteen years old, and the consequence was that she had a child. Her father having turned her out of his house, the unlucky woman found herself compelled to put her child out to nurse with poor people in the neighbourhood whom she intended to pay for their trouble, and it appears that she did give them some money which she obtained from her seducer. Then she came up to London and got a situation as a waitress. After a time her strength failed her, she was obliged to throw up her situation, and was unable to pay for the maintenance of the child. In the meantime the child was maintained by the poor people in whose custody she remained, and who were assisted by the contributions of charitable persons in the neighbourhood. The mother had to go into a public infirmary, and when she came out she went into the keeping of a gentleman, with whom she is still living—in that sense she is living an immoral life. She now wants to get her child back, and these poor people want to keep it from her—but they have no claim whatever to the child. They are mere strangers, and have not a particle of right to its custody; yet they contend by their counsel in this court—now a court of law and equity—that a natural mother is no relation to her child, and has no more right to its custody than a mere stranger. The absurdity of their claim cannot be exaggerated. It is true that Maule, J., in Re Lloyd, is reported to have asked, "How does the mother of an illegitimate child differ from a stranger?" I should have thought the answer was, "Because she is its mother." The question was asked during the argument, and not when the learned judge was delivering his judgment in the case, and, knowing something of him, I think he must have intended the question as a joke. At any rate, if he did not mean to make a joke, he could only have been speaking of the strict legal right to the guardianship of an illegitimate child. But even at common law there were many cases in which the right of the mother to the custody of her illegitimate child was recognised, and Lord Mansfield held that she was so entitled unless good cause was shown to the contrary. Her rights are also recognised by the poor law, which imposes on her the liability to maintain her illegitimate child. But now the courts are courts of equity, as well as of law, and the question is not to be decided with reference only to the legal rights which were formerly considered in granting writs of habeas corpus, for equity does consider the natural relationship, not only of the mother of an illegitimate child, but of the putative father and the relations on the mother's side. What is to be regarded is the benefit of the child, and that kind of blood relationship, though it was not always recognised at law, gives a preference when there are conflicting claims to the custody of an illegitimate child. In this case the mother says: "I do not want you to give the child to me, but to give her to my sister, who is a respectable married woman, the wife of a respectable man." The sister's husband is a clerk, and in a position far superior to that of the appellants, and he is willing to take charge of the child. I cannot understand why this contest has been raised. To me this appears to be the plainest possible case for ordering the child to be delivered to blood relations, who will give it every possible care and a better education than that which the appellants could give it. In my opinion no order was ever more rightly made, and this appeal ought to be dismissed.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. In some respects this is a very painful case. There is no apparent reason for depriving Nash and his wife of the custody of the child, except the superior right of his mother. There is no suggestion that they have been unkind to or neglectful of it. But they have no more right to the custody of the child than any other stranger has, and the affection even of a natural mother gives a better right than the regard of a mere stranger. The child is now at school, and no doubt the fact of her having been taken up by some district visitor is at the bottom of the whole affair.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I have no doubt that this appeal has been brought with the best of motives in the supposed interest of the child; but philanthropy sometimes makes mistakes, and this is one of them. It is said that the mother is not entitled to the legal guardianship of the child. But that is not the question. The question is, whether, as between the mother and a stranger, the court, in deciding who is to have the custody of an illegitimate child, ought not to give preference to the mother. It is said that the mother is not respectable; but she asks that her sister may have the custody of the child, and it seems to me the scale is turned in favour of her demand, when it appears that the child is to be given into the care of respectable people. I have no hesitation in saying that the decision of the court below is right in principle and upon the merits. I am satisfied that it is the best for the child itself, and that it ought to be affirmed.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for the appellant, A. R. O. Strufield.

Solicitors for the respondent, Wilkinson and Howlett.

CHAN. DIV.] BARLOW v. VESTRY OF ST. MARY ABBOTTS, KENSINGTON, AND ELSDON. [CHAN. DIV.]

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Wednesday, Feb. 28.

(Before BACON, V.C.)

BARLOW v. THE VESTRY OF ST. MARY ABBOTTS, KENSINGTON, AND ELSDON. (a)

Metropolis Management Amendment Act 1862
(25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), ss. 74, 75—General line of buildings—Old buildings—Frontage and Abutment—Jurisdiction—Magistrate's order—
Architect's certificate—Injunction.

The plaintiff in 1875 became the owner in fee of certain land, covered with buildings, situated between Kensington-road on the north and Canning-place on the south.

On the 11th Oct. 1875 he obtained the approval of the Metropolitan Board of Works to a new street which would lead across the said land and buildings from north to south, as he intended pulling down his old buildings so that he might erect larger houses on the same site. The street was called "De Vere Gardens."

On the 18th Oct. 1881 the line of buildings in the new street was certified by the superintending architect of the Board of Works. The premises, which were the subject of this action, were then being built on a site at the north-east corner of De Vere Gardens, fronting Kensington-road, and they projected on their western side up to the pavement in De Vere Gardens, and seven feet beyond the certified building line of De Vere Gardens.

The Kensington vestry applied to a police magistrate on the 24th Jan. 1882, and obtained an order for the demolition of so much of the premises as projected beyond the certified building line. The plaintiff (who had become the mortgagee of the premises) moved for an injunction to restrain the defendants from demolishing any part of the said premises.

Held, that the premises were not necessarily to conform to the general line of buildings in De Vere Gardens, having regard to sects. 74 and 75 of the Metropolis Management Act 1862, and that their frontage was in Kensington-road; that they could not be considered to be in De Vere Gardens, and that the injunction must be granted.

Lord Auckland v. Westminster District Board of Works (26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 961; L. Rep. 7 Ch. App. 597) followed.

THIS action was brought by the plaintiff, who was the second mortgagee of a certain freehold piece of land with a dwelling-house thereon, situated in the parish of Kensington on the south side of Kensington-road and bounded on the western side by De Vere Gardens, against the Vestry of St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, and W. Elsdon the mortgagor of the said premises, the claim being for an injunction to restrain the vestry from demolishing, pulling down, or interfering with any part of the said dwelling house, or otherwise injuring his security therein. The facts were as follows: the plaintiff and William Bennett Daw purchased the freehold in the said land in the year 1875. The property was then covered with old buildings, and the only frontage was towards Kensington-road on the north and Canning-place on the south. The plaintiff and W. B. Daw purchased the property with the intention of pulling down the old buildings and erecting in their stead new and valuable dwelling-houses. The plaintiff shortly afterwards acquired all the interest of W. B. Daw. To develop the said land for building purposes the plaintiff considered it desirable to make a new street across the property from Kensington High Road to Canning-place. Accordingly he applied to, and gained the approval of the Metropolitan Board of Works to his forming such a new street, fifty-eight feet wide, and he named it De Vere Gardens. After he had pulled down the old buildings he set up a placard to announce that the site on which they had formerly stood (excepting the strip taken for the street) was to be let or sold as building land. In consequence of that the defendant William Elsdon on the 2nd Aug. 1881 agreed to purchase the said piece of land for the sum of 17,500*l.*, and it was also agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant Elsdon that of that sum 5000*l.* should be left on a second mortgage of such piece of land. Such mortgage was dated the 22nd Nov. 1881, and expressed to be subject to a prior mortgage dated the 21st. Nov. 1881, and the plaintiff conveyed the said piece of land to the defendant Elsdon, shortly before the execution of the mortgage of the 22nd Nov. 1881. The defendant Elsdon erected several houses on the said piece of land fronting Kensington-road and the most westerly of them (the subject of this action) abutted on De Vere Gardens, and the western side of it ran up De Vere Gardens along the line of pavement, and was seven feet in front of the building line of De Vere Gardens. The houses in that street did not commence till some distance to the rear of the house in question, and their building line was defined by the certificate of the chief architect of the Board of Works which was dated the 18th Oct. 1881, and which after reciting the 75th section of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act 1862, proceeded as follows:

And whereas Mr. William Weaver, surveyor to the Vestry of Kensington, and Mr. William Elsdon, of Victoria-road, Kensington, have severally appeared before me, and have been heard regarding the erection of a house in Kensington-road, at the corner of De Vere Gardens, and beyond the face or front of the buildings forming a row of houses on the eastern side of De Vere Gardens aforesaid, and I have been required to decide the general line of buildings in such gardens as provided in the said statute. Now, therefore, having considered the several matters, I, the undersigned, being the superintending architect to the Metropolitan Board of Works, do hereby, pursuant to the said Act, decide that the main front of the buildings forming the row of houses aforesaid, and tinted pink on the place hereto annexed and signed by me is the general line of buildings on the eastern side of De Vere Gardens aforesaid.

GEORGE VULLIAMY.

Superintending Architect to the Metropolitan Board of Works.

The said dwelling-house was nearly finished when the defendant vestry took proceedings under the said 75th section against the defendant William Elsdon to obtain an order for the demolition of so much of the said dwelling-house as was beyond the building line of De Vere Gardens. And by an order made by Mr. James Sheil, one of the magistrates of the police courts of the metropolis, sitting at Hammersmith, on the 24th Jan. 1882, it was ordered and adjudged that the defendant William Elsdon should within eight weeks

(a) Reported by A. COYSGARNE SM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CHAN. DIV.] BARLOW v. VESTRY OF ST. MARY ABBOTTS, KENSINGTON, AND ELSDON. [CHAN. DIV.]

from that date demolish the said dwelling-house to the extent of seven feet from the inner line of the pathway in De Vere Gardens aforesaid, and parallel therewith, so that the same should no longer be beyond the general line of buildings in De Vere Gardens.

The plaintiff was no party to these proceedings, and had had no opportunity of resisting or showing the impropriety of the order which threatened so seriously to injure the house, which was his principal security for the 5000*l.* which he had lent to the defendant William Elsdon. The sections of the Metropolitan Management Amendment Act (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102) referred to in the case are as follows :

Sec. 74. In case any building situated within any of the parishes, districts, or places comprised in the schedules of the firstly recited Act, which shall in any part thereof project beyond the general line of the street in which the same may be situate, or beyond the front of the building, wall, or railing on either side thereof, shall at any time be taken down to an extent exceeding one half of such building, such half to be measured in cubic feet, or shall be destroyed by fire or other casualty, or demolished, pulled down, or removed from any other cause to the extent aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the Metropolitan Board of Works to require the same to be set back to such a line and in such a manner for the improvement of any street as the said board shall direct, provided that the said board shall make compensation to the owner of such building for any damage and expenses which he may sustain and incur thereby.

Sec. 75. The 143rd section of the first recited Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120) and the 140th section of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 142, are hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof be it enacted that no building, structure, or erection shall, without the consent in writing of the Metropolitan Board of Works, be erected beyond the general line of buildings in any street, place, or row of houses, in which the same is situate in case the distance of such line of buildings from the highway does not exceed fifty feet, or within fifty feet of the highway, when the distance of the line of buildings therefrom amounts to, or exceeds, fifty feet, notwithstanding there being gardens or vacant spaces between the line of buildings and the highway, such general line of buildings to be decided by the superintending architect to the Metropolitan Board of Works for the time being, and in case any building, structure, or erection be erected, or be begun to be erected or raised without such consent, or contrary to the terms and conditions on which the same may have been granted, it shall be lawful for the vestry of the parish or the Board of Works for the district in which such building or erection is situate, to cause to be made complaint thereof before a justice of the peace who shall thereupon issue a summons requiring the owner or occupier of the premises, or the builder or person engaged in any work contrary to this enactment to appear at a time and place to be stated in the summons, to answer such complaint, and if at the time and place appointed in such summons the said complaint shall be proved to the satisfaction of the justice before whom the same shall be heard, such justice shall make an order in writing on such owner or occupier, builder or person, directing the demolition of any such building or erection, or so much thereof as may be beyond the said general line so fixed as aforesaid, within such time as such justice shall consider reasonable, and shall also make an order for the payment of the costs incurred up to the time of hearing.

Marten, Q.C. and B. Bickley Rogers for the plaintiff.—The action of the defendant vestry before the magistrate was based upon a misunderstanding of the 74th and 75th section of the Act. The 75th section only applies to vacant ground, and not to ground where there have been old buildings before. The vestry ought to have proceeded under the 74th section, and therefore the magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order which he did make under the 75th section, and in doing so he was clearly acting ultra vires :

Lord Auckland v. Westminster District Board of Works, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 961; L. Rep. 7 Ch. App. 597.

The decisions of James and Mellish, L.JJ. in that case are very clear on the point of sect. 75 not being applicable where there have been old buildings previously on the site where new ones are being erected, and that case has never been doubted on that point. We never for a moment abandoned our right to build on our own property, except on the strip we made into a street. In fact, although adverse comments have been made on that case in more recent decisions, they were not upon points which concern the present case, and do not bind us, but the court is bound by that case :

Kerr v. Corporation of Preston, 6 Ch. Div. 463 :

Hedley v. Bates, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 41; 13 Ch. Div. 498 ;

Great Western Railway Company v. Waterford and Limerick Railway Company, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 723; 17 Ch. Div. 493 ; Stannard v. Vestry of St. Giles, Camberwell, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 243; 20 Ch. Div. 190.

These cases all have to do with penalties, and regard the jurisdiction of magistrates to make injunctions to restrain criminal proceedings for breach of the provision of an Act of Parliament, and some of them are under a different Act from the one in question in this case. [BACON, V.C.—We have nothing to do with penalties here; suing for damages, or to pull down buildings, has nothing to do with penalties.] Our next point is that this house is not in any sense situate in or subject to the building line of De Vere Gardens. It faces into or has its frontage in Kensington-road, and, as is the usual practice in such buildings, it is flush with the pavement of the road into which it abuts. We have a clear right to build over the whole of our freehold land in any way we like, so long as we do not interfere with any previously existing rights of our neighbours, and our land comes close up to the pavement of the new street which we gave up to the public. Before the magistrate gave his decision he ought to have had a certificate from the Board of Works, which would have stated in which street the house stood, and till he got that he had no right to make the order, and he never had such a certificate. Again, this order was not properly drawn up in writing, or duly served within the proper time, or on the proper parties, as provided by the 75th section. The plaintiff was not a party to the proceedings before the magistrate, and the defendant Elsdon never saw the order till he saw it in court, and the right of the vestry to pull down the building in question can only come into operation when the order has been drawn up in writing, and duly served in accordance with the Act.

Millar, Q.C. and M. Ingle Joyce for the defendants.—The encroachment, which the vestry has obtained an order from the magistrate to have demolished, is a serious one; it interferes with the view of valuable houses, and depreciates their value seriously. The plaintiff had practically abandoned his right to obstruct the view which the new houses in De Vere Gardens had of the park. The large space of land owned by him was cleared for building purposes in 1875, and remained so cleared till 1881, and till that time the whole of the new street conformed to the building line as certified by the architect of the Metropolitan Board of Works. He did not abandon his right by any express contract, but we have the evidence of the plans which he originally made for the new buildings in which the line of proposed building is some feet behind the present actual line. It was not till 1881 that Elsdon commenced to build the house in question, which spoils the general aspect of the street, and interferes with the view of the new houses therein. Every step in obtaining the magistrates order was taken by the vestry with great regularity, in compliance with the Act. And, following the decision of Bovill, C.J. in Simpson v. Smith (24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 109; L. Rep. 6 C. P. 87), the magistrate (after receiving the architect's certificate) adjourned the case for the purpose of viewing the premises and deciding what was the true general building line of the new street, and if the house in question interfered with it, and to what extent; and, after he had made his order, that seven feet of the house must be demolished, that order was final, and being made by a competent officer appointed for the purpose of deciding such questions, this court has now no jurisdiction to review that order. Coleridge, C.J. has held in a very recent case that there is no appeal to quarter sessions against the order of a justice made under sect. 75 for the demolition of a building brought out beyond the general line of building:

CHAN. DIV.] BARLOW v. VESTRY OF ST. MARY ABBOTTS, KENSINGTON, AND ELSDON. [CHAN. DIV.]

Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex; Re Elsdon, 9 Q. B. Div. 41.

And the Master of the Rolls in a similar case said, "I must assume that the Legislature has given the magistrates the power to decide the question according to law, and no one is entitled to say that a judge intrusted by the Legislature with judicial power is incompetent to exercise it."

Kerr v. Corporation of Preston (ubi sup.).

This court has no jurisdiction to act as a Court of Appeal in this matter if the magistrate was not acting ultra vires, and he was not, because he was acting in direct accordance with sect. 75. The case of Lord Auckland v. The Westminster District Board of Works has no application to this case. The facts were different. There was a corner house involved, and there was an existing old street, with an existing building line, before the old houses were pulled down. Here there was no old thoroughfare, and there was no old line of buildings in De Vere Gardens. The proper officer certified which was to be the building line in the new street, and after that certificate was made all buildings in that street were bound to conform to it, and the house in question did not do so. [BACON, V.C.—But a man may build on his own property as he likes, and cover as much of it with buildings as he pleases.] Lord Auckland's case was brought within the 74th section of the Act which concerns, "existing buildings in existing streets," but we contend that sect. 75 is clearly applicable to this case, and that sect. 74 has nothing to do with it. The photographs and plans show for themselves that the house in question stands as much in De Vere Gardens as in Kensington-road; even the name of De Vere Gardens was on its wall, and as originally designed the front hall and door led out into the new street. It was not necessary for the plaintiff (who was the second mortgagee of the premises) to be before the magistrate. Sect. 75 of the Act clearly specifies the persons who are to be present. It says, "or" the builder (that is Elsdon) "or" the occupier (but there was not one then). Elsdon cannot be heard to say that he was not properly served with the order, and did not see it before this action was commenced, as he was present when the case was before the magistrate, and he saw the pleadings, and the Act does not lay down that he was to be served personally. It is true the order was not drawn up within the prescribed time, but all orders date and take effect from the time they are delivered, and not from the date when they are drawn up:

Ex parte Johnson, 3 B. & S. 947; 32 L. J. 193, M. C.; Brutton v. Vestry of St. George's, Hanover-square, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 552; L. Rep. 13 Eq. 346.

Marten, Q.C. in reply.—A house cannot be in two places. This house is situate in Kensington-road, and abuts on De Vere Gardens, and the only building line which affects it is that of Kensington-road. There is no evidence of any actual abandonment of our right to build as and where we liked over our own land, and it cannot be said that we are to lose seven feet of frontage as well as the fifty-eight feet which we have voluntarily surrendered for the new street.

BACON, V.C.—There have been a great many interesting things mentioned in the course of the discussion; but the main substance of the case, as nobody can deny, is of very great importance. To the plaintiff, unquestionably, it is of great importance. He has built up a large house upon his own land, and the vestry of Kensington threaten that they will pull it down, if he does not. Whether he pulls it down himself, or whether he waits until the vestry exercise their authority and pull it down, the value of his property must be greatly diminished if it is pulled down. Now, the main facts of the case are not in dispute. [His Lordship went through them.] The plaintiff has done nothing but exercise his right as owner of his land, to build upon his own land, and he has kept his word with the Board of Works, because he has not attempted to go beyond that line of pavement which they claimed and secured for the enjoyment of the public when they assented to De Vere Gardens being made into a road. In my opinion the magistrate was misled by the case put before him. He was made to believe that he had authority; and he had none. Neither in the words of the statute, nor according to the facts proved in the case, can it be truly said that the plaintiff's existing house, to which the order is said to apply, ever did stand in De Vere Gardens, or anywhere but in Kensington-road. One fact mainly relied upon was that a door had been made in the western side of the house, and leading into De Vere Gardens. In my opinion Elsdon had a right to make as many doors as he liked in his own wall; and he has got a right, now that the pavement is dedicated to the public, to step out of his own house on to the pavement, and there is no power to restrict him or prevent him. Upon what ground could anybody say that he could not make as many doorways as he liked, and as many windows as he liked? I know of no reason why he should be compelled to make his door in Kensington-road because the front of his house looks out upon Kensington-road. However, the reasoning of the case has much less to do with it than the strict legal right; and, bearing in mind

Q.B. Div.]

VINTER (app.) v. HIND (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

all the cases which have been referred to, especially the case of Lord Auckland (which cannot be in any degree distinguished from this case, except only that De Vere Gardens did not exist, and the five cottages in Lord Auckland's case did exist), I come to the conclusion that the house in question has been lawfully and rightfully built. Now it is also said that, although the house was built upon the plaintiff's own land within the line of the pavement which he surrendered to the public, and for which he asked the protection and sanction of the Board of Works—because this house comes to the edge of the pavement, he has, therefore, intercepted the view which the inhabitants of De Vere Gardens might by accident have of Kensington Gardens. It must have been an oblique view at all times; but I have not to consider its importance; but I should say a more frivolous, trifling, and unreasonable suggestion could hardly be made than that the gentlemen and ladies living in De Vere Gardens should complain of the house having been built upon the plaintiff's own land, and within the limit which the pavement indicates, because that house shuts out a portion of a view to which they never had any legal right. Upon the facts of the case, and upon the authority of the cases which have been referred to, I have no doubt of the plaintiff's right to be protected against the execution of that order which the learned magistrate has made, and with which I have nothing to do. I have not to canvass it. I have only to consider whether he had a right to make any such order. According to the form of that order, compared with the terms of the statute, I am of opinion that he had no jurisdiction. Then it is said I have no jurisdiction. That was said, I suppose, because something must be said. I hope that I have jurisdiction to protect the owner of property against what seems to me to be a most wrongful act, although it is enforced by the order of a police magistrate under the statute. Of course the magistrate's order is entitled to all respect, and nobody would imagine I fail in respect to his order, or have anything to say against it, except that which the case forces me to say. I say that he has misread this Act of Parliament. If he had read it properly he would have known that it only authorised him to prevent any obstruction by anyone in the line of houses in which his edifice, structure, or building, or whatever it was, was situate. The magistrate has misunderstood his power, and made an order which is against this plaintiff, and ought to be inoperative. I think, therefore, that the plaintiff is entitled to the protection which he asks. As to the other points, about the date of the order, the presence of Mr. Eladon, and the presence of the plaintiff, I do not think that they are material facts in the case, and I do not think that I need dwell upon them. But upon the plain and substantial facts of the case I find that the house in Kensington-road has been lawfully built in the way in which it has been built, although one side of it touches the pavement, which the plaintiff surrendered to the public. Whether the vestry were instigated or not by memorials, or anything else, I do not know. I have not to inquire into it; nor have I anything to blame them for, only I have to decide that they have no right to avail themselves of that order, it being ultra vires of the magistrate to make it, and not applicable to the facts of the case proved before me, within the purview of the Act of 1875. Therefore the plaintiff is entitled to the injunction asked for, and the vestry, or rather the ratepayers unfortunately, must pay the costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, List and Sons.

Solicitors for the defendants, J. and M. Pontifes.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Friday, Nov. 24, 1882.

(Before FIELD and STEPHEN, JJ.)

VINTER (app.) v. HIND (resp.). (a)

Meat unfit for the food of man—Exposure for sale—Seizure after sale—Liability of seller—Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 116 and 117.

Sect. 116 of the Public Health Act 1875 provides for an examination by an inspector of meat exposed for sale, and if it appear to him unfit for the food of man he can seize it in order to have the same dealt with by a justice.

Sect. 117 provides for condemnation by the justice of the meat so seized, "and the person to whom the same belongs, or did belong at the time of exposure for sale," shall be liable to a penalty or imprisonment.

Held, upon a case stated, that these provisions did not apply to the seizure of meat unfit for the food of man, if seized in the possession of a person who had purchased and carried away the meat from the premises where it was exposed for sale; and that the person to whom the meat did belong at the time of exposure for sale could not be convicted under such circumstances.

THIS was a case stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, by certain justices of the peace for the Bourne Petty Sessional Division of the parts of Kesteven, in the county of Lincoln.

An information was preferred by Fredk. Vinter, the inspector of nuisances for the district, the present appellant, against Robert Hind, the younger, of Rippingale, in the said district, butcher, the present respondent, under sects. 116 and 117 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), charging

That he the said Robert Hind, in the month of March 1882, did expose for sale certain meat his property, to wit, about four stones weight of beef, which was afterwards on the 18th March last seized by one Fredk. Vinter, then being the inspector of nuisances for the Bourn Rural Sanitary Authority, at the parish of Rippingale, within the district of the said sanitary authority, the said meat then being in the possession of one John Claypole, and intended for the food of man, and then appearing to the said Fredk. Vinter to be unfit for the food of man; and the said meat was afterwards on the 18th March then instant duly adjudged by Wm. Parker, the younger, Esquire, one of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said parts, to be unfit for the food of man, and condemned by him accordingly, and by him ordered to be destroyed to prevent it being used for the food of man, contrary to the statute.

On Monday, the 13th March 1882, the respondent Hind purchased the carcase of a cow, weighing about forty stone, that had been slaughtered on account of its having had the milk fever. Hind brought the carcase to his shop in Rippingale, and there exposed the meat for sale, and sold several portions for the food of man.

(a) Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

VINTER (app.) v. HIND (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

On Wednesday, the 15th March, the said John Claypole saw four or five stones weight of the meat exposed for sale in the shop, and purchased it at 5d. per lb., and took it away with him for the consumption of his own family and household.

On Saturday, the 18th March, from information received, Vinter, the appellant, went to Hind's shop and searched for this meat, but did not find any. Vinter then went to Claypole's house and was shown the meat. Its smell was offensive, and it was then in Vinter's opinion unfit for the food of man. At the request of Vinter, Claypole permitted him to take it away, and the meat, after having been pronounced unfit for the food of man by the medical officer of health, was condemned by a justice and ordered to be destroyed.

On the hearing of the information it was contended, on behalf of the respondent, that as the sale of the meat to Claypole was made and completed, and the meat removed by him before any action was taken by the appellant, and that as none of the meat was found upon the respondent's premises, but only on Claypole's, who voluntarily gave it up to the appellant, no seizure had been made within the meaning of sects. 116 and 117 of the Public Health Act 1875.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the person to be convicted was the person to whom the meat belonged at the time of exposure for sale, and that the respondent was such person; that there had been a seizure within the meaning of the Act, and that the fact of the meat having been removed and sold before seizure and condemnation was immaterial.

By sect. 16 of the said Act :

Any medical officer of health or inspector of nuisances may at all reasonable times inspect and examine any animal, carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, flour, or milk exposed for sale or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale or of preparation for sale and intended for the food of man, the proof that the same was not exposed or deposited for any such purpose or was not intended for the food of man resting with the party charged; and if any such animal, carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, flour, or milk appears to such medical officer or inspector to be diseased, or unsound, or unwholesome, or unfit for the food of man, he may seize and carry away the same himself, or by an assistant, in order to have the same dealt with by a justice.

By sect. 117 :

If it appears to the justice that any animal, carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, flour, or milk so seized is diseased or unsound, or unwholesome or unfit for the food of man, he shall condemn the same and order it to be destroyed or so disposed of as to prevent it from being exposed for sale, or used for the food of man, and the person to whom the same belongs or did belong at the time of exposure for sale, or in whose possession or on whose premises the same was found, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 20l. for every animal, carcase, or fish, or piece of meat, flesh or fish, or any poultry or game, or for the parcel of fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, or flour, or for the milk so condemned, or at the discretion of the justice, without the infliction of a fine, to imprisonment for a term of not more than three months. The justice who under this section is empowered to convict the offender may be either the justice who may have ordered the article to be disposed of or destroyed, or any other justice having jurisdiction in the place.

At the hearing of the information the justices were of opinion, first, that under these two sections the power of the inspector of nuisances arises in regard to the articles of food therein mentioned only when exposed for sale or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale or of preparation for sale; secondly, that the meat in question, having been already sold by the respondent and removed by the purchaser to his own premises for his private use and consumption, was not exposed for sale or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale or of preparation for sale; thirdly, that this meat was not in fact seized by the inspector at all, and certainly not so within the terms and meaning of and as required by the said sections, having been voluntarily handed over by Claypole, the purchaser in the manner aforesaid, and Claypole having no intention to sell any of it; and fourthly, that the words "did belong" in the concluding part of sect. 117, and relied on for the appellant, are used in reference only to the fact that meat or other articles duly and lawfully seized when exposed for sale or deposited for the purpose of sale or of preparation for sale might and frequently would have been destroyed before the hearing of an information for the penalty, in which case the words "did belong" would be grammatically correct, and that such is the true reading as well as the intention and meaning of this part of the section referred to; and the justices, therefore, gave their determination against the appellant.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the justices' construction of the words and operation of sects. 116 and 117 of the Public Health Act 1875 was correct or the reverse.

Sills for the appellant.—In White v. Redfern (41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 524; 5 Q. B. Div. 15) a question was raised as to whether a condemnation of meat under these sections was valid, without giving the owner an opportunity of being heard, and in his judgment Manisty, J. observed: "It is no doubt by design that sect. 117 omits all reference to exposure or deposit for sale—words which occur in the preceding section, and limit the inquiry before the justices merely to the question whether the meat which has been already seized is unfit for the food of man." It follows therefore that the latter part of sect. 117 is a separate enactment from the earlier part, and the person to whom the meat did belong at the time of exposure for sale is liable for the penalty, notwithstanding the fact that he had disposed of the meat before it was seized. [Stopped by the Court.]

Pouller for the respondent.—In White v. Redfern the meat was properly seized on the premises of the person who was convicted. Here there has been no seizure within the meaning of the Act, even if (which is doubtful) an actual seizure took place on the premises of the respondent's customer. "The same" in sect. 117 can only refer to meat which had been legally seized under the provision of sect. 116.

Sills called upon to reply.—Though the seizure might have been irregular, there was nothing to render the condemnation invalid. The words "the same" and "so" in sect. 117 are satisfied by reference to the condemnation.

FIELD, J.—I think the decision of the justices must be affirmed. No doubt this section 117 has been, as we found when White v. Redfern was argued, inartificially drawn, and if our decision is contrary to the general intention of the Legislature, this result is from the collocation of words and the

Q.B. Div.]

VINTER (app.) v. HIND (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

language used in the Act. Before we construe it, so as to convict a man in a penalty, we must see if the Legislature has said that in such events as those which have happened in this case he is to be liable. These events are peculiar and uncommon. They are shortly as follows: The respondent had, on the 13th March, bought a cow, which had died from a disease likely to render it unfit for the food of man, and he exposed the meat for sale in his shop, and sold several portions for the food of man. If the inspector had come in at the time and seized the meat while in the possession of the respondent and exposed for sale, the subsequent proceedings would have been exactly in accordance with the Act. [The learned Judge read sect. 116.] We do not know that on the 13th March the meat was unfit for the food of man at all. It may have been, and probably was so. But a considerable time, nearly five days, elapsed between the exposure for sale and the examination of the meat by the inspector, for it appears that Claypole, the purchaser, took it away on the 15th for the use and consumption of his own family, and it was not until the 18th March that the inspector, the appellant, after having been to the respondent and heard what had happened, went to Claypole and was shown the meat, which "smelt very offensively, and was then in the opinion of the appellant, unfit for the food of man." But he had no power to seize it, for it was not then "exposed for sale, or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale, or of preparation for sale," although it was "intended for the food of man," whereas, to come within the terms of sect. 116, it must be both exposed for sale and intended for the food of man. It may be exposed for sale, and yet be intended only for manure. The gist of the enactment is the exposure for sale of meat unfit for the food of man. This meat was unfit for the food of man, and was on the 18th of March certified so to be. The meat having come into the possession of the inspector by the permission of Claypole, there was no seizure. A justice condemned the meat without hearing any person interested in its preservation. I am not sure that he had jurisdiction to condemn the meat, for there was no proof before him as to whether the seizure was proper or not. Then the inspector sought to convict the seller as the person to whom it belonged at the time of the exposure for sale. Mr. Sills argued that the penalty clause is distinct from the preceding enactment, and if the conviction were only by the word "and," I should have thought that the meaning of the Legislature in using the word was "we have enacted the foregoing provision, and now go on to enact more." But the next words opposed to the argument for the appellant are "the same." They must refer to something antecedent. Looking back, we find the justice shall condemn "the same," and that "the same" is, amongst other things, any meat "so seized." It might have been argued even then that the construction was in favour of the appellant, but the penalty clause prescribes a penalty for every piece of meat "so condemned." Can we say that, under the circumstances, when there has been no seizure at all, the mere fact of the meat having been condemned on any ground by a justice creates an offence? If that were so, then, inasmuch as White v. Redfern decides that the meat may be condemned by a justice without any summons or notice to the person to whom it belonged, if this meat had never been exposed for sale by any one, but had been taken to a justice, and he had condemned it, a penalty might have been incurred. It seems to me a necessary condition of the offence that the condemned meat must have been exposed for sale. I wish I could come to another determination, but I must conclude that, unless there has been a seizure and condemnation consequent on such seizure, the penalty cannot be imposed.

STEPHEN, J.—I am of the same opinion, and also regret that I must come to it. But I cannot do otherwise. It would be unreasonable to suppose that every section in this long Act of 343 sections and many schedules could, at the time when it passed, be criticised with all the care which conveyancers might use in a complicated deed. I do not join in the censure on the mode in which Acts of Parliament are drawn; considering their number and length, the defects in them seem to me few. But there are occasions on which anyone may doubt whether the attention of the Legislature was directed to the words of a particular clause, and to the question whether they were likely to carry out the intention of the Legislature. It is mere supposition, but I should suppose these sections were intended to impose penalties up to the sum of 20*l.* on any person who exposed unsound meat for sale. But when the two sections are scrutinised closely, it is clear that whatever may have been meant, that which is suggested by the counsel for the appellant as the meaning has not been expressed. The two sections form a whole. There are words connecting them together, and reading only the words material to the question before us, they are "any officer of health may inspect any meat exposed for sale, and if any such meat appear to be diseased, he may carry away the same, to have the same dealt with by a justice;" and by sect. 117, "if it appears to the justice that any meat so seized is unfit for the food of man he shall condemn the same, and the person to whom the same belongs, or did belong at the time of the exposure for sale, shall be liable to a penalty." Such is the provision shortly read. These words taken together describe one process. First, there is to be a seizure of meat exposed for sale, then condemnation by a justice of the meat so seized, and then the person in whose possession it was seized, or whose property it is, will be liable to a penalty of 20*l.* for every piece of meat so seized. It is evident that these three matters form one consecutive process, and if the conditions are not fulfilled, the third consequence does not follow. One good test for the interpretation of an enactment of this kind is to think of what words would have been used to convey the meaning which, for the purpose of argument, is sought to be extracted from those actually used. If it had been intended to make mere exposure of meat for sale an offence subjecting the offender to a penalty, the means by which this would have been done would surely have been to throw sect. 116, and the first part of sect. 117, together, and to make a new section of the latter part, so as to run, "any person who exposes for sale any meat unfit for human food shall be liable to a penalty of 20*l.*" That is what we are asked to find as the meaning of the latter part of the section, and I should have been glad to do so. But to arrive at such a result it would have been necessary to take extraordinary liberties with the Act, and to leave out all the words of reference and much alter the legislation. I, therefore, think the true interpretation of the Act to be that which I have stated. This meat was undoubtedly exposed for sale, and diseased and unsound. It was, however, sold to a purchaser, who, I suppose, considered it worth 5d. per pound, and took it home to eat. Fortunately for him and his family the inspector came in and asked for the meat. Whether the purchaser was sick of his bargain or not it is unnecessary to inquire, but he gave up the meat, and a justice, rightly or wrongly, ordered it to be destroyed. It is obvious that that did not amount to such seizure and condemnation as are contemplated by sect. 116 and the early part of sect 117. A further observation is that, suppose there had been a regular seizure under sect. 116, and a regular condemnation by a justice under sect. 117, and that then the person to whom the meat belonged had been summoned before the justices, could he have been heard to say on that summons that the meat was not in fact unsound. It appears to us that he could not, for the decision of the justice on that is to be taken to be conclusive, and if the person summoned could only dispute the seizure or exposure for sale, and could not dispute the unsoundness, that is a strong ground to support our construction of the Act.

Q.B. Div.] MAYOR, &C., OF LONDON v. ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE OF GREENWICH UNION. [Q.B. Div.]

Judgment for respondent.

Solicitors for appellant, Keen and Rogers, for J. L. Bell, Bourne.

Solicitors for respondent, Lee, Ockerly, and Everington, for J. B. Schofield, Bourne.

Feb. 26 and 27.

(Before HUDDLESTON, B. and NORTH, J.)

THE MAYOR, &C. OF LONDON (apps.) v. THE ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE OF THE GREENWICH UNION (resps.). (a)

Rating — Market tolls — Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts 1869 and 1878 — User of the soil — Tolls for foreign animals landing at a market wharf — Rateability of — 32 & 33 Vict. c. 70; 41 & 42 Vict. c. 74.

By the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act 1869, ss. 2, 3, 24, and 25, it was provided that the local authority might provide wharves, lairs, sheds, market houses, and places for the landing, reception, sale, and slaughter of foreign animals, such place to be deemed a market, and might charge for the use of such wharf, &c., such sums as by bye-laws they might appoint.

By the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act 1878, s. 4, the Act of 1869 was repealed, saving all existing acquired rights; but by sect. 39 the provisions of sects. 23, 24, and 25 of that Act were practically re-enacted, adding that the said charges should be deemed "tolls."

In 1871 the Corporation of London, as the local authority, built a market at D. for the reception, &c., of foreign animals. By certain bye-laws, a fixed charge per head for wharfage, lairage, market dues, and charges was levied on all animals landed, such charge becoming due on the animals being landed. These charges included lairage until the animals were slaughtered. No consignee of any animals has any right to put his animals in any particular part of the market. The appellants were rated in respect of these charges as tolls in respect of the use and occupation of the soil. They appealed against such assessment, and contended that the tolls were only taken in respect of the franchise of the market.

Held, on appeal, that such charges were tolls made in respect of the user and occupation of the soil, and so were rateable.

SPECIAL case, stated under the Valuation (Metropolitan) Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67) s. 40.

The following are the material parts of it:—

1. The appellants are the owners and occupiers of the land, wharves, landing stages, dolphins, and buildings, called the Deptford Foreign Cattle Market, and are entitled to receive the tolls hereinafter mentioned.

2. The said market is situate in the parish of St. Nicholas, that parish is in the union of which the respondents are the assessment committee.

3. The rateable value of the market as determined by the respondents, and set out in the valuation list of that parish, was 20,000*l.*, and the gross value 25,000*l.*

4. By sect. 10 of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act 1869, the appellants were appointed the local authority for the City of London for the purposes of the Act; and by sect. 28, sub-sect. 1, they were appointed exclusively the local authority for the metropolis for the purposes of the third part of the Act, which comprises sects. 15 to 30 inclusive, and deals with the subject of foreign animals.

5. Sect. 23 empowers a local authority to provide, erect, and fit up wharves, lairs, sheds, market houses, and places for the landing, reception, sale, and slaughter of foreign animals.

6. The appellants, in pursuance of this section, acquired, provided, and fitted up the property now known as the Deptford Market.

7. By sect. 24 the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act 1847 was incorporated with the third part of the Act now in recital, and it was enacted that any place provided by a local authority under the third part of the Act for the landing, reception, sale, or slaughter of foreign animals, should be deemed a market, and the said third part of the Act should be deemed the special Act, and by the same section the local authority was empowered to make bye-laws.

8. By sect. 25 the local authority was empowered to charge for the use of any wharf, lair, shed, market house, or place provided by them as aforesaid such sums as they by bye-law should appoint.

9. The appellants, in pursuance of this section, made certain bye-laws, and bye-law 12 provided that the charges set forth in the schedule to the bye-laws should become due and payable immediately on the animals, in respect of which such charges were to be taken, being landed at the market wharf. The schedule is as follows:

SCHEDULE OF CHARGES.

Wharfage, Lairage, Market Dues, and Charges.

	s.	d.
Beasts, per head	5	0
Calves	2	0
Pigs	1	0
Sheep	0	9

10. The Act of 1869 was afterwards repealed by the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act 1878, s. 4, such appeal not affecting anything done under the former Act.

11. By sect. 9, sub-sect. 1, of the Act of 1878 the appellants are to continue the sole local authority for the metropolis as before. By sect. 39, sub-sect. 1, a local authority may provide, erect, and fit up wharves, stations, lairs, sheds, and other places for the landing, reception, keeping, sale, slaughter, or disposal of foreign animals, &c. By sub-sect. 2 the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act 1847 is incorporated, and sub-sect. 3 provides that a wharf or other place provided by a local authority under this section shall be a market within that Act, and that this Act shall be the special Act.

12. Sub-sect. 4 provides that a local authority may charge for the use of a wharf or other place provided by them under this section, such sums as bye-laws appoint, such charges to be deemed tolls.

13. By sub-sect. 5 the local authority are to carry to a separate account all sums so received by them, and to apply them as therein stated; and by sub-sect. 8 the provisions of this 39th section are made to apply to a wharf or other place provided by a local authority under the prior Act of 1869, which has been repealed.

14. Sect. 35 of the Market and Fairs Clauses Act 1847 provides that the tolls in respect of cattle brought to the market for sale shall become due as soon as the cattle, in respect whereof they are demandable, are brought into the market place, and before they are put into any pen or tied up in such market place.

15. In 1871 the appellants purchased and adapted for the purposes of the Act a large quantity of land abutting on the Thames, formerly used as Deptford Dockyard, and built a market thereon. Part of the buildings are let to tenants, and the rents received from them in 1879 amounted to 3817*l*. Part of the market containing two slaughterhouses is used by the appellants themselves for the purposes of the Acts; and part of the market is used for lairage. The rated area abuts on the Thames, and includes wharves, landing stages, and dolphins in the river bed, which have been constructed and used for the purposes of the Act.

16. All animals within the meaning of the Acts imported into the port of London from any foreign country, except Sweden and Denmark, must, under Orders in Council made under sect. 35 sub-sect. 1, and sect. 36 of the Act of 1878, be landed on the rated area, and nowhere else, and there remain until slaughtered.

17. The animals brought into the rated area are landed from vessels on to landing stages, and driven into pens in the sheds. The clerk of the market directs each consignee into what part to drive his animals, and no consignee is allowed to retain, as of right, any particular part of the market or any particular pen for himself.

18. The charges mentioned in paragraph 9 include lairage for that number of days, at the end of which the animals must be slaughtered (at the time in question the number of days was ten); the animals are then slaughtered at one of the slaughterhouses rented of the appellants, or at one retained by the appellants in their own hands, for which a separate charge is made.

19. In assessing the gross value at 25,000*l*. and the rateable value at 20,000*l*., the respondents took into consideration, not only the property admitted to be rateable, but also the charges set out in paragraph 9. The appellants gave notice of appeal against the valuation to the General Assessment Sessions 1881, whereupon this case was stated.

20. The appellants contended that all the charges in paragraph 9, made under bye-law 12, were market tolls not taken in respect of the occupation of the soil, but in respect of the franchise of the market, and that the amounts so received should not be taken into account.

21. The respondents contended:—(1.) That none of such charges were market tolls taken in respect of the franchise of the market, but that such charges were made for the use of the wharves, landing places, lairs, sheds, market houses, and places provided by the appellants for the reception, sale, and slaughter of foreign animals, and were therefore taken in respect of the occupation of the soil, and that the amounts so received should be taken into account. (2.) That at any rate so much of such charges as represented the use of the wharves, lairs, sheds, and landing places, and generally the use of the privileged place set apart by the Act for the lawful reception of, and dealing with the animals imported, whether for the purpose of sale, slaughter, or otherwise should be taken into account. (There were other contentions which it is not necessary to state).

22. The questions for the court were:—(1.) Whether the charges made under bye-law 12, or any, and what proportion of them, were market tolls not taken in respect of the occupation by the appellants of the soil, but in respect of the franchise of the markets. (2.) Whether the amount received upon such charges, or any, and what part of them should be taken into consideration in assessing the value of the premises in question.

Webster, Q.C. (Poland and Mead with him) for the appellants.—The rateable value is too high, because the charges set out in bye-law 12 ought not to be taken into consideration. They are not charges made in respect of the use and occupation of the soil, but are market tolls taken in respect of the franchise of the market. The charges are payable in respect of cattle that enter the market, whether they ever use the pens, or stay in the market at all, except for the purpose of walking through; the charges are payable on admission. In the case of Bea v. Bell (5 M. & S. 221) the toll was not rateable. In Roberts v. Aylesbury (20 L. T. Rep. O. S. 219; 1 E. & B. 423; 22 L. J. M. O. 34) the tolls that were held rateable were stallage tolls. The two last cases on the point are Reg. v. Caswell (26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 574; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 328), and The Mayor of London v. St. Sepulchre (L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 333). In both these cases, the charges taken in respect of cattle in the one case, and in respect of meat, poultry, &c., in the other, brought into the market for sale, were held not to be rateable. It is not open to the respondents to say that if there is a use of the soil, then the charges are rateable. In both these cases there was a use of the soil, as the market in each was inclosed, into which the animals or meat were brought. Those cases govern the present case, and these charges are not rateable.

Q.B. Div.] MAYOR, &c., OF LONDON v. ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE OF GREENWICH UNION. [Q.B. Div.]

Meadows White, Q.O. (Besley and Tickell with him) for the respondents.—These charges are not tolls in gross, but tolls in respect of the occupation of land. The word "tolls" is not used solely in the sense of franchise tolls, but includes other charges, such as stallage, pickage, &c.:

Duke of Bedford v. Emmett, 3 B. & A. 366;
Duke of Bedford v. St. Paul's, Covent Garden, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 616; 51 L. J. 41, M. C.

Wightman, J. says in The Earl of Durham v. Bishopwearmouth (2 M. & E. 230, at p. 247; 28 L. J. 232, M. C. at p. 239): "If the use of the soil is any part of the consideration for the payment of the tolls, we think that is enough to connect them with the occupation and use of the soil, and to render them rateable." The cases of Reg. v. Casswell (ubi sup.), and The Mayor of London v. St. Sepulchre (ubi sup.), are distinguishable, because there the occupation of the soil, other than the mere walking over it, was no part of the consideration for the payment of the tolls. These tolls are rateable, and the whole and not a part only must be rated. He referred also to

The Mayor of Northampton v. Ward, 2 Strange, 1238; 1 Wils. 107;
 32 & 33 Vict. c. 70, sched. 5.

Webster, Q.O. in reply.—By sect. 35 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act 1847, these charges become due as soon as the cattle are brought into the market-place, and before they are put into a pen or tied up in the market. This shows that these charges are for admission solely. [HUDDLESTON, B.—Is there not a distinction between this case and Casswell's and St. Sepulchre's cases, that here there is a wharf kept up by the Corporation of London, on which the cattle land?] In St. Sepulchre's case there were roads made leading to the market, which were vested in the Corporation of London. The wharf is in truth a private road leading to the market.

HUDDLESTON, B.—We think it desirable to deliver judgment at once in this case. We are asked whether the charges made under bye-law 12 or any and what proportion of them are market tolls not taken in respect of the occupation by the appellants of the soil, but in respect of the franchise of the market. We are of opinion that they are taken in respect of the occupation by the appellants of the soil, and that therefore they are rateable. We have considered carefully the different cases on the subject, beginning with Rees v. Bell (ubi sup.). There it was held that the tolls were not rateable, because they were, in fact, a right to take a certain amount of the corn that came into the market, and the court said that the appellant could not be considered to be the occupier of the land. Lord Ellenborough said: "I cannot say upon this statement that the appellant is an occupier of the land. Would he not be equally entitled to the toll, although the sacks were not set down in the market, but were upheld on the shoulders of those who exposed the corn for sale." Then the gist of the judgment is in this passage: "There is nothing to give this toll a corporeal quality." Now, in the case of Roberts v. Aylesbury (ubi sup.), Lord Campbell said [the learned Judge quoted from 22 L. J. 38, M. C.]: "This case is now reduced to the single point as to the rateability of the payments made for stallage The person making the payment has the use and occupation of that portion of the soil upon which the stall stands. It is a very different thing from the market toll, which is paid only on goods sold, and then without any consideration of whether or not the goods had been deposited upon the soil, the general principle being that what is given for the use and occupation of land is properly the subject of rateability. I do not see any doubt as to the stallage, which is a payment for the use and occupation of land, being rateable." These two authorities support the proposition that the real question in all these cases is, whether there is a "corporeal quality" in the toll—whether it is really paid for the use and occupation of the land. The only difficulty proceeds from the judgments in the cases of The Mayor, &c. of London v. St. Sepulchre (ubi sup.), and Reg. v. Casswell (ubi sup.). But when we come to look at those cases they support the authority of Rees v. Bell (ubi sup.), and go on to show that the payments, which were not rateable there, were not in any way connected with the soil. It is quite true it was a sum paid not for the right of admission—in the one case, it was paid for the animals when they were in the market; in the other case, it was paid for the goods when they were in the market. Both the Lord Chief Justice and Blackburn, J. draw the distinction very clearly in St. Sepulchre's case. Blackburn, J. says: "The only question is whether under this Act the tolls which the corporation have power to take are franchise tolls, or stallage tolls payable for the occupation of the soil. I can see nothing to distinguish them from market tolls attached to a franchise." The case of Reg. v. Casswell (ubi sup.) is to the same effect. There the court draws the distinction between the classes of cases. They say that where the animals are brought into the market for the purpose of sale, there the tolls are not rateable where they are merely upon that; but where the tolls are for the animals being placed under cover, or in sheds, in the market place, then they are rateable, as being a payment for the use of the soil. The word "toll" itself does not necessarily mean a payment in respect of a franchise. The word "tolls" is used as well for stallage tolls, or pickage tolls, or lairage tolls, &c. This is clearly pointed out in the judgment of Bowen, L.J., in The Duke of Bedford v. Covent Garden (ubi sup.). I also find it mentioned in some of the earlier cases, and in 2 Coke's Institutes, 220, that a "toll is a reasonable sum due to the lord of the market or fair for things sold which are tollable, and which was usually allowed for witnessing the sale, and so, whether the toll may be due for goods brought into the market or for goods not sold," &c. Mr. Webster drew a very nice distinction upon those two last cases. He said that those payments which were held not to be rateable were to a certain extent for the use of the soil, because the goods in the one case and the animals in the other must be put or remain somewhere in the market, and to that extent there is a use of the soil; and he says that the passage in Mr. Justice Wightman's judgment in The Earl of Durham v. The Overseers of Bishop Wearmouth (ubi sup.) cannot be applicable, where he says: "If the use of the soil is any part of the consideration for the payment of the tolls, we think that is enough to connect them with the occupation and use of the soil, and to render them rateable." This passage, however, seems to me to dispose of his contention. In The Duke of

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX.

[Q.B. Div.]

Bedford v. Emmatt (ubi sup.) Bayley, J. says that a market toll includes a stallage and pickage toll. These two last cases, The Mayor of London v. St. Sepulchre and Reg. v. Casswell, seem to have carried the law beyond the earlier cases. In these two cases the appellants were clearly in occupation of the soil of their respective markets, and it is at first difficult to see why the tolls taken upon animals entering the market did not constitute part of the profits of the occupation, though no specific part was appropriated to their use. The real distinction, however, is that tolls paid upon cattle entering a market are prices paid for admission, and constitute a tax upon a particular class. It appears from the decision of The Mayor of Northampton v. Ward (2 Strange, 1238; 1 Wils. 107) that the toll is an independent tax, depending on grant or immemorial usage, and that by the common law the public have a right to enter a market, and the toll is unconnected with the soil, and may be severed from it. In St. Sepulchre's and Casswell's cases the payment of the tolls was not a condition precedent to the right of entering the market—i.e., not the price of admission; but the right of entry was acknowledged, and it was when that had taken place that the tolls became payable. The question is, are the tolls paid as a condition precedent to the use of the land; if so, the tolls are rateable, because the payees are in occupation of the land either by themselves or their licensees. If we apply this test the cases are easily solved. Now apply that test to this case, and see whether these tolls are not payments made to the payees (the appellants) by the licensee for the use of the soil. [The learned Judge read sects. 16, 23, and 25 of the Act of 1869, and sect. 39 of the Act of 1878.] The local authority may charge certain sums in the nature of tolls for the use of a wharf, station, lair, shed, &c. The Corporation of London, as the local authority, provide a market place for the landing, standing, and sale of foreign animals, and provide the sums or tolls to be paid for the use of this. The effect of this in substance is that the payees of the toll provide all the things that are necessary for the reception of the animals. There are wharves, lairs, slaughtering-houses—there is everything that is necessary; and they license certain persons, on payment of a certain sum of money, to come upon the wharf, take possession of the place, and use the slaughter-houses. These fees include a certain sum for lairage, and every animal may for that fee stay for a period of ten days. They are, in fact, payments made by the licensees to the payees for the use and occupation of these places so provided for them by the payees, and hence, according to the principle derived from the cases, are rateable.

NORTH, J.—I wish to add a few remarks. The question is, is this a toll payable for the right of entering the market, when it would not be rateable, or is it a toll payable for the right of using and enjoying the soil of the market, other than the mere power of walking over it, when it would be rateable? There are two Acts of Parliament which affect this question, namely, the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts of 1869 and 1878. The Corporation of London are doing that which, if done by a private firm, would constitute the tolls rateable. Therefore, one would expect to find some distinction, if any were intended, made in the Act itself. Do the Acts give any immunity?

I can find no immunity and no such distinction. It is said that payment is to be made on the animals entering the market independently of what is to be done when the animals are in the market. But is this so? There is power to charge under the Acts of Parliament for the use of the wharf, markets, &c. The corporation can provide stallage, and charge for it. Bye-law 12 provides charges for wharfage, lairage, market dues, and charges. There is no power to levy tolls for market dues other than those given by the 39th section of the Acts of 1878. Therefore the charges made here are in respect of wharfage and lairage. I need not go through the cases that have been quoted. As to the case of Reg. v. Casswell (ubi sup.), the Lord Chief Justice there lays down the rule that I intend to follow. [The learned Judge read the judgment]. Is the toll in the case before us paid simply for admission to the market? I think not. Following that case and the case of the Mayor of London v. St. Sepulchre (ubi sup.), I think that these charges were for wharfage and lairage, that is, for the use of the soil. There are two other points I should like to mention: First, does the Act draw any distinction between what is paid for the use of land for wharfage and lairage, and what is paid for the right of passing over the land? I think not. The Act gives the right to use the wharves and stalls; secondly, is the whole toll rateable or only a part of it? I think that the whole is, and that the observation of Wightman, J., in the Earl of Durham v. Bishopwearmouth (ubi sup.) is an authority in point.

Judgment for the respondents.

Solicitor for the appellants, Sir T. J. Nelson.
Solicitors for the respondents, Saw and Son.

Dec. 11 and 21, 1882.

(Before FIELD and STEPHEN, JJ.)

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX. (a)

Prisons—Superannuation of officers—Liability of county for—Prisons Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 36—Superannuation Act 1859 (22 Vict. c. 26), s. 7.

At the time of the coming into operation of the Prisons Act 1877, O., a governor of a prison, had been in the prison service for more than twenty years. In order to facilitate improvements in the organisation of the Prisons Department, the Lords of the Treasury, pursuant to sect. 36 of the Prisons Act 1877, granted to O. an annuity by way of compensation allowance, in consideration of his retirement from office, and made an order pursuant to paragraph 4 of that section, apportioning the amount between the rates and funds provided by Parliament. The amount so granted did not exceed two-thirds of O.'s salary. Upon objection taken by the justices that the Lords of the Treasury had no power to order that a portion of such allowance should be paid out of the rates, on the ground that the annuity was not by way of superannuation allowance within the meaning of paragraph 1 of the above section, but was a special compensation allowance made for the purpose of facilitating improvements in the department to which O. belonged, which according to paragraph 2, could only be dealt

(a) Reported by DUNLOP HILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[Q.B. Div.]

REG. 6. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX.

[Q.B. Div.]

with in manner provided by the Superannuation Act 1859:

Held, that the provisions of paragraph 4 of sect. 36 apply to all payments referred to in the preceding paragraphs, and that the apportionment was therefore rightly made.

THIS was a special case, and raised the question whether the superannuation allowance to officers retiring from service under the provisions of the Prisons Act 1877 should be borne entirely by the Treasury, or whether the counties in which such officers had served should contribute.

The case turned upon the construction of sect. 36 of the Prisons Act 1877, and the facts and arguments sufficiently appear by the judgment of the court.

Sect. 36 provides:

If at any time after the commencement of this Act it appears to the Treasury that any existing officer of a prison has been in the prison service for not less than twenty years, and is not less than sixty years of age, or that any existing officer of a prison has become incapable, from confirmed sickness, age, or infirmity, or injury received in actual execution of his duty, of executing his office in person, and such sickness, age, infirmity, or injury is certified by a medical certificate and there shall be a report of the Prison Commissioners testifying to his good conduct during his period of service under them and recommending a grant to be made to him, the Treasury may grant to such officer, having regard to his length of prison service, an annuity by way of superannuation allowance not exceeding two-thirds of his salary and emoluments, or a gratuity not exceeding the amount of his salary and emoluments for one year.

If any office in any prison to which this Act applies is abolished, or any officer is retired or removed, any existing officer of a prison who, by reason of such abolition, retirement, or removal, is deprived of any salary or emoluments, shall be dealt with in manner provided for by the Superannuation Act 1859, with respect to a person retiring or removed from the public service in consequence of the abolition of his office, or for the purpose of facilitating improvements in the organisation of the department to which he belongs.

"Prison service," for the purposes of this section, means, as respects the period before the commencement of this Act, service in a particular prison or in the prisons of the same authority, transferred to the Secretary of State, and as respects the period after the commencement of this Act, service in any such prison, or in any other prison transferred to the Secretary of State under this Act.

Any annuity by way of superannuation allowance, or gratuity granted under this section, shall be apportioned between the period of service before the commencement of this Act and the period of service after the commencement of this Act; and so much of such annuity or allowance as is payable in respect of service before the commencement of this Act, regard being had to the amount of salary then paid, but without taking into account any number of years added to the officer's service on account of the abolition of office or for facilitating the organisation of the department, shall be paid by the prison authority of the prison in which the officer to whom such annuity or allowance is granted was serving at the date of the commencement of this Act out of rates which, at or immediately before the commencement of this Act, were applicable to the payment of the salary of such officer, and the residue shall be paid out of the moneys provided by Parliament.

Sir H. James, A.G. (A. L. Smith with him) for the Treasury.

R. S. Wright for the justices.

The judgment of the court (Field and Stephen, JJ.) was delivered by STEPHEN, J.—This was a special case, the material parts of which were as follows: Up to the coming into operation of the Prisons Act 1877 the Justices of Middlesex were the prison authorities for Coldbath-fields prison. On the 7th Dec. 1854 Col. Colville was appointed governor of that prison, and he continued to act as such till the 24th Aug. 1878. After the Prisons Act came into force, the prison was taken over by the Secretary of State, and Col. Colville continued to act as governor till Aug. 1878. He was then told by one of the Prison Commissioners that he might, if he pleased, resign his appointment at once, and receive the full rate of pension, and he told the Prison Commissioners that he was willing to retire on a pension of two-thirds of his salary and emoluments. He wrote a letter to that effect to the commissioners, and his successor was appointed. The Lords of the Treasury awarded to Col. Colville an annuity of 582*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, and apportioned it as follows: 429*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* to be paid by the justices of Middlesex, and 153*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* out of funds provided by Parliament. The question for the court substantially was, whether this apportionment was one which, under the various statutes hereinafter referred to, the Lords of the Treasury had a right to make. By the Prisons Act 1877, sect. 36, if any office in any prison to which this Act applies is abolished, or any officer is retired or removed, any existing officer of a prison, who by reason of such abolition, retirement, or removal is deprived of any salary or emoluments, shall be dealt with in manner provided by the Superannuation Act 1859, with respect to a person retiring or removed from the public service in consequence of the abolition of his office, or for the purpose of facilitating improvements in the organisation of the department to which he belongs. By the Superannuation Act 1859 (22 Vict. c. 26), s. 7, it is enacted, that the Lords of the Treasury may grant to any person retiring or removed from the public service for the purpose of facilitating improvements in the organisation of the department to which he belongs, such special annual allowance by way of compensation for his loss of office as may seem to the Lords of the Treasury to be a reasonable and just compensation for the loss of his office. If the compensation so granted exceed the amount to which the person would have been entitled under the scale of superannuation provided by the Act if ten years were added to the number of years which he may have actually served, the allowance is to be granted by special minute stating the special grounds for granting the allowance. The minute is to be laid before Parliament, and the amount is in no case to exceed two-thirds of the salary and emoluments. This provision no doubt applied to Col. Colville's case, as he retired from his office in order to facilitate improvements in the organisation of the department to which he belonged; and the result appears to us to be that the Lords of the Treasury were entitled to make to him such special allowance as they pleased, subject only to the following conditions: it was not to exceed two-thirds of his pay and emoluments; if it exceeded the amount to which he would have been entitled by bare length of service, and if the excess over that amount was more than would have been earned by ten additional years' service, the allowance must be made by special minute stating the special grounds, and laid before Parliament. Sect. 2 of the same Act sets out the scale of superannuation provided. After eleven years' service,

Q.B. Div.]

DOWNING (app.) v. SCHNEIDER AND OTHERS (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

one-sixtieth of the annual salary and emoluments is to be added to the allowance. By sect. 4 the Lords of the Treasury are empowered, with regard to classes of officers whose offices require peculiar qualifications, and as to which it is for the public interest that persons should be appointed to them at an age exceeding that at which public service ordinarily begins, to direct that a certain number of years shall be added to their service. Col. Colville had served twenty-three years. He would, if he had been in the public service proper, have been entitled to five years' extra service under regulations issued under sect. 4, and would thus have been entitled, if "dealt with in manner provided by the Superannuation Act," to a pension as for twenty-eight years' service. The sum actually allowed to him by the Lords of the Treasury consisted of (a) the amount earned by twenty-three years' service; (b) the amount due in respect of five years allowed under sect. 4; (c) an amount equal to what would have been earned by ten years' extra service. The whole was 582*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, which is a little less than two-thirds of 920*l.*, which was the amount of his salary and emoluments. There was thus no occasion for a special minute to be laid before Parliament. So far, little or no question arose between the parties. The question between them was as to the right of the Lords of the Treasury to apportion the annuity between the rates and the fund provided by Parliament. The decision of the question depended on the construction of the last paragraph of sect. 36 of the Prisons Act 1877. The material words of the paragraph in question are as follows: "Any annuity by way of superannuation allowance or gratuity granted under this section shall be apportioned between the period of service before the commencement of this Act and the period of service after the commencement of this Act, and so much of such annuity or allowance as is payable in respect of service before the commencement of this Act, regard being had to the amount of salary then paid, but without taking into account any number of years added to the officer's service on account of abolition of office or for facilitating the organisation of the department, shall be paid by the prison authority of the prison out of the rates." The whole of Col. Colville's service, except a few months, was before the commencement of the Prison Act of 1877, and the apportionment made between the funds provided by Parliament and the rates did not charge to the rates the amount allowed by the Lords of the Treasury in excess of the twenty-eight years to which Col. Colville would have been entitled under the Superannuation Act. For these reasons it was contended that the apportionment was valid, and in our judgment that contention is in accordance with the words of the two Acts and must prevail. The argument to the contrary was, that the last paragraph of the 36th section applied only to the superannuation allowance or gratuities referred to in the first paragraph of the section, and not to allowances by way of compensation referred to in the second paragraph; and Mr. Wright, in his able argument on the subject, referred to several other Acts more or less analogous, in order to show that there is a distinction between compensation and superannuation allowance. The question must, however, we think, be decided by the words of the very provision under consideration, and we are unable to understand how it is possible to read the fourth paragraph of sect. 36 otherwise than as applying to all the payments mentioned in the preceding paragraphs. It is impossible, without resorting to constructions which, however ingenious, appear to us unnatural and far-fetched, to suppose that the words "but without taking into account any number of years added to the officer's service on account of abolition of office or for facilitating the organisation of the department" were not intended to apply to the payments sanctioned by paragraph 2. I may repeat the very words of sect. 7 of the Act of 1859 and must refer to it, but that section is referred to in paragraph 2 of sect. 36 of the Act of 1877, and is not referred to in paragraph 1. This consideration appears to us conclusive. Some other objections were taken to the grant of the pension, but they were so slightly relied upon that we do not think it necessary to discuss it in detail. The special case concludes by asking the opinion of the court on the question, whether the defendants ought to discharge out of the county rates the portion of the annuity so charged on them as aforesaid. We are of opinion that they ought to pay the whole of it.

Judgment for the Crown.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, The Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for the defendants, Nicholson and Herbert.

Thursday, March 16.

(Before POLLOCK, B. and NORTH, J.)

DOWNING (app.) v. SCHNEIDER AND OTHERS (resps.). (a)

Licensing—Appeal to Quarter Sessions—Off-licence
—Licensing Act 1828 (9 Geo. 4. c. 61), ss. 1, 27—Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), s. 8—The Beer Dealers' Retail Licences Act 1880 (43 Vict. c. 6), s. 1—The Beer Dealers' Retail Licences (Amendment) Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 34), s. 1.

By the Beer Dealers' Retail Licences Act 1880 (43 Vict. c. 6), s. 1: "Sect. 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869 is hereby repealed, as far as the qualification therein contained relates to grants of certificates for such additional licences as aforesaid, and the licensing justices shall be at liberty either to refuse such certificates as aforesaid on any grounds appearing to them in the exercise of their discretion sufficient, or to grant the same to such persons as they in the execution of their statutory powers and in the exercise of their discretion deem fit and proper."

By the Beer Dealers' Patent Licences (Amendment) Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 34), s. 1: "Notwithstanding anything in sect. 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869, or in any other Act now in force, the licensing justices shall be at liberty, in their free and unqualified discretion either to refuse a certificate for any licence for sale of beer by retail to be consumed off the premises on any grounds appearing to them sufficient, or to grant the same to such persons as they in the execution of their statutory powers, and in the exercise of their discretion, deem fit and proper."

Held, that these statutes have not taken away the right of appeal to the Court of Quarter Sessions, from a refusal by the licensing justices to rem-

(a) Reported by H. D. BOWEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

DOWNING (app.) v. SCHNEIDER AND OTHERS (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

a licence for the sale of beer not to be consumed on the premises.

THE respondents obtained a rule nisi, calling on the appellant to show cause why an order of the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county of Lancashire allowing an appeal from a refusal by the licensing justices (the respondents) to renew the appellant's licence for the sale of beer to be consumed off the premises should not be set aside.

The material part of the case stated by the chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions was as follows :

1. The appellant is a grocer and beerseller at Barrow-in-Furness, in the county of Lancaster, and the respondents are the licensing justices for the licensing division of Barrow-in-Furness, in the said county.

2. The appellant has for several years been the holder of a justices' certificate and an excise licence to sell beer not to be consumed on the premises.

3. Prior to the general annual licensing meeting for the said division held on the 4th Sept. 1882 the appellant paid to the magistrates' clerk in the usual manner the fee for the renewal of his certificate.

4. The appellant was not required to attend, and did not attend, the said court in person, and no notice was served on him prior to the said meeting that his application would be opposed or refused.

5. At the said meeting the chairman publicly announced that applications for certificates to sell beer not to be consumed on the premises would be taken at the adjourned annual licensing meeting, to be held on the 29th Sept. 1882, but the appellant never had any intimation of such announcement.

6. The respondents held an adjourned meeting on the 29th Sept. 1882, but did not require the appellant to attend the said adjourned meeting, nor did they give him notice that his application would be opposed or refused; but certain persons, desiring to oppose the application, did serve on the appellant, eight days before the said adjourned meeting, a notice requiring him to attend the said meeting, and stating that the application would be opposed on the grounds that no requirement for such a licence existed in the neighbourhood.

7. The appellant attended the said adjourned meeting with his solicitor.

8. The respondents refused to hear the said persons who desired to oppose the appellant's application. The appellant tendered himself as a witness, and he and his solicitor addressed the respondents in support of his application.

9. The respondents (who are personally well acquainted with the district), without hearing any evidence, and refusing to hear the evidence either of the appellant himself or any of his witnesses, refused the certificate in the exercise of their discretion, on its being admitted that the defendant was a grocer.

10. The appellant appealed to the quarter sessions on the following among other grounds, as stated in his notice of appeal: That notice in writing of an intention to oppose or object to the renewal or grant of the said licence or certificate was not duly served upon the appellant seven days before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting. That the justices did not require the appellant's attendance. That the respondents refused to renew or grant the said licence or certificate without receiving evidence on oath. That if the respondents had the power to refuse to renew or grant the said licence or certificate, such power could only be exercised by them in respect of certain grounds personal to the appellant as such applicant; and no such grounds were stated or alleged. That the renewing or granting of the said licence would have been a convenience to the public and an accommodation to the neighbourhood, and that there was no sufficient cause or reason arising out of the applicant's character or conduct, or any other just and sufficient reason why such licence or certificate should not have been renewed or granted, and that such licence or certificate ought to have been renewed or granted, and ought not to have been refused, and that the refusal of the respondents to renew or grant the said licence or certificate as aforesaid was illegal, erroneous, and unjust.

11. At the quarter sessions the respondents contended (1) that there was no appeal from their decision; (2) that they had power to refuse the certificate notwithstanding the formalities of 35 & 36 Vict. c. 94, s. 42, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 49, s. 26 had not been observed; (3) that the notices given by the persons mentioned in the 6th paragraph of this case, and the attendance afterwards of the appellant in person in court were a sufficient compliance with the formalities directed by the said sections, but upon this point it was contended by the appellant that by reason of not receiving notice from the respondents requiring his attendance, he did not go prepared with the evidence of witnesses, and such other evidence as he would otherwise have done; (4) that if the said formalities had not been sufficiently observed, the appellant waived the non-observance of them by addressing the court in support of his application; (5) that the quarter sessions ought not to allow the appeal without hearing the case on the merits.

12. The Court of Quarter Sessions decided the first four points in the appellant's favour after hearing the evidence tendered by the appellant; and, having heard two witnesses for the respondents as to the requirements of the neighbourhood and refused to hear further evidence of the respondents to the like effect, allowed the appeal.

13. If the court is of opinion that there is no appeal to the Court of Quarter Sessions, then the decision of that court is to be reversed. If there is an appeal, and the respondents are wrong on any one of the second, third, fourth, or fifth contentions stated in the 11th paragraph, then the decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions is to stand.

By the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27):

Sect. 4. From and after the fifteenth of July, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine no licence or renewal of a licence for the sale by retail of beer, cider, or wine, or any of such articles under the provisions of any of the said recited Acts, shall (save as is in this Act otherwise provided) be granted except upon the production, and in pursuance of the authority of a certificate granted under this Act. Any licence granted or renewed in contravention of this enactment shall be void.

Sect. 8. All the provisions of the said Act of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, as to the terms upon which, and the manner in which, and the

Q.B. Div.]

DOWNING (app.) v. SCHNEIDER AND OTHERS (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

persons by whom grants of licences are to be made by the justices at the said general annual licensing meeting, and as to appeal from any act of any justice shall, so far as may be, have effect with regard to grants of certificates under this Act, subject to this qualification, that no application for a certificate under this Act, in respect of a licence to sell by retail, beer, cider, or wine, not to be consumed on the premises, shall be refused except upon one or more of the following grounds:

(1) That the applicant has failed to produce satisfactory evidence of good character.

(2) That the house or shop in respect of which a licence is sought, or any adjacent house or shop owned or occupied by the person applying for a licence, is of a disorderly character, or frequented by thieves, prostitutes, or persons of bad character.

(3) That the applicant, having previously held a licence for the sale of wine, spirits, beer, or cider, the same has been forfeited for his misconduct, or that he has, through misconduct, been at any time previously adjudged disqualified from receiving any such licence, or from selling any of the said articles.

(4) That the applicant, or the house in respect of which he applies, is not duly qualified as by law is required. Where an application for any such last-mentioned certificate is refused on the ground that the house in respect of which he applies is not duly qualified as by law is required, the judges shall specify in writing to the applicant the grounds of their decision.

By 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, it is enacted:

Sect. 27: That any person who shall think himself aggrieved by any act of any justice done in or concerning the execution of this Act may appeal against such act to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace holden for the county or place wherein the cause of such complaint shall have arisen, unless such session shall be holden within twelve days next after such act shall have been done, and in that case to the next subsequent session holden as aforesaid, and not afterwards; provided that such person shall give to such justice notice in writing of his intention to appeal, and of the cause and matter thereof, within five days next after such act shall have been done, and seven days at the least before such session, and shall within such five days enter into a recognisance with two sufficient sureties, before a justice acting in and for such county or place as aforesaid, conditioned to appear at the said session, and to try such appeal and to abide the judgment of the court thereupon, and to pay such costs as shall be by the court awarded; and, upon such notice being given and such recognisance being entered into, the justice before whom the same shall be entered into shall liberate such person if in custody for any offence in reference to which the act intended to be appealed against shall have been done; and the court at such session shall hear and determine the matter of such appeal, and shall make such order therein with or without costs as to the said court shall seem meet; and in case the act appealed against shall be the refusal to grant or to transfer any licence, and the judgment under which such act was done be reversed, it shall be lawful for the said court to grant or to transfer such licence in the same manner as if such licence had been granted at the general annual licensing meeting, or have been transferred at a special session; and the judgment of the said court shall be final and conclusive to all intents and purposes; and in case of the dismissal of such appeal or the affirmance of the judgment on which such act was done, and which was appealed against, the said court shall adjudge and order the said judgment to be carried into execution, and costs awarded to be paid, and shall, if necessary, issue process for enforcing such order, provided that no justice shall act in the hearing or determination of any appeal to the general or quarter sessions as aforesaid from any act done by him in or concerning the execution of this Act; provided also that when any cause of complaint shall have arisen within any liberty, county of a city, county of a town, city or town corporate, it shall be lawful for the person who shall think himself so as aforesaid aggrieved, to appeal against any such act as aforesaid, if he shall think fit, to the quarter sessions of the county within or adjoining to which such liberty or place shall be situate, subject to all the provisions hereinbefore contained.

A. L. Smith (Hannen with him) showed cause.—

It is a mistake to suppose that the Act of 1882 takes away the right of appeal from the licensing justices to the Court of Quarter Sessions, which has existed ever since the year 1823, when by 9 Geo. 4, 61, s. 27, an appeal is given to any person who thinks himself aggrieved by any act of the licensing justices. The effect of sect. 1 of the Act of 1882 is to extend the discretionary power of the justices in refusing licences for the sale of beer to be consumed off the premises beyond the grounds stated in 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, s. 8, sub-ss 1, 2, 3, and 4. Of course the justices must exercise a judicial discretion. I submit that this rule should be discharged. He cited

Jarmian v. Chatterton, 20 Ch. Div. 493;
Reg. v. Kay, 10 Q. B. Div. 213.

Poland and Shee in support of the rule.—The first section of the Act of 1882 gives an absolute discretion, and takes away all right of appeal. The words of the section are as wide as possible, and they must have some meaning. The intention of the Legislature was to place an absolute power in the licensing justices to refuse the licence. The tendency of all recent legislation on this matter has been in that direction.

POLLOCK, B.—This case has raised some questions of very general importance, but we shall abstain from expressing our opinion except upon the two points necessary for the determination of the case, and those two points are—first, whether the Court of Quarter Sessions had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal from the licensing justices; and secondly, if they have jurisdiction, whether they have properly heard the appeal on its merits. The first question depends upon the construction of several statutes, the first of which is 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, passed in the year 1823. By the 27th section of that statute an appeal to the Court of Quarter Sessions is given to any person who thinks himself aggrieved by any act of any justice done in or concerning the execution of the Act, and so the law remains to the present day, so far as regards those cases to which that Act applies. In the year 1869 the Wine and Beerhouse Act was passed (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), and by the 46th section it is provided that no licence or renewal of a licence for the sale by retail of beer, cider, or wine, or any of such articles, under the provisions of any of the recited Acts, shall (save as is in the Act otherwise provided) be granted, except upon the production and in pursuance of the authority of a certificate granted under the Act. The 8th section of that Act provides that the provisions of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, as to appeal, are to apply to licences granted under the Act of 1869; and the same section goes on to say that no application for a certificate in respect of a licence to sell by retail beer, cider, or wine not to be consumed on the premises shall be refused, except upon one or more of the grounds stated in the four sub-sections to that section. By the Beer Dealers' Retail Licences Act 1880 (43 Vict. c. 6), some of these restrictions on the discretion of the licensing justices were removed, and by the Beer Dealers' Retail Licences (Amendment) Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 34) a free and unqualified discretion was given to the justices either to refuse a certificate for any licence for the sale of beer by retail to be consumed off the premises, on any grounds appearing to them sufficient, or to grant a certificate to such persons as they, in the execution of their statutory powers, and in the exercise of their discretion, deem fit and proper. It is contended that by sect. 1 of that Act the right of appeal is also taken away, and the words of the section would seem to justify the observation; but I think they were used because, when the Bill was drafted, it was known that the intention was to do away with the restrictions that existed before the Act, on the discretion of the justices to refuse an off licence. I do not think the right of appeal that always existed was intended to be taken away or dealt with in any way. If that had been the intention I think that clear and explicit words would have been used. I think, therefore, there was a right of appeal, and I also think the Court of Quarter Sessions heard the appeal on its merits. That is the only decision we need give.

Q.B. Div.]

HENRY AND OTHERS (pets.) v. ARMITAGE (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

NORTH, J.—I am of the same opinion. The only question in the present case is whether the Act of 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 34) takes away the right of appeal to the Court of Quarter Sessions, which there clearly has been since the Act of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, and I do not think there are any words which do so. No doubt the Act of 1882 gives the licensing justices a larger discretion than they possessed before, but I see nothing which says that discretion is free from appeal. I think it is also clear that the court must adjudicate on the matter, and hear the case on the merits, and in this case I think the court did. Therefore the rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Tyas and Huntington, agents for Thompson, Barrow.

Solicitors for the respondent, Parkers, agents for Major, Barrow.

Nov. 29 and Dec. 20, 1882.

(Before FIELD and WILLIAMS, JJ.)

HENRY AND OTHERS (pets.) v. ARMITAGE (resp.). (a)

Municipal election—Nomination paper—Situation of property in respect of which nominating burgess is enrolled on burgess-roll—Municipal Elections Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 40), s. 1, sub-sect. 2, and sched. 1, form 2.

The Municipal Elections Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 40), s. 1, sub-sect. 2, enacts that at all municipal elections of councillors "the nomination paper . . . shall be in the form No. 2 set forth in the first schedule to this Act, or to the like effect."

Held, that these words are imperative, and not directory only.

A foot-note to form No. 2 of the first schedule to the Act directs "the situation of the property in respect of which the burgess subscribing is enrolled on the burgess-roll" to be placed after his signature to the nomination paper.

Where a burgess subscribing a nomination paper placed after his signature "6, Belle Vue Crescent," that being the place where he was living, while his qualification on the burgess-roll was "houses in succession, 6, Belle Vue Crescent and Linden Terrace:"

Held, that the nomination paper was not in the form set forth in the schedule to the Act, or to the like effect, and was therefore invalid.

This was a special case stated for the opinion of the court pursuant to an order of Williams, J. of Dec. 20, 1881, made in a petition presented by John Henry, Thomas Ray, James Paxton, and John Thomas Brignall, under the Municipal Elections Acts 1872 and 1875, praying that the election of the respondent John Armitage, for the Pallion Ward, in the borough of Sunderland, holden on Nov. 1, 1881, might be declared void.

The special case was as follows:

1. The borough of Sunderland, in the county of Durham, is divided into nine wards, one of which is called Pallion Ward, and the election of a councillor for the said ward was appointed to be holden on the 1st Nov. in the year of our Lord, 1881. William Moore Skinner, of 16, Belle Vue Crescent, Sunderland, a solicitor, and John Armitage, of Pallion Farm, Sunderland, were respectively candidates for the office of councillor for the said ward, and the said John Armitage has been declared to be duly elected in the manner hereinafter appearing.

2. The said William Moore Skinner, and the said John Armitage were the only persons nominated, as hereinafter appears, as candidates at the said election for the said ward.

3. On the 22nd Oct. 1881, both the nomination papers hereinafter set out and marked respectively "A." and "B." in the schedule hereto, were delivered to the town clerk of the said borough at thirteen minutes before five o'clock in the afternoon, being at least seven days before the day of election, and the said town clerk immediately after the receipt of the said nomination papers, gave notice to the said William Moore Skinner that he had been nominated as a candidate for such election as aforesaid.

4. The following is a copy of the first of the said nomination papers delivered as aforesaid, which is annexed to this case, and marked "A." in the schedule hereto:

NOMINATION PAPER—BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.
Election of councillor for Pallion Ward, in the said borough, to be held on the 1st day of November, 1881.

We, the undersigned, being respectively enrolled burgesses for Pallion ward, in the said borough, hereby nominate the following person as a candidate at the said election:

Surname	Other Names	Abode	Description
Skinner	Wm. Moore	No. 16, Belle Vue Crescent, Tunstall-lane	Solicitor

638. 1. John Young, of * 6, Belle Vue Crescent.

(Signed) Reg. No. 638.

2. William Cuggy, of * No. 25, Potts Street.

241.

We, the undersigned, being respectively enrolled burgesses for the said ward, do hereby assent to the nomination of the above person as a candidate at the said election.

second

Dated this twenty-sixth day of October 1881.

(Signed)

1. George Robson Wayman, of * 8, Belle Vue Road.

Reg. No. 649.

2. Thomas J. Baker, of * 15 Belle Vue Road.

Reg. No. 646.

3. David Hastings, of * Holmlands.

Reg. No. 652.

4. Joseph Simpson, of * 25, Hume Street.

No. 317.

5. Thomas Harbottle, of * 17, Hume Street.

No. 311.

6. John Thomas Brignall, of * Willow Pond Terrace.

No. 291.

[Q.B. Div.]

HENRY AND OTHERS (pets.) v. ARMITAGE (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

7. G. McHenry, of * 21, Washington Street.
No. 190.
8. James Stephenson, of * 25, Bell Street.
No. 153.

* The number on the Burgess Roll of the burgess subscribing, with the situation of the property in respect of which he is enrolled on the Burgess Roll.

N.B.—Only one person must be nominated by this paper.

5. The nomination paper set out in the last preceding paragraph of this case, and marked "A." in the schedule hereto was, immediately after the receipt thereof, indorsed as follows:

Delivered by Mr. Skinner, the candidate, at 4.47 this Saturday the 22nd Oct. 1881. Notice of nomination given him at same time.—F. M. B. Objections by Mr. John Armitage, annexed, allowed. Wm. WILSON, Mayor, 24th Oct. 1881.

The said initials "F. M. B." are the initials of Francis Marshall Bowey, the deputy town clerk, who was acting as town clerk on the said 22nd day of Oct. 1881.

6. The following is a copy of the second of the said nomination papers, delivered as aforesaid, which is annexed to this case, and marked "B." in the schedule hereto:

NOMINATION PAPER—BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

Election of councillor for Pallion Ward, in the said borough, to be held on the first day of November 1881.

We, the undersigned, being respectively enrolled burgesses for Pallion Ward, in the said borough, hereby nominate the following person as a candidate at the said election:

Surname	Other Names	Abode	Description
Skinner	William Moore	Belle Vue Crescent	Solicitor

(Signed) { 1. Thomas Ray, of * 25 St. Luke's Road.
2. John Lynn, of * 21 St. Luke's Road.

We, the undersigned, being respectively enrolled burgesses for the said ward, do hereby assent to the nomination of the above person as a candidate at the said election.

Dated this day of 188

(Signed),

- 210 1. Wm. B. Robson, of * 52, 53 Washington Street.
178 2. John Landerdale, of * 2 Washington Street.
50 3. George Wate, of * No. 1 East Moor Road.
189 4. John Mitchell, of * 20 Washington Street.
277 5. John Henry, of * No. 1 North Rutland Street.
24 12 24 6. James Bambridge, of * No. 14 St. Luke's Road.
319 7. Henry Biddall, of * No. 27 Hume Street.
314 315 8. James Paxton, of * 21½ Hume Street.

* The number on the Burgess Roll of the burgess subscribing, with the situation of the property in respect of which he is enrolled on the Burgess Roll.

N.B.—Only one person must be nominated by this paper.

7. The nomination paper set out in the last preceding paragraph of this case, and marked "B." in the schedule hereto, was, immediately after the receipt thereof, indorsed as follows:

Delivered by Mr. William Moore Skinner, the candidate, at 4.47 this Saturday, the 22nd October 1881. Notice of nomination given him at same time.—F. M. B. Objections by Mr. John Armitage, annexed, allowed.

Wm. Wilson, Mayor.

24th October 1881.

The said initials, "F. M. B." aforesaid, are the initials of Francis Marshall Bowey, the deputy town clerk, who was acting as town clerk on the said 22nd day of October 1881.

8. On the 24th Oct. 1881, William Wilson, Esquire, the mayor of the said borough, attended at the Town Hall in the said borough, between the hours of two and four in the afternoon, for the purpose of deciding on the validity of objections to nomination papers, and the said John Armitage, on the said 24th day of October, objected in writing to the first of the said nomination papers. The following is a copy of the objection to the first of the said nomination papers, marked "A." in the schedule hereto, which first objection paper is annexed to this case, and marked "C." in the schedule hereto:

BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

Election of councillor for Pallion Ward, in the said borough, appointed to be held on the first day of November 1881.

I, the undersigned, being duly entitled to attend the proceedings for nomination of candidates at this election, do object, for the reasons hereunder mentioned, to the nomination paper of William Moore Skinner (proposer, John Young; seconder, William Cugby).

Dated this twenty-fourth day of November (a) 1881.

Name—JOHN ARMITAGE.

Address—Pallion Farm.

To the Mayor,

My reasons for objecting to such nomination paper are—that section 1, sub-section 2, and Schedule 1, Form 2, of 38 & 39 Victoria, chapter 40, have not been complied with, inasmuch as (1) the nomination paper does not state the surname and other names of the person nominated, as required by the said section 1, sub-section 2 of the said Act; and also, inasmuch as (2) the situation of the property in respect of which John Young, the proposer in the said nomination paper, is enrolled on the burgess roll has not been set out in the said nomination paper, as required by the note to Schedule 1, Form 2 of the above Act.

(Mather v. Brown, 45 L. J. 547.)

I allow the above objections.

Wm. WILSON, Mayor.

24th October 1881.

9. At the same time and place the said John Armitage objected in writing to the said second of the said nomination papers marked "B" in the schedule hereto. The following is a copy of the objection to the second of the said nomination papers marked "B" in the schedule hereto, which second objection paper is annexed to this case, and marked "D." in the schedule hereto:

BOROUGH OF SUNDERLAND.

Election of councillor for Pallion Ward, in the said borough, appointed to be held on the first day of November, 1881.

I, the undersigned, being duly entitled to attend the proceedings for nomination of candidates at this election, do object for the reasons hereunder mentioned to the nomination paper of William Moore Skinner (proposer, Thomas Ray; seconder, John Lynn).

Dated this twenty-fourth day of October 1881.

Name—JOHN ARMITAGE.

Address—Pallion Farm.

To the Mayor,

My reasons for objecting to such nomination paper are, that section 1, sub-section 2, and Schedule 1, Form 2 of 38 & 39 Victoria, chapter 40, have not been complied with, inasmuch as (1) the nomination paper is not dated as required by Schedule 1, Form 2 of the said Act, and (2) the situation of the property in respect of which John Lynn, the seconder of the said nomination paper, is enrolled on the burgess-roll, has not been set out in the nomination paper as required by the note to Schedule 1, Form 2, of the said Act.

(Mather v. Brown, 45 L. J. 547.)

I allow the above objections.

Wm. WILSON, Mayor.

24th Oct. 1881.

10. The said William Moore Skinner is a solicitor, in practice in Sunderland.

The following is a copy of the entry of the name and qualification of John Young aforesaid, in the burgess-roll:

638—Young, John, 6, Belle Vue Crescent, houses in succession, 6, Belle Vue Crescent, and Linden Terrace.

(a) Sic.

[Q.B. Div.]

HENRY AND OTHERS (pets.) v. ARMITAGE (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

The said John Young had occupied the said premises in succession, and the said John Young was, at the time when the said nomination paper was signed, and had been ever since December 1880, in actual occupation of and rated for the premises, 6, Belle Vue crescent, aforesaid.

11. The following is a copy of the entry of the name and qualification of John Lynn aforesaid in the burgess-roll :

21—Lynn, John, Monkwearmouth, workshops in succession, Saint Luke's Road and Ropery Road.

The said John Lynn had occupied the said premises in succession, and at the time when the said nomination paper was signed, the said John Lynn was and had been ever since Dec. 1880, in actual occupation of and rated for the premises in St. Luke's-road aforesaid.

12. The said William Wilson, Esq., the mayor of the said borough, allowed the said objections of the said John Armitage to both of the said nomination papers, and the said John Armitage was declared duly elected as councillor for the said Pallion Ward, as being, according to the decision of the said William Wilson, the only candidate duly nominated for the said ward.

13. The petitioners thereupon in due course duly petitioned against the said return, praying that it might be determined that the said John Armitage was not duly elected, and that the said election of the said John Armitage was void.

A copy of the said petition is annexed to this case and marked "E."

14. A copy of the burgess-roll of the said Pallion Ward of the said borough of Sunderland, for the year 1881-1882, as finally settled in the month of Oct. 1881, is to be taken as part of this case, and is marked "F."

The question for the consideration of the court is—

Whether the mayor was right in the circumstances above-mentioned in deciding that the said William Moore Skinner was not duly nominated.

If the decision of the said mayor was wrong, the election of the said John Armitage is to be declared void.

If the decision of the said mayor was right, this petition is to be dismissed, and the court may make such further order as to them shall seem meet.

The 2nd sub-section of the Municipal Elections Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 40), s. 1, is as follows :

(2) At any such election every candidate shall be nominated in writing; the writing shall be subscribed by two enrolled burgesses of such borough or ward as proposer and seconder, and by eight other enrolled burgesses of such borough or ward as assenting to the nomination. Each candidate shall be nominated by a separate nomination paper, but the same burgesses, or any of them, may subscribe as many nomination papers as there are vacancies to be filled, but no more. Every person nominated shall be enrolled on the burgess roll of the borough, or a person whose name is inserted in the separate list at the end of the burgess-roll, as provided by section three of the Act thirty-two and thirty-three Victoria, chapter fifty-five, and shall be otherwise qualified to be elected. The nomination paper shall state the surname and other names of the person nominated, with his place of abode and description, and shall be in the form No. 2 set forth in the first schedule to this Act, or to the like effect. And the town clerk shall provide nomination papers, and shall supply any enrolled burgess with as many nomination papers as may be required, and shall, at the request of any such person, fill up a nomination paper in the manner prescribed by this Act.

And Form No. 2 of the First Schedule is :

NOMINATION PAPER.

Borough of . Election of Councillors, Auditors, or Assessors for . Ward, in the said Borough, to be held on the . day of . 18 .

We, the undersigned, being respectively enrolled burgesses, hereby nominate the following person as a candidate at the said election :

Surname.	Other names.	Abode.	Description.

(Signed) A. B., of *

C. D., of *

We, the undersigned, being respectively enrolled burgesses, do hereby assent to the nomination of the above person as a candidate at the said election.

Dated this . day of . 18 .

(Signed) E. F., of *

G. H., of *

I. J., of *

K. L., of *

M. N., of *

O. P., of *

Q. R., of *

S. T., of *

* The number on the burgess-roll of the burgess subscribing with the situation of the property in respect of which he is enrolled on the burgess-roll.

MacOlymont for the petitioners.—The objections to these nomination papers ought not to have been allowed. This sub-section (38 & 39 Vict. c. 40, s. 1, sub-sect. 2) is directory only, and not strictly imperative. To decide whether a statute is directory or otherwise it is necessary to look at the intention of the Legislature: (Reg. v. The Mayor of Rochester 7 E. & B. 910.) The intention of the Legislature here was to secure the identification of the subscribing burgesses. This is sufficiently done in the nomination papers in question. When this object has been secured the section is for the rest merely directory. This is the ratio decidendi of Reg. v. Bradley (3 E. & E. 634) and Mather v. Brown (34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 869; L. Rep. 1 C. P. 659), in the former of which it was decided that the Christian name of William was sufficiently set out by its contraction Wm., inasmuch as it was a contraction ordinarily written for William; while in the latter it was held that a representation of a Christian name by its initial was a fatal misnomer. In Soper v. The Mayor of Basingstoke (36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 468; L. Rep. 2 C. P. Div. 440) Denman, J. says: "All that is required by the Act is that the person should be identified, which is to be done by his name, his number upon the burgess roll, and the situation of the property in respect of which he is enrolled, being set out," and the property being described as situate in H. Street, which was the former name of W. Street, in which the property was situate, the misdescription was held to be immaterial. In Gothard v. Clarke (42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 776; 5 C. P. Div. 253) the number of one of the nominators on the burgess-roll was wrongly given, and that objection was held to be valid, inasmuch as the mistake prevented the identification of the nominator. In this case it was possible to refer to the burgess-roll; the identification of the burgess subscribing was complete, and the omission of his former residence immaterial, and there is, therefore, no substantial ground for holding that the nomination paper is insufficient.

Q.B. Div.]

HENRY AND OTHERS (pets.) v. ARMITAGE (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Atherley Jones for the respondent.—In Soper v. The Mayor of Basingstoke (ubi sup.) the special case stated that H. Street was the name by which the street in question was generally known, its name having been very recently changed, and that no one could be misled by its being called H. Street; and the decision of the court was based on the fact that “the description H. Street was true in every material sense.” The case of Clarke v. Gothard (ubi sup.) shows the strictness with which the requirements of this section must be observed. Lopes, J. in that case actually supposed a case such as the present in support of his judgment. “Again,” he asks, “if the insertion of the number on the burgess-roll of the burgess subscribing may be dispensed with, why may not ‘the situation of the property in respect of which he is enrolled on the burgess-roll be omitted, and his mere ordinary signature be sufficient?’ Here ‘the situation of the property, in respect of which the subscribing burgess is enrolled’ is not set out. The Act, therefore, is not complied with, and the omission is fatal.”

MacOlymont in reply.

FIELD, J.—This is a question which arises under the 2nd sub-section of the 1st section of the Municipal Elections Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 40). That Act followed the Ballot Act of 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33) in making a nomination necessary, and this special case is stated by order of my learned brother Williams on a petition praying this court to set aside a decision of the Mayor of Sunderland, allowing objections to the validity of two nomination papers, and pronouncing them insufficient to meet the requirements of the statute. The principal section in this case is the 1st section of the Act of 1875. This provides a scheme for the nomination and election of members of town councils. The scheme is that in the first place nine days before the election the town clerk must issue notices in the form No. 1 set forth in the first schedule to the Act. Then nomination papers in writing must be delivered to the town clerk by a particular day, subscribed by two enrolled burgesses as proposer and seconder, and by eight others as assentors, and the nomination paper must contain the surname and other names of the candidate, with his place of abode and description, and is to be in a form given in the schedule to the Act. Now, in the present case the objection raised is, that the nomination paper does not state the situation of the property, in respect of which the burgess subscribing the paper, as proposer, is entered on the burgess-roll and entitled to propose a candidate. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine the exact words of the section. The important words are these: “The nomination paper shall state the surname and other names of the person nominated, with his place of abode and description, and shall be in the form No. 2 set forth in the first schedule to this Act, or to the like effect.” Now, there cannot be stronger words than the words “shall be.” Then form No 2 in the schedule places the initials A. B. and C. D. and the rest to represent the signatures of the proposer and seconder, and eight assentors, and after each A. B. and C. D. is placed the word “of,” and opposite each set of initials, and after the word “of” is an asterisk referring to a note below at the end of the form, which is “the number on the burgess roll of the burgess subscribing, with the situation of the property, in respect of which he is enrolled on the burgess roll.” In this case it happened that one of the assentors, George Robson Wayman, filled up that part of the nomination paper beginning “We the undersigned,” and he did so by inserting the names of eight persons with their addresses, the word “of” leading him to suppose that he was to put in the address, a mistake very easy to fall into, more especially as in the form prescribed in the Parliamentary Act (35 & 36 Vict. c. 33, sched. 2) the note placed at the foot of this form is not to be found, and the address would be properly inserted. But, however it occurred, in the case of the proposer, John Young, after the asterisk, came “6, Belle Vue-crescent,” that being the place where he was living; but, as it happened, he had not lived at 6, Belle Vue-crescent long enough to get a title, and his qualification on the burgess-roll was “houses in succession, 6, Belle Vue-crescent and Linden-terrace.” Only a part, therefore, and not the whole, of his title was set out in the nomination paper, and it is said that the paper is insufficient, inasmuch as he did not state the qualification in respect of which he was enrolled. It was contended on the part of the petitioners that the words were only directory, and that an omission to comply with a note, which is merely directory, did not vitiate the nomination paper. Now, where the mayor decides against an objection and holds a thing to be good, his decision is conclusive; but where he allows the objection, and holds a thing to be bad, there is an appeal to this court. In this case the mayor allowed the objection, and held the nomination paper bad, and declared the other candidate elected as being alone duly nominated. I cannot alter the decision of the mayor. I should be glad to do so if I could, because the objection to the validity of the paper is purely technical; but in point of law, when it comes to be a question as to whether I can hold the words to be merely directory, I am bound to support it. It is always a difficult question to decide as to whether a part of an enactment is directory or not. I have searched to see if I could find that any principle had been laid down, but I cannot find any. I know indeed a number of cases in which words have been decided to be directory, as for instance in the Rochester case (Reg. v. The Mayor of Rochester, 7 E. & B. 910), in which the court held that the provisions of the Municipal Corporation Reform Act (as. 15 to 22), as to the time at which the burgess-lists were to be revised, were directory only, and that they could issue a mandamus to revise them after the 15th Oct. But if the enactments in that case had not been held to be directory only, the voters would have been disenfranchised without redress owing to negligence over which they had no control. That could not have been the intention of the Legislature, and it was therefore obviously expedient to issue a mandamus. But I can only hold words to be directory when I can see that it must have been the meaning of the Legislature that they should be so. In this case I cannot see that this was the intention. I do not know for what reason the Legislature for the first time inserted this provision, but they did insert it. I have no doubt that the mistake arose in the way I have pointed out, and I can quite see the truth of the

Q.B. Div.]

FRECHEVILLE (app.) v. SOUDEN AND OTHERS (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

suggestion that by turning to the register it is possible to find all the information that can be wanted. But the Legislature says that it must be put into the nomination paper, and that persons requiring information must not be sent to the register, but must be able to find it on the nomination paper. I should have come to this conclusion on a consideration of the principle involved, and on the words of the Act; but my opinion is greatly strengthened by the case of Gothard and others v. Clarke and others (42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 776; 5 O. P. Div. 253). In that case the number on the burgess-roll of one of the nominators was wrongly given in the nomination paper; nothing turned on the number, and there was the same difficulty as in the present case of finding any practical reason in support of the objection. Nevertheless the Divisional Court decided that the nomination paper was bad, and Lopes, J., while giving the reasons for his decision in that case, happened to refer to the very point which we are now considering, and he there says: "I think the decision of the mayor was right We are asked to hold that the provisions of the Act are directory only, and impose no obligation If the insertion on the burgess-roll of the burgess subscribing may be dispensed with, why may not the situation of the property in respect of which he is enrolled on the burgess-roll be omitted, and his mere ordinary signature be sufficient? In this way the whole note to the schedule would be frittered away, and the security provided by the Legislature for the identification of the subscribing burgesses be destroyed." The point so suggested is the point with which we have now to deal, and with considerable regret I am obliged to come to the conclusion that I cannot reverse the decision of the mayor, and that he was right in holding that this nomination was insufficient to comply with the requirements of the statute.

WILLIAMS, J.—I have, not without doubt, arrived at the same conclusion, but I cannot but think that the failure to fill up this nomination paper in the manner prescribed by the Act was careless and perfunctory. Why, with the printed form before them, and the printed note to which the asterisk refers, those who filled up the form should not have inserted the situation of the property in respect of which the assessor was enrolled on the burgess-roll, I do not know. I have no regret, therefore, in supporting the decision at which the mayor arrived in this case.

Judgment for the respondents.

Solicitor for the petitioners, T. Balfour Allan.

Solicitors for the respondents, Johnson and Weatherall, agents for Bowey and Brewis, Sunderland.

Tuesday, April 17, 1883.

(Before FIELD and MATHEW, JJ.)

FRECHEVILLE (app.) v. SOUDEN AND OTHERS (resps.). (a)

Mine—"Skip" or open box—Miners using skip without cover—Offence—Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 77), s. 23, sub-sect. 11, s. 31.

By sect. 23, sub-sect. 11, of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act 1872, a sufficient cover overhead shall be used when lowering or raising persons in every working shaft, with certain exceptions.

By the last clause of sect. 23 every person who contravenes or does not comply with any of the general rules in this section shall be guilty of an offence against this Act.

By sect. 31, every person employed in or about a mine, other than an owner or agent, who is guilty of any act or omission which, in the case of an owner or agent, would be an offence against this Act, shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and is rendered liable to a penalty.

S. and others were working miners in the D. mine. The D. mine had two shafts, in one of which was a man engine, with a proper cover, used to lower miners from and raise them to the surface of the mine. In the other was a "skip" or open box, without a cover, used for raising ores and refuse. S. and certain other miners, who were then at the bottom of the mine, while the man engine and "skip" were both at work, got into the "skip," and were raised to the surface of the mine.

Held, that they were guilty of an offence against the Act.

THIS was a case stated by certain justices of the peace for the county of Cornwall, sitting at Camborne, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. The material parts thereof were as follows:

An information was preferred by the appellant against the respondents under sect. 23, sub-sect. 11, of 35 & 36 Vict. c. 77, for that they the respondents being respectively miners at a certain mine situate in the parish of Camborne, in the county of Cornwall, and commonly known as the "Dolcoath Mine," did, on the 9th Oct. 1882, ride in a skip without a sufficient cover overhead, when being raised in a working shaft of the said mine, contrary to sub-sect. 11 aforesaid.

The respondents were working miners employed underground in Dolcoath Mine. They used to be lowered to their work and raised again to the surface on a properly constructed man engine in a shaft used only for that purpose. Ores and refuse were raised to the surface in a skip or open box in another shaft of the mine.

The respondents were aware that the man engine was the only proper means of their being raised to or lowered from the surface.

The skip was under the charge of a workman, called the "lander," whose station was at the mouth of the shaft, and whose duty it was to cause the engine-man to lower the skip, and to cause him to raise it on receiving a signal from below. Men coming up on the man engine were in safety, but men coming up in the skip would be exposed to great danger.

On the 9th Oct. 1882, whilst the man engine was at work and the skip was at the bottom of the shaft, also at work, the "lander" received the signal to raise the skip. The respondents got into it and came up in it. The shaft in question was not worked by a windlass, and the respondents were not working about the pump or any work of repair in the shaft, and there was no exemption given by the inspector of the district, and the skip had no cover overhead.

Q.B. Div.] DYSON AND OTHERS (apps.) v. THE GREETLAND LOCAL BOARD (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

The justices refused to convict, being of opinion that the sub-section did not apply to working miners, but only to the agents of the mine, and dismissed the summons, subject to a case for the opinion of the court.

By sect. 23, sub-sect. 11 of 35 & 36 Vict. c. 77 :

A sufficient cover overhead shall be used when lowering or raising persons in every working shaft, except where it is worked by a windlass, or where the person is employed about the pump or some work of repair in the shaft, or where a written exemption is given by the inspector of the district.

By the last clause of sect. 23 :

Every person who contravenes or does not comply with any of the general rules in this section shall be guilty of an offence against this Act, and in the event of any contravention of or non-compliance with any of the said general rules in the case of any mine to which this Act applies, by any person whomsoever, being proved, the owner and agent of such mine shall each be guilty of an offence against this Act, unless he proves that he had taken all reasonable means by publishing, and to the best of his power enforcing, the said rules as regulations for the working of the mine to prevent such contravention or non-compliance.

By sect. 31 :

Every person employed in or about a mine, other than an owner or agent, who is guilty of any act or omission which in the case of an owner or agent would be an offence against this Act, shall be deemed to be guilty of an offence against this Act.

Every person who is guilty of an offence against this Act shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding, if he is an owner or agent, twenty pounds, and if he is any other person, two pounds, for each offence; and if an inspector has given written notice of any such offence, to a further penalty not exceeding one pound for every day after such notice that such offence continues to be committed.

Mackey for the appellant.—Sub-sect. 11 of sect. 23 applies to working mines. The Act was passed to prevent accidents in miners, and it is for their protection that the cover is wanted. Hence the respondents have committed an offence against the Act, and are liable to the penalties provided by sect. 31.

The respondents did not appear.

FIELD, J.—This case raises an important question. I am of opinion that the magistrates have taken a wrong view of the law. The case turns upon the proper construction of the Metal-liferous Mines Regulation Act 1872. That Act contains very careful regulations for the purpose of avoiding danger to persons engaged in mines, and to others who, though not actually engaged in mines, are engaged about them. The respondents are charged with an act or omission that is made an offence by sect. 31 [the learned Judge read the section]. This section creates the offence. The act or omission of which they are guilty lay in not observing the provisions of sect. 23, sub-sect. 11 [the learned Judge read the sub-section]. Now the charge here is that the respondents, while being raised from the bottom of the shaft, did ride in a skip without using sufficient cover overhead. Is this an offence? The respondents are not owners or agents. The magistrates thought that the offence could only be in the owner or agent, and they were led to this conclusion by the last words of sect. 23. But this section makes two sets of persons liable: first, every person who contravenes or does not comply with any of the general rules in this section (sect. 23); and next, the owner and agent of such mine, unless he proves that he took all reasonable means of publishing and enforcing such rules. Therefore the section is not limited to owners and agents. It would be very dangerous so to limit it. Mines are to be worked in accordance with certain rules enforced by penalties, and the intention of the Act is to enforce those rules upon everybody.

MATHEW, J.—I am of the same opinion. The final clause of sect. 23 has made the case clear. I think the magistrates took a wrong view.

Case remitted with the above opinion.

Solicitors for the appellant, Gregory, Bowcliffe, and Co., for Smith and Paul, Truro.

April 17 and 19, 1883.

(Before FIELD and MATHEW, JJ.)

DYSON AND OTHERS (apps.) v. THE GREETLAND LOCAL BOARD (resps.). (a)

Highway—Urban district—Part of parish excluded—Repairs of highways in excluded part—Rates for—Amount—Highway Act 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50), ss. 5, 29—Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 144, 216, 217.

By sect 29 of the Highway Act 1835, no highway rate to be levied or assessed shall exceed at any one time the sum of 10*d.* in the pound, or 2*s.* 6*d.* in the pound in the whole in any one year, without the consent of four-fifths of the inhabitants assembled at a specially called meeting. By sect. 216 of the Public Health Act 1875, where parts of a district are not rated for works of paving, water supply, and sewerage, or for some of them, the cost of repair of highways in those parts shall be defrayed out of a highway rate to be separately assessed and levied in those parts by the urban authority as surveyor of highways; provided that where part of a parish is included within an urban district, and the excluded part was, before the constitution of that district, liable to contribute to the highway rates for such parish, such excluded part shall, for all highway purposes, be treated as forming part of such district. The hamlet of G. was formerly a "parish" maintaining its own highways. Prior to 1875 part of the hamlet was formed into a local government district, called the Inner District, with a local board, and became an urban district under the Public Health Act 1875. Part of the hamlet, called the Outer District, was excluded from it. The local board of the inner district repaired the highways in the outer district, and separately assessed a rate of 3*s.* 4*d.* in the pound on the inhabitants of the outer district, without first obtaining the consent of four-fifths of them. The appellants objected to the validity of the rate. Held (affirming the decision of Quarter Sessions), that the consent of four fifths of the inhabitants of the outer district was rendered unnecessary by sect. 216 of the Public Health Act 1875, and that the rate was valid.

This was a special case stated by the Court of

(a) Reported by W. P. EVERSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at Law.

Q.B. Div.] DYSON AND OTHERS (apps.) v. THE GREETLAND LOCAL BOARD (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

Quarter Sessions for the West Riding of the county of York, pursuant to the provisions of the Public Health Act 1875. The material facts appearing therein were as follows:

In March 1865 the Local Government Act 1858 was, by order of a Secretary of State, adopted within part of the hamlet of Greetland, in the parish of Halifax, and called the Inner District. The district so constituted a local government district was, at the time of making the rate hereinafter mentioned, an urban district, and the respondents were the local board of health of the said urban district.

The other part of the hamlet of Greetland, called the Outer District, was excluded by the said order from the operation thereof, and came under the jurisdiction of the rural sanitary authority of the Halifax Union for sanitary purposes.

The appellants were occupiers of lands and tenements within the outer district.

The outer district had not been formed into a separate highway district, nor included in any highway district under the Highway Acts.

The hamlet of Greetland was part of a parish within the meaning of sects. 5 and 29 of the Highway Act 1835.

The respondents, pursuant to their powers, borrowed money for works of water supply and sewerage within the inner district, the expenses of which were defrayed out of the general district rate.

In Dec. 1830 the respondents laid a highway rate of 2s. 6d. in the pound over the outer district, and as the sums thereby produced were not sufficient for the payment of the expense of the highways in the said district, in Nov. 1881 they issued a notice calling a special meeting of the Greetland Local Board for the purpose of laying a rate of 3s. 4d. in the pound upon property assessable thereto in Outer Greetland, but which is included in the district of the said board for highway purposes, and this notice was posted in Inner Greetland.

On the 5th Dec. 1881 the special meeting was held, and a highway rate of 3s. 4d. in the pound was resolved on, and notice thereof was duly given and posted.

Except as aforesaid, no notice of a meeting specially called for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the inhabitants of the outer district, who contribute to the said highway rate, was given by the respondents, nor was any such meeting held, nor was any consent of the inhabitants given to the said rate. There was no vestry or vestry meeting in the said outer or excluded part.

Towards payment of the said rate of 3s. 4d. in the pound, the appellants were rated and assessed in respect of property situate in the outer district, and payment of the amount of their respective assessments was demanded of them. The appellants gave notice of appeal against the said rate, and the appeal was heard at the General Quarter Sessions in and for the West Riding of York in April 1882.

On behalf of the appellants it was contended that the said rate was improperly made and laid, and was invalid. The Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the rate subject to a case for the opinion of this court.

If the court was of opinion that the said rate was properly made, then the said order should be confirmed; but, if otherwise, then the said order should be quashed.

By sect. 5 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50:

The word "parish" shall be construed to include parish, township . . . hamlet . . . or any other place or district maintaining its own highways; and whenever anything in this Act is prescribed to be done by the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, the same shall be construed to extend to any meeting of inhabitants contributing to the highway rates in places where there shall be no vestry meeting, provided the same notice shall have been given of the said meeting as would be required by law for the assembling of a meeting in vestry; . . . and the word "inhabitant" shall be understood to include any person rated to the highway rate.

By sect. 29:

That every rate shall contain the names of the occupiers, the description of the premises or property they occupy, and the full annual value of such premises or property, and shall also specify the sum in the pound at which it is made; and no rate to be levied or assessed as aforesaid shall exceed at any one time the sum of 10d. in the pound, or the sum of 2s. 6d. in the pound in the whole in any one year; provided nevertheless, that with the consent of four-fifths of the inhabitants of any parish contributing to the highway rate assembled at a meeting specially called for that purpose . . . the rate to be levied and assessed as aforesaid may be increased to such sum as the said inhabitants so assembled may think proper.

By sect. 144 of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55:

Every urban authority shall within their district, exclusively of any other person, execute the office of and be surveyor of highways, &c.

By sect. 216:

In any urban district, where the expenses under this Act of the urban authority are charged and defrayed out of the district fund and general district rates, and no other mode of providing for repair of highways is directed by any local Act, the cost of repair of highways shall be defrayed as follows: (that is to say),

(1.) Where the whole of the district is rated for works of paving, water supply, and sewerage, or for works for such of these purposes as are provided for in the district, the cost of repair of highways shall be defrayed out of the general district rate:

(2.) Where parts of the district are not rated for works of paving, water supply, and sewerage, or for such of these purposes as are provided for in the district, the cost of repair of highways in those parts shall be defrayed out of a highway rate to be separately assessed and levied in those parts by the urban authority as surveyor of highways, and the cost of such repair in the residue of the district shall be defrayed out of the general district rate.

Provided that where part of a parish is included within an urban district, and the excluded part was, before the constitution of that district, liable to contribute to the highway rates for such parish, such excluded part shall . . . for all purposes connected with the repairs of highways and the payment of highway rates, be considered to be and be treated as forming part of such district.

By sect. 217:

It shall not be necessary for the urban authority, in the case of any highway rate made by them, to do the following acts or any of them; (that is to say,) To lay such rate before any justices, or obtain their allowance; to annex thereto the signatures of such urban authority; to lay the same before the parishioners assembled in vestry; to verify before any justices any accounts kept by them of such highway rates; and all such accounts shall be audited in all respects in the same way as the other accounts of the urban authority.

F. O. Crump for the respondents.—This rate is a valid rate. The local board repair the highways in Outer Greetland, and assess the district for the expenses of repairing them. By sect. 144 of the Public Health Act 1875 the urban authority execute the office of surveyor of highways. By sect. 216 Outer Greetland is to form part of the urban district of Inner Greetland for highway purposes; therefore the local board, as surveyor of highways, can levy a rate on the inhabitants of Outer Greetland, in the same way as they can on the inhabitants of Inner Greetland. Sub-sect. 2 is expressly applicable. The consent of the inhabitants is unnecessary. Sect. 29 of the Highway Act 1835 does not apply, as the Act of 1875 has rendered it obsolete. Sect. 5 of the Act of 1835 defines a "parish" to be a place maintaining its own highways. In this case the local board maintain the highways in Outer Greetland, and so sect. 29 of the Act of 1835 is not applicable. Here there is a perfect machinery under one Act to regulate the assessing and levying of highway rates; it is unnecessary, and would be confusing, to have to look back to the Act of 1835 to find out what the method is.

Q.B. Div.] DYSON AND OTHERS (apps.) v. THE GREETLAND LOCAL BOARD (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

Meadows-White, Q.C. and H. T. Atkinson for the appellants.—This rate is bad. It exceeds 10d. in the pound, and the previous consent of the inhabitants of Outer Greetland has not been obtained under sect. 29 of the Highway Act 1835. Sub-sect. 2 of sect. 216 of the Public Health Act 1875 relates to the rates to be levied; the highway rates of the outer district are to be separately levied. Then, to find out the mode of levying them, the Highway Act 1835, must be looked at, and there it is found that if a higher rate than 10d. in the pound at any one time is required, the consent of four-fifths of the inhabitants in a specially called meeting must first be obtained. The urban authority, therefore, wishing to levy a rate of 3s. 4d. in the pound, ought to have called a meeting of the inhabitants; then the provisions of sect. 217 of the Act of 1875 would apply. The machinery provided by the Highway Act 1835 for passing the surveyor's accounts is set out in sects. 39, 40, 42 and 44: "accounts" include assessments:

Rea v. The Justices of Yorkshire, 6 B. & C. 152.

Sect. 217 of the Public Health Act 1875 does not repeal the sections of the Act of 1835 directing the surveyor to lay the accounts before the vestry meeting. [MATHEW, J.—The Legislature has said that Inner and Outer Greetland are to form one district for highway purposes; your argument goes to show that they form two districts.] Sect. 216 of the Act of 1875 uses the words, "as such surveyor of highways," and thereby incorporates sect. 29 of the Act of 1835; because the words must mean, "as such surveyor of highways would have done if this Act had not been passed." It would be unjust to make Outer Greetland subject to a local board which its inhabitants do not elect, and Parliament could not have intended it. Hence, as there are no express words taking away the right the inhabitants of Outer Greetland had before 1875, the procedure of the Act of 1835 applies, there being no representation of Outer Greetland on the local board.

FIELD, J.—In this case we are not asked to answer any particular question. The case is not framed with any great particularity, but it sets out certain contentions which are very generally stated. On behalf of the appellants it was contended that the said rate was improperly laid and made, and was invalid. It does not tell us what the invalidity was. Then it says that the Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the rate subject to the opinion of this court, without stating on what ground it confirmed it. There is great difficulty in finding out what is the point upon which the Court of Quarter Sessions really wish to obtain our opinion. The Court of Quarter Sessions confirmed the rate, and I am of opinion rightly. Now the question we are asked is, whether the rate was properly made, and the objection taken to it is that it exceeds 10d. in the pound in amount, and that the consent of four-fifths of the inhabitants of the outer district of the parish of Greetland, contributing to the highway rate, was not first obtained. The question for our consideration is, whether or not that makes the rate bad and invalid. Now, the position of things before the Public Health Acts of 1848 and 1875 was this: Greetland was a hamlet maintaining its own roads and ways, and the inhabitants had to maintain the roads within the entire hamlet. Then the Highway Act of 1835 established a mode of doing it by representation in a certain sense, by a vestry meeting of people liable to rates. They were obliged to appoint an officer to do the work, and he was called the surveyor of highways, who not only did the work of repairing the roads, but also had the power of taxing the persons liable to be assessed by the terms of the Act for the amount of money necessary to enable him to repair the highways. He exercised his discretion as to the repairs to be done. He was obliged to keep them in repair so as to save the inhabitants from indictment, and he had to raise the money by a rate; but the Legislature said that he should never make a rate at any one time of more than 10d. in the pound, or in any one year of more than 2s. 6d. in the pound. It is certainly rather startling to find that 3s. 4d. in the pound is sought to be taken by one rate. However, we must give credit to the local board that they have duly estimated what the repairs are, and that 3s. 4d. is necessary. The question is, whether or not the previous assent of the inhabitants or ratepayers, which was necessary before, is necessary now. That depends upon the construction to be put on sect. 216 of the Public Health Act 1875. By sect. 144, any urban sanitary authority within their district have to execute the office of the surveyor of highways. Now the facts here to be taken into account are these: That by an order of the Local Government Board the inner district was formed into a local government district before the passing of the Act of 1875, but that what is now called the outer district was excluded from that district. Therefore, by the operation of sect. 6 of the Public Health Act 1875, Inner Greetland became an urban district, and Outer Greetland was excluded from it. Now what is the state of things with regard to the inhabitants of Outer Greetland? They come clearly within the proviso to sect. 216. [The learned Judge read the proviso.] The words at the beginning of the proviso, "where part of a parish," refer in this case to part of Greetland, the word "parish" being meant to represent hamlet. This means that Outer Greetland is to form part of Inner Greetland for all purposes connected with the repairs of highways, and the payment of highway rates, as Outer Greetland was before the constitution of Inner Greetland liable to contribute to the highway rates for all Greetland. Now, we must look back and see the state of things with regard to the district of which

Q.B. Div.]

FIELDING (app.) v. HAWLEY (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Outer Greetland is to form a part. Inner Greetland is under the control of the local board, and is a district where the expenses under this Act are defrayed out of the district fund and general district rates, and no other mode of repairing the highways is directed by a local Act. Then, proceeding with sect. 216, sub-sect. 1 does not apply, as the whole of the district, including Outer Greetland, is not rated for works of paving, water supply, and sewerage. Sub-sect. 2 does apply, because part of the district, viz., Outer Greetland, is not rated for works of paving, water supply, and sewerage. The consequence is that the repair of the highways in that part is to be defrayed out of a highway rate to be separately assessed and levied in that part by the urban authority—that is, the local board—as surveyor of highways. That being so, the suggestion on the part of Outer Greetland is this, that, although they are to be included in the highway district, yet they are to be in a very much better position than every other person in the district, because, whereas all the inhabitants of Inner Greetland are liable to pay the rates in Inner Greetland, without control over the amount, and the money will come out of the district rate where no previous consent is required, yet the inhabitants of Outer Greetland have got a right to say that, though 3s. 4d. is a proper sum, they will not personally bear more than 10d. of it, but that all the rest of it must be borne by the inhabitants of Inner Greetland. I cannot think the Legislature intended this. The only words that the appellants rely on are the words “as surveyor of highways.” What is sought to be included in this statute is certain legislation applied to an altogether different state of things—an old state of things which has disappeared, where the inhabitants appointed their surveyor, who did all the work, spent the money, and made the rate; and where the inhabitants who appointed him could control his expenditure—an altogether different mode of legislation from this, where the local board was established with a different class of powers and for different purposes. I feel a certain amount of inconvenience, and of possible injustice, which might happen, in that the inhabitants of Outer Greetland are liable to be taxed by persons whom they have not sent to represent them; on the other hand, the inconvenience the other way is also very great, and I have come to the conclusion that sub-sect. 2 of sect. 216 vests in the local board the power of making a rate for such amount as they deem proper on the inhabitants of the outer district, in the same way and on the same conditions as they admittedly have the power of doing with regard to the inhabitants of the inner district, where there is no such consent required. I think, therefore, that the rate is free from this objection, which I assume to be the only one raised at Quarter Sessions, and that the judgment must be affirmed with costs.

MATHEW, J.—I am of the same opinion. The argument narrowed itself at the end to a very small point on the construction of sub-sect. 2 of sect. 216 of the Public Health Act 1875. It was conceded that Outer Greetland formed part of Inner Greetland by virtue of the proviso to sect. 216 for all purposes connected with the repairs of highways and the payment of highway rates. Then what does sub-sect. 2 say? [The learned Judge read the sub-section.] If the sub-section had stopped before the words “as surveyor of highways,” it would be the duty of the urban authority to estimate the sum required for the cost of repairs of the highways over the whole district, and make their rates accordingly, namely, two separate rates, necessarily so, because the rate for the inner district was a general rate, and the rate for the outer district a highway rate only. That being so, it is subject to the observation that the outer district is not represented on the local board; but it is quite conceivable that the Legislature may have intended to trust the local board, constituted as it is, and to give them the authority in question. The language used seems to me as clearly as possible to show that the intention was that, for purposes of highways, the two districts should be placed under the control of the urban sanitary authority, which represented only one district. I anticipated an argument from Mr. White in favour of his contention that the words, “as surveyor of highways,” meant “in the same manner as a surveyor of highways would have made a rate if this Act had never passed.” I cannot think this is their meaning. They clearly mean, “as being surveyor of highways by virtue of sect. 144.” The rate appears to have been properly made by the proper authority, and the judgment of the Quarter Sessions was right. Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Emmet and Co., for Wavell and Co., Halifax.

Solicitors for the respondents, Bower, Cotton, and Bower, for J. W. Longbottom, Halifax.

Saturday, April 21, 1883.

(Before FIELD and MATHEW, JJ.)

FIELDING (app.) v. HAWLEY (resp.). (a)

Copyright—Designs—Article in two parts—Registration mark on one part only—Piracy—Copyright (Designs, &c.) Act 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 100), ss. 3, 4, 7, 8.

A butter dish, consisting of a dish and a cover, is one “article of manufacture” within the Copyright (Designs) Act 1842, and it is a sufficient compliance with the Act to stamp the registration mark upon the dish alone, though the cover was separate from and not any way attached to the dish, and though the entire design was upon the cover.

Semble, if during the process of manufacture of the article part of the registration mark thereon becomes illegible, the proprietor of the registered design is not thereby deprived of the protection of the statute.

THIS was a case stated by the stipendiary magistrate for the borough of Stoke-upon-Trent.

The following were the material facts:—

The complainants, Messrs. Fielding, manufacturers of earthenware, preferred a complaint against the defendants, Messrs. Hawley and Co., also manufacturers of earthenware, for having applied to an article of earthenware, called a teapot, a fraudulent imitation of a registered design, of which the complainants were the proprietors, contrary to the provisions of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100.

(a) Reported by W. P. EVERSLY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. Div.]

FIELDING (app.) v. HAWLEY (resp.).

[Q. B. Div.]

At the hearing of the summons it was proved that the complainants had invented a new and original design, applicable to earthenware, which was duly registered in June 1881 under the statute, and had a certain mark assigned to it.

After the date of registration the defendants copied the complainants' design, and applied it to various articles of earthenware manufactured and sold by them, including a teapot.

After the registration of the design, the complainants manufactured and offered for sale the following articles to which the registered design had been applied:

1. A bread dish, on which the registration mark was not wholly legible, the mark having become partly illegible while the dish was being fired and glazed. [A person producing at the Registration Office in London a perfect copy of the registration mark could ascertain whether the design was registered, the name of the proprietors, and the date of registration, &c.]

2. A butter dish in two parts, viz., a dish and a cover. The dish was legibly stamped with the registration mark, but there was not and never had been any such mark upon the cover, which was separate and apart from the dish, and not in any way attached thereto.

The entire design was upon the cover, the dish having only a roughened edge. Any of the covers containing the design could be used with any of the dishes interchangeably, or with any other dishes of the same shape and size. Generally the dishes and covers would be sold together, but they might be sold separately.

It was contended on behalf of the complainants that anyone purchasing an article with an imperfect mark might, on inquiry, see other articles perfectly stamped.

It was objected on behalf of the defendants:

1. That as a material part of the registration mark impressed on the bread dish was not legible, the complainants were wholly disentitled to the protection afforded by the Act, not only in respect of the article so imperfectly marked, but in respect of any other article ornamented with the said design, and so could not recover a penalty for any infringement of their registered design.

2. That the butter dish and cover were two separate articles, so that each ought to have been stamped with the registration mark, and that as there was no such mark on the cover, this circumstance disentitled the complainants to the protection given by the statute.

The magistrate gave no opinion on the first objection, but held that the dish and the cover were two articles, and that as the full design was applied to the cover it ought to have been stamped, and dismissed the complaint.

The questions for the opinion of the court were:

1. Whether the fact that on some one or more of the articles, having on them the registered design, manufactured and sold by the complainants after registration, a material portion of the figures and letters in the mark were illegible, is sufficient to deprive the complainants of the protection of the statute.

2. Whether the omission to place the registration mark on the cover of the butter dish deprived the complainants of the protection of the statute and warranted the dismissal of the complaint.

By sect. 3 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 100:

And with regard to any new and original design . . . the proprietor of every such design not previously published either within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or elsewhere, shall have the sole right to apply the same to any articles of manufacture . . . provided the same be done within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, for the respective terms hereinafter mentioned, such respective terms to be computed from the time of such design being registered according to this Act; (that is to say,)

In respect of the application of any such design to ornamenting any article of manufacture contained in the first, second, third, fourth, &c., . . . of the classes following, for the term of three years: . . .

Class 4.—Articles of manufacture composed wholly or chiefly of earthenware.

By sect. 4:

Provided always that no person shall be entitled to the benefit of this Act, with regard to any design in respect of the application thereof to ornamenting any article of manufacture . . . unless such design have, before publication thereof, been registered according to this Act, and unless at the time of such registration such design have been registered in respect of the application thereof to some or one of the articles of manufacture . . . comprised in the above-mentioned classes, by specifying the number of the class in respect of which such registration is made, and unless the name of such person shall be registered according to this Act as a proprietor of such design, and unless, after publication of such design, every such article of manufacture . . . published by him, hath thereon, if the article of manufacture be a woven fabric for printing, at one end thereof, or, if of any other kind . . . at the end or edge thereof, or other convenient place thereon, the letters "Rd," together with such number or letter, or number and letter, and in such form as shall correspond with the date of the registration of such design according to the registry of designs in that behalf, &c.

By sect. 7:

And for preventing the piracy of registered designs, be it enacted that during the existence of any such right to the entire or partial use of any such design no person shall apply any such design, or any fraudulent imitation thereof for the purpose of sale, to the ornamenting of any article of manufacture, &c.

By sect. 8:

That if any person commit any such act he shall, for every offence, forfeit a sum not less than 5*l.*, and not exceeding 30*l.*, to the proprietor of the design in respect of whose right such offence has been committed.

Acland for the appellants.—As to the second question, that relates to the butter dish: The dish is only an article of manufacture, consisting of two parts. Instances of a similar character are, a soup tureen and a teapot. It can hardly be said that the cover in those cases is a separate article. The magistrate has not found that the butter dish was not stamped on a convenient place.

J. J. Powell, Q.C. for the respondents.—The dish and cover, composing the butter dish, may no doubt be used together, but they are two articles of manufacture. A cup and saucer are two articles; they may be bought separately and used separately. Another instance is a watch and key. In the case of Sarasin v. Hamell (7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 660; 32 L. J. 380, Ch.) the Master of the Rolls says in effect that each separate piece must bear the registration mark. In Heywood v. Potter (20 L. T. Rep. O. S. 207; 22 L. J. 133, Q. B.), the court held that patterns of paper-hangings, cut off from larger pieces bearing the registration mark, must also bear the registration mark. These cases are expressly applicable, and the decision of the magistrate was right.

The first question was not argued.

FIELD, J.—Two questions have been asked us in this case. The first question has not been argued before us; but it may be useful to say something upon it by way of observation only, and not as a decision on the point. Suppose that out of a certain number of articles, one or more came out of the process of firing with a mark not perfectly legible, I should be very slow to say that the proprietor was thereby deprived of the protection of the statute. It would be well to consider whether the Act intended an accidental thing of that sort to have any such effect. As regards the second question, what is meant by the butter dish? It is referred to just before in the second objection as "the butter dish and cover;" and further back it is called "a butter dish in two parts, viz., a dish and cover." That is the way it is described in the case. We must now look at the Act. Its object is to secure that potters, and lay persons as well, may know whether any particular design belongs to anyone else. The Act says you shall not have the right to these penalties unless the distinguishing registration mark is on each article of manufacture. Sect. 4 says: [The learned Judge read the section.] The mark may be put on by means of a label. Is it contended that there must be a label on each cover as well as dish? What is an "article of manufacture?" What have the complainants here manufactured? If they manufactured dishes and covers separately and to be sold separately, probably then there might be two articles of manufacture. A soup tureen and a vegetable dish, though belonging to one dinner set, are clearly two articles of manufacture. The question is, Is it a single article divisible into parts, or are they separate articles? Clearly this was the former. If the magistrate had found that this was a contrivance to make two articles, which were meant to be sold separately, but at the same time to escape from marking them both, then the case would be different. In this case the dish is marked, but not the cover—which is the principal? The dish seems to be so, and it is marked in the usual place, and so the mark is sufficient.

MATHEW, J.—I am of the same opinion. As to the second question, it is impossible for the magistrate's decision to stand, unless Mr. Powell's contention is correct. The statute is intended to protect registered designs in articles of earthenware. Here is a butter dish, consisting of a dish and cover; it is unreasonable to suppose that this is not one article. As to the first question, I should be very slow to hold that the mark was illegible if any part was indistinct.

FIELD, J.—I forgot to allude to the cases cited by Mr. Powell. I admit that if a manufacturer takes a large piece, and cuts it up into smaller pieces for samples or otherwise, then of course each piece must be marked. But these cases do not touch the present case.

Appeal allowed, and case remitted.

Solicitors for the complainants, Wedlake and Lettis, for Keary and Marshall, Stoke-upon-Trent.
Solicitors for the defendants, H. Tyrrell, for W. T. Bagnall, Stoke-upon-Trent.

COURT OF APPEAL.

April 24, 26, and 27, 1883.

(Before BRETT, M.R., COTTON and BOWEN, L.JJ.)

REG. on the prosecution of THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF MADELEY UNION v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF BRIDGNORTH UNION. (a)

Poor law — Removal — Wife and children — Derivative settlement of husband and father — Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 35.

Since the passing of the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 35, (b) in an inquiry as to the removal of a pauper, evidence as to the derivative settlement of the pauper's husband or father is in no case admissible.

In a question as to the removal of E. H., a pauper, and her three children, aged five years, three years, and one year, from the B. union to the M. union, it was proved that they were the wife and children of W. H., who was the son of J. H. J. H. was born in the parish of M., in the M. union, but had acquired no settlement in his own right. There was no evidence as to the birthplace of W. H., and he had not acquired any settlement in his own right.

Held (affirming the decision of the Queen's Bench Division, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 301; 9 Q. B. Div. 765), that the Court of Quarter Sessions was right in quashing an order of justices for the removal of E. H. and her children to the M. union.

THIS was an appeal from the decision of the Queen's Bench Division upon a special case stated by the Recorder of the Borough of Bridgnorth, who had quashed an order made by two justices of that borough for the removal of one Ellen Hughes, a pauper, and her three children, aged five years, three years, and one year respectively, from the Bridgnorth Poor Law Union to the Madeley Poor Law Union. The Queen's Bench Division affirmed the order of the Recorder (this case is reported 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 301; 9 Q. B. Div. 765), and the Bridgnorth Union appealed to this court.

The special case, so far as is material, was as follows:—

The grounds of removal alleged that the settlement of the paupers, and of William Hughes, the husband of the said Ellen Hughes, was the birth settlement of John Hughes, the father of the said William Hughes. No other settlement either of the said John Hughes or of the said William Hughes, was set up affirmatively by the Madeley Union, in their grounds of appeal, nor did they

(a) Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(b) 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, s. 35: No person shall be deemed to have derived a settlement from any other person, whether by parentage, estate, or otherwise, except in the case of a wife from her husband, and in the case of a child under the age of sixteen, which child shall take the settlement of its father or of its widowed mother, as the case may be, up to that age, and shall retain the settlement so taken until it shall acquire another. An illegitimate child shall retain the settlement of its mother until such child acquires another settlement. If any child in this section mentioned shall not have acquired a settlement for itself, or being a female shall not have derived a settlement from her husband, and it cannot be shown what settlement such child or female derived from the parent without inquiry into the derivative settlement of such parent, such child or female shall be deemed to be settled in the parish in which he or she was born.

therein allege that the said John Hughes had derived a settlement from his father, or had acquired any other settlement than such birth settlement as aforesaid, before his son, the said William Hughes, had attained the age of sixteen, but they alleged that the said William Hughes was not born nor ever legally settled in the said parish of Madeley; and in their fourth ground of appeal they maintained that the alleged settlement (if any) of the said William Hughes would be a derivative settlement and as such is abolished by Act of Parliament.

The Court held that, upon the reasonable construction of the grounds of appeal, the Bridgnorth Union were not bound to prove more than the birth of the said John Hughes in the parish of Madeley, and that upon such proof the question of law intended to be raised by the Madeley Union would properly arise.

It was proved or admitted on the trial that John Hughes was born in the said parish in the Madeley Union, in or about the year 1822, and acquired no settlement in his own right, that William Hughes was the lawful son of the said John Hughes, and also had acquired no settlement in his own right, and that the paupers Ellen Hughes and her three children were the lawful wife and children of the said William Hughes, and had become chargeable to the Bridgnorth Union.

The Madeley Union called no evidence at the close of the case for the Bridgnorth Union, but submitted as matter of law that it was not sufficient for the latter to prove the place of birth of John Hughes, but that unless they could show affirmatively a legal settlement of the said John Hughes at Madeley, not derived from the fact of his birth there, his son William Hughes must be held to be settled in the place in which he the said William Hughes was born.

The Court quashed the order on the ground that it was in law insufficient to make out a prima facie birth settlement for John Hughes, and that as the Bridgnorth Union had not established a settlement in the parish of Madeley for John Hughes other than a prima facie birth settlement, William Hughes must be held to be settled in the parish of his birth by virtue of the Divided Parishes Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61).

If the Court shall be of opinion that the facts admitted and proved did not establish a settlement for the said William Hughes in the parish of Madeley, then the order of removal aforesaid shall be quashed and the order of sessions confirmed; but if the court shall be of opinion that the facts admitted and proved established a settlement for the said William Hughes in the parish of Madeley, then the said order of removal shall stand confirmed, and the order of sessions quashing the same shall be quashed.

Jelf, Q.C. and Spearman for the appellants.—The only question asked by the Recorder was as to William Hughes's settlement, and the Queen's Bench Division had no jurisdiction to do anything but quash or confirm the order of removal upon the point reserved by the case:

Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Harbury, 8 Q. B. 568.

[COTTON, L.J. referred to Overseers of Walsall v. London and North-Western Railway Company, 39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 433; 4 App. Cas. 30.] Both the enacting part of sect. 35 of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61 and the exceptions established thereby are retrospective, and therefore William Hughes took his father's settlement:

Great Yarmouth v. Clerk of the Peace of City of London, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 712; 3 Q. B. Div. 232; Guardians of Westbury-on-Tyeme v. Overseers of Barrow-in-Furness, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 315; 3 Ex. Div. 88.

In the former of these cases it was decided that the wife consequently took her father-in-law's settlement through her husband; and in Hollingbourn Union v. West Ham Union (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 520; 6 Q. B. Div. 580) this was admitted, and the Court held that the children under sixteen took the same settlement. That case shows that the latter part of sect. 35, only forbids an independent inquiry as to the derivative settlement of the parent in order to find the settlement of the child; but if the settlement of the parent has been already ascertained, the section does not forbid the use of that settlement in a question as to the removal of the child. Upon this ground the cases of Guardians of Woodstock Union v. Churchwardens of St. Pancras (39 L. T. Rep. N. S. 256; 4 Q. B. Div. 1) and Reg. v. Guardians of Portsea Union (7 Q. B. Div. 384; 50 L. J. 144, M.C.) are distinguishable.

Bosanquet, Q.C. and Kenyon for the respondents.—[The Court intimated that they did not require any argument upon the point as to the jurisdiction of the Divisional Court.] The appellants have to make out that William Hughes was settled in Madeley. [BRETT, M.R.—I think the real question is, was evidence of John Hughes' settlement admissible in order to prove the settlement of William Hughes?] To do this, they must show that William Hughes is within the exception "in the case of a child" in the first part of sect. 35. We say that it is impossible, when you are trying the case of a wife and children, to say that the husband and father is "a child" within the meaning of the section. The last part of the section means that where you have taken away the derivative settlement of a child, and you would have difficulty in settling it, it is to go to the place of its birth. [BOWEN, L.J.—Why should it not apply where there is a difficulty in ascertaining the father's settlement, and the child is between sixteen and twenty-one?] We admit that some of the cases are against us; but in Great Yarmouth v. City of London (sup.) the point was rather assumed than argued, and in Guardians of Hollingbourn v. Guardians of West Ham (sup.) the view taken by Lindley, J. is in our favour.

April 27.—BRETT, M.R.—In this case an order was made by justices for the removal of Ellen Hughes and her three children, aged respectively three years, five years, and one year, from the Bridgnorth Union to the Madeley Union. That order was brought before the Recorder of the Borough of Bridgnorth, and objected to upon the ground that it was founded upon evidence, which had been taken and admitted by the justices, of the settlement of John Hughes, the grandfather of the children and the father of William Hughes, the husband of the woman. Upon that the Recorder quashed the order of removal, but stated a case. It seems to me that the difficulty which arose in his mind was that which has been argued here and in the Queen's Bench Division, viz., whether it was right to have founded the order of removal upon evidence of the settlement of John Hughes, the grandfather. The question asked of the Divisional Court in the special case was whether it was right to have received and acted upon such evidence, and that, I think, is the question, and for the purpose of judicial decision the only question, we have to decide in this case. There is no doubt that that question so stated raises this further question—What is the proper construction with regard to that point of sect. 35 of the Divided Parishes Act 1876? In coming to a conclusion upon that, one would have been glad to understand the whole section, because if one had been able to do so, it would have enabled one to see whether there was any hidden difficulty in the point we are called upon to decide. I think we have all made strenuous efforts to see whether we could understand the section as a whole, but even after the able arguments on both sides I could not gather (I am speaking now only for myself) that the counsel on either side affected to understand this section. I must confess that I cannot understand it, and do not pretend to do so. I am now trying if I can understand it so far as is necessary for the determination of the point in question. I have come to the conclusion that I do understand it to this extent—that in no case of making an order of removal, after the passing of this statute, is it possible to say that it is right to inquire into the settlement of a grandfather of children, or a father of a woman's husband? If it is impossible for that to be a matter of inquiry in any case, it cannot be so here. If that is true, upon the question asked we have only to answer that it was not right to have admitted the evidence in this case, and therefore the Recorder was right in quashing the order of removal, and the Queen's Bench Division were right in upholding his decision. I think it was admitted by Mr. Jelf that he could not maintain his point unless we were prepared to say that the word "child" in sect. 35 comprises every one who has been a child. When the case is put thus, I have no doubt that that is not the meaning to be given to the word. The section begins thus: "No person shall be deemed to have derived a settlement from any other person." This is an abrupt commencement to the section, and there is no introduction to say whether that is with regard to the law of removal, or what it has reference to. It is obvious, therefore, that you must apply it by the introduction of the following words: In any question of the removal of a pauper no person shall be deemed to have derived a settlement, &c. It seems to me that the person who is there meant is the person whose removal is in question—i.e., the pauper. If that stood alone, therefore, and if there were no exception, the section would in effect read thus: Wherever you have to enter upon the question of the removal of a pauper, no such pauper shall be deemed to have derived a settlement from any other person. The section says: "whether by parentage, estate, or otherwise;" but we will leave out these words. Now, we come to the words, "Except in the case of a wife from her husband." The wife, if she had been a person whose removal was in question, would have come within the terms "No person shall be deemed to have derived a settlement from any other person, whether by parentage, estate, or otherwise"—for "estate" is a large word, and it must include marriage. This exception shows that in a case where the removal of a wife is in question she may derive a settlement from her husband. There it stops. The section goes on, "and in the case of a child under the age of sixteen." If that were the only exception, a child of over sixteen is not excepted. The section proceeds, "which child"—here again you must read the section as meaning in the case of a question as to the removal of a child under sixteen—"shall take the settlement of its father or of its widowed mother, as the case may be, up to that age." Therefore, here again you are shut down to the father or the widowed mother, just as in the case of a wife you are shut down to the husband. If the matter had stopped there, it seems to me that in the case of anyone over sixteen, that creature (I was going to say person, and this shows the difficulty of construing the section), not being within either of the exceptions, would have been a "person" within the beginning of the section. In that case you would have been confined by the beginning of the section to saying, that that person shall not be deemed to have derived a settlement from any other person. But put in, though I agree, clumsily, and perhaps, during the passing of the enactment, you have this creature of over sixteen not within the exceptions already stated, who is dealt with as follows: "and shall retain the settlement so taken until it shall acquire another." There the section deals with the case of the creature after he is sixteen, and from the time he is of that age until he has acquired another settlement. You have probably brought him within the exceptions by those words, "shall retain the settlement so taken." What is the settlement "so taken?" It is a settlement from the husband, the father, or the widowed mother. But it goes no farther, and it does not entitle you any more than the other exceptions did to go to the husband's father, or the grandfather. What is the meaning then of what we have called the third part of the section? I confess I cannot see to what cases it applies; but I can see this, that it does not enable you to go to the grandfather. On the contrary, whatever case that part of the section does apply to, it shuts you off again at the father, or even short of the father; because it deals with the case where "it cannot be shown what settlement such child or female derived from the parent without inquiring into the derivative settlement of such parent." Therefore it forbids you to inquire into the derivative settlement of such parent. If I may state my present view of that part of the section, I am inclined to think it applies to cases of children of over sixteen where you cannot prove the settlement of the father, and therefore cannot show what settlement they retain; and where the circumstances are such that under the old law you would have been obliged to go to a derivative settlement. This enactment shuts you off from a derivative settlement in those cases, and says the persons as to whom the question of removal arises are to be deemed to be settled in the parish where they were born. Therefore, in no case under this section can you ever go beyond the father or the husband of the person who is to be removed. You cannot go to the father of the husband, or the grandfather of the child. In this case it is sought to inquire as to the father of the woman's husband and the grandfather of the children, and the question is whether this can be gone into. In my opinion it cannot, and therefore the evidence was not properly admitted by the justices, and the Recorder was right in quashing the order of removal. What effect this judgment may have upon other questions, such as the removal of children under nurture from their mother, it is not for me to say at present. Neither is it necessary for me to solve the many questions that have been raised in the course of the argument. It is not necessary to solve the question of what will become of this woman or of these children, if by shutting out any inquiry as to the settlement of the grandfather you cannot prove the settlement of the father. The question as to what is to be done in such a case is not raised at present, and therefore it is not the subject-matter of decision. Assuming the evidence to be that the husband is alive, but there is an incapacity to prove what his settlement is, questions whether the mother and children are to remain where they are, or whether they are to be removed elsewhere, or whether they can be separated or not, are all questions which it is not necessary to decide in this case. I have given my view of the construction of the Act of Parliament with regard to the point before us. If that view is inconsistent with any decided case, of course I say, as I am bound to do when I differ, that I cannot agree with it.

CORROX, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question that we have to answer in determining whether this order of removal ought to be quashed is, whether the facts admitted and proved established a settlement of William Hughes in the parish of Madeley. Now, the only evidence, and the only admission in order to make out a settlement was the fact that John Hughes, the father of William Hughes, had been born there; that is to say, a derivative settlement was proved in the case of William Hughes. But if the true construction of the Act of Parliament be, as I think it is, that evidence of derivative settlement could not be given, and that the derivative settlement could not be entered into, then the order for removal was wrong. Now, the 35th section begins by a general clause. [His Lordship read the section down to "acquires another settlement."] What has been done here is to hold that William Hughes had derived a settlement from his father, and to enter into his derivative settlement, and that is prohibited by the clause in the Act of Parliament, unless it could be shown that there is something in the exception which follows which enables that derivative settlement to be entered into. Now, what is it? "Except in the case of a wife from her husband." It is not that when the question of a wife's settlement is considered, then the previous enactment is to be altogether disregarded, but, as I understand it, that in the case of a wife when her removal is under consideration, she shall derive a settlement from her husband, and it goes no farther. It does not in any way enable her husband's derivative settlement to be entered into. And then it goes on, "and in the case of a child under the age of sixteen, which child shall take the settlement of its father or of its widowed mother, as the case may be." That would seem not in any way to remove the restriction as to going into a derivative settlement, except as regards the child whose case is under consideration; and I will consider presently whether it is to be restricted to the consideration of the case of a child when under sixteen. But the argument, really, of Mr. Jelf is this, that he could go into the consideration of the derivative settlement of William Hughes because he once was a child, and that you may consider what settlement he had when he was a child. In my opinion it would be using forced language to say that you can consider William Hughes, who was the father of a family, as within this exception, which is pointed, I think, to those who not only can be properly called children at the time when the question of derivative settlement arises, but also when the question arises as to their removal. It would be quite wrong and a straining of English language to hold that William Hughes could at this time be said to be a child within the meaning of this Act. It extends undoubtedly to children over sixteen; but would it be right, according to ordinary English language, to say that a man of fifty or sixty, both of whose parents were dead, and who was the head of a family instead of a member of a family under a father or mother, could be considered as a child within the meaning of this Act of Parliament? It has been pointed out, and I do not see the answer to it, that, if that argument is right, you could go into the derivative settlement of any member of a family. It would be in effect to repeal the enactment, which says that no person shall be deemed to have derived a settlement by parentage. It would entirely, so far as I can see, render that enactment inoperative, and would introduce, notwithstanding its provisions, all the difficulties and expense which arose from the question of a derivative settlement being entered into; because I do not see where you are to stop. It is true, I think (although it is not necessary here to decide it), that a child may derive its settlement from its father, even though it is not under sixteen. That, I think, appears from the fact that the first part of the section as well as the third part deals with children who are not under sixteen. Whether the third part extends to children under sixteen as well it is unnecessary here to decide, but undoubtedly it will apply to children who are above sixteen, and it is there contemplated that they shall derive their settlement from the father. But it is also clearly shown that the intention of the Legislature was that the derivative settlement of that father was not to be inquired into. I do not see that this third clause of itself provides for a derivative settlement from the father being entered into; it considers that is already provided for. Therefore, in my opinion, it helps the construction which I have put upon the previous part of the section, that, by saying if it cannot be shown what settlement such child or female derived from the parent, the third clause assumes that can be entered into without inquiring into the derivative settlement of such parent. It does not say that such derivative settlement shall not be entered into, because the power of inquiring into the derivative settlement has been already taken away by the previous clause. This assumes that that is so, and then it says what is to be done as regards fixing the settlement of the child, namely, that it is to be the place of its birth. That, I think, is the true construction of this clause as regards the right of going into the derivative settlement of William Hughes. In my opinion the Act of Parliament

CT. OF APP.]

CLARK AND OTHERS (pets.) v. WALLOND (resp.).

[Q.B. DIV.]

takes away that power, and therefore this order was rightly quashed. Now I cannot but see that the opinion which I believe we all have formed on this section is inconsistent with certain cases that have been decided. In some of them the point does not seem to have been much discussed. In none of them does it seem to have been fully discussed on the lines on which this case has been argued, and I can only say, notwithstanding the respect I entertain for the learned judges who decided those cases, that I am bound to express a different opinion from that which they held in those cases.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and on the construction of the Act I agree with what has been said by the Master of the Rolls, and Cotton, L.J. I would only add one word about the way in which this question comes before us. I think, perhaps, there may be something more in Mr. Jelf's argument than, in the form in which this case comes before us, seems to be thought by the other members of the court. I am not sure that the Recorder in this case had got before him the point of law exactly as we have had it discussed. I am not perfectly certain that he has framed his question in that view of the law, but I am confident that, in whatever way he framed his question, and in whatever way he decided the case, it would be absolutely necessary for him to discuss and to decide, for good or evil, the question and construction of the statute which we have had discussed. I think it would be idle for us to be led aside from giving judgment on the real effect and construction of the statute, by a suggestion that the learned Recorder may not have put in the right way the question which certainly arises upon this case. I should have refused if I was asked by any recorder, or by anybody else, to give an answer to a question of this kind: What would be the law if the law was not what it is? or to be told that I must assume the construction of the statute to be what I conceive it is not, and to answer the question on that basis. Being against Mr. Jelf on the construction of the statute, if we were to be embarrassed by his difficulty about the form of the case we would be really either attempting to answer an impossible question of that sort, or else going through the form of sending back the case to be re-stated by the Recorder, and to come back again upon exactly the same point. Because, as far as the Recorder is concerned, he would state the case, if it was sent back to him, in exactly the same way as we think it ought to be stated. I think one would be playing with the form of pleading to go through that process, and I have no hesitation in saying that the Court ought, as we do, to break through all those technicalities if they exist, and come to the root of the matter, and decide on the construction of the Act and the validity of the order of the Court of Quarter Sessions. As I have said, I agree in the construction put upon the section by the Master of the Rolls and by Cotton, L.J. The first clause of sect. 35 destroys, in my opinion, the possibility of receiving the evidence of the settlement of the grandfather of the children, or of founding any order upon it. I am not sure that the meaning of the third clause may not be that which crossed my mind in the course of the argument, and if the case arises again that may be as good a meaning as any to place upon it, but I am satisfied that meaning will not help

Mr. Jelf's argument. On the contrary, if Mr. Jelf's argument was not already destroyed by the first clause on the plain meaning of the words, it would be destroyed by the third clause. It is not really necessary, however, to decide what the third clause does mean if it does not help Mr. Jelf.

Solicitors for the appellants, Sole, Turner, and Knight, for Cooper and Haslewood, Bridgnorth.

Solicitors for the respondents, O. E. and H. Cuff, for G. Burd, Ironbridge.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

March 6 and 8, 1883.

(Before GROVE, LOPES, and MATHEW, JJ.)

CLARK AND OTHERS (pets.) v. WALLOND (resp.). (a)

Municipal election petition—Practice—Amendment of petition—Jurisdiction of High Court—"Subject to this Act"—Municipal Corporation Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 100, sub-sect. 4.

By the 4th sub-section of the 88th section of the Municipal Corporations Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50) a municipal election petition shall be presented, except in the case of matters arising after the election, within twenty-one days after the day on which the election was held; and by the 89th section other times are prescribed depending on the date of the presentation of the petition.

By the 4th sub-section of the 100th section "the High Court shall, subject to this Act, have the same powers, jurisdiction, and authority with respect to a municipal election petition and the proceedings thereon as if the petition were an ordinary action within its jurisdiction."

Held, that by reason of the words "subject to this Act," the 4th sub-section of the 100th section gives no jurisdiction to the High Court to allow more than twenty-one days after the election, an amendment in a municipal election petition adding the words "and treating" to the grounds on which the petition questions the election, inasmuch as the petition would thereby be made a new petition, which would thus be presented after the time prescribed by the 4th sub-section of the 88th section.

THIS was an appeal from an order made by Lopes, J. at chambers in a municipal election petition allowing the petitioners to amend their petition more than twenty-one days after the date of the election by adding the words "and treating" after the word "bribery" in that part of the petition which set forth the ground on which the election was questioned.

E. Morten for the respondent.—By the 4th sub-section of the 88th section of the Municipal Corporations Act 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50) it is provided that an election petition shall be presented within twenty-one days after the day on which the election is held, and by the 4th sub-section of the 100th section, that the High Court shall, subject to this Act, have the same powers, jurisdiction, and authority with respect to a municipal election petition, and the proceedings thereon, as if the petition were an ordinary action within its jurisdiction. The question turns on these two sub-sections. The power of the court to amend municipal election petitions is limited

(a) Reported by J. SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

[Q.B. Div.]

CLARK AND OTHERS (pets.) v. WALLOND (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

by the words "subject to this Act," and as the addition of the words "and treating" is equivalent to the presentation of a fresh petition after the expiration of twenty-one days, and therefore contrary to the 4th sub-section of the 88th section, it was beyond the authority of the learned judge to allow such an amendment. In Pickering v. Startin (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 111), which will be relied on by the petitioner, the 5th sub-section of the 21st section of the Corrupt Practices (Municipal Elections) Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 60), which is similar to the 4th sub-section of the 100th section of the Municipal Corporations Act 1882, does not appear to have been referred to in the argument, and since the point which arises here does not seem to have been discussed, that case is of no value. In Maude v. Lowley (29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 924; L. Rep. 9 C. P. 167) the point was raised and decided in favour of the respondent. [LOPES, J.—The case of Pickering v. Startin does not seem to have been cited in that case.] No, but Honyman, J., in that case, suggests the very point which arises here, as being involved in the decision in that case, and Keating, J., one of the judges in Pickering v. Startin, was also one of the court in Maude v. Lowley, so that the court must have been aware of the case and disregarded it. There is nothing in Aldridge v. Hirst (35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 156; 1 C. P. Div. 410) to conflict with Maude v. Lowley. The court merely declined to discuss the question as to whether it had power or not to make amendments in petitions, and the reporter in the headnote to the report of that case in the Law Reports, which had considerable weight with the learned judge at chambers, has wrongly stated the effect of the judgment of the court.

H. F. Dickens for the petitioners.—This amendment was rightly made, and is within the power of the court. It is incorrect to say that this point was not before the court in Pickering v. Startin (ubi sup.). It appears clearly upon the face of the report that the learned counsel for the respondent there took three points, the third being that the court had no power to make these amendments, and the court must have overruled this point to arrive at the decision at which it did. In Maude v. Lowley (ubi sup.) it was stated by counsel that such an amendment had never yet been allowed, so that Pickering v. Startin was obviously not before the court. There is no definite provision in the Act taking away the power of amendment it was the object of the 4th sub-section of the 100th section to give. [GROVE, J.—If this amendment is made, what is to be done with respect to the machinery of sects. 88-90, the whole of which rests on specified times calculated from the date of presentation of the petition? That is not affected. The petitioner must be satisfied within twenty-one days that he has some ground on which to question the election, and must give notice of it, but it is not necessary for him to give notice of everything. [GROVE, J.—But then the real matter disqualifying the candidate might be inserted after the expiration of twenty-one days.] It is a question for the exercise of judicial discretion as to whether an amendment is to be allowed or not. [MATHEW, J.—By the 87th and 88th sections the grounds of the petition are to be specified; the 4th sub-section of the 100th section must be taken subject to this as well as the other provisions of the Act.] These are the strongest words giving the jurisdiction, and there is nothing in sects. 88-90 equally strong to take it away.

Morten in reply.—The case of Wells v. Wren (5 C. P. Div. 546) gives the same construction to the words "subject to the provisions of the Act" as that adopted by the court in Maude v. Lowley.

GROVE, J.—This is an appeal from an order made by my brother Lopes at chambers allowing an amendment in a municipal election petition after the time had expired within which the Act prescribes that the petition should be presented, namely, twenty-one days, and of course the same principle would apply to the period of twenty-eight days allowed in certain cases. The amendment in the petition related to the grounds by which the petition alleged the elected candidate to be disqualified. The ground originally stated was bribery, and the amendment allowed added the words "and treating," and the question is as to whether my brother Lopes had jurisdiction to make the amendment, as we shall not interfere with his discretion in so doing if the jurisdiction existed. Now the ground on which the learned judge allowed the amendment was founded on the 4th sub-section of the 100th section of the Municipal Corporations Act 1882, the words of which are, "the High Court shall, subject to this Act, have the same powers, jurisdiction, and authority with respect to a municipal election petition and the proceedings thereon, as if the petition were an ordinary action within its jurisdiction." My brother Lopes thought that these words gave him plenary authority, because in an ordinary action before the High Court a judge may amend at any time. Upon consideration of all the cases brought before us in argument, and on reading the section of the Act, it seems to me that this appeal must be allowed. It will be observed that the words are "subject to this Act," and I suppose it will be admitted that these words cannot be struck out, and their meaning must be "subject to those provisions in the Act which the court would deem materially inconsistent with the powers exercised by the High Court in an ordinary action." We must therefore look into the Act to see if there is anything repugnant to the exercise of the ordinary authority of the court. The 87th section says that a municipal election may be questioned by an election petition on four grounds, viz. (1) that the election was to the borough or ward wholly avoided by general bribery, treating, undue influence, or personation; or (2) that the election was avoided by corrupt practices or offences against that part of the Act committed at the election; or (3) that the person whose election is questioned was at the time of the election disqualified; or (4) that he was not duly elected by a majority of lawful votes; and it also says that a municipal election shall not be questioned on any of those grounds except by an election petition. Then the 4th sub-section of the 88th section says, "It (i.e. the petition) shall be presented within twenty-one days after the day on which the election was held, except that if it complains of the election on the ground of corrupt practices, and specifically alleges that a payment of money or other reward has been made or promised since the election by a person elected at the election, or on his account, or with his privity, in pursuance or furtherance

Q.B. Div.]

CLARK AND OTHERS (pets.) v. WALLOND (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

of such corrupt practices, it may be presented at any time within twenty-eight days after the date of the alleged payment or promise, whether or not any other petition against that person has been previously presented or tried." Now that would appear at once to be an imperative provision of the Act, and there follow in the 89th section other similar provisions. Not only does the Act say the petition shall be presented within twenty-one days, but also (sect. 89, sub-sect. 1), "at the time of presenting an election petition, or within three days afterwards, the petitioner shall give security for all costs, charges, and expenses which may become payable by him to any witness summoned on his behalf, or to any respondent." Here, then, is a provision to be fulfilled within three days of the twenty-one days. Then in the 3rd sub-section we have: "Within five days after the presentation of the petition, the petitioner shall in the prescribed manner serve on the respondent a notice of the presentation of the petition, and of the nature of the proposed security, and a copy of the petition;" and in the 4th sub-section: "Within five days after the service of the notice the respondent may object in writing to any recognisance on the ground that any surety is insufficient or is dead, or cannot be found or ascertained for want of a sufficient description in the recognisance, or that a person named in the recognisance has not duly acknowledged the same;" and in the 5th sub-section: "If the objection is allowed, the petitioner may, within a further prescribed time not exceeding five days, remove it by a deposit in the prescribed manner of such sum of money as will, in the opinion of the court or officer having cognisance of the matter, make the security sufficient." So that those three sub-sections provide for three periods of five days each within which the question of security for costs is to be settled. Then comes the 90th section, which says that "On the expiration of the time limited for making objections," or, after objection made, on the objection being disallowed or removed, whichever last happens, the petition shall be at issue;" and then follow provisions as to what is to be done when the petition is at issue, viz., that the prescribed officer shall make a list of all election petitions at issue, and other provisions. Now, all these provisions I have alluded to fix a time prescribed by a certain number of days, all these times being based on the twenty-one days within which the petition must be presented. These it appears to me are material provisions of the Act, and when the words "subject to this Act" are used we cannot disregard them. Otherwise, if we were to disregard them and allow this amendment, all these provisions would be dislocated, for in order to comply with the Act we should have to give further time to the sitting member to object to the petitioner's security for the further costs which might become payable by him in consequence of the amendment, and the result would be that the same petition would be at issue at two different times, first, as to the original allegations, and afterwards at a different time as to the further allegations allowed by the amendment. There is no provision made in the Act for such a state of affairs, and, practically, such a course would extend all these provisions, for which a limit of time is prescribed, to an unnamed time. To my mind this is a formidable and fatal objection to the allowance of this amendment. It is said that such amendments are made in statements of claim. That may be so, and as far as any amendment, such as is usually made in a statement of claim, can consistently with the provisions of this Act be made in a municipal election petition, I have no doubt that the court has jurisdiction to allow such an amendment. I give no opinion as to whether an allegation can be withdrawn. That, it must be remembered, would not conflict with any section, but I do not think it is at all material to the present question, because in any case, if notice is given to the other side that it is not intended to proceed with the petition, the judge would certainly take that into consideration on the question of costs. I do not, however, think the point material, and I therefore give no opinion. My judgment is based on the fact that a new charge is added by this amendment, and thereby the petition is made a new petition, the charge being one which goes beyond that preferred by the original petition. It is also based on the ground that the words "subject to this Act" involve the necessity of looking through the Act before making an amendment to see whether there is anything in the Act with which the amendment would be inconsistent. These words "subject to the Act" have received judicial construction in other cases. I may cite the case of Parsons v. Tinkling (35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 851; 2 O. P. Div. 119), in which it was held that the words "subject to the provisions of this Act" at the beginning of Order LV. repealed the previous statutes as to costs, except such as were expressly preserved by sect. 67 of the Judicature Act 1873; and again in the case of Wells v. Wren (5 O. P. Div. 546) the same words occurring in the 2nd section of the Parliamentary Elections Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 125) were duly given effect to. Now, on the point before us there are two cases, the first being that of Pickering v. Startin (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 111), where the decision was adverse to that to which I have come; but, as the learned counsel for the plaintiff contended in argument, the question raised in this case was not considered by the court there. In the second case, however, that of Maude v. Lowley (29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 924; L. Rep. 9 C. P. 165), the point was considered and decided by Lord Coleridge, C.J. and three other judges, who came to the same decision I am now pronouncing. The importance of that case is, that the point was adverted to and formed a ground of the decision, but objection is taken to it on the ground that it does not appear that the earlier case of Pickering v. Startin was ever brought before the court. Still the section in question was discussed, and even if my opinion of the point differed from that of the court which decided Maude v. Lowley, I should, in spite of Pickering v. Startin, consider myself bound by that case. As to the point itself, the inconvenience of disallowing this amendment was strongly pressed upon us in argument, but, although there can be no doubt that sometimes the argument ab inconvenienti may be of use where the words of a statute are capable of two constructions, it is not so where the words are plain. It was said that a petitioner may not be informed immediately of diver acts of corruption committed by the other side; but, on the other hand, an elected member of a constituency must not always be kept in suspense, and it is reasonable that the time for

[Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. RAMSAY AND FOOTE.

[Q.B. Div.]

preferring charges against him should be limited. The arguments, therefore, derived from the convenience and inconvenience of the respective courses may be set off the one against the other, and that being so, to my mind the meaning of the statute is reasonably clear, and I think that it was the intention of the Legislature to fix a rigid limit of twenty-one days for the presentation of petitions, and that therefore this appeal must be allowed.

LOPES, J.—This is a petition against an order of mine made at chambers allowing a municipal election petition to be amended by adding the words "and treating" to the original ground of the petition. Since making that order, in the course of the argument in this case, the case of Maude v. Lowley (29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 924; L. Rep. 9 C. P. 165) has been brought to my attention. The head-note in that case is to the effect that a petition against the election of a town councillor cannot, after the expiration of the twenty-one days limited by sect. 13, sub-sect. 2, for its presentation, be amended by the introduction of a substantially new charge. Now that is the present case; in fact, it is remarkable how near the case altogether comes to the present, and Honyman, J., in his judgment in that case, says: "I am of the same opinion. There is nothing in the Act or in the rules framed in pursuance of it to warrant this amendment. The 7th section requires the petition to be presented within twenty-one days after the election. Here a petition was presented in time, charging the employment as paid canvassers of persons on the register of burgesses for the north ward of the borough. After the expiration of the twenty-one days, the petitioners seek to add a new charge, viz., the employment as paid canvassers of persons who are on the register of burgesses for other wards in the borough. I think that cannot be allowed. Suppose a petition to allege bribery only, could the petitioners be allowed afterwards to add a charge of treating?" These words must have a very strong bearing on the present case, since it appears that the very point now raised before us was raised in that case. But it is said that the case of Pickering v. Startin (28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 111) was not cited in that case or the decision would have been different. Whether it was or was not cited, I do not know; it is true that no mention of it appears upon the face of the reports of Maude v. Lowley, but it is quite clear upon them that Keating, J., who was one of the judges who decided Pickering v. Startin, was also a member of the court in Maude v. Lowley, and entirely concurred with the decision there arrived at. This seems to me to dispose entirely of the objection founded upon Pickering v. Startin. When I gave my decision at chambers I remember that I relied chiefly on the case of Aldridge v. Hirst (L. T. Rep. N. S. 156; L. Rep. 1 C. P. Div. 410), the head-note to which case runs: "This court will not amend an election petition by striking out, after the lapse of the time limited by the Act for presenting it, that part of the prayer of the petition which claims the seat for the petitioner (an unsuccessful candidate), and the allegations applying to a scrutiny which would be dependent thereon, inasmuch as this would affect the rights of the constituency. Practice of election committees in this respect followed. Semble, that it is competent to this court to amend an election petition at any time by striking out allegations therein, where it is satisfied that no injurious result, or a beneficial one, will follow; or by adding matters discovered after the filing of the petition." It was on the authority of that head-note that I allowed this amendment, but it will be seen on reference to the judgments that that proposition is not supported by them. All that Grove, J. says is: "We by no means decide that this court has no power to make amendments in petitions, provided it sees that no injurious or unjust result, or that a beneficial result, will follow. In Pickering v. Startin the Court of Common Pleas allowed, in the case of a municipal election petition, an amendment by adding two paragraphs relating to matters discovered after the filing of the petition. On the other hand, in Maude v. Lowley, an application for an amendment by addition of allegations as to acts committed in other words besides those named in the original petition was refused by this court." These words it seems to me are quite negative, and do not even amount to a dictum in favour of the petitioner here. I think, therefore, that this appeal should be allowed.

MATHEW, J.—I am of the same opinion.

GROVE, J.—With reference to Aldridge v. Hirst (ubi sup.) I may say that I think it is clear from the words themselves that I had not at that time in my mind the case of an amendment adding a new ground of petition.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the petitioners, Schultz and Son, for A. J. Ellis, Maidstone.

Solicitors for the respondent, Routh, Stacey, and Castle, for F. S. Stenning, Maidstone.

Tuesday, April 24, 1883.

(Sittings at Nisi Prius, before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND and a Special Jury.)

REG. v. RAMSAY AND FOOTE.

Newspaper—Blasphemous libel—What constitutes—Criminal intention in the proprietor.

The defendants were indicted for blasphemous libel in the publication of certain cartoons, &c., in a newspaper called the Freethinker.

The jury were directed that a blasphemous libel did not consist in an honest denial of the truths of the Christian religion, but in "a wilful intention to pervert, insult, and mislead others by means of licentious and contumelious abuse applied to sacred subjects;" and further, that an authority to publish libellous matter was not a presumption of law, but a question of fact.

THIS was an indictment against Foote, the reputed editor, and Ramsay, the reputed publisher, of a newspaper styled the Freethinker, for the publication of certain blasphemous libels therein. Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, M.P., had also been indicted together with the above-named defendants upon the same charge, but at his request and that of Ramsay the case had been removed to the Queen's Bench Division for trial, and Mr. Bradlaugh had been tried separately and acquitted on the ground that there was no sufficient evidence to connect him with the publication of the paper.

Both the defendants had been formerly tried and convicted before North, J. for blasphemous libels contained in the last Christmas number of the same paper. The present trial was concerned with several issues extending from March to June 1882.

[Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. RAMSAY AND FOOTE.

[Q.B. Div.]

Sir Hardinge Giffard, Q.C. (with whom were Moloney and Woodfall) appeared for the prosecution.

The defendants severally conducted their own defence in person, Avory for Ramsay and Olver for Foote being present to advise and argue on points of law.

Before the jury were sworn, Avory raised certain technical objections to the indictment, and called attention to the fact that, although he was unable to say that his client had been autrefois acquit, yet he had been previously convicted, and was now undergoing sentence for a similar offence committed subsequently to that specified by the indictment; but Lord COLERIDGE, C.J. said, that he had already decided the technical points, and was of opinion that the trial had better proceed.

Moloney for the prosecution.—The publications upon which the indictment is based extend from March to June of last year. After these proceedings commenced the defendants were prosecuted for a subsequent issue of the Freethinker at the Central Criminal Court. He cited Starkie's definition of blasphemous libel (vide infra), and went into the details of the publications upon which the indictment was based, adding that if a verdict of "guilty" was returned by the jury, it might be proper for his Lordship then to take the previous sentence into consideration. It was proved that the Director of Public Prosecutions had given his fiat for the prosecution, that on the 26th Nov. 1881, and the 2nd Aug. 1882, Ramsay's name had been entered in the registry of newspapers as proprietor of the Freethinker, and that in Feb. 1883 Foote's name had been so entered; but his Lordship held that this last entry, as being subsequent to the indictment, was not material evidence to connect Foote with the publication of the paper. It was not substantially disputed that Foote was the editor and Ramsay the publisher of the Freethinker, but in the course of the evidence his Lordship held that it was not admissible to ask a printer who the editor of a paper was, as the question was complex, and it was possible for a man to know for purposes of society that which he did not know sufficiently for purposes of evidence. He also held that the evidence must be limited to the publication of the particular numbers of the paper which were incriminated, and that it was not permissible to ask a witness what he supposed to be the meaning of certain cartoons, that being a subject upon which the jury must exercise their own judgment.

Ramsay, in defence, cited various works by Professor Huxley, Shelley and others; and complained of the uncertainty of the definition of blasphemy.

Foote, in defence, followed the same argument as Ramsay. He also said that blasphemy was only a new name for heresy, which used to be tried in the Ecclesiastical Courts, and consisted in fact of heresy against the State religion. He also quoted the criticisms made in Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law upon the definitions of blasphemy.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—The two defendants are indicted for the publication of blasphemous libels; and the two questions which arise for your consideration are: First, are these publications in themselves blasphemous libels? Secondly, if they are so, is the publication of them traced home to the defendants so that you can find them guilty? I will begin with the last question, though it is reversing the logical order, because it is the shorter and more simple of the two. Both questions are entirely for you. When you have heard what I have to say to you as to the state of the law, as I understand it, it will then be for you to pronounce a general verdict of guilty or not guilty. Now, for the purpose of this question, which I deal with first, I will assume for the moment that these are blasphemous libels, but though I assume it now I will discuss it with you afterwards. Assuming them, then, to be blasphemous libels, is the publication of them traced home to the defendants? As you are not the same jury who tried Mr. Bradlaugh, it is necessary for me to repeat to you the direction on this subject which I gave a few days ago to the jury which tried him. As to the matter of publication, the law has been altered in most important respects by a statute passed early in the reign of the present Queen (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96). It used to be the law that the proprietor of a newspaper was criminally, not merely civilly, but criminally responsible for a libel inserted in his paper, and that a bookseller or publisher was criminally responsible for a libel in any book which was sold or published under his authority, even though the newspaper proprietor, or the bookseller or publisher, did not know of or authorise the insertion of any libel, and did not even know of its existence. But this in the criminal law was an anomaly and a grievance, which the statute I have referred to was, in its seventh section, intended to remedy. That section came to be considered in the case of Reg. v. Holbrook, in which a gross libel on the town clerk of Portsmouth had been published in a Portsmouth newspaper. The case was twice tried at Winchester, first before Lindley, L.J., and secondly before Grove, J. On each occasion the ruling of the judge who tried the case was questioned in the Queen's Bench in the time of my predecessor in this seat; on each occasion by the same three judges, Cockburn, L.C.J. and Mellor and Lush, JJ.; on each occasion there was the same difference of opinion, the Lord Chief Justice and Lush, J. holding one way and Mellor, J. the other. But, notwithstanding this difference of opinion, the case is a binding authority upon me, and I lay down the law to you in the terse and clear language of Lush, J.: "The effect of the statute," says he (4-L. Rep. Q. B. 50), "read by the light of previous decisions, and read so as to make it remedial, must be, that an authority from the proprietor of a newspaper to the editor or publisher to publish what is libellous, is no longer to be, as it formerly was, a presumption of law, but a question of fact. Before the Act the only question of fact was, whether the defendant authorised the publication of the paper, now it is whether he authorised the publication of the libel. . . . Criminal intention is not to be presumed, but it is to be proved, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a person who employs another to do a lawful act, i.e., to publish, is to be taken to authorise him to do it in a lawful and not in an unlawful manner." Such is now the law laid down in admirable language by great authority; and it is for you to say whether, according to the law as laid down, these defendants (either or both of them) did or did not authorise the publication of these libels. On the trial of Mr. Bradlaugh this question of fact was the question in the case; he grounded his defence upon the contention, that whatever was the character of the published matter, the publication was not by his authority. That was his defence; and upon that defence, so far as I may presume to assign reasons for the general verdict of a jury, he was acquitted. In the trial before us the process has been reversed. The fact of publication by the defendants has hardly been contested. The evidence is all one way; it is uncontradicted, and it is overwhelming. It is proved that the defendant Ramsay sold the papers which contained the libels. It is proved that the articles charged as libellous were inserted by the express direction of the defendant Foote. There is nothing to qualify this proof; the defendants, in fact, do not deny their liability; and though the case is for you, I do not know that I need refrain from saying that, if upon the evidence you have heard, you think both the defendants liable for the publication of these alleged libels, I shall entirely agree with you. That, however, is, comparatively speaking, the least matter you have to decide; for the proof is clear, and it is not disputed. The great point still remains, are these articles within the meaning of the law blasphemous libels? Now that, as you have been truly told, is a matter absolutely for you. On you is the responsibility, after looking at them and reading them, of saying whether they are or are not blasphemous libels. My duty is to explain to you as clearly as I can what is the law upon the subject. My duty, further, is not to answer the speeches of the defendants, (that is no part of the duty of a judge), but to point out to you what in their arguments is in my judgment well-founded, and what is not; and then, when you have listened to me, the question is entirely for you. I am sure from my experience of juries that, in a criminal case especially, they will obey the law as declared by the judge; they will take the law from the judge, whether they like it or do not like it, and apply it honestly to the facts before them. Gentlemen, I have said before, and I take the freedom to repeat, that it is far more important the law should be administered with absolute integrity, than that in this case or in that the law should be a good law or a bad one. The moment juries or judges go beyond their functions, and take upon themselves to lay down the law or find the facts, not according to the law as it is, but according to the law as they think it ought to be, then the certainty of the law is at an end; there is nothing to rely upon; we are left to the infinite variety and uncertainty of human opinion; to caprice which may at any moment influence the best of us; to feelings and prejudices, perhaps excellent in themselves, but which may distort or disturb our judgment, and distract our minds from the single simple operation of ascertaining whether the facts proved bring the case within the law as we are bound to take it. Forgive me if I seem to press too earnestly upon a special jury of Middlesex these obvious commonplaces. If at my age, with so much to bring about a temper of indifference, with the training which a whole life spent in judicial pursuits ought to have brought with it; if I feel, as I confess I do, that it is hard in a case like this to be perfectly just and absolutely impartial, it may perhaps be that to some of you at least my earnest warning may not be absolutely useless; at any rate, I am sure you will pardon me for having presumed to utter it. Gentlemen, you have heard with truth that these things are, according to the old law, if the dicta of old judges, dicta often not necessary for the decisions, are to be taken as of absolute and unqualified authority—that these things, I say, are undoubtedly blasphemous libels, simply and without more, because they question the truth of Christianity. But I repeat what I said on the former trial that, for reasons which I will presently explain, these dicta cannot be taken to be a true statement of the law, as the law is now. It is no longer true, in the sense in which it was true when these dicta were uttered, that Christianity is part of the law of the land. In the times when these dicta were uttered, Jews, Roman Catholics, Nonconformists of all sorts were under heavy disabilities for religion, were regarded as hardly having civil rights. Everything almost, short of the punishment of death, was enacted against them. The epithet “ferocious,” which has been applied to the statute of William III., to which so much reference has been made, is hardly stronger than that statute deserves. Jews, it is true, were excluded from Parliament in a sense by accident, for the oath which excluded them was not pointed at them; but no one can doubt that at that time if it had occurred to anyone that they were not excluded, a law would have been forthwith passed to exclude them. Historically, and as matter of fact, such was the state of things when these dicta were pronounced. But now, so far as I know the law, a Jew might be Lord Chancellor, most certainly he might be Master of the Rolls. The great and illustrious lawyer whose loss the whole profession is deploring, and in whom his friends know that they lost a warm friend and a loyal colleague; he but for the accident of taking his office before the Judicature Act came into operation, might have had to go circuit, might have sat in a criminal court to try such a case as this, might have been called upon, if the law really be that “Christianity is part of the law of the land” in the sense contended for, to lay it down as law to a jury, amongst whom might have been Jews, that it was an offence against the law, as blasphemy, to deny that Jesus Christ was the Messiah, a thing which he himself did deny, which Parliament had allowed him to deny, and which it is just as much part of the law that anyone may deny, as it is your right and mine, if we believe it, to assert. Therefore, to base the prosecution of a bare denial of the truth of Christianity, simpliciter and per se on the ground that Christianity is part of the law of the land, in the sense in which it was said to be so by Lord Hale, and Lord Raymond, and Lord Tenterden, is in my judgment a mistake. It is to forget that law grows; and that though the principles of law remain unchanged, yet (and it is one of the advantages of the common law) their application is to be changed with the changing circumstances of the times. Some persons may call this retrogression, I call it progression of human opinion. Therefore, to take up a book or a paper, to discover merely that in it the truth of Christianity is

Q.B. DIV.]

REG. V. RAMSAY AND, FOOTE.

[Q.B. DIV.]

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. RAMSAY AND FOOTE.

[Q.B. Div.]

denied without more, and thereupon to say that now a man may be indicted upon such denial as for a blasphemous libel, is, as I venture to think, absolutely untrue. 'I for one, positively refuse to lay that down as law, unless it is authoritatively so declared by some tribunal I am bound by. Historically, I cannot think I should be justified in so doing, for Parliament, which is supreme and binds us all, has enacted statutes which make that old view of the law no longer applicable. Nor is it any disrespect whatever to the great men of elder days to hold that what they said in one state of things is not applicable under another. Gentlemen, when I last addressed a jury on this subject, I put a case to them which I thought was a reductio ad absurdum of the argument. I said that, if the law was as contended for, it would be enough to say that anything was part of the law of the land, and that thereupon there could be no discussion and no reform; for that to attack any part of the law, however gravely and respectfully, would be, if not blasphemous yet seditious. Monarchy is part of the law of the land; primogeniture is part of the law of the land; the laws of marriage are part of the law of the land, and so forth. But if the doctrine contended for be true, to republish Algernon Sydney, or Harrington, or Locke, or Milton, would expose a man to a prosecution for a breach of the law of libel. But it shows how dangerous it is for some men at least to presume upon their knowledge. What I put as a reductio ad absurdum I have since discovered actually occurred, and was decided to be law by a judge early in the last century. There is a case reported by Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, R. v. Bedford, from which it appears that a man was actually convicted of a seditious libel for discussing gravely and civilly, and as the report of the case in Bacon's Abridgment, tit. "Libel," says, "without any reflection whatever upon any part of the then existing Government," the respective advantages of an hereditary or elective monarchy. I need hardly say that if such a case arose now no judge would follow that authority, no jury would convict, the whole proceeding would be denounced, and rightly denounced, as altogether monstrous. It is clear, therefore, to my mind that the mere denial of the truth of the Christian religion is not enough alone to constitute the offence of blasphemy. What then is enough? No doubt we must not be guilty of taking the law into our own hands, and converting it from what it really is to what we think it ought to be. I must lay down the law to you as I understand it, and as I read it in books of authority. Now, Mr. Foote, in his very able address to you, spoke with something like contempt of the person he called "the late Mr. Starkie." He did not know Mr. Starkie; he did not know how able and how good a man he was. Mr. Starkie died when I was young; but I knew him, and everyone who knew him knew that he was a man not only of remarkable power of mind, but of opinions liberal in the best sense; and if ever the task of lawmaking could be safely left in the hands of any man perhaps it might have been in his. But, what is more material to the present purpose, the statement of the law by Mr. Starkie has again and again been assented to by judges as a correct statement of the existing law. I will read it to you, therefore, as expressing what I lay down to you as law in words far better than any at my command. "There are no questions of more intense and awful interest than those which concern the relations between the Creator and the beings of His creation; and though, as a matter of discretion and prudence, it might be better to leave the discussion of such matters to those who, from their education and habits, are most likely to form correct conclusions, yet it cannot be doubted that any man has a right, not merely to judge for himself on such subjects, but also, legally speaking, to publish his opinions for the benefit of others. When learned and acute men enter upon these discussions with such laudable motives, their very controversies, even where one of the antagonists must necessarily be mistaken, so far from producing mischief, must in general tend to the advancement of truth, and the establishment of religion on the firmest and most stable foundations. The very absurdity and folly of an ignorant man, who professes to teach and enlighten the rest of mankind, are usually so gross as to render his errors harmless; but be this as it may, the law interferes not with his blunders so long as they are honest ones, justly considering that society is more than compensated for the partial and limited mischief which may arise from the mistaken endeavours of honest ignorance, by the splendid advantages which result to religion and to truth from the exertions of free and unfettered minds. It is the mischievous abuse of this state of intellectual liberty which calls for penal censure. The law visits not the honest errors, but the malice of mankind. A wilful intention to pervert, insult, and mislead others, by means of licentious and contumelious abuse applied to sacred subjects, or by wilful misrepresentations or artful sophistry, calculated to mislead the ignorant and unwary, is the criterion and test of guilt. "A malicious and mischievous intention, or what is equivalent to such an intention, in law, as well as morals—a state of apathy and indifference to the interests of society, is the broad boundary between right and wrong." Now that I believe to be a correct statement of the law. Whether it ought to be or not is not for me to say. I tell you the law as I understand it, leaving you to apply it to the facts of the particular case before you. There was much force, no doubt, in the way in which Mr. Foote dealt with the passage in his address to you. The vagueness, the uncertainty which he insisted upon are possibly, however, inherent in the subject, and there is perhaps more to be said in favour of Mr. Starkie's view than may appear without reflection. There is a passage in his book taken, I believe, from Michaelis, in which it is pointed out with great truth that in one view the law against blasphemous libel may be for the benefit of the libeller himself, who, if there were no law, might find its absence ill exchanged for the presence of popular vengeance and indignation. "Now to the man who from his heart believes his religion, and regards it as the way to eternal bliss, and as the comfort both of life and death, and who of course wishes to educate his family in the knowledge and belief of it, nothing can be more offensive than to hear another speaking against it, and employing, not arguments (although even these he might let alone, because every man has a right even to err, without our forcibly interfering to rid him of his errors), but insolent and contemptuous language, and blaspheming its gods, its prophets, saints, and sacred things. Were the religion in question only tolerated, still the State is bound to protect every person who believes it from such outrages, or it cannot blame him if he has not the patience to bear them. But if it be the established national religion, and of course the person not believing it be only tolerated by the State, and though he enjoys its protection just as if he were in a strange house, such an outrage is excessively gross; and unless we conceive the people so tame as to put up with any affront, and of course likely to play but a very despicable part on the stage of the world, the State has only to choose between the two alternatives, of either punishing the blasphemer himself or else leaving him to the fury of the people. The former is the milder plan, and, therefore, to be preferred, because the people are apt to gratify their vengeance without sufficient inquiry, and of course it may light upon the innocent. Nor is this by any means the treatment which I only claim for the religion which I hold to be the true one, I am also bound to admit it when I happen to be among a people from whose religion I dissent; were I in a Catholic country to deride their saints or insult their religion by my behaviour, were it only by rudely and designedly putting on my hat when decency would have suggested the taking it off; or were I in Turkey to blaspheme Mahomet, or in a heathen city its gods, nothing would be more natural than for the people, instead of suffering it, to avenge the insult in their usual way, that is, tumultuously, passionately, and immoderately; or else the State would, in order to secure me from the effects of their fury, be under the necessity of taking my punishment upon itself, and if it does so, it does a favour both to me and other dissenters from the established religion, because it secures us from still greater evils." It is not so clear, therefore, that some sort of protection for the constituted religion of the country is not a good thing, even for those who differ from it; for if there were no such protection, the consequences pointed out by Michaelis might too probably ensue. It does not follow that because the objects of popular dislike differ in different ages; it does not follow (I wish it did) that the populace of our age are much wiser than the populace of earlier times. It is not so very long ago in our history since the populace of Birmingham wrecked the house and burnt the library of Dr. Priestley, a true philosopher and excellent man. It was not the State which did that, it was the populace. And it is therefore not so clear to my mind that some sort of blasphemy laws reasonably enforced may not be an advantage, even to those who differ from the popular religion of a country, and who desire to oppose and to deny it. Further, therefore, it must not be taken as so absolutely certain that all these laws against blasphemy are in principle tyrannical. Whether, however, they are so or not, if they exist we must administer them, and the principle upon which we are to administer them is to be found in the passage I have read from Starkie. But I think I ought to go further, and to say that such study as I have been able to make of the cases has not satisfied me that the law ever was laid down differently from the law as laid down by Mr. Starkie. I do not pretend to have the time or learning to discuss with you exhaustively all the cases on the subject. I have taken a few of the leading ones, speaking roughly a century apart from each other, and I find the law, as I understand it and have laid it down to you, to be laid down practically in the same way in all these cases. It is perhaps worth observing that this law of blasphemous libel first appears in our books—at least, that cases relating to it are first reported—shortly after the curtailment or abolition of the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts in matters temporal. Speaking broadly, before the time of Charles II. these things would have been dealt with as heresy; and the libellers so-called of more recent days would have suffered as heretics in earlier. But I pass to the cases which are reported. The first of them is a case decided by that great lawyer Lord Hale, of whom Mr. Foote spoke with some respect. He was indeed a man of great intellectual power, of absolute integrity, whose life was that of a Christian saint. If Mr. Foote had read the full report of the trial of the witches before Lord Hale, he would have seen that Lord Hale was there doing what many a judge has had to do, was administering a law he did not like, and so gave to the accused persons every advantage which his great skill in the law fairly allowed him to give; but neither the prisoners nor the jury would take the advantage which he offered them. The case is curious, and he who reads it I think will say that it is a very terse and a very misleading analysis of it, that Lord Hale hung witches because of the language of the Bible; though no doubt the passages in Exodus and Deuteronomy were referred to. Anyone who takes the pains to read the case through will see that, judging him even by the standard of the present day, there is much more to be said for Lord Hale's conduct on that occasion than the run of mankind believe. But in the case of Taylor (which I cite from Ventris, who was himself a judge, and who gives the best report) Lord Hale had the following words before him; and you must always take a case and an opinion with reference to the subject-matter as to which the case was decided or the opinion given. The words, as Ventris says, were "blasphemous expressions horrible to hear," viz., "that Jesus Christ was a bastard and a whoremaster, that religion was a cheat, and that he feared neither God, the devil, or man." Those were the words on which Lord Hale had to decide in that case, and what he says is this: "Such kind of wicked blasphemous words are not only an offence to God and religion, but a crime against the laws, State, and Government, and therefore punishable in this court." That is what Lord Hale held, in one of the earliest cases on the subject. You may find expressions which seem to go further in the reasons which he gives, but before these cases are so glibly cited as they sometimes are, you should look and see what is the subject-matter of the decision. Lord Hale held "such kind of wicked blasphemous words" to be a blasphemous libel, and if they came before me I too should hold them without hesitation to be a blasphemous libel, though I am no more disposed to hang witches than Lord Hale really was. The next case, on which much stress has been laid, and which is usually cited from Strange, though it is more fully and better reported in Fitzgibbons, is the case of Woolston, who was convicted of blasphemous discourses upon the miracles of our

Q.B. Div.]

REG. V. RAMSAY AND FOOTE.

[Q.B. Div.]

Lord, and the court, as reported by Fitzgibbons, lay very great stress on what they call "general and indecent attacks," and carefully state that they did not intend to include disputes between men on controverted matters. That is the law as laid down by Lord Raymond, a great lawyer, no doubt, and a man of high character, though of much which Lord Raymond says and of many of the expressions in his judgment I think that time and change have destroyed the authority. There is then the case which is commonly cited as bringing the law down almost to our own time—the case of E. v. Waddington, tried before Lord Tenterden, and reported in 1 B. & C. The words of the libel were that "Jesus Christ was an impostor, a murderer, and a fanatic." The Lord Chief Justice laid it down that it was a libel, and a jurymen asked the Lord Chief Justice whether a work which denied the divinity of Our Saviour was a libel. Now mark the answer given by Lord Tenterden, one of the most cautious and justly respected of men. "He answered that a work speaking of Jesus Christ in the language referred to was a libel." That ruling was questioned in the King's Bench before Lord Tenterden himself, and Bayley, Holroyd, and Best, JJ. The three judges first named were as great lawyers as ever adorned our Bench; and though Best, J. was a much abler judge than it is nowadays the fashion to call him, still no one but would consider him the inferior of the other three. But when the case was moved in the King's Bench, Lord Tenterden said, "I told the jury that any publication in which Our Saviour was spoken of in the language used in this publication was a libel, and I have no doubt whatever that it is so. I have no doubt it is a libel to publish the words that Our Saviour was an impostor, a murderer, and a fanatic." Bayley, J. says: "It appears to me that the direction of the Lord Chief Justice was perfectly right. There cannot be any doubt that a work which does not merely deny the Godhead of Jesus Christ, but which states him to have been an impostor and a murderer, is at common law a blasphemous libel." Holroyd, J. says: "I have no doubt whatever that any publication in which Jesus Christ is spoken of in the language used in this book is a blasphemous libel, and that therefore the direction was right in point of law." Best, J. gives a longer judgment, in more rhetorical language, but to the same effect, and he concludes: "It is not necessary for me to say whether it be libellous to argue from the scriptures against the divinity of Christ. That is not what the defendant professes to do. The Legislature has never altered the law, nor can it ever do so while the Christian religion is considered to be the basis of that law." Now this is the case which is often cited, I must think by those who have not read it, as an authority that any attack upon Christian doctrine, however respectful and decent in language, is by law a blasphemous libel. It is authority, as I think, for nothing of the kind. It binds me here no doubt, and I shall direct you according to what I conceive is its meaning. There is another case, the last with which I shall trouble you, not indeed exactly in point, but which is sometimes cited in support of the proposition that to attack Christianity is to expose yourself to an indictment for libel. It is the case of Cowan v. Milbourn, decided in 1867, and reported in 2 L. Rep. 230, Ex. It was an action in which the owner of some rooms justified a breach of his contract to let them, on the ground that they were to be used for lectures directed against the character of Christ and his teaching, and the defendant's justification was upheld by the court. The late Lord Chief Baron undoubtedly goes the full length of the doctrine contended for, and from his reasons, on the grounds I have already stated, I respectfully dissent. But Lord Bramwell puts his concurrence in the judgment on a totally different ground. He bases it on the fact that the statute of William III. is still unrepealed; that these lectures were to be in contravention not of the common law—on that he is silent—but of this statute; and he is careful moreover to point out the distinction between a thing, such as prostitution for example, being "unlawful in the sense that the law will not aid it, which it may be, and yet that the law will not punish it." So that, if I understand him, his authority cannot be invoked for the proposition that the proposed lectures were necessarily blasphemous libels or the subjects of indictment. I think therefore that anyone who calmly and carefully considers the cases will very much doubt whether the old law is really open to the attacks which have been made upon it. I doubt extremely whether if you carefully read through—not merely look at—the cases and master the facts upon which the decisions were pronounced, I doubt if they will be found to be so harsh and illiberal as it has been the fashion in modern times to describe them. But whether this is so or not, Parliament at least has altered the law on these subjects; it is no longer the law that none but professors of Christianity can take part or have rights in the State; others have now just as much right in civil matters as any member of the Church of England has. The condition of things is no longer what it was when these great judges pronounced the judgments which I think have been misunderstood, and strained to a meaning they do not warrant. It is a comfort to think that things have been altered. I observe that in the case of the Attorney-General v. Pearson, decided by Lord Eldon in 1817, and reported in Merivale, he expressed a doubt whether the provisions of 9 & 10 Will. 3 as to persons denying the Trinity were or were not repealed by a later statute of Geo. 3. Some old things, and amongst them this statute, are shocking enough, and I do not defend them; but it must be remembered what was the state of the country when that statute passed—who was the king, what was the succession, what were the factions which divided the country, what were the feelings which naturally agitated Parliament. In these regards the statute is not perhaps defensible, but at least it is explicable. At all events, no man would dream of enacting such a statute now, and I trust that Lord Eldon's doubts will never be solved by a court pronouncing them to be well founded. Such are the rules, as I tell you, by which you are to judge of these libels. But further, you have heard a great deal, powerfully put by Mr. Foote, about the inexpediency of these laws in any view of them, and as to the way in which they are worked. To observe on this is the least pleasant part of my unpleasant duty, and I wish I could avoid it. It might perhaps be enough to say that these are things with which you and I have nothing to do. We have to administer the law as we find it, and if we do not like it we should try to get it altered. In a free country, after full discussion and agitation, a change is always effected if it approves itself to the general sense of the community. Mr. Foote has told you that this movement against him and his friends is to be regarded as persecution; and it is true, as he has said, that persecution, unless thorough-going, seldom succeeds. Irritation, annoyance, punishment which stops short of extermination, very seldom alter men's religious convictions. Entirely without one fragment of historical exaggeration, I may say that the penal laws which fifty or sixty years ago were enforced in Ireland were unparalleled in the history of the world. They existed 150 years; they produced upon the religious convictions of the Irish people absolutely no effect whatever. The Irish people could not be exterminated. Everything possible by law short of actual extermination and personal violence was done, and done without the smallest effect. No doubt, therefore, persecution, unless it is far more thorough-going than anyone in England and in this age would stand, is, speaking generally, of no avail. It is also true, that persecution is a very easy form of virtue. A difficult form of virtue is to try in your own life to obey what you believe to be God's will. It is not easy to do, and if you do it, you make but little noise in the world. But it is easy to turn on some one who differs from you in opinion, and in the guise of zeal for God's honour, to attack a man whose life perhaps may be much more pleasing to God than is your own. When it is done by men full of profession and pretention, who choose that particular form of zeal for God which consists in putting the criminal law in force against some one else, many quiet people come to sympathies, not with the prosecutor but with the defendant. That will be so as human nature goes, and all the more if the prosecutors should by chance be men who enjoy the wit of Voltaire, who are not repelled by the sneer of Gibbon, and who rather relish the irony of Hume. It is still worse if the prosecutor acts not from the strange but often genuine feeling that God wants his help and that he can give it by a prosecution, but from partisan or political motives. Nothing can be more foreign from one's notions of what is high-minded, noble, or religious; and one must visit a man who would so act, not for God's honour, but using God's honour for his own purposes, with the most disdainful disapprobation that the human mind can form. However, the question here is not with the motives, of which I know nothing, nor with the characters, of which I know if possible less, of those who instituted these proceedings, but with the proceedings themselves, and whether they are legal. The way in which Mr. Foote defends himself is able, and well worthy of your attention; and you must say, after a few words from me, what you think of it. Mr. Foote's case, as I understand it, is this (he will excuse me if I do not state it accurately): "I am not going to maintain," says he, "that this is all in the best taste; some of it may be coarse; some of it to men of education may give offence. It is intended to be an attack on Christianity; it is intended distinctly to be an attack on what I have seen attacked in the publications of cultivated agnosticism. It is meant to point out that in the books which your professing Christians call sacred are to be found records of detestable crimes, of horrible cruelties, of the lives of sensual, selfish, cruel men, all of which are said to have been pleasing to Almighty God. I do mean to attack your representation of Almighty God. I say your books are not true; I say your religion is what Tacitus called it—a detestable superstition. I mean this, and if I have said it in a coarse language, that is because I have not sufficient culture or education to cull my words carefully. But I will bring before you a number of books sold on every bookstall of Mr. Smith, written by persons admitted to the very highest society in the land, in which not only are the same things to be found in point of matter, but I will read you passages in which there is very little difference in manner—passages, for example, from John Stuart Mill, from Grote, from Shelley" (I mention the dead that I may not wound the feelings of the living). "No one ever dreamed of attacking Shelley." (He is wrong in fact, for Shelley's publisher was prosecuted, and Shelley himself was deprived by Lord Eldon of the custody of his children.) "I will show you things written by these men quite as strong and quite as coarse, as anything to be found in these publications of mine; and it is plain the law cannot be as suggested, because it can never be true that a poor man cannot do what a rich man may; it cannot be true that you may blaspheme if you blaspheme in civil language." Such I understand, put into my own words, to be Mr. Foote's contention. On that I have two things to say: one in Mr. Foote's favour, and one against him. He wished to have it impressed upon you that he is not, and never has been, a licentious writer in the sense in which Mr. Starkie uses the word licentious. He has not, he says, pandered to the sensual passions of mankind. You will have the documents before you, and you will judge for yourselves. For myself I should say that in this matter he is right. It is a thing in his favour, and he is entitled to have it said. But upon the other point, if the law as I have laid it down to you is correct—and I believe it has always been so—if the decencies of controversy are observed, even the fundamentals of religion may be attacked without a person being guilty of blasphemous libel. There are many great and grave writers who have attacked the foundations of Christianity. Mr. Mill undoubtedly did so; some great writers now alive have done so too; but no one can read their writings without seeing a difference between them and the incriminated publications, which I am obliged to say is a difference not of degree but of kind. There is a grave, an earnest, a reverent, I am almost tempted to say, a religious tone in the very attacks on Christianity itself, which shows that what is aimed at is not insult to the opinions of the majority of Christians, but a real, quiet, honest pursuit of truth. If the truth at which these writers have arrived is not the truth we have been taught, and which, if we had not been taught it, we might have discovered, yet because these conclusions differ from ours, they are not to be exposed to a criminal indictment. With regard to many of these persons, therefore, I should say they were within the protection of the law as I understand it. With regard to some of the others, passages from whose writings Mr. Foote read, I heard them yesterday for the first time, I do not at all question that Mr. Foote read them correctly. I con-

Q.B. Div.]

WILLIAMS (app.) v. POWNING (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

fees, as I heard them, I had, and have, a difficulty in distinguishing them from the alleged libels. They do appear to me to be open to the same charge, on the same grounds, as Mr. Foote's writings. He says many of these things are written in expensive books, published by publishers of known eminence; that they are to be found in the drawing-rooms, studies, libraries, of men of high position. It may be so. If it be, I will make no distinction between Mr. Foote and anyone else; if there are men, however eminent, who use such language as Mr. Foote, and if ever I have to try them, troublesome and disagreeable as it is, if they come before me, they shall, so far as my powers go, have neither more nor less than the justice I am trying to do to Mr. Foote. If they offend against the blasphemy laws they shall find that so long as the laws exist, whatever I may think about their wisdom, there is but one rule in this court for all who come to it. This much Mr. Foote may depend upon. So far as I can judge, some of the expressions which he read seemed to be strong, shall I say, coarse?—expressions of contempt and hatred for the generally recognised truths of Christianity and for the Hebrew Scriptures which are said to have been inspired by God himself. But Mr. Foote must forgive me for saying that this is no argument whatever in his favour. Let me explain. It is no argument for a burglar or a murderer (I mean no offence to Mr. Foote, I should be unworthy of my position if I insulted anyone in his)—it is no argument, I say, in favour of a murderer or a burglar that some other person has also committed a burglary or a murder. Because in the infinite variety of human affairs some persons may have escaped, that is no reason why others should not be brought to justice. If he is correct in his citations from these writers, it seems to me that some of them are fairly liable to such a prosecution as his. Suppose they are; that does not show that he is not. What Mr. Foote had to show was not that other people were bad, but that he was good; not that other persons were guilty, but that he was innocent. It is no answer to bring forward these other cases. It is not enough to say these other persons have done these things, if they are not brought before us. Gentlemen, I not only admit, but I urge upon you, and on everyone who hears me, that whilst laxity in the administration of the law is bad, the most odious laxity of all is discriminating laxity, which lays hold of particular persons and lets other persons equally guilty go scot free. That may be, that is so, but it has nothing to do with this case. The question here is not whether other persons ought to be standing where Mr. Foote and Mr. Ramsey now stand; but what judgment we ought to pass on Mr. Foote and Ramsey, who do stand here. In short and in fine, we have to administer the law whether we like it or no. It is undoubtedly a disagreeable law, or may become so, but I have given you some reasons for thinking it not so bad nor so indefensible as Mr. Foote has argued that it is. I think it, on the contrary, a good law that persons should be obliged to respect the feelings and opinions of those amongst whom they live. I assent to the passage from Michaelis, that in a Catholic country we have no right to insult Catholic opinion, nor in a Mohammedan country have we any right to insult Mohammedan opinion.

I differ from both, but I am bound as a good citizen to treat with respect opinions with which I do not agree. Take these publications with you; look at them; if you think they are permissible attacks on the religion of the country you will find the defendants not guilty. Take these cartoons. Mr. Foote says they are not attacks upon, and are not intended for caricatures of, Almighty God. If there be such a being, says Mr. Foote, he can have no feeling for Almighty God but profound reverence and awe, but this he says in his mode of holding up to contempt what he calls a caricature of that ineffable Being as delineated in the Hebrew Scriptures. That is for you to try. Look at them and judge for yourselves whether they do or do not come within the widest limits of the law. If they do, then as with the libels find the defendants not guilty. But if you think that they do not come within the most liberal and largest view that anyone can give of the law as it exists now, then find them guilty. Whatever may be the consequences—you may think the prosecution unwise, you may think the law undesirable, you may think no publications of this sort should ever be made the subject of criminal attack (I do not say you do think so, but you may), it matters not—your duty is to obey the law; not to strain it in favour of the defendants because you do not like the prosecution; not to strain it against them because you do not yourselves agree with the statements they advocate, as you are certain entirely to disapprove of the manner in which they advocate them. Take all these alleged libels into your consideration and say whether you find Mr. Foote or Mr. Ramsay, both or either, guilty or not guilty of this publication.

The jury then retired, and upon an intimation being received from them that they were not likely to come to an unanimous verdict, Lord Coleridge, O.J. intimated to Sir Hardinge Giffard that it was unusual to continue a trial when "another conviction had been obtained against a defendant for substantially the same sort of thing," and in addition, that the prosecution would be called upon to decide without delay upon the course to be adopted under the circumstances.

The jury did not agree upon a verdict, and on Tuesday, May 1, the Attorney-General issued his fiat for a nolle prosequi.

Solicitor for the prosecution, Sir T. J. Nelson.
Solicitors for the defence, Lewis and Lewis.

Monday, April 30, 1883.

(Before DENMAN and HAWKINS, JJ.)

WILLIAMS (app.) v. POWNING (resp.). (a)

Street—Conversion into "new street"—Intention—Sufficient evidence of—Public Health Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), s. 2—Local Government Act 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 34—Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 157.

The appellant built six cottages upon a piece of garden ground in a lane 6 feet wide and 250 feet long, which was admitted to be a street within the meaning of the definition of that word in the Public Health Acts.

Held, that the justices were not justified in coming to the conclusion that the land had been converted

(a) Reported by H. D. BONSER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

WILLIAMS (app.) v. POWNING (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

into a "new street," and therefore they were wrong in convicting the appellant for having violated certain bye-laws made by the urban sanitary authority pursuant to the powers contained in the Public Health Act 1848, and the Local Government Act 1858, one of which provided that every new street not being a carriage road should be laid out and formed at least 18 feet wide.

THREE several informations were preferred by William Charles Powning (the respondent) clerk to the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of the city of New Sarum, acting as the urban sanitary authority against Robert Rideout Williams (the appellant).

The first information charged the appellant that he being a person intending to construct a new street within the meaning of certain bye laws made pursuant to the powers and provisions of the Public Health Act 1848, the Local Government Act 1858, and the Public Health Act 1875, did afterwards actually commence the construction of a new street, and failed to give the notice required by the said bye-laws.

The second information charged the appellant that he did on the 20th March last unlawfully and contrary to the bye-laws, lay out and form a certain new street of a less width than 18 feet, although the urban sanitary authority had never allowed the width of such new street to be so reduced.

The third information charged the appellant that, being a person intending to construct certain new buildings within the meaning of the bye-laws, failed to give the required notices.

The three informations were heard together, and the justices convicted the appellant in the sum of 5s. for the three offences, and stated a case for the opinion of the court under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The material part of the case is as follows :

1. For many years previous to the passing of the Public Health Acts 1848 and 1875, and the Local Government Act 1858, and the formation of the urban sanitary authority for the district of New Sarum, there existed and still exists a public highway for foot passengers in the parish of Milford within the said district, called St. Martin's Church-lane, which is 254 feet in length and leads from a public highway called St. Martin's Church-street to another public highway called Southampton-road.

2. St. Martin's Church-lane is 5ft. 6in. wide at the opening into St. Martin's Church-street, and at the opening into Southampton-road it is 6ft. 5in. wide. Between those points it varies in width, but it is on an average about 6 feet wide. Previous to the commencement of the erection of the appellant's cottages, hereinafter mentioned, it was bounded on one side at either end by the sides of the houses and walls of the gardens at the backs of the houses at the corners of St. Martin's Church-street and Southampton-road respectively, and for the whole of the intervening space by a wall forming the boundary of the half acre of ground belonging to the appellant hereinafter mentioned, and on the other it was bounded by a wall which is still standing.

3. The house at the corner of St. Martin's Church-street was built before the passing of the Public Health Acts and before the formation of the urban sanitary authority. The house at the corner of Southampton-road, the back of which bounds St. Martin's Church-lane for a distance of 63 feet, was built five or six years ago, with the sanction of the sanitary authority; the last-mentioned house has windows in the side fronting St. Martin's Church-lane, and the only entrance is from the said lane.

4. The appellant's land has a frontage of 95 feet, and was formerly cultivated as garden ground. The land on the opposite side of the lane belongs to the rector for the time being of the parish of St. Martin.

5. The bye-laws have been made under the Public Health Act 1875.

6. In the month of November 1881, the appellant being desirous of erecting six cottages on his land fronting the said St. Martin's Church-lane, sent to the surveyor of the urban sanitary authority a certain plan, which was submitted to the urban sanitary authority and not approved of.

7. On the 23rd March 1882 the appellant commenced building the said cottages, which were erected in the position shown on the plan, and continued the work down to the hearing of the informations. The cottages stood 15 feet back from the lane, with gardens in front, leaving the lane the same width as before.

8 and 9 (immaterial)

10. It was admitted that if St. Martin's Church-lane was not and would not after the erection of the cottages become a new street, the appellant had given the usual and proper notices in accordance with the bye-laws.

11. It was also admitted that if St. Martin's Church-lane was, or would, after the erection of the cottages, become a new street, the appellant had not given the notices required by the bye-laws, and the lane was not the width required by the bye-laws for a new street.

12. At the hearing it was contended by the respondent that the erection of the cottages in accordance with the plan would have, and had, converted St. Martin's Church-lane into a new street within the meaning of the Public Health Act 1875, and the said bye-laws.

13. On the part of the appellant it was contended that he had not made, laid out, or constructed, or intended to make, lay out, or construct a new street within the meaning of the Public Health Act 1875 or the said bye-laws, but that all he had done or intended to do was to build six cottages in a garden.

14. The appellant further contended that St. Martin's-lane never could be made of the required width for a new street by the appellant without pulling down the houses at either end or acquiring the land on the opposite side.

15. We found as facts on the facts proved or admitted that the erection of the said cottages in accordance with the said plan would have and had converted the said St. Martin's Church-lane into a new street within the meaning of the Public Health Act 1875, and the said bye-laws, and that the respondent was not precluded from objecting to the building of the appellant's cottages in the lane as above mentioned, and we convicted the appellant on all the said three informations and inflicted penalties amounting in the aggregate to 5s. and costs. The question for the opinion of the court is, whether we were justified under the whole of the circumstances as detailed in the foregoing statement of facts in convicting the

Q.B. Div.]

WILLIAMS (app.) v. POWNING (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

appellant. If we were, then the convictions are to stand, and if not they are to be quashed.

By sect. 34 of the Local Government Act 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98):

Every local board may make bye-laws with respect to the following matters (that is to say): (1) with respect to the level, width, and construction of new streets, and provisions for the sewerage thereof.

By sect. 157 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) the same powers are given to every urban authority.

The following were the bye-laws material to the case:

1. Every new street not being a carriage road shall be laid out and formed at least 18 feet wide, and there shall be one entrance at least to every such street, of the full width thereof, and open from the ground upwards; provided always, that when any street shall exceed the length of 100 feet it shall be at the option of the local board to determine whether such street shall or shall not be laid out and formed of sufficient width for a carriage road.

2. In any case in which an open space shall be left along one or both sides of any new street throughout its whole length in front of the houses, or in which any new street shall not be the principal or only approach to dwelling-houses, the local board may allow of a reduction of the widths herein specified for such streets, whether carriage roads or not, as they shall see fit.

23. Every person who shall intend to make or lay out any new street, whether the same shall be intended to be used as a public way or not, shall give one month's notice to the local board of such intention, by writing delivered to the local surveyor, or left at his office, and shall at the same time leave or cause to be left at the said office a plan and section of such intended new street drawn to a scale of not less than one inch to every forty-four feet, &c.

Charles, Q.C. (Mackey with him) for the appellant.—I contend that the justices were wrong in convicting the appellant for having commenced to lay out a new street without complying with the bye-laws, and in fact for having laid out the street. Before the cottages were built I admit that it was a street within the definition clauses of the Public Health Acts, and the only question is whether in consequence of the cottages having been built the justices were justified in finding that it became a new street. In no possible sense could that transform it into a new street. My contention is that the appellant has merely built six cottages in a garden without any intention of converting the lane into a new street. It cannot make any difference whether he built six cottages or one. [DENMAN, J.—Is it not a question of fact which the justices have to decide?] Yes, but I say there was no evidence upon which they could so find; and they have moreover set out the whole of the facts in the case, and asked the court whether, as a point of law, they were justified in finding as they did. The appellant could not have complied with the bye-laws and have made the lane eighteen feet wide, for he had no control over any of the other property. The local board sanctioned the building of one of the houses at the corner some few years ago, and did not insist upon the lane being widened, and therefore they have shown their intention not to convert it into a new street. In Robinson v. The Local Board for Barton (47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 286; 21 Ch. Div. 621), Brett, L.J. points out three ways in which a street may be converted into a new street; and if those tests are applied to this case, it will be found that in no possible sense can it be said that this lane has been laid out as, or converted into, a new street.

One case is where a person owns the whole land on both sides, and makes a plan laying it out in building plots, then it is said that when he begins to build he begins to form a street. Another case is where the land belongs to several owners, and then it cannot be said that a street is formed until you can conclude from the acts of each that they all intend to build. A third case is where, although the land belongs to different owners, it has not been designed for building purposes, and one owner begins to build, and in that case it is said that a street is not formed until you are able to see by the course of building that there is a common intent to build. I submit that in the present case nothing has been done upon which, in point of law, the magistrates can find that this old lane has become a new street, and the convictions are wholly unwarrantable.

Grantham, Q.C. (Meek with him), for the respondents.—The appellant has filled up all the land he has, and therefore he could not do more to show his intention of converting the lane into a street. It is purely a question of fact for the magistrates, and they have found that what was done did convert it into a street. It cannot be said there was no evidence, and if there is any evidence upon which the magistrates could act it is not subject to appeal. [HAWKINS, J.—Laying one brick would be some evidence, but the question is, whether there was sufficient evidence to give the magistrates an option.] What more could the appellant do than build cottages on the whole of his land? In the case of Robinson v. The Local Board for Barton, the Master of the Rolls says: "It must be a question in each particular case when the road becomes a street; and as soon as it does so it is a new street, and not the less a new street because some of the houses were built before it was a street." I contend that it was entirely a question of fact for the magistrates, and there was sufficient evidence upon which they could find an intention on the part of the appellant to convert this lane into a new street.

May 8.—DENMAN, J.—This was an appeal against a conviction for the violation of certain bye-laws made by the corporation of Salisbury acting as the urban sanitary authority. The matter in respect of which the appellant was convicted is put in three different ways by the convictions. The first is that, being a person intending to construct a certain new street, and who thereafter actually commenced the construction of such street, he failed to give the notices required by the bye-laws; the second is, that he laid out and formed a new street of a less width than eighteen feet, although the urban sanitary authority had never allowed the width of such new street to be so reduced; and the third had some slight variation to which it is not necessary to refer. There is one admission in the course of the case which renders it unnecessary to go much into details. In paragraph 10 it was admitted that, if St. Martin's Church-lane was not, and would not, after the erection of the cottages in accordance with the plan, become a new street, the appellant had given the usual and proper notices and plan for the building of the cottages in accordance with the bye-laws, and had complied with all the requirements of the bye-laws in relation to new buildings. It was also admitted that, if St. Martin's Church-lane was or would after the erection of the cottages in accordance with the plan become a new street, the appellant had not given the notices required by the bye-laws, and that St. Martin's Church-lane was not of the width required by the bye-laws for a new street. So that the whole question turns upon whether St. Martin's Church-lane was or was not, or would become, a new street if the appellant did what his plan showed he intended to do. At the end of the case in paragraph 15 the finding of the magistrates was given in this way: "We found, on the facts proved or admitted, that the erection of the said cottages in accordance with the said plan would have and had converted the said St. Martin's Church-lane into a new street within the meaning of the Public Health Act 1875 and the said bye-laws." A considerable difficulty occurred to me to make out from that paragraph in the case what the magistrates really found, whether they were finding a fact in the proper sense of the word, or whether they were in substance and reality giving a finding of law. But I am of opinion, looking at the whole case, that what they have done is that, though they found certain facts, they felt themselves bound in point of law to find it was a new street. The question at the end of the case is, "whether the court was justified, under the whole of the circumstances as detailed in the foregoing statement of facts, in convicting the appellant." Reading that with paragraph 15, what I think the magistrates really meant to do was to ask us whether on the facts we are of opinion in point of law that this street became a new street within the meaning of the bye-laws. Now the bye-laws are these [reads bye-laws 1 and 2]. The sole question is therefore whether this is a new street. On the north there is a wide road called Southampton-road, and on the south a wide road called St. Martin's Church-street. On the north, that is where it runs into Southampton-road, it is 6ft. 5in. wide, and on the south where it runs into St. Martin's Church-street, it is 5ft. 6in. wide, and it is found in the case that it is of an average width of 6 feet. On the east side throughout the whole length there is a wall which separates the lane from some glebe land, and on the west at the north end for 63 feet there is a building and garden wall, and at the other end on the west side there is precisely the same state of things for a distance of 96 feet. The appellant has property extending 95 feet along the west side. The appellant wished to build some cottages, and he deposited a plan showing six cottages in a row, with a garden in front; the garden being 15 feet from the cottages to the old lane, and leaving the lane the same width as it was before. That being the state of things, the view the magistrates have taken is, that the building of these six cottages would necessarily convert St. Martin's Church-lane into a new street, and that it was a violation of the bye-laws because between the outer wall of the garden and the opposite wall he had not left a width of 18 feet. I am of opinion that the magistrates were wrong, and that they have taken an erroneous view of their duty in considering themselves bound to find it became a new street. Great stress was laid upon the case of Robinson v. The Barton Local Board (ubi sup.). I have looked carefully through that case both in the Court of Appeal and the court below, and I do not entertain a doubt that the decision of the magistrates would be an extension of the decision of that case, and would be a violation of the tests there laid down as to these cases. Fry, J. held that the street was not a new street for the simple reason that it was an old street before the acts were done which it was said converted it into a new street, and therefore it could not be a new street; but that view was entirely negatived by the Court of Appeal. Though the judges all use different expressions, their judgments seem to be based on this, that in the particular case the street had become a new street because there had been such an entire alteration by the acts of different persons on a great part of both sides, and it had so altered in character that it had become a different street, and in that sense a new street, not only by the acts of the appellant, but by the acts of other persons also, all contemplating a street by their several acts. They do not all put it on exactly the same ground, but that appears to be the result of their judgment. Now, it would be quite competent for the sanitary authority in this case to purchase the land and make this street of sufficient width to be a new street within the meaning of the bye-laws, but there is no indication of their intention to do anything of the kind. This is one circumstance which seems to negative, as applicable to this case, the principle of the decision in Robinson v. The Barton Local Board, namely, the indication to convert it into a new street by the acts of several persons. Now, has Mr. Williams shown any intention of making this a new street? He certainly sent a plan showing that he intended to build six cottages on his land, but that in itself is not any evidence of his intention, because he was bound to do that wholly irrespective of whether he was building with the view to making it a new street. I see no evidence to show more than that Mr. Williams, having land on which he was entitled to build, determined to build six cottages without contemplating the formation of a new street. That being so, I think we ought to answer the question in favour of the appellant, and give judgment for him.

HAWKINS, J.—I am of the same opinion. It was conceded that St. Martin's Church-lane was a street within the meaning of the interpretation clauses of the Public Health Acts, or one of them, and Robinson v. The Local Board for Barton is an authority for showing that an old street may be converted into a new street. Therefore the question is, whether what has been done in this case has converted what was formerly a street into a new street. The only act which can be put forward to support this contention is, that the appellant has built six cottages upon his own land on one side of the lane, and Mr. Grantham says that is sufficient to justify the magistrates in coming to the conclusion that the lane was converted into a new street. A street in the popular acceptance of the term is a road with houses for the most part on either side, though not necessarily contiguous. Now, how may an old lane which is an old street be converted into a new street? In Robinson v. The Local Board for Barton it is pointed out that a street may become a new street in a variety of ways. If the land on both sides belongs to one owner, and he lays it out in building plots, and begins to build on one plot, he would begin to form a new street, having an intention to go on to make a street. Another way is, where the land belongs to different owners, and by their united acts you can find an intention indicated to make a new street in the popular sense of the term. In that case it would be impossible to come to any other conclusion than that it was a new street. Another case is where the land belongs to different owners, and no tribunal could say that there ever was at the same time an intention amongst them all to build. In that case the precise time at which it does become a new street may be a question of some difficulty, and it is a question of fact to be decided by the justices. How can it be said that either of those things has been done here? The appellant has only half an acre of land on one side of the lane, and has no power or control over the land on either side of his. In building the cottages I think he must be taken to have built them simply to make use of his own land, and without any intention of converting it into a new street. There is nothing to justify the magistrates in coming to the conclusion that this lane became a new street by the act of the appellant alone, without the aid of the other owners. Nor is there any evidence that the owner on the opposite side of the lane has any intention to use his land for building purposes. Therefore I have to consider whether by the mere fact of the appellant having built six cottages on one side of the street, and having no power or control over the remaining portions of the street, he has converted it into a new street. I think he did not, and that in proposing to convict the appellant the magistrates were wrong, and he is entitled to our judgment.

Q.B. Div.] REG. v. CATHOLIC LIFE & FIRE ASSURANCE & ANNUITY INSTITUTION LIM. [Q.B. Div.]

Convictions quashed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Taylor, Hoare, and Taylor.

Solicitors for the respondent, Clarke, Rawlins, and Co., for W. O. Powning, Salisbury.

Wednesday, May 2, 1883.

(Before DENMAN and HAWKINS, JJ.)

REG. v. THE CATHOLIC LIFE AND FIRE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY INSTITUTION LIMITED. (a)

Companies Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 26 and 27—Penalty for not forwarding list of members to Registrar of Joint Stock Companies—Continuing offence—11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11.

By sect. 26 of the Companies Act 1862 every company having a capital divided into shares shall make once a year a list of persons who were members on a certain day, and send the same to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies; and by the 27th section, any company making default in complying with the above provision shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such default continues.

A company made default in the years 1877, 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882.

Held, that it was a continuing offence, and penalties could be recovered for default made in each year for a period not extending over more than six months.

CASE stated by one of the metropolitan police magistrates under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, and the Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879.

(a) Reported by H. D. BORSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CASE.

1. On the 15th Feb. 1883 thirty informations were laid before me sitting at the Police Court at Bow-street, against the respondent company, whose registered office is 114, Beaconsfield-road, Tottenham. Each of such informations was (with the exception of dates) in the form and in the words of the copy information set out in the appendix hereto. Upon each of such informations I issued a summons, which was (with the exception of dates) in the form and in the words of the summons in the appendix hereto.

2. The matter of complaint in each summons is a default in complying with the provisions of the 26th section of the Companies Act 1862, which requires (inter alia) a company to make once at least in every year a list of all persons who on the 14th day succeeding the day on which the ordinary general meeting is held were members thereof, and to forward a copy of such list and a summary as in the said section is mentioned to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies forthwith after their completion. By the 27th section a penalty is imposed of 5*l.* for every day during which such default continues.

3. The respondent company is a company incorporated in 1869 under the Companies Act 1862, having a capital of 1,000,000*l.* divided into 100,000 shares of 10*l.* each. A copy of the memorandum of association is annexed.

4. During the years 1877, 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882 the respondent company made default in forwarding to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies the list of its members and the summary as required by the Companies Act 1862 in each of those years respectively, and did not in fact forward such a list and summary for any of those years to the said registrar before the 5th Jan. 1883. A list for 1877 never was forwarded. Copies of these lists together with that for 1883 are annexed in the appendix.

5. The several matters of complaint which arose in respect of the defaults made for the years 1877, 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882 respectively, are all laid as continuing offences on the same six days in 1882, that is to say:

On Oct. 2nd, 1882	} In respect of the default in not forwarding the list of members and summary in and for the year 1877.
" " 3rd, "
" " 4th, "
" " 5th, "
" " 6th, "
" " 7th, "

On Oct. 2nd, 1882	} In respect of the default in not forwarding the list of members and summary in and for the year 1879.
" " 3rd, "
" " 4th, "
" " 5th, "
" " 6th, "
" " 7th, "

And so on for the years 1880, 1881, and 1882.

6. I convicted the respondent company on six summonses for the offences laid to have been committed by them on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th days of October 1882 in not forwarding the list of the members and the summary as required by the Companies Act to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies for the year 1882, but I declined to convict the said company on the remaining twenty-four summonses for the like offences alleged to have been committed in respect of the years 1877, 1879, 1880, and 1881, on the ground that the information in respect to the offences in the last-mentioned years had not been laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such information arose as required by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11.

7. It was contended on behalf of the prosecution that a fresh offence under the 27th section of the Companies Act 1862 was completed at the end of every day during which the default therein mentioned continued, that the offence was the continuing in default during the whole of such day, and that the penalty was imposed for and in respect of such continuance. In support of this contention the cases of Hardy v. Ryle (9 B. & C. 608) and Whitehouse v. Fellows (10 C. B. N. S. 765) were cited. I was of opinion that the cases cited did not apply to this case, and further that, though a penalty accrued for every day's default, the time for commencing a prosecution for its recovery was limited to six months after each day's default.

The question submitted to the court is :

Were the said twenty-four informations laid in time ?

If the court should answer the above question in the negative, my decision is to stand ; if the court should answer the same in the affirmative, the case is to be remitted in order that the respondent company may be convicted in respect of them.

By the Companies Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 26 :

Every company under this Act, and having a capital divided into shares, shall make, once at least in every year, a list of all persons who on the fourteenth day succeeding the day on which the ordinary general meeting, or if there is more than one ordinary meeting in each year, the first of such ordinary general meetings is held, are members of the company ; and such list shall state the names, addresses, and occupations of all the members therein mentioned, and the number of shares held by each of them, and shall contain a summary specifying the following particulars :

1. The amount of the capital of the company, and the number of shares into which it is divided ;
2. The number of shares taken from the commencement of the company up to the date of the summary ;
3. The amount of calls made on each share ;
4. The total amount of calls received ;
5. The total amount of calls unpaid ;
6. The total amount of shares forfeited ;
7. The names, addresses, and occupations of the persons who have ceased to be members since the last list was made, and the number of shares held by each of them.

The above list and summary shall be contained in a separate part of the register, and shall be completed within seven days after such fourteenth day as is mentioned in this section, and a copy shall forthwith be forwarded to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.

By sect. 27 :

If any company under this Act, and having a capital divided into shares, makes default in complying with the provisions of this Act with respect to forwarding such list of members or summary as is hereinbefore mentioned to the registrar, such company shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such default continues, and every director and manager of the company who shall knowingly and wilfully authorise or permit such default shall incur the like penalty.

By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, it is enacted :

That in all cases where no time is already or shall hereafter be specially limited for making any such complaint or laying any such information in the Act or Acts of Parliament relating to each particular case, such complaint shall be made and such information shall be laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such complaint or information respectively arose.

Danckwerts for the appellant.—This is a prosecution instituted under the 26th section of the Companies Act 1862, and the short question is, whether the information was laid in time. The magistrate refused to convict for those offences which were first committed in the years prior to 1882, on the ground that under Jervis's Act the information must be laid within six months from the time when the matter of the information arose. I admit that Jervis's Act applies to this case, but my contention is, that a new offence was committed on every day that default was made in forwarding a list and summary provided by the statute, and therefore the respondent company is liable to pay penalties for six months in respect of the offence committed in each year. The case of Reg. v. Waterhouse (26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 761 ; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 545) is directly in point. That was a case under the Nuisances Removal Act of 1855. Nineteen separate informations were laid, and the same number of summonses issued in respect of as many acts of disobedience, each committed on a separate day by sending forth black smoke, and it was held that each daily emission of smoke was a separate act of disobedience for which a separate summons might be lawfully issued. Blackburn, J. there says, in the course of the argument : " Each emission of smoke on a separate day was a separate offence of disobedience, just as in a recent case where we held that a parent having been fined for disobeying an order to have his child vaccinated may be proceeded against from time to time so long as the child remains unvaccinated." I submit that the learned magistrate was wrong, and that he ought to have convicted upon all the summonses.

No one appeared for the respondent.

DENMAN, J.—We must give our judgment for the appellant in this case. The words of the statute are these : " Such company shall incur a penalty not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such default continues." It appears to me that the default continues notwithstanding any number of days have elapsed, and it still going on the penalties are sought within six months. I think the magistrate had jurisdiction, and therefore the appellant ought to succeed.

HAWKINS, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Case remitted.

Solicitor for the appellant, The Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

CR. CAS. RES.]

REG. v. THOMAS JONES—REG. v. THOMAS LOWE.

[CR. CAS. RES.]

CROWN CASES RESERVED.Saturday, June 2, 1883.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., POLLOCK, B., LOPES, MANISTY, and STEPHEN, JJ.)

REG. v. THOMAS JONES. (a)

Bigamy—Cohabitation—Continuance of cohabitation doubtful—Presumption of law.It was proved that the prisoner and his wife were married in 1865, and that they lived together after marriage, but how long did not appear. There was no evidence of separation, or when they last saw each other. In 1882 the prisoner married a second time, and was indicted for and convicted of bigamy.Held, that there was no evidence to displace the presumption arising on this state of facts that the first wife was living at the date of the second marriage.

CASE stated for the opinion of this court by Stephen, J.

Thomas Jones was convicted before me at the last Stafford Assizes on a charge of bigamy.

It was proved that he was married to Winifred Dodds, on the 13th March 1865, and that he went through the ceremony of marriage with Phoebe Jones on the 11th September 1882, Dodds being then alive.

One witness said that the prisoner and his 'wife had lived together after marriage, but how long she did not know. There was no evidence at all as to their having ever separated, or as to when, if separated, they last saw each other.

In Reg. v. Ourgerwen (L. Rep. 1 C. C. R. 1) it was proved that the prisoner and his wife had lived apart for many years before the second marriage, and it was held that in that state of facts the prosecution were bound to prove that the prisoner had known that his wife was alive within seven years of the second marriage. As there was no proof that Jones and his wife had ever separated, I thought that Reg. v. Ourgerwen did not apply, and directed the jury to convict the prisoner if they believed he had married a second time in his wife's lifetime.

He was found guilty, and I sentenced him to two months' imprisonment and hard labour, and suspended the execution of the sentence and committed him in default of bail till this case should be determined.

The question for the court is, whether, in these circumstances, I ought to have directed an acquittal. J. F. STEPHEN.

No counsel appeared to argue on either side.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—We are all of opinion that this conviction should be affirmed. The prisoner married his first wife in 1865, and it was proved that the prisoner and his wife lived together after the marriage, but how long they lived together did not appear, and there the matter was left. There was no evidence to show that they had ever been separated or when they last saw each other. There is nothing, therefore, stated in the case to displace the presumption that the first wife was still alive, created by the affirmative evidence that they had lived together as married husband and wife. In Reg. v. Ourgerwen (L. Rep. 1 C. C. 1) it was proved that the prisoner and his wife had lived apart for seven years preceding the second marriage, and it was held that it was incumbent on the prosecution to show that during that time the prisoner was aware of her existence. In the present case there was no such evidence forthcoming, and, therefore, a state of things once set up must be presumed to continue unless there is evidence to displace that presumption. Here there was no evidence to displace the presumption arising from the original state of things that the second marriage took place in the lifetime of the first wife. The conviction was perfectly right and must be affirmed.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Conviction affirmed.Saturday, June 2, 1883.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., POLLOCK, B., MANISTY, LOPES, and STEPHEN, JJ.)

REG. v. THOMAS LOWE. (a)

Evidence—Bankruptcy—Notices in the London Gazette—Cuttings from the Gazette.A petition in bankruptcy having been presented against the prisoner in the D. County Court, the court made an order that the publication of a notice of the petition in the London Gazette should be deemed service of the petition on the prisoner. The prisoner did not appear according to this notice, and there was no evidence that it had come to his knowledge. The prisoner was adjudicated bankrupt in his absence, and diverse proceedings in the bankruptcy took place. Subsequently thereto the prisoner was arrested, and afterwards examined in court touching his affairs by the trustee in the bankruptcy, and the result was that he was indicted and convicted for various offences under the Bankruptcy Act. On the trial, in proof of the publication of the order of the County Court in the Gazette, the file of the proceedings in the Bankruptcy Court was produced, containing a cutting from the Gazette of the advertisement of the order of the County Court and notice to appear.Held, that this cutting from the Gazette was improperly received as evidence of the publication of the notice in the London Gazette, and that the conviction could not be sustained.

CASE stated by the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for the county of Derby, held at Derby on the 3rd April 1883.

The prisoner was indicted at the above sessions under the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd sub-sections of the 11th section of the Debtors Act 1869.

1. For that he, being duly adjudged a bankrupt, did not, to the best of his knowledge and belief, fully and truly discover to the trustee administering his estate for the benefit of his creditors all his property real and personal, and how, and to whom, and for what consideration, and when he disposed of any part thereof except such part as had been disposed of in the ordinary way of his trade, or laid out in the ordinary expenses of his family.

2. And that he did not deliver up to such trustee, or as he directed, all such part of his real and personal property as was in his custody or under his control, or which he was required by law to deliver up.

(a) Reported by JOHN THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a) Reported by JOHN THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

3. And that he did not deliver up to such trustee, or as he directed, all books, documents, and papers in his custody or under his control relating to his property or affairs.

The following facts were proved at the trial:—

Early in Jan. 1874 the prisoner (who was a trader at Chesterfield) sold his effects by auction, received the proceeds of the sale, and immediately left the neighbourhood, without paying his debts or discharging his address.

A petition in bankruptcy was presented against him on the 26th Jan. 1874, in the County Court of Derbyshire, held at Chesterfield.

On the 25th March 1874 the County Court made an order that the publication of a notice of the petition in the London Gazette should be deemed service of the petition on the prisoner. (a)

On the file of the bankruptcy proceedings under the seal of the County Court produced at the trial was an entire page of a printed document, headed "London Gazette, 31st March 1874," in which an advertisement occurred, addressed to the prisoner, giving him notice of the petition and the order of court for substituted service, and that the petition would be heard in the said County Court on the 22nd April 1874, on which day he (the prisoner) was required to appear, and if he should not, the County Court judge might adjudge him bankrupt in his absence.

Prints of the same advertisement appeared also on the file of proceedings with memoranda subscribed, stating that they had respectively been inserted in the Derbyshire Times and Derbyshire Courier (two newspapers published at Chesterfield) on the 28th March 1874.

The prisoner did not appear according to this notice.

There was no evidence that it had come to his knowledge.

On the 22nd April 1874 he was adjudged bankrupt.

The first meeting of creditors was held on the 20th May 1874, when John Edey, an accountant, was appointed trustee of the prisoner's estate, and received the registrar's certificate of his appointment.

The 17th June 1874 was the day fixed for the public examination of the prisoner under his bankruptcy, but he did not attend, and his examination was adjourned sine die.

On the 19th Nov. 1874 the County Court ordered the trustee to prosecute the prisoner for offences against sect. 11, sub-sects. 1, 2, and 3, of the Debtors Act 1869, and in May 1875 a warrant was issued for the prisoner's apprehension on those charges.

The prisoner, who on leaving Chesterfield had passed under the assumed name of John Bosworth, was not arrested on the above charges until the

(a) By the Bankruptcy Rules, r. 60: A bankruptcy petition shall be personally served seven days before the day of its hearing by delivering to the debtor a sealed copy of the filed petition.

Rule 61: In the case of a petition the court may order that a notice according to the form in the schedule be gazetted requiring the debtor to appear at the hearing of the petition on the day named, being not less than fourteen days after the publication of the notice, and that such notice shall be deemed to be served on the debtor.

Rule 62: Notice of the publication in the Gazette of the order of the court shall be given in one local paper according to the form in the schedule.

26th Feb. 1883, at Shrewsbury, when he was brought to Chesterfield by a police officer, who read over to him the warrant on which he was apprehended.

On the 28th Feb. 1883, while the prisoner was still in custody at the police office at Chesterfield, he was examined on oath touching his affairs by John Edey, the trustee (who administered the oath), and the prisoner's deposition on such examination was reduced into writing at the time, and was then and there read over to the prisoner and signed by him.

This written deposition was tendered in evidence at the trial on behalf of the prosecutor as part of his case.

Two questions of law were raised at the trial on the prisoner's behalf: First, that the page alleged to be part of the London Gazette of the 31st March 1874 did not contain the imprint of any printer or purport to be published by authority, and therefore should not be admitted in evidence; secondly, that the prisoner's deposition on his examination by the trustee on the 28th Feb. 1883 should not be admitted in evidence because the trustee had no authority to administer the oath, or to examine the prisoner on the charge for which he was arrested while he was in custody on such charge.

The Court of Quarter Sessions admitted in evidence the page of the London Gazette and the prisoner's deposition bearing his signature.

The prisoner was convicted and judgment thereupon passed, and he was sentenced to four calendar months' imprisonment with hard labour, the Court of Quarter Sessions reserving the said questions of law for the consideration of this honourable court.

The prisoner has been discharged on recognisance of bail to appear at the next quarter sessions to render himself in execution.

If the page of the London Gazette and the prisoner's deposition, or either of them, were wrongly admitted in evidence on his trial then the conviction was to be quashed, but otherwise was to be affirmed.

T. W. EVANS, Chairman.

No counsel appeared to argue on either side.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.—In order to make out the case for the prosecution, it was necessary to show that a notice of the petition in bankruptcy had appeared in the London Gazette, and the prosecution produced only a cutting of that part of the London Gazette which contained the advertisement of the notice of the petition having been filed instead of the entire Gazette. The Court of Quarter Sessions received that as evidence of the notice without anything more, and assumed that because it came from the Bankruptcy Court, and was filed with the other proceedings, it was all right. It is obvious that it would be dangerous to allow cuttings from the Gazette to be assumed to be all that the statute requires to be produced in evidence of publication in the London Gazette. It seems to us that this objection is fatal, and that the cutting from the Gazette was improperly received, and on that ground, without entering into the second objection, we think that the conviction must be quashed.

The rest of the Court concurring,

Conviction quashed.

Q.B. Div.]

YATES (app.) v. CHORLTON-UPON-MEDLOCK UNION (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Tuesday, May 22, 1883.

(Before CAVE and SMITH, JJ.)

YATES (app.) v. CHORLTON-UPON-MEDLOCK UNION (resp.).

ALMOND (app.) v. SAME (resp.). (a)

Rating Acts—Liability to be rated for the relief of the poor—Caretaker—Servant—Tenant.

Y. had been put into a dwelling-house, No. 157, Plymouth Grove, in the township of Chorlton, by his own master, who was one of two joint owners of the house, and in whose employment Y. had been for some time previously. At the time the dwelling-house was empty, and Y. was put into it with his wife and children, for the purpose of taking care of it while it was so empty. Y. was not otherwise in the employment of the said owners, and, except the benefit of living rent free with his wife and children in two rooms of the said dwelling-house, he received no remuneration for his services in taking care of the same.

A. had been for some years previously in the employment of the joint owners of the dwelling-house, No. 163, Plymouth Grove. His duties were to look after and attend to any houses in the neighbourhood of Plymouth Grove, belonging to the said owners, which might from time to time be vacant, to prevent trespass being committed thereon, to look after the gardens, and to show inlet houses to persons coming to see the same. The dwelling-house, No. 163, Plymouth Grove, being vacant, A. with his wife and children was put into it by the owners, as caretaker, performing the same duties to the owners as before.

A. was liable and ready to leave the said house at the command of the owners at any time. Under these circumstances Y. and A. were assessed by the rating authority to the relief of the poor as occupiers of the said houses respectively. Upon appeal to the general quarter sessions of the peace for the city of Manchester, the Recorder allowed the appeal, but stated two cases for the opinion of the court.

Held, by Cave and Smith, JJ., that Y. and A. were not liable to be rated for the relief of the poor in respect of the said premises, on the ground that the occupation in each case was that of a servant and not that of a tenant.

THESE were cases stated by the Recorder of Manchester for the opinion of the court, raising the question in each case whether a caretaker, who has been put into an otherwise empty dwelling-house by the owners of it, simply for the purpose of taking care of it while it is so empty, is liable to be rated, as occupier, for the relief of the poor within the Rating Acts. The appellant Yates was put into the house, No. 157, Plymouth Grove, by his own master, who was one of two joint owners of the house, for the purpose of acting as caretaker of the house while it was empty. Under these circumstances the rating authority for the township of Chorlton-upon-Medlock held that Yates was liable to be rated as a caretaker, and accordingly on or about the 26th Feb. 1882 rated him to the relief of the poor as the occupier of the said dwelling-house. Against this rate Yates appealed to the general quarter sessions of the peace, holden in and for the city of Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, on the 20th Oct. 1882, and the Recorder, Henry Wyndham West, Esq., Q.C., allowed the appeal, but granted the following case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court:—

1. A rate for the relief of the poor for the township of Chorlton-on-Medlock, was duly made on the 26th Feb. 1882, and was duly allowed by two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the city of Manchester on the 26th June 1882. The said rate was duly published according to law.

2. In the said rate the appellant was assessed as follows:

Name of Occupier.	Name of Owner.	Description of Property.	Number of House.	Street.	Gross Rental.	Rateable Value.	Rate.
3011 Enos Yates	Ex. Oocleshaw	House	House, No. 157	Plymouth Grove	£90	£75	£14 7s. 6d.

3. The said dwelling-house (No. 157, Plymouth Grove) was left vacant in Sept. 1881, and remained so till June 1882, when the owners of the said house, described in the said rate as "Executors of Oocleshaw," found that the said dwelling-house had been broken into and some of the fixtures stolen.

4. Thereupon Mr. George Langford, one of the said executors, asked the appellant, Enos Yates, who was in his employment as cellarman at his business premises, to go and reside in the said dwelling-house with his wife and children, rent free, and take care of the same, and the said Enos Yates, with his wife and children, occupied two rooms in the said house.

5. The appellant Enos Yates was not otherwise in the employment of the executors, and except the benefit of living rent free in the said two rooms in the said dwelling-house, received no remuneration for taking care of the said dwelling-house.

6. The said dwelling-house was to be let, and had bills in the windows "To be let" during all the time that the appellant resided in the said house as aforesaid, and the appellant was liable and ready to leave upon the command of the said owners at any time.

7. Prior to the date when the said house became vacant as hereinbefore mentioned, it had been let at a rental of 90l. a year.

8. The appellant duly appealed to the assessment committee of the Chorlton-on-Medlock Poor Law Union, and failed to obtain relief. All notices, formalities, and conditions precedent to the hearing of the said appeal were duly given and fulfilled by the appellant. It was contended by the appellant that he resided in the said house as the servant of the owners, and was not liable to be rated to the relief of the poor as the occupier of the said dwelling-house, No. 157, Plymouth Grove.

9. I was of that opinion, and allowed the appeal, with costs to be paid by the respondents.

10. If the court are of opinion that, upon the above facts, the said appellant, Enos Yates, was

Q.B. Div.]

YATES (app.) v. CHORLTON-UPON-MEDLOCK UNION (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

liable to be rated to the relief of the poor, as occupier of the dwelling-house, No. 157, Plymouth Grove, then my said decision is to be reversed; otherwise my said decision is to be affirmed.

The following case was stated with respect to the appellant John Almond, who had been rated as the occupier of the dwelling-house, No. 163, Plymouth Grove :—

Name of Occupier.	Name of Owner.	Description of Property.	No. of House.	Street.	Gross estimated Rental.	Rateable Value.	Rate.
John Almond	Ex. Oocleshaw	House	163	Plymouth Grove	£95	£79 5s. 0d.	£15 3s. 9d.

3. The owners of the said dwelling-house, described in the said rate as "Executors of Oocleshaw," also own several other dwelling-houses in the immediate neighbourhood of the dwelling-house, No. 163, Plymouth Grove. The appellant, John Almond, for some years prior to the date of the making of the said rate, had been, and at the time of the making of the said rate still was, in the employment of the said owners, and his duties were to look after and attend to any houses in the neighbourhood of Plymouth Grove belonging to the said owners, which might from time to time be vacant and unlet, and to prevent trespass being committed thereon, and to keep the gardens of any such houses in good order. It was also his duty to show unlet dwelling-houses, belonging to the owners, to persons who might come to inspect the same with a view of becoming tenants thereof.

4. Shortly before the date of the making of the said rate appealed against, the appellant was put into the said house, No. 163, Plymouth Grove, as caretaker thereof, by the trustees, and the appellant continued to reside in the house as such caretaker down to and at the time of the making of the said rate. The appellant, as such caretaker as aforesaid, lived in three rooms of the said house, and his wife and children lived with him in the said three rooms. In the kitchen garden the appellant had planted some curly greens and a few turnips. One of the children kept some rabbits in the stable attached to the said house.

5. The said dwelling-house, No. 163, Plymouth Grove, was to be let and had bills "To be let" in the windows during all the time that the appellant resided therein as such caretaker as aforesaid, and the appellant was liable and ready to leave upon the command of the said owners at any time.

6. The appellant continued to look after the said houses and gardens as before.

7. Before the said house became vacant, it had been occupied by a tenant from year to year, at the rental of 95*l.* a year.

8. The appellant duly appealed to the assessment committee of the Chorlton Poor Law Union, and failed to obtain relief, and all notices, formalities, and conditions precedent to the hearing of the said appeal were duly given and fulfilled by the appellant. It was contended by the appellant that he resided in the house as servant of the owners, and that he was not liable to be rated to the relief of the poor as the occupier of the said house, No. 163, Plymouth Grove.

9. I was of that opinion, and allowed the appeal, with costs to be paid by the respondents.

10. If the court are of opinion that, on the above

1. A rate for the relief of the poor of the township of Chorlton-on-Medlock was duly made on the 26th Feb. 1882, and the said rate was duly allowed by two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the city of Manchester on the 26th June 1882. The said rate was duly published according to law.

2. In the said rate the appellant was assessed as follows :

facts, the said appellant, John Almond, was liable to be rated to the relief of the poor, as the occupier of the dwelling-house, No. 163, Plymouth Grove, then my said decision is to be reversed; otherwise my said decision is to be affirmed.

Smly for the respondents.—The question here is whether the occupiers of these houses are rateable to the poor. It will be contended on the other side that the houses occupied by these persons as mere caretakers are not rateable; but I submit, in the first place, that these houses were rateable; and, in the next place, that they were rateable to the persons occupying them. The overseers wish to make the persons actually occupying them rateable. By the Act 23 & 29 Vict. c. 79, at the end of one year, these persons would acquire a status of irremovability in the parish. This case has not actually been decided in the English courts, but there is an Irish decision on the point. The Act under which the rate is levied is 43 Eliz. c. 2, the first section of which directs the overseers to raise the rates weekly or otherwise by taxation of every inhabitant . . . and of every occupier of houses, &c. In the cases of The Mersey Docks v. Cameron and Jones v. The Mersey Docks (11 H. of L. 443; 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 643; 35 L. J. Rep. N. S., M. C. 1), the Lords have laid down some principles which apply to the rate in these cases. [CAVE, J.—Nothing turns in these cases on the amount of the rate.] That is so. There is no dispute as to the amount of the rate, but only as to the liability to be rated. [CAVE, J.—There is no doubt of this property being capable of beneficial occupation as in The Mersey Docks case.] Lord Chelmsford, at p. 519, clearly puts the test, as to who is the person in actual occupation. The property here is clearly rateable, and the only question is whether Yates and Almond occupy as servants, so as to make the owners liable. The case of Reg. v. Pensonby (3 Q. B. 54; 11 L. J. Rep. N. S., M. C. 65), establishes the proposition that, if a person allows another to occupy a house, the latter is liable. [SMITH, J.—In that case exemption was claimed on the ground of the property being Crown property.] If a person occupies a house, paying for it by his services, thereby living rent free, surely this person is rateable? Here Yates is not a servant of the executors in any sense whatever. [CAVE, J.—If a man lets a poor relation live in a house rent free, that person is therefore rateable.] If so, what is the difference between the occupation of Yates in this case and that of the poor relation? [SMITH, J.—In this case does he not occupy as servant? Suppose you have your coachman with his wife and family in your house, who is liable?] Clearly the owner. The question whether a person is a servant or an occupier is a question of fact in each case :

Q.B. Div.] MAUDE AND OTHERS (apps.) v. THE LOCAL BOARD OF BALDON (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

Hughes v. Overseers of Chatham, 5 M. & G. 14. ; 13 L. J. Rep. N. S. 44, C. P. ; 7 Scott N. R. 581.

If Yates does certain services, he receives the whole of his remuneration by living rent free in the premises. The case of Rea v. The Inhabitants of Tynemouth (12 East, 46), in which a person occupying as servant was held not to be ratable, differs from the present case in two important particulars : the person there was a servant, and residence in the lighthouse could only be for the purpose of keeping up the lights. [CAVE, J.—How do you distinguish the case of Yates from the case in 12 East?] In that case it was found expressly that the person was a servant. As to the appellant Almond, his duty was to act as a kind of house agent to show the other houses to people coming to see them. [CAVE, J.—But with regard to this house he lives in it as caretaker and servant.]

Smith v. Overseers of Seghill, L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 422 ; 44 L. J. Rep. N. S. 114, M. C. ; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S., 859.

[CAVE, J.—There the occupation was that of a tenant and not that of a servant ; the person was occupying for his own benefit, and not that of his master.]

Martin v. The Assessment Committee of the West Derby Union, 52 L. J. 66, M. C.

Anstie, Q.C. and Leese, for the appellants, were not called on.

CAVE, J.—I am of opinion that this appeal of the assessment committee should be dismissed, on the ground that the occupation here was the occupation of a servant, and not that of a tenant. The cases which have been cited with great ability are all distinguishable from the present, as being cases in which the occupation was as tenants and not as servants. The case last cited, and reported in the Weekly Notes, in which it was held that the residence of the superintendent of police was ratable to the poor rates, differs very materially from the present case, in this respect, that the house was hired and prepared for the police superintendent ; but, in the present case, the houses are not built nor brought into existence for the caretaker, but the reverse ; this being the conclusion which must be drawn from the case. Then, as to Almond's case, the executors have the houses already prepared, he is put into one of them simply as caretaker, to look after the house, and to show the other houses to persons wishing to see them. It is necessary, therefore, that he should live in the house for those purposes, and his occupation of the house is the occupation of a servant, and not that of a tenant.

SMITH, J.—I am of the same opinion. Here we have in the first place two empty houses, in the second place the necessity of having someone to take care of them, and in the third place the fact of Yates and Almond being put into the houses to occupy them as caretakers. The question at once arises, in what character do Yates and Almond occupy these houses ? It seems to me that they occupied as servants, and not as tenants. It was said by Mr. Smyly that they might have their wives and families there ; but this does not take away their position as servants, just as a coachman, who lives with his wife and children in premises belonging to his master, is a servant notwithstanding.

Appeal of the assessment committee dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Gregory, Bowcliffe, and Co., for Hampson, Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondents, Bower, Cotton, and Bower.

Tuesday, March 6, 1883.

(Before POLLOCK and HUDDLESTON, BB. and NORTH, J.)

MAUDE AND OTHERS (apps.) v. THE LOCAL BOARD OF BALDON (resps.). (a)

Local Government Board—Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), sects. 4, 150—Summary proceedings against owners to recover expenses of works under sect. 150—Road or street—Definition of "street" in sect. 4—Finding of fact by justices—Justices not bound by definition in sect. 4 to find as a matter of law contrary to the fact.

The Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) by sect. 150 enacts that "where any street within any urban district (not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large) or the carriage-way, footway, or any other part of such street is not sewered, levelled, paved, &c., to the satisfaction of the urban authority," such authority may, by notice as therein mentioned, "require the respective owners or occupiers of the premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting on such parts thereof as may require to be sewered, &c., to sewer, level, pave, &c., the same," and in default of compliance with such notice the urban authority may execute the required works themselves, and recover the expenses thereof summarily from such owners or occupiers in proportion to their respective frontages. The interpretation clause (sect. 4) of the said Act enacts that "In this Act if not inconsistent with the context, the following words and expressions shall have the meanings hereinafter respectively assigned to them, that is to say . . . street includes any highway not being a turnpike road, and any public bridge, not being a county bridge, and any road, lane, footway, square, court, alley, or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not.

The respondents as the urban authority for the district of B., having proceeded summarily under sect. 150 to recover from the appellants their proportion of the expenses of sewerage, &c., a certain road or street within the district, not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, the justices determined and adjudged that the appellants should pay the amount so claimed from them ; but, in a case stated by them for the court, the justices stated as follows, "We held as a matter of fact the road in question was not a street, but that we considered ourselves bound by the definition in sect. 4 of the Public Health Act 1875 to declare it to be a street."

Held, by the court (Pollock and Huddleston, BB., and North, J.) giving judgment for the appellants, that it was for the justices to find, as a matter of fact, whether or not the road was a "street" within sect. 150, and that their finding on that fact was final and conclusive ; and that they were not bound to find, as a matter of law, that it was

(a) Reported by HENRY LEIGH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.] MAUDE AND OTHERS (apps.) v. THE LOCAL BOARD OF BAILDON (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

a "street" within the definition of that word in sect. 4.

Reg. v. Dayman (7 E. & B. 672; 26 L. J. 128, M. J.), approved and followed.

Case stated by two justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The respondents, the Local Board for the district of Baildon, in the county of York, as the urban authority for the said district, preferred a complaint against the appellant Maude, and also against the other appellants, the trustees of one Richard Goldsborough, deceased, as owners respectively of premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting upon a certain street or road called West-lane, within the said district, to recover from them, under sect. 150 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), their respective proportions of the expense of sewerage, levelling, paving, and channelling the said street or road, and, after hearing the parties and the evidence adduced before them, the justices determined and adjudged that the appellants should respectively pay the sums so claimed from them; but, upon the application and request of the appellants, stated and signed for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice a case setting out the facts, of which the portions material for this report are as follows:—

At the hearing of the several complaints evidence was called on behalf of the respondents, but none was called on behalf of the appellants, and the following facts were proved:

West-lane, the road in question, is within the urban district of Baildon, and leads from the westerly end of the village of Baildon, out of Westgate-street, at a point marked A. in a plan accompanying the case, and thence proceeds, in a south-westerly direction for a distance of about 1420 lineal yards, to the junction of a lane, called Banktop-lane, with the said road at the spot marked M. on the said plan, and thence in a north-westerly direction to a house called Lacy Hall, and there joins a bridle way leading to Eldwich, and places beyond.

Between the point A. and Lacy Hall the road is laid out as a cart road, but for a period long prior to 1835 the public have enjoyed a right of way on foot and on horseback along the said road from the said village to the point M. and beyond.

It was proved to our satisfaction that repairs had been done to the said road by the owners of the land on the northerly side thereof for a period of sixty years and upwards, under a custom for the owners of land on the northerly side of the said road to repair the whole of such road in proportion to the extent of their respective frontages. No repairs have been done by the respondents, or by the highway authority, or the parish authorities. The appellants' premises are situated on the southerly side of the said road. There is no continuous line of houses on the said road between the points A. and M. At the westerly end of the said road, nearest to the said village, however, namely, from the point A. to a point marked D. on the plan, there are numerous houses on both sides of the road; but along the whole of the remainder, and by far the greater and longer portion of the said road, viz., from D. to M. there are only two houses, and the lands on each side of the said road between D. and M. are of a purely agricultural character.

The appellants failing to pay the amounts apportioned by the surveyor, and awarded by a duly appointed arbitrator under the Act, to be paid by them, summonses were issued, and proceedings were taken against them before the justices as above mentioned; and at the hearing of the information (the case of the appellant Maude and of the other appellants, the Goldsborough trustees, being identically the same), the following, amongst other points, were taken on their behalf; that there was no continuous line of houses on the said road between the points A. and M.; and that the said road by reason thereof, "and by reason also of its being, for by far the greatest portion of its length, a purely agricultural lane used as an occupation road by the owners and occupiers of the adjoining lands, was not a "street" within the meaning of sect. 150 of the Public Health Act 1875."

The justices held that the road in question was a street within the meaning of sect. 150 of the statute, as being within the definition of the word "street" given by sect. 4 of the same Act; and they also held that the other points were insufficient in point of law, and they accordingly adjudged and determined that the appellants should respectively pay to the respondents the amounts claimed, but without costs.

The question for the opinion of the court is whether the determination of the justices upon the points arising upon the construction of the Public Health Act 1875 was correct in point of law; and if not, what should be done in the premises.

The case came on for argument some months ago, when the court (Field and Stephen, JJ.), not thinking it clear whether the justices had found it to be a street as a matter of fact, apart from the definition of the word in sect. 4, sent the case back to the justices for them to state whether the road in question was found by them to be a street as a matter of fact, or whether they considered themselves bound by the definition clause so to find, and thereupon it subsequently came back, with the following memorandum signed by the justices, appended thereto:

Nov. 17 1882.—We held that as a matter of fact the road in question was not a street, but that we considered ourselves bound by the definition in sect. 4 of the Public Health Act 1875 to declare it to be a street.

March 6.—The case now came on again for argument, and

Forbes, Q.C. (with whom was H. E. Stansfield) appeared for the appellants.—The simple question here is, What is the meaning of the word "street" in sect. 150 of the Act of 1875? For nearly three-quarters of a mile along the road in question, viz., from points A. to M. there are but two houses, and the land is purely agricultural. Originally the justices found it was a street within sect. 150, as being within the definition of "street" in sect. 4, by which they thought they were bound. But now it appears from the further statement at foot of the case that the justices found that, as a matter of fact, it was not a street, though they had thought they were bound to declare it to be one under sect. 4. Their finding, therefore, as to the fact now is that it is not a street, and the case of Reg. v. Dayman (26 L. J. 128, Mag. Cas.; 7 E. & B. 672) is an authority showing that such finding is conclusive and final. The question in that case arose under the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, by which a parish vestry had power to pave any new street, and to recover the expense of so doing, from the owners of the houses forming the street, by summons before two justices; and the police magistrate, after hearing the evidence, dismissed the complaint against an owner on the ground that the street having been dedicated to the public as a highway before the passing of the Act then in question was not a "new street" within the meaning of the Act; and on a motion under sect. 5 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, calling on the magistrate to show cause why he should not hear and adjudicate, the majority of the Court of Queen's Bench (Lord Campbell, C.J., and Wightman and Crompton, JJ.) held (Erle, J. dissentiente) that he had done so, and that the court could not interfere. The definition of the word "street" in that Act of Parliament was this: "The word 'street' shall apply to and include any highway, road, &c.," which is in substance and effect the same as the definition in sect. 4 of the present Act. [He was here stopped by the Court, who called on]

Q.B. Div.] MAUDE AND OTHERS (apps.) v. THE LOCAL BOARD OF BAILLOW (resps.). [Q.B. Div.]

Waugh (with whom was H. Wills) for the respondents, contra, who contended that as a matter of law this was a "street" notwithstanding the magistrate's finding on the matter of fact. The interpretation clause (sect. 4) of the Public Health Act 1875 says: "In this Act, if not inconsistent with the context, the following words and expressions have the meanings hereinafter respectively assigned to them, that is to say, 'street' includes any highway not being a turnpike road, and any public bridge not being a county bridge, and any road, lane, footway, square, court, alley, or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not." [HUDDLESTON, B.—That section, in other definitions there given, uses the word "means," as, for instance, "Borough means" so-and-so and "Local Government district means" &c., "Parish means a place," &c., and so on; but, when we come to "street," it does not say "means" but "street includes" so-and-so.] In Reg. v. Fullford (10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 346; L. & C. Cr. Cas. Res. 403; 9 Cox Cr. Cas. 522; 33 L. J. 122, M. C.; 10 Jur. N. S. 522) will be found the explanation of the difference between these terms. [HUDDLESTON, B.—The case of Reg. v. Kershaw (6 E. & B. 999; 26 L. J. 19, M. C.; 2 Jur. N. S. 1139) shows that the word "means" in an interpretation clause limits the interpretation to the expressions there used; but it is different where the word is "includes." Take "house," for instance, which by the section includes schools, but you surely would not say that therefore a house must be a school? No; but the cases go to this, that the ordinary and prima facie meaning of any well-known term is not excluded; but, in addition thereto, if there be a definition clause giving an artificial meaning to certain ordinary terms, then, wherever it can be done, in addition to the ordinary, an artificial meaning is applicable if not inconsistent with the context. The matter of fact for the magistrates in such a case is to find whether those words are included in the general meaning, and it is for the court then to apply the definition and say whether in the particular case it applies or not. [POLLOCK, B.—You must first get over the objection raised by Reg. v. Dayman (ubi sup.). If the Court of Queen's Bench held that, notwithstanding the interpretation clause there, it was a matter of fact for the magistrates, and they considered themselves bound by that matter of fact, why is this court not now so bound?] There it was calling on the magistrate to hear and determine, which he had already done, and determined that it was not a street. [POLLOCK, B.—Substantially the justices have done so here. They report to the court that, de facto, they found that this was not a street, which must be taken as imported into the original case, and, as to what they add as to sect. 4, we think they were not bound by that section, and so their finding of the fact is unfettered. The one is a proper exercise of their function, the other is a mere matter of opinion upon the point of law.] Where there is a meaning in common and daily use, that meaning is a matter of fact; but, where a definition clause gives an artificial meaning to certain words, the matter of fact for the justices is, whether those words are included in the general meaning, and it is for the court to apply the definition in the particular instance, and say whether it must conclusively and necessarily be a street within that definition. As a matter of fact they say it is not a "street," but, as a matter of law under the section of the Act, it is a "street." In Coverdale v. Charlton (38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 687; 3 Q. B. Div. 376; 47 L. J. 446, Q. B.) Cockburn, C.J., in his judgment said: "It is certainly rather startling to find that under the term 'urban district' may be included an area of a thoroughly rural character such as this, and that under the term 'street' a green lane may be included; but it has pleased the Legislature so to enact, and of course it must be so." That case was supported on appeal (see 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 88; 4 Q. B. Div. 104; 48 L. J. 128, Q. B.). If that construction is not inconsistent with the context it must be accepted. Again, in Robinson v. The Barton Local Board (47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 286; 21 Ch. Div. 621; 52 L. J. 5, Ch.), on appeal from a decision of Fry, J. below (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 193; 51 L. J. 467, Ch.), Brett, L.J. in his judgment, referring to this same sect. 4, said: "The Act clearly dealt with at least two different kinds of streets; one, a street which nobody in ordinary language, without the help of an Act of Parliament, would have called a street; the other which everybody without that aid would have called a street. The interpretation clause includes under the word 'street' things which no one in ordinary parlance would call 'streets,' as, for instance, a highway which has not a house on either side of it." [POLLOCK, B.—Do you say that the justices are bound by reason of this interpretation clause to say that every highway without a house on either side of it is a street?] Yes, within the meaning of sect. 150, in an urban as opposed to a rural district. The last paragraph of sect. 150 is "The same proceedings may be taken and the same powers exercised in respect of any street or road of which a part is or may be a public footpath, or repairable by the inhabitants at large, as fully as if the whole of such street or road was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large." Now, if this is not a street in fact, it is found to be a road, and also that part of it is a public footpath; and sect. 150 favours the respondents' contention as showing the Legislature's intention that the definition clause should apply to sect. 150, because it uses the words "street or road;" the context, therefore, not only not excluding, but actually

Q.B. Div.]

FRIEND (app.) v. TOWERS (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

inviting the meaning of the definition in sect. 4. Nor is Reg. v. Dayman (ubi sup.) opposed to this view. The mandamus applied for in that case was refused on the ground that the magistrate had already heard and determined the matter, and held that it was not a street, and therefore the application for the rule was wrong in form.

POLLOCK, B.—The question for the opinion of the court as it originally stood in this case was as follows: "Whether our determination upon the construction of the various points, hereinbefore set forth, arising upon the Public Health Act 1875, was correct in point of law; and, if not, what should be done in the premises." Now, as there was a doubt as to what the finding of the magistrates here in point of fact was, the case was sent down by the court for a further finding in that respect, and on the 17th Nov. last, the justices added the following memorandum to their previous finding, namely, "We held that as a matter of fact, the road in question was not a 'street,' but that we considered ourselves bound by the definition in section 4 of the Public Health Act 1875 to declare it a street." Now, from that addendum to the case, it is clear to my mind that the magistrates have acted properly within what was said in the case of Reg. v. Dayman (ubi sup.) to be their duty. That case clearly laid down that it was the duty of the magistrates in all such cases to find in the first place, whether, in point of fact, the road in question was or was not a street. Mr. Waugh says, and very properly, that if the magistrates were so placed that they were bound by the definition given in the statute to find a certain thing, they could not find in fact anything contrary thereto; for instance, if the definition clause in the Public Health Act had said that a "street shall mean all passages, ways, roads, &c.," giving certain definitions, they could not find contrary to that. But in truth that is not the difficulty here. What the justices here say is this, having said that they held as a matter of fact that the road in question was not a street, they go on to say, "but we considered ourselves bound by the definition in sect. 4 to declare it a street." The question therefore now is whether they were or not so bound? I am clearly of opinion that they were not so. As my brother Huddleston has already pointed out in the course of the argument, it is one thing to say that "street shall mean" so-and-so, or that "roads and passages and so forth shall be deemed to be streets," and another and a very different thing to say that "street shall include" so-and-so, which does not intend that the magistrates are to have no power at all to find the fact. It merely means to say that if a certain place, way, or road be a street in other respects, then that the word "street" in the Act of Parliament shall include that place, way, or road. Now that seems to me to dispose of that branch of the argument on the part of the respondents, and to enable the court to say that, having before them the finding of the magistrates on a point of fact, there is no matter for any further argument. There is, however, one other matter to which our attention was properly called by Mr. Waugh, who argued that by sect. 150 of the Act of 1875 it was provided that the power declaring it to be a street is not to be ousted by reason of there being a public footpath running parallel with the so-called street, and in the present case there was, as a matter of fact, such a footpath; but I cannot help thinking that that was not the intention, nor is it the effect, of sect. 150. Its effect, in my opinion, is not to say that, wherever there is a footpath running parallel, the rest of the ground is in such a case to be deemed a street. It merely, I think, means to say that, in all those cases in which the magistrates could properly find the residue to be a street, that power of so finding is not to be taken away in consequence of the fact that there is a public footpath. That, I think, is quite understandable, nor is it necessary to illustrate it now, though there are many cases which might arise in which that power would be of importance. None of those possible cases, however, affect the present case. We have here merely to say whether or not sect. 4 compels the magistrate so to find, and my opinion is clearly that it does not. The judgment of the court will therefore be for the appellants.

HUDDLESTON, B.—I am of the same opinion. The moment that the case went back to the justices the question was one of fact only, namely, whether this place is or is not a "street," and the finding of the justices on that matter is that it is not a street.

NORTH, J.—I also am entirely of the same opinion.

Judgment for the appellants with costs. Leave to appeal refused.

Solicitors for the appellants, Sharpe, Parkers, Pritchard, and Sharpe, agents for Weatherhead and W. and G. Burr, Bingley.

Solicitors for the respondents, Emmett, Son, and Stubbs, agents for Peel, Stanford, and Hines, Bradford, Yorkshire.

Friday, Dec. 1, 1882.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., FIELD and STEPHEN, JJ.)

FRIEND (app.) v. TOWERS (resp.). (a)

REGISTRATION APPEAL.

Parliament—Registration of voters—Borough vote—Description of qualification in third column as "house"—Sufficiency of, under Representation of People Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 3—Amendment of description to "dwelling-house"—Power of revising barrister to amend—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 28, sub-sects. 12, 13—Sched. Form D, No. 1, Division 1—Form O., note P. (4)—Reform Act 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 27.

The qualification of the respondent, a resident occupier of a dwelling-house in a parliamentary and municipal borough, which conferred on him a sufficient qualification for the borough franchise under sect. 3 of the Representation of the People Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), but was not of sufficient value (10l. a year) to give the franchise under the Reform Act of 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 27, was described in the third column of the occupiers' list (Form D, No. 1, Division 1), as "house." An objection was taken at the revision court that that description was incorrect and insufficient for the purpose of the inhabitant occupiers' franchise under the Act of

(a) Reported by HENRY LEIGH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

FRIEND (app.) v. TOWERS (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

1867, inasmuch as by sect. 5 of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), such description was made applicable and appropriated exclusively to the 10l. franchise under the Reform Act of 1832, and that proof of an inhabitant occupier's "dwelling-house" qualification under the Act of 1867 was thereby absolutely precluded; and further that to amend the description by altering it to "dwelling-house" would be to substitute another and different qualification, which the revising barrister had no power to do. The revising barrister was of opinion that the qualification was sufficiently described as it stood, the two terms "house" and "dwelling-house" being substantially the same; but that, if not, he could, "for the purpose of more clearly and accurately defining the same," amend the description under sub-sect. 12 of sect. 28 of the Act of 1878, by prefixing the word "dwelling" to the word "house" in the third column, which he accordingly did and retained the voter's name in the list.

Held, on appeal therefrom, that, whether or not the original description in the third column was sufficient, which it was not necessary now to decide, the revising barrister clearly had power under the provisions of sub-sect. 12 to amend the description as he did, and was right in so amending it.

THIS was an appeal from the decision of the revising barrister for the city and county of the city of Exeter at a court held for the revision of the list of voters for the said city, at which court the appellant duly objected to the name of the respondent being retained on the original list (Form D, No. 1, Division 1) for the parish of St. David, of persons entitled to vote at the election of members to serve in Parliament for the said city, upon the ground that the qualifying property of the respondent was of insufficient value.

The following facts were proved before the revising barrister:—

1. The name of Thomas Hoskin Towers appeared in the said list in the following form:

Names of Voters in full, Surname being first.	Place of Abode.	Nature of Qualification.	Name and Situation of Qualifying Property.
Towers, Thomas Hoskin.	Bonhay-road.	House.	Bonhay-road.

2. The clear yearly value of the said property is less than 10l.

3. The said Thomas Hoskin Towers had, during the whole of the qualifying period, been in occupation of the said property as tenant, and had used and occupied the same as his dwelling-house.

4. No declaration, under sect. 24 of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878 had been made or filed, nor had the said Thomas Hoskin Towers made any claim under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 15; but he appeared in person, and gave evidence in accordance with the above facts.

5. The names of 269 other persons, whose names and qualifications are set out in the schedule hereto annexed, were objected to by the appellant on similar grounds and under similar circumstances.

It was contended for the objector (the appellant)

MAG. CAS.—VOL. XIII.

(1) That the description "house" was, by sects. 5 and 8, and the schedule and notes thereto, of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878, so appropriated to the franchise created by the Reform Act of 1832 (2 Will. 4, c. 45, s. 27) as to exclude proof under it of a "dwelling-house" within sect. 3 of the Representation of the People Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102). (2) That the revising barrister had no power to amend the said description by substituting "dwelling-house" for "house," on the ground that by so doing he would be inserting another qualification, and in support of that contention the case of Nicholls v. Bulwer (23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 542; 1 Hop. & C. 472; L. Rep. 6 C. P. 281; 40 L. J. 82, C. P., 19 W. R. 284) was cited. (3) That if the revising barrister had the power to amend, such power could only be exercised on proof that the voter had duly made and filed a declaration under sect. 24 of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878, or a claim under sect. 15 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18. (4) That the several cases cited on behalf of the respondent (ubi infra) had been decided prior to the passing of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878.

On behalf of the respondent it was contended:

(1) That the description of the nature of the qualification as "house" was sufficiently comprehensive to include "dwelling-house." (2) That the terms "house" and "dwelling-house" were not dependent for their nomenclature on the fact of the value being 10l., or under that sum. That it was no more necessary, in any case, in the third column, to prefix the word "dwelling" to "house," than it was under the Reform Act of 1832 to add "value of 10l. per annum," or under the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878, to add "separately occupied as an inhabitant occupier," for in each case the value and occupation of the house by dwelling in it was a subject of proof only, and not of description. (3) That by Form D. of the schedule to such Registration Act 1878, given for a person "entitled under any right conferred by the Reform Act 1832, or by sect. 3 of the Representation of the People Act 1867," the term "house" was used, and not "dwelling-house." (4) That it was not necessary, under the Reform Act 1832, to follow the words of the statute, and therefore not necessary to do so under the Representation of the People Act 1867. (5) That a declaration under sect. 24 of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878 was no more than a mode of receiving evidence in order to save the personal attendance of the voter, and could have no greater effect than the evidence of the voter given in person. (6) That the term "house" was not so exclusively appropriated to the 10l. franchise created by sect. 27 of the Reform Act of 1832 as to exclude proof under it of a "dwelling-house" within sect. 3 of the Representation of the People Act 1867. (7) That it was in the revising barrister's power and obligatory upon him to amend (if it were necessary) by prefixing the word "dwelling" to "house" under sect. 28 of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878.

The following are the cases cited before the revising barrister in support of the above-mentioned contention on behalf of the respondent:

Score v. Huggett, 1 Lutw. 198; 8 Scott N. R. 919; 7 M. & G. 95; 14 L. J. 74, C. P.; B. & Arn. 335; 9 Jur. 70;

Q.B. Div.]

FRIEND (app.) v. TOWERS (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Jolliffe v. Rice, 2 Lutw. 90; 6 C. B. 1; 18 L. J. 25, C. P.; 18 Jur. 39;
Toms v. Luckett, 2 Lutw. 19; 5 C. B. 23; 17 L. J. 27, C. P.; 11 Jur. 993;
Thompson v. Ward, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 679; 1 Hop. & C. 530; L. Rep. 6 C. P. 327; 40 L. J. 169, C. P., in which latter case the description of the nature of the qualification was "house," but the rent or value was under 10l.;

Townshend v. Marylebone, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 749, 1 Hop. & C. 606; L. Rep. 7 C. P. 143; 41 L. J. 25, C. P.; 20 W. R. 148;
Ford v. Boon, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 830; 1 Hop. & C. 668; L. Rep. 7 C. P. 150; 20 W. R. 251; 41 L. J. 28, C. P.; Ellis v. Burch, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 679; 1 Hop. & C. 537; L. Rep. 6 C. P. 329; 40 L. J. 169, C. P. (judgment of Bovill, C.J.).

The revising barrister decided that the description "house" was a sufficient description of a "dwelling-house" under sect. 3 of the Representation of the People Act 1867, and that it was not so appropriated to the franchise created by the Reform Act of 1832, s. 27, as to exclude proof under it of a "dwelling-house" under sect. 3 above mentioned; but that it was a matter of evidence whether a house was a "house" as required by the Reform Act of 1832, of the value of 10l., or whether it was a "dwelling-house" under the Representation of the People Act 1867; and that, although it was not absolutely necessary for him to do so, he should, and he did, "for the purpose of more clearly defining the qualification," amend the description by prefixing the word "dwelling" to the word "house;" and he retained the name of the said Thomas Hoskin Towers, and also the names of the said other respondents (whose names are set forth in the said schedule, the validity of the objections to whom depended upon evidence decided by the revising barrister upon the same points of law, and the appeals in relation to which he ordered to be consolidated) in the occupiers' list of parliamentary voters for the said city.

If the court should be of opinion that such decision of the revising barrister was wrong, the register was to be amended by erasing the names of the said Thomas Hoskin Towers, and the names of the said several other persons whose names were set out in the said schedule, from the said list.

Charles, Q.C. (with whom was T. T. Bucknill) appeared for the appellant, and contended that the decision of the revising barrister was wrong. The qualification created by sect. 27 of the Reform Act 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45) consists of and arises from the occupation of a "house" of the specified value of 10l. a year, whereas the occupation franchise under sect. 3 of the Representation of the People Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102) is that of an "inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house," no matter of what value, whether more or less than 10l., it may be. The two qualifications are entirely different and distinct the one from the other. By sect. 5 of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26) it is enacted that in and for the purposes of the Reform Act 1832 the term "house, warehouse, counting-house, shop, or other building" shall include any part of a house where that part is separately occupied for the purpose of any trade, &c." and that in and for the purposes of the Representation of the People Act 1867 the term "dwelling-house" shall include any part of a house where that is separately occupied as a dwelling. In the directions for the guidance of overseers in making out the lists, given in note P. to form O., in the schedule to the Act of 1878, it is said that "the nature of the qualification should be entered as nearly as possible in the words of the statute creating the franchise;" for instance—(a) The nature of the qualification of a person under the Reform Act 1832, or, under the Municipal Acts, should be stated thus: "house;" or in the case of a joint occupation, "house (joint);" or "warehouse" "counting-house," "shop" or "building;" or in the manner provided by the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878 as the case may be. (b) The nature of the qualification of a person under sect. 3 of the Representation of the People Act 1867 should be stated thus: "dwelling-house." These portions of the several Acts of 1832, 1867, and 1878 clearly show that "house" and "dwelling-house" are not convertible terms, but are descriptions of two entirely distinct qualifications; and that the term "house," in the third column under the heading "Nature of Qualification," precludes and negatives the idea of a qualification grounded on the occupation of a "dwelling-house." In the case of two franchises overlapping, as where a man claims for the occupation of a house under the Act of 1832, which he himself inhabits, his qualification may be described in the third column either as "house" or "dwelling-house."

Townshend v. Marylebone, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 749; 1 Hop. & C. 606; L. Rep. 7 C. P. 143; 41 L. J. 25, C. P.; 20 W. R. 148.

Willes, J., in Ford v. Boon (25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 830; 1 Hop. & C. 668; L. Rep. 7 C. P. 150; 20 W. R. 251; 41 L. J. 28, C. P.), explains the meaning of the decision in Townshend v. Marylebone. He says: "After our decision in Townshend v. Marylebone (ubi sup.) it must be taken to be law that, if there be a description of a qualification which is sufficient when the claim to vote is in respect of a house of the annual value of 10l., and that description is such as to fall under some other qualification, as, for instance, a qualification in respect of a dwelling-house under the Act of 1867, the claimant may prove his qualification in respect of the genus 'house' under sect. 27 of the Act of 1832, or in respect of the species 'dwelling-house' under the Act of 1867. The head of qualification is the same in either case. But here the claim is for a new franchise, viz., as an 'inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house,' and the description therefore should have been stated in the third column as 'dwelling-house.' In his judgment in Townshend's case (ubi sup.) Brett, J. (differing from the majority of the court) said: 'Sect. 27 of the Reform Act 1832 gave various different qualifications, viz., 'house, warehouse, counting-house, shop, or other building.' Now, irrespective of the statute, some of these expressions include others of them; e.g., 'house' includes 'warehouse,' and a 'shop' is a 'house;' yet, in interpreting the Act, it has been always held that a person claiming as for the one of them could not prove for the other; as, if he claimed in respect of a 'shop,' and the proof was that in addition to the 'shop' he occupied the rest of the house as his residence, that would oust his claim to the vote. Now the Act of 1867 has given a

Q.B. Div.]

FRIEND (app.) v. TOWERS (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

new qualification in respect of the inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house, and sect. 59 expressly enacts that the new Act shall be construed as one with the enactments for the time being in force relating to the representation of the people and with the Registration Acts, and it appears to me that sect. 27 of the Reform Act 1832 must be read as if 'dwelling-house' had been one of the qualifications inserted therein. Then, according to the old decisions, the claimant, if he had claimed for a 'dwelling-house' qualification, could not have proved his qualification as simply 'house.' It is argued that this construction of sect. 3 takes away the right of the voter; but if it does so it is because his qualification is misdescribed. The court ought to be as careful of the rights of the objector as of the rights of the voter." It comes to this, that where there is an overlapping of franchises, it is the same either way, "house" or "dwelling-house;" but where, as here, there is no overlapping, it is not so, and the qualification must be stated with strict correctness and accuracy. He cited also Bradley v. Baylis in the Court of Appeal, and the judgment of Brett, L.J. there (46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 253; 1 Col. Reg. Cas. 163; 8 Q. B. Div. 195-210; 51 L. J. 183, Q. B.), and submitted that the present was a clear case of another and different qualification. Next, as to the power of the revising barrister to amend and to change the description from 'house' to 'dwelling-house.' Sect. 23, sub-sect. 12, of the Act of 1878 empowers the barrister to amend in cases where the matter stated in any list or claim is, in his judgment, insufficient to constitute a legal qualification of the nature or description claimed, &c.; but here the barrister was of opinion that the description stated, "house," was a sufficient description, and yet he amended for the purpose of "more clearly and accurately defining it;" but sub-sect. 12 cannot be made use of for that purpose where the description is found to be sufficient. The effect of this amendment, moreover, is to change the nature of the qualification itself, and to substitute an entirely different franchise, viz., that of an "inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house" under the Act of 1867, for that of the "occupier of a house" under the Act of 1832, which it is expressly enacted, both by sect. 40 of the Parliamentary Registration Act 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), and sub-sect. 13 of the Act of 1878 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 26), that the barrister shall not be at liberty to do. [Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—The revising barrister made the amendment, saying in substance when he did so that, although he did not concur with the appellant's objection to the description in the third column, yet, in order to obviate any possible objection, he would amend. Is it then material under which of the two sub-sections, 12 or 13, of sect. 23, he made or intended to make the amendment?]

Bompas, Q. C., for the respondent contra, was not called upon to argue.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the revising barrister in this case was correct, and should therefore be affirmed. The argument adduced before us by Mr. Charles, with respect to the question whether the use of the word "house" in the third column was or was not a sufficient description of the qualification of an "inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house" under sect. 3 of the Representation of the People Act 1867, was certainly very ingenious; but, although I was much impressed by it, I pronounce no further opinion upon it, and do not propose to decide this case upon any such ground as that suggested by Mr. Charles; but I decide it on the ground that, in my opinion, the case is precisely met by the enactment contained in sub-sect. 12 of sect. 23 of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act 1878, which I think must have been passed with the intention of expressly giving to revising barristers the power to do the very thing which the barrister has done in the present case. That 12th sub-section enacts as follows: "Where the matter stated in a list or claim, or proved to the revising barrister in relation to any alleged right to be on any list, is, in the judgment of the revising barrister, insufficient in law to constitute a qualification of the nature or description stated or claimed, but sufficient in law to constitute a qualification of some other nature or description, the revising barrister, if the name is entered in a list for which such true qualification in law is appropriate, shall correct such entry by inserting such qualification accordingly, and in any other case shall insert the name with such qualification in the appropriated list, and shall expunge it from the other list, if any, in which it is entered." Now, surely, in a case where it is proved to the revising barrister's satisfaction that the voter has a qualification given by and to all intents good under one statute, but which is described in the list in words that refer to and are applicable to a qualification given by another statute, the barrister may, and ought, so to alter and amend the description as to bring it within and make it a good and sufficient one under the former statute. Then, if that be so, this is precisely and simply what was done by the revising barrister in this case, and on that ground I am of opinion that his decision was right, and must therefore be affirmed. I purposely avoid expressing any opinion upon the difficult and subtle question of two franchises overlapping one another, as well as the question whether the word "house" in the third column is a sufficient description of the qualification of an "inhabitant occupier of a dwelling-house" under sect. 3 of the Representation of the People Act 1867, on neither of which questions is it necessary in the present case that we should pronounce any opinion.

FIELD, J.—I entirely agree with everything that has fallen from my Lord in this case.

STEPHEN, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Decision of the revising barrister affirmed.

Solicitor for the appellant, Hamilton, agent for J. W. Friend, Exeter.

Solicitors for the respondents, J. E. Fox and Co., agents for H. and B. J. Ford, Exeter.

Q.B. Div.]

SMITH (app.) v. THE MAYOR, &C., OF BIRMINGHAM (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

May 8 and June 6, 1883.

(Before DENMAN and HAWKINS, JJ.)

SMITH (app.) v. THE MAYOR, &C., OF BIRMINGHAM (resps.). (a)

Water rate—"Annual rent"—Houses let to weekly tenants—"Voids," deduction for—Owner paying rates—Composition for—Deduction on account of—Birmingham Waterworks Act 1855 (18 Vict. c. cxxiv. s. 83).

S. was the owner of certain houses in the town of B., which were let to weekly tenants at weekly rents, S. paying all rates, &c., charged upon the premises, including the charge for water, and also paying for all repairs, insurances, &c., in respect thereof. The houses were supplied with water by the corporation of B., and by sect. 83 of the B. Waterworks Act 1855 they can charge the following rates: "Where the annual rent of the house, or part of a house or premises, supplied shall not exceed 5*l.*, the yearly rate of 6*s.*," and so on, the rate increasing with the increase in the annual rent, and ending as follows: "Where such annual rent shall exceed 50*l.*, at a rate not exceeding 6*l.* per cent. on the amount of such annual rent." S. was rated to the poor rate instead of the occupiers, and was allowed a deduction of 30 per cent. from the full rate, and was voluntarily rated to the water rate.

Held, that, in determining what was the "annual rent" of these houses, upon which the water rate was to be charged, S. was entitled, besides the deduction for rates, to have a further deduction made on account of "voids," i.e., the estimated loss owing to the houses, or any part of them, being unlet, but that in deducting the rates, he was only entitled to a deduction of the amount of the composition paid by him, and not to a deduction of the full rates, which would be payable by the tenants if they paid them.

Held, also, that the words "annual rent" did not mean "net annual rent" or "rateable value," but "gross estimated rental."

This was a case stated by the stipendiary magistrate for Birmingham.

A summons was taken out by the appellant against the respondents, under sects. 68 and 85 of the Waterworks Clauses Act 1847, to determine a dispute which had arisen as to the "annual rent," within the meaning of sect. 83 of the Birmingham Waterworks Act 1855 and the Birmingham Corporation Water Act 1875, of certain houses the property of the appellant, which had been supplied with water by the respondents.

The houses in question were let at weekly sums varying from 2*s.* 7½*d.* to 5*s.* 6*d.*, which were the full payments obtainable for them on the terms upon which they were let, and such houses were supplied with water by the corporation. These weekly sums were the only payments made by the tenants in respect of the premises under any circumstances.

The magistrate dismissed the summons, intimating, however, an opinion, that the appellant was entitled to a deduction on account of "voids."

The opinion of the court was asked as to whether the appellant was entitled to any, and if so, to which, of the deductions claimed by him.

The contention on the part of the respondents, and the various contentions and claims for deductions on the part of the appellant, and the facts and the statutes bearing on the case, are fully set out in the judgment.

Hugo Young for the appellant.—(The arguments are fully stated in the judgment, with the exception of the following, which alone it is necessary to set out.)—As to the amount which ought to be deducted from the rents paid by the tenants for rates and taxes, the full amount of such rates and taxes, if payable by the tenants, ought to be deducted, and not merely the amount paid by the landlord under the terms of his composition. The landlord compounded for the rates and taxes, and an allowance of 30 per cent. was made to him. The composition is made between the landlord and the corporation, and is founded on the basis that the landlord takes the risk and expense of collecting the rates, and the risk of his houses being empty during some part of the year; and so in consideration of these risks and expenses the landlord is allowed a deduction of 30 per cent. The tenant is not interested in the arrangement in any way. The corporation have only allowed a deduction from the rents paid by the tenants of the amount of the composition. They ought to have allowed the full amount of the rates and taxes, if payable by the tenants. Supposing a tenant pays the landlord 10*l.* a year as rent; this rent includes, say, 2*l.* for the rates and taxes; but the landlord pays the rates and taxes, and compounds for them for the sum of 1*l.*; the corporation clearly ought to deduct the 2*l.* from the rent of 10*l.*; but, according to their contention, they would only deduct 1*l.* The landlord, therefore, gets no benefit at all from the composition. He is in a worse position, owing to having compounded, because the house may be empty during part of the year, or the tenants may not pay. For example, two houses of an exactly similar character, belonging to the same landlord, are let to tenants: in the one case the landlord compounds and pays the rates and taxes; in the other case the tenants pay the rates and taxes: according to the contention of the corporation the "annual value" would be different in each case. He cited

Reg. v. Bileton, 35 L. J. 97, M. C.

Alfred Young (R. E. Webster, Q.C. with him) for the respondents.—The landlord is allowed under the statutes to compound, and he gets a certain deduction on account of his trouble and expense, and the losses he may sustain; but the statutes nowhere say that, in estimating the rent upon which certain charges are based, he can deduct more than the amount he actually pays. He cited

The Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 41), s. 4, sub-sect. 2.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 6.—The judgment of the court was delivered by DENMAN, J.—This was a case stated by the stipendiary magistrate for Birmingham, in order that the court might decide the proper mode of assessing the amounts payable by the appellant for water rates. The Corporation of Birmingham, the respondents, had vested in them by 38 & 39 Vict. c. clxxxviii. (the Birmingham Corporation Water Act 1875) all the powers and authority of the Birmingham Waterworks Company. The power and authority of the Birmingham Waterworks

Q.B. Div.]

SMITH (app.) v. THE MAYOR, &C., OF BIRMINGHAM (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Company as to the supply and charging for water is to be found in sect. 83 of 18 Vict. c. xxxiv. (the Birmingham Waterworks Act 1855). By that section it is provided as follows: "The company shall at the request of the owner or occupier of any house or part of a house, in any street in which any pipe of the company is or shall be laid, or on the application of any person who under the provisions of this Act is entitled to demand a supply of water for domestic purposes, furnish to such owner or occupier or other person a sufficient supply of water for domestic use, at rates not exceeding the yearly rates hereinafter specified, that is to say: Where the annual rent of the house or part of a house or premises supplied shall not exceed 5*l.* the yearly rate of 6*s.*" Then follows a scale increasing with the increase in the "annual rent," and ending as follows: "Where such annual rent shall exceed 50*l.*, at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. on the amount of such annual rent." The property in respect of which our opinion is desired consists of small houses, let at weekly sums on the terms that the appellant, who is the owner, pays all rates, taxes, and assessments of all kinds, charged upon or in respect of the premises including the charge for water, and pays for all repairs and insurances and other matters relating to the premises. He is rated to the poor rate instead of the occupiers under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 41, s. 4, and is allowed the deduction of 30 per cent. therein provided for; also to the borough and street rates under the Birmingham Improvement Act 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. xxiii.), being allowed the deductions therein provided for (sect. 135). The appellant has been voluntarily rated instead of the occupiers to the water rates. The question for our determination is, what is the true meaning of the expression "the annual rent" in sect. 83 of the Act of 1855? The corporation charged the appellant on the following basis: They multiplied the weekly rents by fifty-two, and deducted from the amount so arrived at the actual sums paid by the appellant for poor and borough and street and water rates, and then charged the water rates in question upon the difference. The appellant claimed further deductions for insurance, repairs, and "voids." As to the last, we understand the case to mean that the stipendiary magistrate was willing to accede to that contention, but that, being in favour of the respondents on all other points, our opinion is desired as to the whole matter. The appellant further contended that the Public Health Act 1875 (which was passed nine days after the Birmingham Corporation Waterworks Act 1875) has superseded any provisions as to the mode of charging the water rates which are inconsistent with its provisions, and made the "net annual value" the amount upon which the water rate is to be assessed. He also contended that he was entitled by way of deduction, not only to the amounts actually paid by him under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 41, s. 4, and the Birmingham Improvement Act 1851, s. 135, but the full rates which would be payable if the occupiers paid the rates. If this case were unaffected by the authority of decided cases, it might seem to admit of a short decision in favour of the respondents. Turning as it does upon the meaning of the words "annual rent," it is possible to arrive at the conclusion at which the stipendiary magistrate has arrived by an easy process. Having ascertained the actual amount of the weekly rents, he has multiplied these by the number of weeks in the year, intimating, however, that he is prepared to allow a proper deduction for "voids," and for the actual amounts paid by the appellant for rates. The balance so arrived at he holds, or is prepared to hold, to be the proper sum representing the "annual rent" within the meaning of the 83rd section, upon which it is admitted that the question mainly turns. In the case of Sheffield Waterworks v. Bennett (27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 199; L. Rep. 7 Ex. 409; aff., 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 509; L. Rep. 8 Ex. 196) an action was brought by the plaintiffs for water rates for water supplied to houses of which the defendant was owner. The words of the clause regulating the amount to be paid for water required to be supplied were these: "At the following rate per annum; that is to say, where the rent of such dwelling-house, or part of a dwelling-house, shall not amount to 7*l.* per annum, at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum on such rent," and so on. The dispute in that case was in substance whether the plaintiffs were entitled to charge a sum for water calculated at so much per cent. on the rents actually received, as the plaintiffs contended, or whether the true meaning of the word "rent" in the clause was "annual value;" that is to say, the annual value of the property ascertained by deducting from the proper rent those outgoings which the landlord pays, viz., poor rates, water rates, and district rates. The words there in question, "where the rent shall not amount to 1*l.* per annum" seem to us to be undistinguishable for any purpose from the words of sect. 83 of the Act here in question, "where the annual rent shall not exceed 1*l.*," and the words in that case, "at a rate not exceeding 1 per cent. per annum on such rent," are practically the same as the words of sect. 83, "at a rate not exceeding 1 per cent. on the amount of such annual rent." So far, then, as concerns the allowance to the landlord of the amount of the rates paid by him, and so far as concerns the calculation of the annual value not being tied down to the actual rents received, we think that the case of Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Bennett is in the appellant's favour, and shows that the proper rental, not the actual rental, is the test, and that the proper rental is the amount which the landlord would put into his pocket after deducting the rates paid by him. But the appellant contends that, in deducting the rates paid by him, he is entitled to a deduction of the full amount to which such rates would be payable if paid by the tenants, and not by himself, i.e., to 30 per cent. more than the actual amount paid by him in respect of such rates. We cannot accede to this contention. The composition into which the appellant enters where he is voluntarily rated, and the percentage allowed by the statute to the landlord where he pays the rates under the provisions of the statutes, are calculated roughly with the view of compensating the landlord for the trouble he incurs, and the losses he may sustain, by payment of charges primâ facie payable by the occupiers of his property; and we do not think that the Legislature intended, nor has it anywhere provided, that in estimating charges which he has to pay he can deduct in respect of such outgoings from the annual value upon which he is to be rated more than the sums which he in fact pays. We think that the

Q.B. Div.]

SMITH (app.) v. THE MAYOR, &C., OF BIRMINGHAM (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

stipendiary magistrate was right in disallowing this deduction. The case of Reg. v. Bilston (36 L. J. 97, M. C.), which was cited to the contrary, turned wholly on the words of the Parochial Assessment Act, which authorised a deduction of the usual tenants' rates, and held that, when the landlord compounded, he was still entitled to deduct the usual amount paid by tenants where the tenants pay rates, in order to arrive at the net annual value of the premises within the meaning of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, s. 1. But inasmuch as, for reasons to be given presently, we do not think that that Act applies, we are left to decide the meaning of "annual rent" in sect. 83 without any assistance from Reg. v. Bilston. The appellant also contended that he was entitled to an allowance for "voids;" i.e., as we understand the word, that, inasmuch as the property is let at weekly rents, the proper "annual rent" was not the weekly rent multiplied by fifty-two, but what, after making a fair calculation of the loss to the landlord by the want of tenants, incident to property of the kind let to weekly tenants, would be in practice the total value received in the year for the property in question. Here we think his contention is right, and we understand that the stipendiary magistrate is prepared to hold accordingly, and to vary his decision in that respect. But beyond these contentions the appellant has raised a question of greater importance, and which does not seem to have been expressly decided by the case of the Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Bennett, or any other case. His contention is that, in addition to the deductions for rates and "voids," he is also entitled to a further deduction for the annual average cost of repairs, insurance, and other expenses necessary to maintain the premises in a state to command the present weekly payments of the tenants; in other words, to have the water rate assessed upon the rateable value of the premises after making all the allowances required by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, s. 1, in the case of poor rates. Reverting to the words of the section with which we have to deal, they are, "where the annual rent of the house or part of a house supplied shall not exceed , the yearly rate of ;" and, "where such annual rent shall exceed 50l. at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. on the amount of such annual rent." The arguments of the appellant may be stated shortly as follows: The question, being reduced to whether the words "annual rent" in sect. 83 of the Act of 1875 mean "net annual value," or "gross estimated rental," is to be decided by reference to all the statutes relating to the water rates to be charged either by the corporation, or by the company whose rights the corporation has purchased; and, though some of these Acts are not now in force, they may be looked at for the purpose of putting a construction upon the words "annual rent" in sect. 83. The decisions also prior to the Parochial Assessments Act may be referred to, and throw light upon the subject. By a local and personal Act of 7 Geo. 4, c. cix., the Birmingham Waterworks Company were incorporated for the purpose of supplying Birmingham with water. This Act was repealed by the Birmingham Waterworks Act 1855 (except so far as the incorporation of the company was concerned). In the meantime, by the Birmingham Improvement Act 1851, the council were (sect.

109) empowered to provide water for the purposes of that Act, and for private use, and for that purpose to contract with the Birmingham Waterworks Company for a supply of water, and after twelve months' notice to purchase the whole works of the company, in which case all the powers of the company, inter alia in regard to receiving and recovering of rents or rates for water, were from the date of the purchase to belong to the council. By sect. 124 of that Act the council were empowered "as long as any building should be supplied with water by the council for domestic use, to make a special rate, called the water rate, upon the occupier, and the rate so made shall be assessed upon the annual value of the building ascertained in manner prescribed by clauses 175, 176 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847." Turning to those clauses it is provided by clause 175, that the annual value of all property rateable under that Act is to be "ascertained according to the next preceding assessment for the relief of the poor;" but clause 176 provides that if the poor rate be in the judgment of the commissioners an unfair criterion they may cause a valuation to be made, "and in every such valuation the property rateable shall be computed at its net annual value as defined by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, or any other Act for the time being in force for regulating parochial assessment." Clause 130 of the Birmingham Improvement Act 1851 further provided that a new valuation should be made according to sect. 176 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847, within eighteen months from the 1st Jan. 1852. No purchase of the waterworks by the corporation having been made under the powers of the Act of 1851, it was contended by Mr. Webster that that Act could have nothing to do with the argument; but it was relied on by Mr. Hugo Young, for the appellant, as showing that the Legislature throughout, in dealing with the rates to be charged for water, when it uses the expression "annual value," contemplates "net annual value," and not "gross estimated rental." Other Acts were referred to for the same purpose, especially 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55 (the Public Health Act 1875), which by sect. 56 provides that "where a local authority supply water to any premises, they may charge a water rate assessed on the net annual value of the premises ascertained in the manner prescribed by this Act with respect to general district rates," which by sect. 211 is, "on the full net annual value" ascertained by the valuation list, if there be one; if not, by the last poor rate. The Union Assessment Act (25 & 26 c. 103) was also quoted as showing that the Legislature habitually uses the words "annual value," "net annual value," and "rateable value," when dealing with questions of rating, as convertible terms. The case of Reg. v. Tomlinson (9 B. & C. 163) was also relied on by Mr. Hugo Young for the appellant, but it certainly does not assist his argument, for Bayley, J. there says, on page 167, "Annual rent is not annual profit or value," and the expression, "net yearly rent" used in that case is held to be equivalent to "the rent paid by the tenant after deducting taxes and charges of collection," and not "the clear annual rent after every deduction, including therefore the part to be set aside for repairs and reproduction of the subject of the rate:" (Ibid. p. 166.) He also relied on Baker v. Marsh (24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 72; 4

Q.B. Div.]

SMITH (app.) v. THE MAYOR, &C., OF BIRMINGHAM (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

E. & B. 144), in which it was held that a town councillor was not "rated to the relief of the poor upon the annual value of not less than 15l.," where his rateable value was only 11l. 15s. But this case appears to us to have turned wholly upon the construction of the clause relating to the qualification in question, and not to throw any light upon the meaning of "annual rent" in the clause now in question. In paragraph 9 of the case it is stated that the appellant contends, and the corporation admits, that the words "annual rent" in sect. 83 of the Birmingham Waterworks Act 1855 are equivalent to the words "annual value," in the Waterworks Clauses Act 1847, sect. 68. But we do not see that this admission assists us in deciding the meaning of either term, for the Waterworks Clauses Act 1847 contains no definition or explanation of the words "annual value," but merely provides that water rates "shall be payable according to the annual value of the tenement supplied with water, and if any dispute arise as to such value the same shall be determined by two justices." The respondent's counsel, Mr. Alfred Young, contended that no assistance was to be derived from the other Acts referred to by the appellant's counsel, and that the question was to be decided by reference only to the words of sect. 83 of the Act of 1855, assisted by the construction put by the Court of Appeal upon the words "annual value" in the case of Dobbs v. Grand Junction Waterworks Company (47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 504; 10 Q. B. Div. 337). He contended that the Act of 1851, never having been acted upon by the corporation (who had purchased the waterworks and obtained their powers solely under the Acts of 1875 and 1855), had no application to the case, and consequently that clauses 175 and 176 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act had no application, or, if they applied, that the words in sect. 176, "property rateable shall be computed at its net annual value as defined by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96," only required such allowances to be made as would be required in order to get at the letting value of the house; in other words, at the "gross estimated rental" upon which the rateable value is afterwards to be computed. Great reliance was placed by the respondent's counsel on the decision of the Court of Appeal in Dobbs v. Grand Junction Waterworks Company. There the question was as to the meaning of the following words: "According to the actual amount of the rent where the same can be ascertained, and where the same cannot be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed." The Court held that these words did not mean the rateable value as appearing in the rate, but the "gross estimated rental;" but the decision turned to a great extent upon the ground that the words, "upon which the assessment is computed," showed that the amount of the assessment itself could not be intended, and upon the fact that at the time of the passing of the Act the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, had not come into existence; and upon the absence of the word "rateable," and other similar considerations. It did, however, contain many observations applicable to the present case, and to all cases in which the question arises, what is the value in respect of which a water rate is to be calculated, and which seem to us to throw light upon the true meaning to be assigned to such words as "annual rent" in connection with the calculation of the amount to be paid for water supplied. For instance, Lord Coleridge, C.J., in discussing the words "actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed," says that they mean "the full amount at which the house to be rated would before the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, have been valued by the persons who were to rate it, that amount not being subject to be afterwards reduced by those various heads of allowance with which we are all familiar, and which were to be made" (and as he afterwards observes "which we know historically were made" before 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96) "by the overseers before the actual assessment upon any individual was arrived at." Baggallay, L.J. (p. 352) says: "Annual value is not the annual value at which the house is assessed to the poor rate, but the annual value upon which the assessment to the poor rate is computed." Lindley, L.J. in his judgment (p. 353) lays stress upon the omission of the words "net" or "rateable," and concludes that the meaning of the words "annual value" is, whether the house is let or not let, what it would let for" (p. 355). Having regard to these expressions as to the true meaning of the words "annual value," and to the words "annual rent," in sect. 83 of the Act of 1855, and to the construction put upon the very similar words in Sheffield Waterworks Company v. Bennett, we think it would be running counter to the cases cited, and laying down a rule inconsistent with them, if we were to hold that the words "annual rent" are equivalent to "rateable value ascertained in the manner provided by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96." It would have been so very easy for the Legislature to use language showing such intention, if any such had existed, that we cannot help thinking that the absence of any such language is a strong reason for holding that the words used have no such meaning. The argument derived from other statutes containing very different words seems to us on the whole to tell against such an intention. Nor is there any reason why the one mode of arriving at the amount on which the payment for water should be assessed should be preferred to the other. The object of the Legislature apparently is that houses, or parts of houses, supplied with water should pay water rates, calculated with reference to the class of the house, or to the value of the part of a house, which is supplied; but this object will not be attained by adopting the rateable value better than the gross estimated rental as the value upon which the amount is to be assessed. Either will suffice for the purposes of calculation, and the Legislature may equally well be supposed to have adopted either. Looking at the words of sect. 83, and putting the best construction we can upon the words "annual rent," we have come to the conclusion that, in the main, the stipendiary magistrate has taken the right view, and that, when he has calculated the allowance to be made for "voids" as above explained, he will do right in allowing the rate to stand, with the necessary alteration occasioned by that allowance.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors: for the appellant, Cottrell and Son, Birmingham.; for the respondents, Sharpe, Parkers, Pritchard, and Sharpe, for E. O. Smith, Birmingham.

H. of L.]

YOUNG AND CO. v. MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF LEAMINGTON.

[H. of L.]

HOUSE OF LORDS.

May 1 and 2, and June 5, 1883.

(Before Lords BLACKBURN, WATSON, BRAMWELL, and FITZGERALD.)

YOUNG AND CO. v. MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF LEAMINGTON. (a)

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND.

Public Health Act 1874, s. 174—Contract not under seal—Corporation—Urban sanitary authority.

The provisions of sect. 174 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), requiring contracts for more than 50l. to be in writing, are mandatory, and not merely directory; and therefore where the duly authorised agent of a corporation, acting as an urban sanitary authority under the Act, contracted for the execution of certain works, which were duly executed, such contract not being under seal:

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the contractors could not recover against the corporation.

Hunt v. Wimbledon Local Board (4 O. P. Div. 48; 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 115) approved.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Brett, Cotton, and Lindley, L.JJ.), reported in 8 Q. B. Div. 579, and 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 555, affirming a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Williams and Mathew, JJ.) upon a special case.

The facts appear from the judgment of Lord Blackburn, and the special case is set out in the report in the court below.

Davey, Q.C. and Edwyn Jones, for the appellants, argued that the sole question was, whether the absence of the seal was fatal to the plaintiffs' right to recover, and this must be considered as it stood, apart from the Public Health Act 1875, and then as affected by the provisions of that Act. We contend that sect. 174 is merely directory, not obligatory. When a corporation have taken the benefit of an executed contract, they cannot plead their own disability for want of a seal, and an action can be maintained upon an executed contract, if made for the purposes for which the corporation was created, though not under seal:

Clarke v. Cuckfield Union, 21 L. J. 349, Q. B.;

Church v. Imperial Gas Company, 6 A. & E. 846.

Lamprell v. Billericay Union (3 Ex. 283), which appears to lay down a different rule, is distinguishable. In this case one of the reasons for which the corporation existed was to supply water to the district. See Paine v. Strand Union, 8 Q. B. 326.

Clarke v. Cuckfield Union was followed in Nicholson v. Bradfield Union (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. 620; 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 830) and Haigh v. North Bierly Union (28 L. J. 62, Q. B.; E. B. & E. 873). London Dock Company v. Sinnott (8 E. & B. 347; 27 L. J. 129, Q. B.) was a case of an executory contract. See also Sanders v. St. Neots Union, 8 Q. B. 810.

Down to Clarke v. Cuckfield Union the current of authority was no doubt not uniform, but since that decision three exceptions to the rule that a corporation can only contract under seal have been upheld: (1) Where the contract is executed; (2) in matters of small amount necessary for carrying on its ordinary business; (3) where it is impossible to affix a seal in the time. This case comes under the first exception. See also

Mayor of Stafford v. Tull, 4 Bing. 75;

East London Waterworks Company v. Bailey, 4 Bing. 283;

London and Birmingham Railway Company v. Winter, Cr. & Phil. 57;

Beverley v. Lincoln Gas Company, 6 A. & E. 829;

Horn v. Ivy, 1 Vent. 47;

Mayor of Ludlow v. Charlton, 6 M. & W. 815;

Finlay v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, 7 Ex. 409.

That being the general state of the law, the further question is the effect of the Public Health Act 1875. In municipal boroughs no new corporation is created, and we say that sects. 173, 174 are merely directory, not imperative, so as to create conditions precedent. See Nowell v. Mayor of Worcester (9 Ex. 457; 33 L. J. 139, Ex.), decided under the Public Health Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63). Friend v. Dennett (4 C. B. N. S. 576; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 73) will be cited against us. It was also a decision under the Act of 1848, but it is distinguishable, for in that case the corporation was the creature of the statute. See also

Kirk v. Bromley Union, 2 Phill. 640; 17 L. J. 127, Ch.;

Andrews v. Mayor of Ryde, L. Rep. 9 Ex. 302.

The court below relied on Hunt v. Wimbledon Local Board (4 C. P. Div. 48; 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 115), but it does not cover this case.

The Solicitor-General (Sir F. Herschell, Q.C.), Mellor, Q.C., and Dugdale, Q.C., who appeared for the respondents, were not called upon to address the House.

At the conclusion of the argument for the appellants, their Lordships took time to consider their judgment.

June 5.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

LORD BLACKBURN.—My Lords: This is an appeal against an order of the Court of Appeal, dismissing with costs an appeal against the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, in favour of the respondents, on a special case. I believe that all the noble and learned Lords who heard the argument agree with me that the order appealed from must be affirmed. By the special case it appears that the municipal corporation of the Royal Leamington Spa are, under sect 6 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), acting by their council, the urban authority for the district consisting of the borough. The defendants, as such urban authority, had made a contract under their seal with one Powis for the execution of works for supplying the district with water. Powis failed to complete his contract, and it was put an end to. The council, in their capacity of urban authority, as far as they could do so by resolutions not under seal, authorised their engineer and surveyor, Mr Jerrom, to enter into a contract for completing the works left uncompleted by Powis. The special case then proceeds: "Thereupon the said Jerrom, as the engineer, agent, and servant of the corporation, and acting within and according to his duties, powers, and authorities as such, and also acting in accordance with and in fulfilment of the provisions of the said condition 115 of the said Charles Powis, employed the plaintiffs to execute, carry out, and complete the said unfinished works, according to the contract and specification aforesaid, and also to execute and complete the said additional works upon certain terms then agreed upon between them; and the plaintiffs accepted and entered upon the said employment upon the said terms, and completed the whole of the works, including what has been described as the 'contract works' and the 'additional works,' to the entire satisfaction of the said engineer. The said employment of the plaintiffs was, in fact, an employment of them by the corporation through the said Jerrom as their engineer, agent, and servant, and the relation of employer and employed never in fact existed or was created between the plaintiffs and the said Jerrom. A memorandum, in writing, of the said employment, and of the agreement between the said Jerrom and the plaintiffs, was made on the 19th Sept. 1878, and was signed by both parties, and a copy of this memorandum is annexed to and forms part of this case. The plaintiffs and the said Jerrom fully performed the said agreement on their several and respective parts, and the said Jerrom gave to the plaintiffs certificates for the payment of the moneys due to them from the corporation for all the works completed by them as aforesaid. The execution of the said additional works was necessary, and was incidental to the completion of the works left unfinished and incomplete by the said Powis, and the employment of the plaintiffs to execute them was within the duties, powers, and authorities of the said Jerrom, as the engineer of the corporation. The defendants, the corporation, have taken possession of and accepted and received the benefit of all the works and materials, the subject of this action, and still enjoy the benefit thereof. The corporation paid to the plaintiffs large sums of money from time to time upon the said certificates, but refused to pay other large sums amounting to between 6000*l.* and 7000*l.*, which is the said balance now claimed by the plaintiffs as still due. The above-mentioned contract between the said Charles Powis and the defendants, the corporation, was made by them as urban authority under the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), and all the subsequent matters and things were done by them in that capacity. The corporation resists the plaintiffs' claim upon several grounds, some of which would involve a long and costly investigation, but they also resist the claim upon the ground that the employment of the plaintiffs was an employment of them not under the common seal of the corporation, and this special case has been stated to raise that point alone. It is agreed between the parties that either party shall be at liberty to refer to the pleadings and particulars in the action and to the contract and specification with Powis, the appointment of Jerrom as borough surveyor, and the printed particulars of duties therein referred to, and that the court is to have power to draw any inferences of fact. The question for the opinion of the court is, whether the absence of the common seal of the corporation in the employment of the plaintiffs, as above stated, is fatal to the plaintiffs' right to recover against the corporation. If the court shall be of opinion in the affirmative, then the judgment is to be for the defendants, the corporation; if in the negative, the judgment is to be for the plaintiffs. The Queen's Bench Division answered the question in the affirmative, and gave judgment for the defendants, and the Court of Appeal affirmed that judgment. Lindley, L.J. ends his judgment by saying: "The last point urged for the plaintiffs was, that as the contract has been performed, and the defendants have the benefit of the plaintiffs' work, labour, and materials, they are at all events liable to pay for these at a fair price. In support of this contention cases were cited to show that corporations are liable at common law, quasi ex contractu, to pay for work ordered by their agents, and done under their authority. The cases on this subject are very numerous and conflicting, and they require review and authoritative exposition by a Court of Appeal. But, in my opinion, the question thus raised does not require decision in the present case. We have here to construe and apply an Act of Parliament. The Act draws a line between contracts for more than 50*l.* and contracts for 50*l.* and under. Contracts for not more than 50*l.* need not be sealed, and can be enforced whether executed or not, and without reference to the question whether they could be enforced at common law by reason of their trivial nature. But contracts for more than 50*l.* are positively required to be under seal; and in a case like that before us, if we were to hold the defendants liable to pay for what has been done under the contract, we should in effect be repealing the Act of Parliament, and depriving the ratepayers of that protection which Parliament intended to secure for them. The case of Frend v. Dennett (4 C. B. N. S. 576; and in Chancery, before Wood, V.C., 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 73) is an authority in support of this view, and was, in my opinion, rightly decided. The additional works then in question had been executed, and there was the common count for work and labour done and materials, as well as a special count on the alleged contract, but the defendant was held not liable either at law or in equity. It may be said that this is a hard and narrow view of the law; but my answer is, that Parliament has thought expedient to require this view to be taken, and it is not for this or any other court to decline to give effect to a clearly expressed statute because it may lead to apparent hardship. For these reasons I am of opinion that the decision of the court below was correct, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs. I am requested by Cotton, L.J. to say that he concurs in this judgment." Brett, L.J. adds: "I should wish to say that I have come to the same conclusion after weeks spent in attempting to come to another, upon the ground that, although this was a municipal corporation, yet in the transaction in question it was acting as a board of health, and that, therefore, it was bound by the statute, and that as to the construction of that statute we are bound by a former decision of this court, which held that the enactment as to the necessity for a seal is mandatory, and not merely directory. Therefore, assuming that everything was done according to the statute except the seal, and that the work was done after every inquiry which is directed by the statute had been made by the corporation, I am of opinion that the mere want of seal prevents the plaintiffs from recovering in this action. Further, after having read all the cases with regard to the doctrine of work done for and accepted by a corporation, I am bound to say that I have come to the conclusion that, even if this were a municipal corporation not bound by the statute, the proper decision in point of law according to the cases and principle is, that the want of seal prevents, in such a case as the present, the plaintiffs from succeeding." Brett, L.J. has, I observe, in the revised report, somewhat altered what I have taken from the shorthand note, and abstains from expressing an opinion as to how the law would have been if this had been the case of a municipal corporation not bound by the Public Health Act 1875. I suppose because on reflection he saw that it was not necessary for the decision of the case to decide this, and that what he had said on that point was only obiter dictum. I agree in this latter view, and also in what Lindley, L.J. says, that the cases are numerous and conflicting, and that they require revised and authoritative exposition by a Court of Appeal. If I thought that this case now at bar gave an opportunity for such a review, I should certainly wish, at least, to hear the case fully argued. As it is I do not think it necessary, and therefore do not think it right, to examine previous decisions and doubts further than is required for the purpose of construing the Public Health Act 1875, s. 174, which is in the following terms: "With respect to contracts made by an urban authority under this Act, the following regulations shall be observed, namely, 1. Every contract made by an urban authority whereof the value or amount exceeds 50*l.*, shall be in writing. 2. Every such contract shall specify the work, materials, matters, or things, to be furnished, had, or done, the price to be paid, and the time or times within which the contract is to be performed, and shall specify what pecuniary penalty is to be paid in case the terms of the contract are not duly performed." The third and fourth regulations are as to things to be done by the urban authority before entering into any contract. It was pointed out that they were no negative words added to the first regulation; that it was not said, "shall be sealed with the common seal and not otherwise;" and it was argued that, as the third and fourth regulations clearly were only directory, and the second might at least plausibly be argued to be only directory, the first regulation should be construed as also only directory, that the common seal ought to be affixed whenever the subject matter of the contract exceeded 50*l.*, but that if the contract was such as, but for the statute in question, to bind a corporation without seal, then it was said, Fieri non debet factum valet. I think, however, that when we look at the state of the decisions existing in 1875, and what was the point on which there was, I think, a difference of opinion sufficiently marked to make it uncertain what the ultimate decision of the Supreme Court of Appeal upon them might be, and then inquire what was the intention of the Legislature in passing this enactment, it is impossible to construe it in the manner ingeniously suggested. The Court of Queen's Bench had, in Church v. The Imperial Gas Company (6 A. & E. 846) thus expressed its view on the law: "The general rule of law is, that a corporation contracts under its common seal; as a general rule it is only in that way that a corporation can express its will, or do any act. That general rule, however, has from the earliest traceable periods been subject to exceptions, the decisions as to which furnish the principle on which they have been established, and are instances illustrating its application, but are not to be taken as so prescribing in terms the exact limit that a merely circumstantial difference is to exclude from the exception. This principle appears to be convenience amounting almost to necessity. Whenever to hold the rule applicable would occasion very great inconvenience or tend to defeat the very object for which the corporation was created, the exception has prevailed; hence the retainer by parol of an inferior servant, the doing of acts very frequently recurring, or too insignificant to be worth the trouble of affixing the seal, are established exceptions; on the same principle stands the power of accepting bills of exchange, and issuing promissory notes by companies incorporated for the purposes of trade, with the rights and liabilities consequent thereto." This was said in 1838. In 1840 the case of The Mayor, &c., of Ludlow v. Charlton (16 M. & W. 815) was decided in the Court of Exchequer. The considered judgment of the court, comprising on that occasion Parke, Alderson, and Rolfe, BB., was delivered by Rolfe, B. After citing the passage I have just read from Church v. The Imperial Gas Company, he says: "To every word of this we entirely subscribe; and, applying the language of Lord Denman to the present case, it is quite clear that there was nothing to enable the corporation of Ludlow to contract with the defendant otherwise than in the ordinary mode under the corporate seal." So far there is no difference between the Courts of Exchequer and Queen's Bench as to the law, though there was evidently room for considerable difference as to its application. I pass by many subsequent decisions, and only quote two. In 1853 Wightman, J., sitting alone in the Bail Court, decided Clarke v. Cuckfield Union (21 L. J. 349, Q. B.) on the ground, I think, that a poor-law union created by statute for the purpose, amongst others, of supporting the paupers in a workhouse, could not be required to affix their seal to every contract for things necessary for that purpose without such inconvenience as would defeat the object within the principle laid down in Church v. The Imperial Gas Company. In 1855, in Smart v. The West Ham Union (10 Ex. 867), Parke and Alderson, BB. each expressed dissent from Clarke v. Cuckfield Union. They could not, as they were not in a court of error, overrule it, but they undoubtedly questioned it. In 1866, in Nicholson v. Bradfield Union (L. Rep. 1 Q. B. Div. 620; 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 830), where the union had bought coals to keep the paupers warm, the Court of Queen's Bench, in a considered judgment, say: "The case of Clarke v. Cuckfield Union is in its facts undistinguishable from the present case. We are aware that very high authorities have questioned the soundness of that decision; and, as pointed out in the judgment in that case, there are prior decisions in the Court of Exchequer which it is difficult to reconcile with it. We think, however, that as far as it extends to such a case as the present at least, the case was rightly decided. There may be cases in which the circumstances are different from those in Clarke v. Cuckfield Union and the present case, and which would still be governed by the principles laid down in the decisions in the Exchequer; those we leave to be decided when they arise; but, so far as those prior decisions are inconsistent with the decision in Clarke v. Cuckfield Union, we prefer to follow the authority of that case, which we think founded on justice and convenience."

H. OF L.]

YOUNG AND CO. v. MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF LEAMINGTON.

[H. OF L.]

H. OF L.]

FORSDIKE (app.) v. COLQUHOUN (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

There was not, I believe, any decision on this question between 1866 and 1875. The Legislature, in the earlier part of the Act of 1875, had incorporated all urban authorities which were not already corporations; those which were already corporations continued such; and then in Part V. of the Act it makes provisions as to contracts. We ought in general, in construing an Act of Parliament, to assume that the Legislature knows the existing state of the law, and in the present case I have no doubt that in fact those who prepared the Act of 1875 knew of the differences of opinion that had been expressed, and the difficult questions that might yet have to be decided, and really intended to provide that those difficulties should not arise with respect to the urban authorities they were creating. I think that, bearing in mind this, it is not possible to construe sect. 174 as meaning anything else than that when the subject-matter of a contract exceeds 50*l.* in value, the contract must be under seal, and that the distinctions and differences which, according to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, might dispense with a seal in the case of an ordinary corporation, should not do so when the contract was by an urban authority, and related to a subject-matter above that value. This was the construction put upon the Act in Hunt v. The Wimbledon Local Board (4 C. P. Div. 48; 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 115), as well as in the court below. I think it is right, and it disposes of this difficulty. It is true that this works great hardship on the now appellants. They had an agreement, but it was not sealed; and though it is possible that if the agreement had been under seal the defendants might have established a defence on the merits to all or part of what is claimed, it is hard on the appellants that they should not be allowed to raise the question. It is, however, for the Legislature to determine whether the benefits derived from enforcing a general rule are, or are not, too dearly purchased by occasional hardships. A court of law has only to inquire what the Legislature thought fit to enact. I therefore move that the order appealed against be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs. Lord Watson, who is unavoidably absent, has read, and desires me to say that he concurs in, this opinion.

LORD BRAMWELL.—My Lords: I agree that this judgment should be affirmed. It is clear, and it is admitted by the appellants, that it must be affirmed if the Public Health Act 1875, s. 174, is obligatory, and not merely directory. I have no doubt that it is obligatory, and I must say that I think better reasons can be given for that opinion than I gave in the case of Hunt v. The Wimbledon Local Board (ubi sup.). In the first place, considering the state of the law as to contracts by corporations, it was desirable that some rule should be laid down as to how contracts could be made by urban authorities. Then we have plain and positive words in sub-sects. 1 and 2: "Every contract made by any urban authority whereof the value or amount exceeds 50*l.* shall be in writing, and sealed with the common seal of such authority. Every such contract shall specify the work and materials, &c." The only reason given at your Lordships' bar for holding that this is directory only was, that it is in company with other provisions in sub-sects. 3 and 4, which certainly are directory only, and that sub-sect. 5 says that every contract entered into by an urban authority in conformity with the provisions of this section, "and duly executed by the parties thereto, shall be binding." And it was said that, as the contract need not be in conformity with some of those "provisions," it need not be in conformity with any. But sub-sects. 3 and 4 do not deal with the contract, or the making of the contract, but say, "Before contracting," and "before any contract of the value of 100*l.* and upwards is entered into, &c." There are things to be done before contracts are entered into, and to be done by the urban authority, the contractor having nothing to do with the matters mentioned. The contracts are "entered into" afterwards. If sub-sects. 3 and 4 had been put before sub-sects. 1 and 2, the matter would have been too plain for argument, if indeed it is not so as it stands. As I think the case turns on the construction of the statute, I have not thought it necessary to go into the doubtful and conflicting cases governed by the common law. I must add that I do not agree in the regret expressed at having to come to this conclusion. The Legislature has made provisions for the protection of ratepayers, shareholders, and others who must act through the agency of a representative body, by requiring the observance of certain solemnities and formalities which involve deliberation and reflection. That is the importance of the seal. It is idle to say that there is no magic in a wafer. It continually happens that carelessness and indifference on the one side, and the greed of gain on the other, cause a disregard of these safeguards, and improvident engagements are entered into. Whether that has been so in this case I have no notion, but certainly the ratepayers of Leamington may well be astonished at the amount claimed of them. The decision may be hard in this case on the plaintiffs, who may not have known the law. They and others must be taught it, which can only be done by its enforcement.

LORD FITZGERALD concurred.

Order appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, John Mackrell and Co.

Solicitor for the respondents, H. Tyrrell, for H. O. Paseman, Leamington.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Tuesday, March 13, 1883.

(Before POLLOCK, B. and NORTH, J.)

FORSDIKE (app.) v. COLQUHOUN (resp.). (a)

Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61)—Licensing Acts 1872-1874 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 49)—"Sunday"—Christmas-day and Good Friday—Six-day licences.

By the 3rd section of the Licensing Act 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49) "all premises in which intoxicating liquors are sold by retail, wherever situate, shall be closed on Christmas-day and

(a) Reported by J. SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

FORSDIKE (app.) v. COLQUHOUN (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

Good Friday as if Christmas-day and Good Friday were respectively Sunday; and by the 1st section of the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61), "in the principality of Wales all premises in which intoxicating liquors are sold or exposed for sale by retail shall be closed during the whole of Sunday."

On an information against F., the holder of a six-day licence under the 49th section of the Licensing Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), for keeping open his premises (situate in Wales) for the sale of intoxicating liquors during the afternoon of Christmas-day, F. was convicted:

Held, on case stated, that the effect of the 1st section of the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881 is not extended by the 3rd section of the Licensing Act 1874 to Christmas-day and Good Friday:

Held, also, that the 3rd section of the Licensing Act 1874 does not compel the holder of a six-day licence under the 49th section of the Licensing Act 1872 to close his premises during the whole of Christmas-day and Good Friday, and that the conviction must be quashed.

THIS was a case stated by John Coke Fowler, Esq., the stipendiary magistrate for the borough of Swansea, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, on the hearing of an information preferred before him by one Isaac Colquhoun, the respondent, against William Thomas Forsdike, of Swansea, the appellant, for an offence against the 1st section of the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61).

The material facts are as follows:—

The charge laid in the information was that the appellant, being the keeper of certain licensed premises in Swansea, and the holder of a six-day licence under the 49th section of the Licensing Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94) in respect thereof, did on the 25th Dec. 1882, being Christmas-day, unlawfully keep open his premises for the sale of intoxicating liquors therein at twenty-five minutes past twelve o'clock in the afternoon.

The appellant pleaded guilty to the charge as laid out in the information, but contended by his solicitor that the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61) did not apply, nor include the day on which the offence was alleged to have been committed, viz., Christmas-day.

The solicitor for the respondent contended that the Act did apply, and after hearing the arguments the learned stipendiary gave it as his opinion that, by virtue of the 2nd section of the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881, the 3rd section of the Licensing Act 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49) was applicable to and must be read with the 1st section of the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881, the effect of the two clauses taken together being that the regulations for closing on Christmas-day and Good Friday follow the regulations for closing on Sunday, and consequently that licensed houses in the Principality are by law to be closed on Christmas-day. In consequence of that opinion the learned stipendiary convicted the appellant in the penalty of one shilling and costs, but on his application stated a case requesting the opinion of the court as to whether the conviction was correct in law or otherwise.

The 3rd section of the Licensing Act 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49) is:

8. All premises in which intoxicating liquors are sold by retail shall be closed as follows; (that is to say,)

... such premises wherever situate shall be closed on Christmas-day and Good Friday, and on the days preceding Christmas-day and Good Friday respectively, as if Christmas-day and Good Friday were respectively Sunday, and the preceding days were respectively Saturday, but this provision shall not alter the hours during which such premises shall be closed on Sunday, when Christmas-day immediately precedes or succeeds Sunday.

The preamble to the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 61) is:

Whereas the provisions in force against the sale of fermented and distilled liquors during certain hours of Sunday have been found to be attended with great public benefits, and it is expedient and the people of Wales are desirous that in the principality of Wales those provisions be extended to the other hours of Sunday: Be it therefore enacted, &c.

And the 1st and 2nd sections of the Act are:

1. In the principality of Wales all premises in which intoxicating liquors are sold or exposed for sale by retail shall be closed during the whole of Sunday.

2. The Licensing Acts 1872-1874, shall apply in the case of any premises closed under this Act as if they had been closed under those Acts.

Charles, Q.C. (with him W. D. Benson) for the appellant.—The magistrate was wrong in convicting the appellant. The Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881 applies to Sunday only and not to Christmas-day and Good Friday. First, the preamble to the Act shows clearly that it was the intention of the Legislature that the Act should apply to Sunday only. The desire of the people of Wales is set out therein as the reason for the legislation, and it is a matter of notoriety that the people of Wales would not wish to have Christmas-day and Good Friday included within the operation of the Act. Secondly, there is nothing in the 2nd section, on which the magistrate based his decision, to lead the court to read in the 3rd section of the Licensing Act 1874 into this Act. The plain meaning of that section is to import into this Act the provisions of the Licensing Acts as to penalties. The premises must be "closed under this Act" before the section applies at all, and it cannot therefore operate to extend the provisions of the Act as to closing.

Brynmôr Jones for the respondent.—The appellant is the holder of a six-day licence under the 49th section of the Licensing Act 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), and is bound by that section to keep his premises closed during the whole of Sunday. By the 1st section of the Act of 1874, that Act and the principal Act of 1872 are, so far as is consistent with the respective tenors of such Acts, to be construed as one Act. The provisions of the Act of 1872 (sect. 24) as to closing are repealed by the 33rd section of the Act of 1874. All the provisions therefore of the combined Acts as to closing are contained in the 3rd section of the Act of 1874, which enacts that all premises in which intoxicating liquors are sold shall be closed on Christmas-day and Good Friday, as if they were respectively Sunday, so that apart from the Act of 1881 the appellant was bound, as the holder of a six-day licence, to close his premises during the whole of Christmas-day. Next, the Act of 1881 does not repeal the 3rd section of the Act of 1874, and the effect of the Act is to alter that part of the section which prescribes during what hours the premises are to be opened on Sunday, and to enact that they shall be closed during the whole of Sunday, but the latter part of the 3rd section providing that the Sunday hours

[Q.B. DIV.]

REG. v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE PRESTON UNION.

[Q.B. DIV.]

shall govern Christmas-day and Good Friday remains unaltered, and the appellant committed an offence against the Act in opening his premises on Christmas-day.

Charles, Q.C. in reply on the first point only.—This conviction cannot be sustained under the Act of 1872. Under the 24th and 49th sections of that Act every holder of a six-day licence could open his premises on Christmas-day and Good Friday. The 3rd section of the Act of 1874 only applies the hours of Sunday closing mentioned in that section to Christmas-day and Good Friday, and there is nothing in it to compel the holder of a six-day licence to close during the whole of Christmas-day and Good Friday. [He was stopped by the Court.]

POLLOCK, B.—It seems to me that this conviction must be quashed. The appellant was convicted under the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 51) for keeping his premises open during Christmas-day at Swansea, and the question is, whether the conviction is to be sustained. The history of the matter may be shortly stated in this way. Before the Sunday Closing (Wales) Act 1881 the law of England and Wales was based upon the Licensing Acts of 1872 and 1874 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), which clearly set out the hours during which licensed houses might be opened, and during which they were to be closed. The 49th section of the Act of 1872 dealt with six-day licences, and provided that in the case of six-day licences the premises were to be closed during the whole of Sunday, and the 24th section dealt with the periods of time during which premises with licences other than six day licences were to be closed on Sunday. By the 3rd section of the Act of 1874 these hours were varied, and this provision was added: "Such premises shall be closed on Christmas-day and Good Friday . . . as if Christmas-day and Good Friday were respectively Sunday." That meant to say that the same provision as was enacted to apply to Sunday should apply to Christmas-day and Good Friday. So the law stood until the people of Wales holding certain views stated in the preamble to the Act of 1881 got that Act passed. The preamble recites that "Whereas the provisions in force against the sale of fermented and distilled liquors during certain hours of Sunday have been found to be attended with great public benefits, and it is expedient, and the people of Wales are desirous that in the principality of Wales those provisions be extended to the other hours of Sunday;" and then the first section enacts that "In the principality of Wales all premises in which intoxicating liquors are sold or exposed for sale by retail shall be closed during the whole of Sunday." Now the question is, what is the meaning of the word "Sunday." There is no interpretation clause to show that Sunday means anything more than is generally expressed by that word. There is nothing to say that the Act is to be read with the Acts of 1872 and 1874. Therefore the word carries with it no unusual meaning. Nor does it appear that the people of Wales had any special views with regard to Christmas-day and Good Friday—in fact, as a matter of history, we know that they entertain different views from those entertained by the people of England. I think, therefore, that Sunday has in this Act the meaning generally assigned to it, and that the object of the Act was to cause all licensed premises in Wales to be closed on Sunday and nothing further. Then it is said that the 2nd section of the Act makes a difference, but that section has no force in restricting the opening of licensed premises. It simply means that when premises are closed under this statute on Sunday the provisions of the Licensing Acts 1872-1874 shall apply to them. I think therefore that the conviction must be quashed.

NORTH, J.—I agree. As regards the Act of 1881, under which the information is laid, I think that the case is clear on the words of the statute without giving too much weight to the words of the preamble. Before the Act there were certain hours on Sunday during which houses might be opened. The 1st section says that, instead of being allowed to open as before, they shall be closed during the whole of Sunday. That is to say, the previous limited hours are taken away on Sunday, and on Sunday alone. Then the 2nd section says that the Licensing Acts 1872-1874 are to apply "in the case of premises closed under this Act." Now what are the "premises closed under this Act?" All that is done by it is to take away the limited hours previously allowed on Sunday. There is no reference to anything else, and I see nothing to lead me to suppose that the word "Sunday" means anything except the first day of the week. But it has been ingeniously argued with respect to the six-day licences granted under the 49th section of the Act of 1872, that the provisions of the 3rd section of the Act of 1874 (substituted for the repealed 24th section of the Act of 1872) apply as if the words "all premises in respect of which six-day licences are granted shall be closed during the whole of Sunday," were to be found there in addition to the general provisions for the closing of licensed premises which are found there, and then reliance is placed on the words at the end of the section providing that premises are to be closed on Christmas-day and Good Friday, as if Christmas-day and Good Friday were respectively Sunday. I read these words as simply having the effect of altering the hours of closing on Christmas-day and Good Friday, and not as meaning that the same law is always to be applied to Christmas-day and Good Friday as to Sunday, and, as I do not think that the Act of 1881 affects the hours of closing on Christmas-day and Good Friday. I agree, therefore, that this conviction must be quashed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Smith and Lawrence.

Solicitor for the respondent, John Thomas, Swansea.

Friday, March 16, 1883.

(Before POLLOCK, B. and NORTH, J.)

REG. on the prosecution of THE GUARDIANS OF THE GARSTANG UNION v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE PRESTON UNION. (a)

Poor law—Pauper lunatic—Married woman—Removal to husband's settlement—Consent of husband—Wife certified to be a proper person to be kept in a workhouse—25 & 26 Vict. c. 111, s. 20.

J. B. resided with his wife in the Garstang Union,

(a) Reported by H. D. BONSKY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

but had not acquired a settlement there, and it was admitted that the last legal settlement of husband and wife was in the Preston Union. In 1881 the wife became of unsound mind and chargeable to the parish, and the medical officers of the union certified under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 111, s. 20, that she, being a pauper lunatic, was a proper person to be kept in a workhouse.

On the 4th Aug. 1881 an order was made by two justices for the removal of the woman to the Preston Union, and the husband consented to the order of removal.

The Court of Quarter Sessions quashed the order of removal on the ground that the wife could not be separated from her husband, and that she, as a married woman, was irremovable without her husband.

Held, that the decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions was wrong, and that the order of removal must be upheld.

RULE calling on the Guardians of the Preston Union to show cause why an order of sessions should not be quashed.

At the Court of Quarter Sessions in and for the county of Lancaster, holden at Preston, in the said county, on the 5th Jan. 1882 an order of removal directing that Margaret Billington, a pauper, the wife of James Billington, should be removed from the Garstang to the Preston Union was quashed subject to the opinion of the Court upon the following case:

CASE.

1. From Aug. 1880 to July 7 1881, the said Margaret Billington resided with her husband, James Billington, in his house at Myerscough, in the Garstang Poor Law Union, and neither husband nor wife during such time were ever at anytime chargeable to, or received relief from, any parish or union.

2. The legal settlement of the said James Billington and of his said wife, the said Margaret, in his right, is admitted to have been, on the said 7th July 1881 and the 4th August 1881, in the Preston Poor Law Union.

3. A certificate bearing date the 11th July 1881, and in the following terms, was signed by the medical officer of health for the Garstang Union:

LUNATICS IN WORKHOUSES.—Certificate to be given to the medical officer of the workhouse under section 20 of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 111.

I, William Chapman, the medical officer of the Garstang Union Workhouse, do hereby certify, pursuant to the provisions of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 111, s. 20, that in my opinion, Margaret Billington, aged forty-six years, a pauper lunatic, is a proper person to be kept in a workhouse, and that the accommodation of the Garstang Union workhouse is sufficient for her reception.

4. (Not material).

5. On the 4th of Aug. 1881 two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of Lancaster made an order for the removal of the said Margaret alone, from the said Garstang Union to the said Preston Union. The said order was, omitting formal parts, as follows:

Whereas, complaint hath been made unto us, two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, by the guardians of the poor of the said Garstang Poor Law Union, that Margaret Billington (hereinafter called the pauper) has come to inhabit, and is now inhabiting, in the township of Barnacre-with-Bond, in the county of Lancaster (the same being one of the townships comprised in the said Garstang Union) not having gained a legal settlement there, nor in any other township in the said union, nor having produced any certificate acknowledging her to be settled elsewhere, and that she is now actually chargeable to the common fund of the said union, in respect of relief made necessary by sickness and unsoundness of mind, being such as will produce permanent disability, and that the township of Woodplumpton, in the Union of Preston (being one of the townships comprised in the said Preston Poor Law Union) is the place of her last legal settlement.

We, the said justices, upon due proof thereof, do adjudge the same to be true, and that the place of the last legal settlement of the said pauper is in the said township of Woodplumpton, in the said union of Preston, and we, the said justices, do hereby further state, that we are satisfied, by the evidence aforesaid, that the said sickness and unsoundness of mind of the said Margaret Billington will produce permanent disability in the said pauper, Margaret Billington. These are, therefore, to order—(then followed the order that the pauper be removed to the Preston Union).

6. The said James Billington consented to such removal. The said pauper did not give, nor was she mentally competent to give, her consent.

7. The said James Billington at the time of such order, and thence hitherto, has continued to reside, and still resides, at his said house within the Garstang Union, and carries on his employment as theretofore, and maintains himself out of his own funds.

8. The guardians of the Preston Union duly prosecuted an appeal to the Quarter Sessions of Lancaster, holden at Preston on the 5th day of January 1882, and the said sessions, upon the hearing of such appeal, decided in favour of the appellants on the ground that the said wife could not be thus separated from her said husband, and that she as a married woman was, under the circumstances, irremovable alone without her husband. The grounds of appeal are attached to, and are to be taken as part of this special case.

The question for the opinion of the court, is whether upon the facts as above stated, and as in evidence before the quarter sessions, the order of removal appealed against is good in law.

Addison, Q.C. (Leresche with him) for the appellants.—The consent of the husband to the removal of the wife is not enough, and even if both husband and wife consent the justices have no power to make an order which will separate them. A long series of authorities support this proposition. In Rex v. The Inhabitants of Ironacton (Burr. S. C. 153) an order removing the wife and children was upheld, but it was not shown that the husband was not residing at the place to which they were removed, and the Court assumed that he was. In Rex v. Inhabitants of Cuckfield (Burr. S. C. 291) it was held that a wife could not be separated from her husband. These authorities are based upon the ground that it is against public policy to separate husband and wife. Rex v. The Inhabitants of Ellham (5 East, 113) will be relied on as an authority that the consent of the husband is sufficient, but that case was doubted in Rex v. Inhabitants of Leeds (4 B. & Ald. 503). Best, J. says: "If the point decided in Rex v. Ellham were to occur again, I think it would, perhaps, be worth considering whether that decision could be supported." In the same case, Bayley, J. says: "It is against public policy and good morals to permit the separation of husband and wife, even with their consent." In another case of Rex v. The Inhabitants of Leeds (13 L. J. 107, M. C.), it was held that where husband

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE PRESTON UNION.

[Q.B. Div.]

and wife are living together and become chargeable, and no settlement of the husband can be ascertained, the wife cannot be removed to the place of her maiden settlement, the husband alone consenting to the separation. No case can be cited to support the proposition that the husband and wife can be separated. He also cited

Rez v. Carleton, Burr. S. C. 813 ;

Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Stogumber, 9 Ad. & El. 622 ;

Reg. v. The Inhabitants of St. Mary, Beverley, 1 B. & Ad. 201 ;

Reg. v. The Guardians of Bridgnorth, 47 L. T. Rep. N.S. 301 ; 9 Q. B. Div. 766.

Charles, Q.C. (Leese with him) for the respondents.—The removal in this case was to the husband's settlement, but in the cases cited, except Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Stogumber, it was to a different settlement. If the husband had taken his wife to the Preston Union they could not have refused to take her in. Rez v. The Inhabitants of Eltham has never been overruled, and that is a distinct authority to show that a woman may be removed to her place of settlement with the consent of her husband and herself. Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Stogumber is also an authority to show that the consent of the husband is sufficient. In the report of that case in Perry and Davidson's Reports, vol. 1, p. 409, Lord Denman, C. J., says : "No consent on the part of the husband, nor anything equivalent to it, appears on the face of the case." It is found on the face of the order which is brought up to be quashed that this woman was permanently insane and disabled, and is therefore unable to give her consent to the removal. Under these circumstances the consent of the husband was sufficient.

POLLOCK, B.—This is an appeal from an order of sessions quashing an order of removal made by justices, whereby a married woman was removed to her husband's settlement, and the question is whether that order is good in law or not. It seems to me unnecessary to discuss the earlier cases brought to our attention by Mr. Addison, and reported in Burrow's Reports. Two principles have guided the courts in cases of this kind ; one is the question of public policy in separating husband and wife, and the other raises the question whether, when they are separated, the wife should be sent to her home settlement, or to her husband's settlement. In the case of Rez v. The Inhabitants of Eltham (5 East, 113) it is quite clear that Lord Ellenborough thought that where both the husband and wife consented, the wife could be sent to her last legal settlement ; but in this case it is not necessary to go so far as that, because the order was to send the wife to the husband's settlement with his consent. I agree with what was said by Field, J. in Reg. v. The Guardians of Bridgnorth (ubi sup.) It was said that in all the cases the policy seems to be that it is undesirable to separate husband and wife, and this seems to me the most important point in the case. The circumstances of this case are somewhat, but not entirely, novel. In Reg. v. The Inhabitants of Stogumber (ubi sup.) the question was raised whether a woman could be removed from the parish where she had resided with her husband to her husband's settlement, the husband being in a gaol in the parish where they had resided, and his wife being allowed to visit him. In the report of the case in Perry and Davidson's Reports, vol. 1, p. 409, Lord Denman, C. J. appears to have said this : "It is clear in this case that the parties were residing in the same parish, and there might have been a consortium between them which it is the policy of the law not to interrupt. No consent on the part of the husband, nor anything equivalent to it, appears on the face of the case." How far that had any effect on the decision of the court it seems unnecessary to consider, for it appears from the argument that it was assumed that a consortium might exist between the husband and wife. Nowadays there could be no consortium where the husband was undergoing a sentence of penal servitude for life. In July 1881 the wife was taken to the Garstang workhouse, and on the 11th July the medical officer gave a certificate under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 111, s. 20, that the lunatic was a proper person to be kept in a workhouse. The words of that section are "No person shall be detained in any workhouse, being a lunatic, or alleged lunatic, beyond the period of fourteen days, unless in the opinion, given in writing, of the medical officer of the union or parish to which the workhouse belongs, such person is a proper person to be kept in a workhouse, nor unless the accommodation in the workhouse is sufficient for his reception ; and any person detained in a workhouse in contravention of this section, shall be deemed to be a proper person to be sent to an asylum within the meaning of section sixty-seven of the Lunacy Act, chapter ninety-seven ; and in the event of any person being detained in a workhouse in contravention of this section the medical officer shall for all the purposes of the Lunacy Act, chapter ninety-seven, be deemed to have knowledge that a pauper resident within his district is a lunatic, and a proper person to be sent to an asylum ; and it shall be his duty to act accordingly, and further to sign such certificate as is contained in schedule F, with a view to more certainly securing the reception into an asylum of such pauper lunatic as aforesaid." Now, that was acted upon in the present case, and it was found that this woman was permanently disabled, and she was thereupon removed by the order of two justices. Whether that order was right is the question we have to decide. If it is said that the husband has not consented, the answer is that he has consented ; and if it be said that the wife did not consent, the answer is that she could not. Therefore, the authorities on that point are not applicable to this case. Under sect. 20 of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 111, it is necessary that the wife should be removed, and upon all grounds I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Quarter Sessions is wrong, and that the order of the magistrates must be upheld.

NORTH, J.—I agree. Mr. Addison has cited several old cases, and we are much obliged to him for bringing them to our attention, but I do not think they give us much assistance in deciding the point raised in this case. The question is really reduced to this, namely, where the wife should be removed when it is necessary that she should live separate from her husband. I think she was rightly removed to her husband's place of settlement. Supposing the consortium were put an end to by the death of the husband, there can be no doubt that the wife could be sent to the husband's settlement, namely to the Preston Union. I am, therefore, of opinion that the order of Quarter Sessions was wrong, and the order of removal was right.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE OVERSEERS OF THE PARISH OF TONBRIDGE.

[Q.B. Div.]

Solicitor for the prosecution, Clarke, Preston.

Solicitors for the defendants, Buck, Dicksons, and Cockshott.

April 25 and 26, 1883.

(Before FIELD and MATHEW, JJ.)

REG. v. THE OVERSEERS OF THE PARISH OF TONBRIDGE. (a)

Burial board—Poor rate—18 & 19 Vict. c. 128,
s. 12.

By the 12th section of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, the vestry or meeting in the nature of a vestry of any parish, township, or other district not separately maintaining its own poor, which has heretofore had a separate burial ground, may appoint a burial board, and from time to time supply vacancies therein, and may exercise the same powers of authorisation, approval, and sanction in relation to such burial board, and such other powers as are vested in the vestry of a parish separately maintaining its own poor.

Held, that this section does not apply to a district having a separate burial ground, but not separately maintaining its own poor, which is part of a district already having a legally constituted burial board.

THIS was a special case, stated pursuant to an order of court dated the 24th June 1882, being, so far as material, as follows:—

1. The parish of Tonbridge is a parish maintaining its own poor, and is constituted and made up of the following six or more ecclesiastical districts, Tonbridge, Tonbridge Wells, Saint Peter's, Southborough; Saint Thomas's, Southborough; Saint Stephen's, and Hildenborough, none of which districts has ever separately maintained its own poor, all of the said districts contributing to a common rate levied for the relief of the poor by the parish overseers throughout the entire parish.

2. In the year 1881 a district was, under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 38, and other statutes, assigned to the new church of Saint Peter, then lately built upon land provided by the lord of the manor of Southborough by deed of gift, and the said church with a burial ground for the said district was duly consecrated, and in the year 1866 the said burial ground was enlarged by a further grant of land from the lord of the said manor, and the expense of laying out the said land as a burial ground was defrayed by a voluntary rate levied upon all the inhabitants of the said district.

3. In the year 1871 a district was assigned under 59 Geo. 3, c. 134 and other statutes to a new church of Saint Thomas within the limits of the aforesaid district of Saint Peter.

4. The burial ground aforesaid has always been the separate burial ground of the said original district of Saint Peter, and has been used exclusively by the inhabitants thereof, and since the said district of Saint Thomas has been formed out of the said district of Saint Peter the two districts have had the said burial ground exclusively for their joint use.

5. Since the formation of the said district of Saint Thomas the inhabitants of the two districts of Saint Peter and Saint Thomas have been accustomed to meet in meetings in the nature of a vestry, for purposes common to them both, such meetings being summoned by the churchwardens of the district of Saint Peter.

6. In the year 1855, subsequently to the passing of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, sects. 11 and 12, hereinafter set out, a meeting of the inhabitants of the parish of Tonbridge was held in pursuance of notice, copies of which had been affixed to the doors of all the churches in the parish, including those at Southborough, but excepting those within the ecclesiastical district of Tonbridge Wells, and at this meeting resolutions were duly passed for the formation of a burial board for such part of the parish of Tonbridge as was not included in the Tonbridge Wells ecclesiastical district. The inhabitants of the Southborough districts as a body were opposed to the said resolutions.

7. The burial board constituted in accordance with resolutions passed at the said meeting acquired a site about the centre of the parish of Tonbridge, but at the end of the town farthest from Southborough, and established a cemetery thereon, being about three and a quarter miles distant from the said church of Saint Peter, and the inhabitants of Southborough were rated for the expenses incidental to the establishment of the said cemetery, and have ever since been rated for the expenses incidental to the maintenance thereof, although in fact the inhabitants of Southborough have continued to use the Saint Peter's burial ground.

8. In the year 1858 the legality of the constitution of the said Tonbridge Burial Board was called in question, but it was decided by the Court of Queen's Bench in the case of Viner v. The Tonbridge Overseers (2 El. & El. 9; 28 L. J. M. C. 251, Q. B.) that the said burial board was legally constituted.

9. In the year 1878 the said burial board of Tonbridge found it necessary to enlarge the said cemetery, and for this purpose a meeting of the inhabitants of the parish of Tonbridge was held in pursuance of notice, copies of which had been affixed to the doors of all the churches in the parish including those in Southborough, but excepting those within the ecclesiastical district of Tonbridge Wells, and resolutions were duly passed at the said meeting, empowering the said burial board to enlarge the said cemetery, and to raise a sum of money sufficient for that purpose upon the security of the future poor rates of such portion of the parish as was not included in the ecclesiastical district of Tonbridge Wells. The inhabitants of the Southborough district as a body were opposed to the said resolutions.

10. Subsequently to this it was found necessary by the inhabitants of the districts of Saint Peter and Saint Thomas that the burial ground at Southborough aforesaid, jointly used by them, should be enlarged, and accordingly the churchwardens of Saint Peter's district summoned a meeting in the nature of a vestry for the 3rd Feb. 1879 by notices signed by them and affixed to the doors of all the churches and chapels in the districts of Saint Peter and Saint Thomas. The inhabitants of the other districts included in the jurisdiction of the Tonbridge Burial Board were

(a) Reported by J. SMITH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE OVERSEERS OF THE PARISH OF TONBRIDGE.

[Q.B. Div.]

not in any way consulted in the matter, nor was any notice of the said meeting or of the purposes thereof given to any of the parishioners residing outside the limits of Southborough.

11. The said meeting consisted exclusively of ratepayers from the two districts of Saint Peter and Saint Thomas, who thereupon appointed a burial board for the said two districts, and vacancies therein have since from time to time been filled up at similar meetings.

12. In Sept. 1881 the burial board thus appointed for Southborough having incurred expenses to the amount of 292*l.* 10*s.* in the enlargement of their said burial ground, and otherwise in reference thereto, issued their certificate to the overseers of the parish of Tonbridge for payment of the said sum.

13. The said overseers decline to act upon the said certificate, or to pay the said sum or any part thereof to the said burial board, on the ground that the said burial board has not been, and cannot be, legally constituted.

14. The said burial board contend that they have been legally constituted under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, ss. 11 and 12, which are in the following terms:

11. Where a parish or place has been united with any other parish or place, parishes or places, for all or any ecclesiastical purposes, or where two or more parishes or places have heretofore had a church or a burial ground for their joint use, or where the inhabitants of several parishes or places have been accustomed to meet in one vestry for purposes common to such several parishes or places, it shall be lawful for the vestry, or any meeting in the nature of a vestry of such several parishes or places in any of the cases aforesaid, and whether any one or more of such parishes or places do or do not separately maintain its own poor, to appoint a burial board, and from time to time to supply vacancies therein, and to exercise the same powers of authorisation, approval, and sanction in relation to such burial board, and such other powers as under the said Acts and this Act are vested in the vestry of a parish or place separately maintaining its own poor; and the burial board so appointed shall have all the powers for providing a burial ground for the common use of such several parishes or places, and for facilitating interments and otherwise as if such several parishes or places had been a parish separately maintaining its own poor, and the expenses of the burial board appointed under this provision shall be borne by the several parishes or places for which such board is appointed, and shall be apportioned among them by such burial board in proportion to the value of the property in such several parishes or places as rated to the relief of the poor, and the sums required by the burial board in respect of the portion of such expenses to be borne by any such parish or place shall be paid out of the rates for the relief of the poor in such parish or place in like manner as if such burial board had been appointed for such parish or place alone.

12. The vestry or meeting in the nature of a vestry of any parish, township, or other district not separately maintaining its own poor which has heretofore had a separate burial ground may appoint a burial board and from time to time supply vacancies therein, and may exercise the same powers of authorisation, approval, and sanction in relation to such burial board, and such other powers as under the said Acts and this Act are vested in the vestry of a parish separately maintaining its own poor, and the burial board so appointed shall have all the powers for providing a burial ground and otherwise as if such parish, township, or other district had been a parish separately maintaining its own poor.

15. On the 24th June 1882 the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, upon the application of the Southborough Burial Board, made an order that a writ of mandamus should issue, directed to the overseers of the parish of Tonbridge, in the county of Kent, commanding them to put in force the powers of the Burial Acts (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 134; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 81, especially of sect. 13 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128), and to levy and pay to the said Samuel Warburton, clerk to the burial board of Southborough, in the said parish, the sum of 292*l.* 10*s.*, being expenses of the said board, according to the tenor of a certificate dated the 24th April 1882, under the common seal of the said board, and signed by two members and the secretary thereof, and further by consent of counsel on both sides that no objection should be taken to the form of the said writ, and that a special case should be stated without pleading, such case to be settled in case of difference by an arbitrator.

16. The question for the court is, whether upon the facts hereinbefore stated, the inhabitants of Southborough had or have any power under the sections hereinbefore set forth to constitute a separate burial board for the district of St. Thomas and St. Peter.

Meadows White, Q.C. (with him Archibald) for the applicants.

Lumley Smith, Q.C. (with him Candy) for the defendants.

The arguments sufficiently appear in the judgment.

Our. adv. vult.

April 26.—FIELD, J.—This is a case in which it is the duty of the court to construe several statutes passed at different times, and as the subject-matter also is of a complicated character, dealing as it does with ecclesiastical districts and parishes, it is extremely difficult to arrive at the precise meaning of the Legislature. The facts, however, out of which this question arises are not very complicated. The old parish of Tonbridge, which maintained its own poor, had six divisions or districts which had not originally any ecclesiastical or any secular or parochial organisation. There was among these six districts first of all the commercial and industrial town of Tonbridge itself, and next in importance the town of Tonbridge Wells, and between them was the district of Southborough. The town of Tonbridge Wells very early became an ecclesiastical district, and acquired, as it had a perfect right to do under the Acts of Parliament I just now mentioned, a separate burial ground. In the year 1831 a new district came into existence, known as Southborough, and at that time it was made into one ecclesiastical district only, which was put into the same position as Tonbridge Wells, having its church St. Peter's, and its separate burial ground. This was the state of affairs in the parish of Tonbridge in 1853 when the first legislation upon this matter took place (16 & 17 Vict. c. 134), enabling certain parishes to appoint burial boards. This legislation arose in this way: In the metropolis a great many burial grounds were overcharged, and had become a scandal, and, power being given to the Secretary of State to close them, it became necessary to provide space for the interment of those who had formerly the right to be buried in these grounds, and for that purpose, in 1852, an Act was passed which applied solely to the metropolis (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), and then in 1853 some of its provisions were, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 134, applied to parishes outside the metropolis, the mode adopted by the later Act being to

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE OVERSEERS OF THE PARISH OF TONBRIDGE.

[Q.B. Div.]

extend to parishes not in the metropolis all the sections of the earlier Act which were applicable. It is to be observed that the 23rd section of the earlier Act, being one of the sections adopted by the later Act, enables the vestries of several parishes to concur in providing a burial ground for their common use—a provision the importance of which will be seen shortly in regard to the subsequent legislation which provided for the circumstances under which these parishes might separate again from one another. The next Act (17 & 18 Vict. c. 87) went a little further by giving town councils power to provide burial grounds, and then in 1855 came the Act with which we have to deal (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128). Immediately after the passing of that Act the inhabitants of the parish of Tonbridge, other than Tonbridge Wells, determined to appoint a burial board. Southborough, having already got St. Peter's with its burial ground, objected to the mother parish having a burial ground upon the ground that, inasmuch as it had ceased to be an entire parish for ecclesiastical purposes, although that was not the case for secular purposes in the way of rating, it no longer formed an ecclesiastical unit with the capacity of having a burial board. That point was brought before the court in the case of Viner v. The Overseers of Tonbridge (2 El. & El. 9; 28 L. J. M. C. 251, Q. B.), and was decided in favour of the mother parish, which had appointed a burial board and formed a burial ground. For the purpose of making and forming that burial ground money was doubtless borrowed and charged upon the rates, and so far as I know the rates are still charged with the balance of the money so expended. The burial board also appointed the necessary officers and servants to attend to the burial ground, and from that time down to the year 1881 have acted as a burial board, including in their area the district of Southborough, divided into its two ecclesiastical districts of St. Peter's and St. Thomas's, two districts with one joint burial ground, the latter having become an ecclesiastical district in 1871, but never having had any separate burial ground. In 1879 the inhabitants of Southborough became desirous of appointing a burial board of their own, and upon the 3rd Feb. 1879 a meeting in the nature of a vestry was held for St. Peter's and St. Thomas's, and that meeting passed a resolution to appoint a burial board, and placed the burial ground of St. Peter's under its control, and added afterwards to it, and, having incurred an expenditure of 292l. 10s., under the provisions as they believed of the Acts in question, certified that sum to the overseers of Tonbridge, and required the latter to make a rate upon the inhabitants of St. Peter's and St. Thomas's for the purpose of meeting those expenses. This the overseers of Tonbridge refused to do, on the ground that the alleged burial board for Southborough had no legal foundation. Upon that a rule was obtained for a mandamus, and a special case stated upon which we have now to decide. Mr. Meadows White, for the applicants, rests his case upon the 12th and 13th sections of the Amendment Act of 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128). The meeting of the inhabitants of Southborough—treating the districts of St. Peter's and St. Thomas's as one—in Feb. 1879 was, he contends, a meeting in the nature of a vestry—it was a meeting of a district not maintaining its own poor, which had theretofore had a separate burial ground. It may very well be that Southborough was a district having a separate burial ground, for the inhabitants of St. Thomas's never lost their right of interment in the burial ground of St. Peter's, and it therefore seems to me that, although it has been ecclesiastically divided into two, it is nevertheless within the operation of the 12th section of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, so far as the language of the section goes. The argument put forward on the contrary on behalf of the defendants is, that although the district of Southborough may come within the words of that section, yet a case such as the present is not within the intention of the Act, to find out which it will be necessary for us to look at the whole course of legislation. Particular reference, however, I may say, was made on behalf of the inhabitants of Southborough to the words of the 13th section, providing that "where any district (whether a parish, or township, or other subdivision) not separately maintaining its own poor, but forming part of a parish maintaining its own poor, or of an incorporation or other union maintaining the poor of the places comprised therein, by means of a common rate, shall have a burial board, or shall form part of a place or union of places not co-extensive with the area rated for the relief of the poor, and having one burial board, it shall be lawful for such respective burial board to issue their certificate to the overseers of such parish, or the overseers or other persons authorised to make and collect, or cause to be collected such common rate (as the case may be), for payment of the sums required for the expenses of such burial board." From these words the deduction was drawn that, in allowing districts not separately maintaining their own poor to appoint burial boards, the Legislature was wholly indifferent as to the existence or non-existence of a burial board in the parishes or unions of which they formed parts, and that it was quite immaterial whether the mother parish had or had not a burial board. Various sections of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 81 were also cited on each side to show the intention of the Legislature on this point. I propose now to take the various sections in their order, in order to discover what the intention of the Legislature really was. The Act of 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 134) enabled several parishes to concur in having one burial board; but it was seen that it might happen that, after such a union had taken place, the contracting parties might not like to continue united, and that provision should be made in that respect. This was done by the 2nd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 81, which provides that "Where the vestries of two or more parishes have agreed to provide one burial ground for the common use of such parishes such vestries may, at any time before such burial ground has been provided, determine the union between such parishes under such agreement." On the words, "before such burial ground has been provided," Mr. Lumley Smith, for the defendants, strongly relies, as showing that when once a union has been effected, and a burial board appointed, it requires express legislation to get rid of it; and the 12th section does not apply here, because, if it did, there would be two burial boards exercising jurisdiction over the same area of rateable property—a state of affairs obviously giving rise to so much inconvenience that it could never have been the intention of the Legislature to produce it. Mr. White,

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF ESSEX.

[Q.B. Div.]

on the other hand, relies on the 5th section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 81, as being very much in favour of his view of the intention of the Legislature. That section says that "the vestry or a meeting in the nature of a vestry of any parish, new parish, township, or other district not separately maintaining its own poor, and which has had no separate burial ground, may appoint a burial board, and such vestry or meeting and the burial board appointed by it shall exercise and have all the power which they might have exercised and had under the said Acts and this Act if such parish, new parish, township, or district had had a separate burial ground before the passing of the said Act of the 18th and 19th years of Her Majesty: Provided always, that all the powers of any other vestry or meeting and burial board, if any, shall then cease and determine, so far as relates to such parish, new parish, township, or district as aforesaid." That section again contains no provision as to what is to be done with existing liabilities, and, as was pointed out by the learned judges who decided the case of Reg. v. The Overseers of Walcot St. Swithin (6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 325; 2 B. & S. 571), it must probably be understood as if it contained words providing that all prior liabilities should remain of the same force and validity as at the time of the making of the burial board. On this section it was argued on the one side that the Legislature felt no difficulty in determining an existing burial board, and that the same provision as to the determination of the powers of other burial boards is to be read into the 12th section of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128—a view which I think goes beyond the rules of fair construction; while on the other side it is said that, if the Legislature had intended such a provision, nothing could have been easier than to insert it in the earlier, as in the later statute. Then Mr. Lumley Smith relied also upon the 9th section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 81, which says, "And whereas by the said Act 18 & 19 Vict. c. 128 it is enacted, that where a parish or place has been united with any other parish or place, parishes or places, for all or any ecclesiastical purposes, or where two or more parishes or places have heretofore had a church or a burial ground for their joint use, or where the inhabitants of several parishes or places have been accustomed to meet in one vestry for purposes common to such several parishes or places, it shall be lawful for the vestry, or any meeting in the nature of a vestry, of such several parishes or places, in any of the cases aforesaid, and whether any one or more of such parishes or places do or do not separately maintain its own poor, to appoint a burial board, and from time to time to supply vacancies therein, and to exercise the same powers of authorisation, approval, and sanction in relation to such burial board, and such other powers as under the Acts therein recited and that Act are vested in the vestry of a parish or place separately maintaining its own poor. Where any of the several parishes or places under the circumstances provided for in the said enactment separately maintains its own poor, or has a separate burial ground, it shall not be lawful for the vestry, or meeting in the nature of a vestry, of such several parishes or places to appoint a burial board under the said enactment without the approval of one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State." In the case of Reg. v. The Overseers of Walcot (6 L. T. Rep. N. S.

320; 2 B. & S. 555) the 4th section of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 64 was also referred to—a section which contains the same principle, providing that "Where any parish or place has been divided into two or more parts or districts for all or any ecclesiastical purposes, and any one of such parts has a separate burial ground, it shall not be lawful for the vestry or meeting in the nature of a vestry for such entire parish or place to appoint a burial board without the approval of one of Her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State." This is the legislation bearing upon the subject, and the question is, are we to read these 12th and 13th sections literally, as Mr. White contends, or by the light of these different sections I have read. I do not say that it is at all clear, but upon the whole, giving my best attention to the matter, and giving the best sense I can to the Act of Parliament, I come to the conclusion that Mr. Lumley Smith's contention must prevail, and that the board so in existence is not a lawfully appointed board. Great light is thrown upon the discussion by the case of Reg. v. The Overseers of Walcot St. Swithin (ubi sup.), and the reasons given in the judgment in that case, especially in the judgment of Blackburn, J. The case is not exactly in point, but the reasoning of the learned judges would seem to show that it was upon the existence of the proviso in sect. 5 that their decision turned, and upon the extreme improbability that the Legislature could have intended to have brought into existence two separate jurisdictions on the same area. For these reasons, therefore, I think that the rule for a mandamus must be discharged, and that judgment must be for the defendants, with costs.

MATHEW, J. concurred.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors for the applicants, Tilleard, Godden, and Holme.

Solicitors for the defendants, White and Sons.

Thursday, June 14, 1883.

(Before WATKIN WILLIAMS and A. L. SMITH, JJ.)

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF ESSEX. (a)

Highway district—Dissolution of, under sect. 39 of Highway Act 1862—Effect of, on highway board—Existence of highway board for certain purposes after dissolution—Highway board respondents in appeal to sessions after dissolution—Justices declining to hear respondents—Mandamus to justices to hear and determine appeal—Highway Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), ss. 5, 9, 11, 39.

On the 25th March 1883, the date of the dissolution of a highway district under sect. 39 of the Highway Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), an appeal to the quarter sessions was pending against an order of justices in petty sessions, by which the appellant had been ordered to pay to the district highway board a sum of money for "extraordinary expenses," incurred by the board in repairing damage caused to the highways by "excessive weight and extraordinary traffic," in the constant passing over the same of a traction engine and carriages belonging to the appellant. When the appeal came on to be heard, on the 4th

(a) Reported by HENRY LEIGH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF ESSEX.

[Q.B. Div.]

April, the Court of Quarter Sessions declined to hear counsel for the respondent board, on the ground that, the highway district being dissolved, the board had ceased to exist and could not therefore appear or be heard by counsel as respondents in the appeal; and, treating the appeal as unopposed, the magistrates quashed the order appealed against.

Upon a rule for a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances and hear and determine the appeal, it was Held by the Queen's Bench Division (Watkin Williams and A. L. Smith, JJ.): First, that although, on the dissolution of the highway district, the highway board ceased to be the highway authority for all purposes connected with the control and management of the highways, they nevertheless continued to exist as a corporate body for other purposes, viz., preparing and stating their accounts, getting in debts and other moneys due, distributing the funds in hand to the proper recipients, and generally winding-up their affairs, and that they were therefore the proper respondents in the appeal, and entitled to be heard accordingly; secondly, that there had been no hearing and determination of the appeal on its merits, but merely an erroneous decision of the justices upon a preliminary objection, and therefore the rule for a mandamus must be made absolute.

Reg. v. Brown and others (7 E. & B. 767; 26 L. J. 182, M. C.) approved and acted on.

In 1868 several parishes and places in the county of Essex, including the parishes of Brentwood and South Weald in the said county, were duly constituted a highway district under the provisions of the Highway Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), under the name of the "Billericay Highway District;" and waywardens for the said several parishes and places within the said district have ever since been elected annually, and, with the justices acting for the county of Essex and residing within the said district, have constituted the "Highway Board" of the said Billericay highway district.

On the 17th Oct. 1882, at a Court of General Quarter Sessions, in and for the county of Essex, to which the consideration of a provisional order made by the justices at a previous Court of General Quarter Sessions in and for the said county, in pursuance of the powers contained in the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, dissolving the said highway district, had been duly adjourned, the justices having then and there considered the said provisional order, made a final order confirming the same, and ordered that the said highway district should be dissolved on the 25th March 1883, and that all matters of account connected with the said highway district should be duly adjusted to that date.

In the month of Feb. 1883 proceedings were taken under sect. 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), by the surveyor of the Billericay Highway Board, under the authority and on behalf of the board, against the Shorthorn Dairy Company Limited, carrying on business in London and also at Dytchleys in the parish of South Weald, in the county of Essex, and within the said highway district, to recover from the said company in a summary manner the sum of 279l. 5s., extraordinary expenses incurred by the said board in the parishes of Brentwood and South Weald respectively between June 1881 and Sept. 1882, in repairing the highways between Dytchleys aforesaid and the Brentwood railway station, by reason of damage caused by "excessive weight" and "extraordinary traffic" passing along and over the same highway, by the passage of a traction engine and carriages attached thereto, constantly and daily run by the said company to and fro along and over the said highways between Dytchleys aforesaid and the said Brentwood railway station, for the conveyance of stores, materials, and agricultural produce of the company.

At the hearing of the information by three justices in petty sessions at Brentwood, on the 22nd Feb. last, the said justices made an order for payment by the dairy company to the highway board of the sum of 279l. 5s., the amount of the said damage, and 43l. 3s. for the costs of the board in that behalf, making together the sum of 322l. 8s.; and on the 1st March following the said company, by their solicitors, duly gave notice to the board and to their surveyor and the said justices of their intention to appeal against the said order, and gave security by deposit of money to abide the judgment of the court on the hearing of the appeal.

The appeal came on for hearing before the Court of General Quarter Sessions for the county of Essex at Chelmsford on the 4th April 1883, when counsel appeared on behalf of the appellants, the dairy company, and also on behalf of the respondents other than the said justices.

A preliminary objection was taken by the appellants' counsel that the highway board, having been dissolved on the 25th March 1883 by the before-mentioned final order of quarter sessions, had altogether ceased to exist, and had no locus standi at the hearing of the said appeal by themselves or by counsel, and that therefore the respondents' counsel could not be heard. The justices sitting for the hearing of the appeal, having heard counsel for the highway board in answer to that objection, held the objection to be valid, and refused to hear the highway board by themselves or their counsel; and thereupon, proof having been given by the appellants of due service of the notice of appeal, the justices quashed the order of justices appealed against, and ordered the money deposited by the dairy company (the appellants) as aforesaid to be paid to them by the clerk of the peace.

A rule nisi for a mandamus to the justices of the said county of Essex, commanding them to show cause why they should not hear and determine the said appeal, was, on the application of counsel for the said dissolved highway board, subsequently granted by the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice.

The following sections of the Highway Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), under which the Billericay Highway Board was originally formed, are material:

Sect. 5 empowers any five or more justices of a county, by writing under their hands, to require the clerk of the peace to send, with the ordinary notice required to be given of the holding of courts of general quarter sessions, a notice in the form given in the schedule, that at the court therein mentioned a proposal will be made to divide the county, or some part thereof, into

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF ESSEX.

[Q.B. Div.]

highway districts, or to constitute the whole or some part thereof a highway district; and also to require the clerk of the peace to give notice by post to the churchwardens and overseers of every parish mentioned in such notice; and, upon such requisition being complied with, the justices at the general or quarter sessions mentioned in such notice may entertain such proposal and make a provisional order dividing the county or some part thereof into highway districts for the more convenient management of highways; but such order shall not be of any validity unless it is confirmed by a final order of the justices at some subsequent court of general or quarter sessions.

Sect. 6 contains the regulations as to the making, confirming and approving of the order of justices for forming highway districts.

By sect. 9 the following (amongst other) provisions are enacted with respect to the constitution of the highway board in each highway district:

(1.) The highway board shall consist of the waywardens elected in the several places within the districts in manner herein mentioned, and of the justices acting for the county and residing within the district.

(2.) The board shall be a body corporate by the name of the highway board of the district to which it belongs, having a perpetual succession and a common seal, with a power to acquire and hold lands for the purposes of the Highway Acts without any licence in mortmain.

By sect. 10 are enacted provisions and regulations with respect to the election of waywardens in every parish forming part of a highway district.

By sect. 11:

After the first meeting in any highway district of the board of such district the following consequences shall ensue: all such property real and personal, including all interests, easements, and rights in, to, and out of property real and personal, and including things in action, as belong to or are vested in, or would but for this Act have belonged to or been vested in any surveyor or surveyors of any parish forming part of the district, shall pass to and vest in the highway board of that district, for all the estate and interest of such surveyor or surveyors thereof as aforesaid, but subject to all debts and liabilities affecting the same. All debts and liabilities incurred in respect of any property transferred to the highway board may be enforced against the board to the extent of the property aforesaid. All such powers, rights, duties, liabilities, capacities, and incapacities (except the power of making, assessing, and levying highway rates) as are vested in or attached to, or would but for this Act have become vested in or attached to, any surveyor or surveyors of any parish forming part of the district, shall vest in and attach to the highway board. All property by this Act transferred to the board shall be held by them upon trust for the several parishes or places now maintaining their own highways within their district to which such property belongs, or for the benefit of which it was held previously to the formation of the district.

By sect. 39:

Any highway district formed under this Act may from time to time be altered by the addition of any parishes in the same or in any adjoining county, or the subtraction therefrom of any parishes; and new highway districts may be formed by the union of any existing highway districts in the same or in any adjoining county, or any parishes forming part of any existing highway districts, or any highway district may be dissolved; but any such alteration of existing districts or formation of new districts, or dissolution of any district shall be made by provisional and final order of the justices; and all the provisions of this Act with respect to the formation of highway districts and provisional and final orders of justices, and the notices to be given of and previously to the making of such orders, and all other proceedings relating to the formation of highway districts, shall, in so far as the same are applicable, extend to such alteration of existing or formation of new districts, or dissolution of districts, as is mentioned in this section. And in addition thereto provision shall be made, if necessary, in any orders of justices made under this section, for the adjustment of any matters of account arising between parishes or parts of districts in consequence of the exercise of the powers given by this section. Where any parish is added to or any district united with any district in another county, the final order of the justices of the county in which such parish or district is situate shall not be confirmed by them until they shall have received the approval of their provisional order for such addition or union from the justices of the county in which the district is situate to or with which such addition or union is to be made. Where any highway district is dissolved, or where any parish is excluded from any highway district, the highways in such district or parish shall be maintained, and the provisions of the principal Act in relation to the election of surveyors and to all other matters shall apply to the said highways in the same manner as if such highways had never been included within the limits of a highway district.

Philbrick, Q.C. and H. Ourtis Bennett, for the appellant dairy company, now showed cause against the rule.—They contended that the board, which was originally constituted in 1868, upon the creation of the highway district under the Act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), was, as a matter of course, and necessarily, dissolved, and ceased to exist, upon the dissolution of the highway district, in accordance with the provisions of sect. 39 of the Act, and from the moment of the coming into operation, on the 25th March 1883, of the final order of quarter sessions confirming their previous provisional order; consequently, therefore, they had no locus standi, and counsel could not appear or be heard on the appeal on the 4th April for a body which, having expired ten days before, had then no existence at all. Secondly, if anyone was entitled to be heard at all as respondent in the appeal, it was the surveyor of the parish under the Highway Act 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), the statutory successors of the expired board. The property, interests, and powers of these old surveyors were by sect. 11 of the Act of 1862 expressly vested in the highway board, and therefore, upon the latter's dissolution, such property, interests, and powers re-vested in the surveyors under the last clause of sect. 39 of the same Act. If that were not so, then such property, interests, and powers were now in nubibus, and the matter was casus omissus from the Act. Thirdly, a mandamus cannot go, because the magistrates have in fact heard and determined the appeal by hearing evidence on the part of the dairy company of due service of the notice of appeal, and, upon no respondent appearing (the magistrate having held that the dissolved board could not appear as such) by then quashing the order appealed against. The decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions was right; but, even if it were erroneous, the court will not interfere to have it questioned. They cited

Reg. v. The Justices of Monmouthshire, 8 B. & C. 137; 6 L. J. 87, M. C.;

Reg. v. The Justices of Carnarvon, 4 B. & Ald. 86;

Re v. The Justices of Gloucestershire, 1 B. & Ad. 1;

Reg. v. The Mayor, &c., of Monmouth, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 748; 39 L. J. 77, Q. B.; L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 250.

[WATKIN WILLIAMS, J. referred to Reg. v. Brown and others (Justices, &c.), 7 E. & B. 757; 26 L. J. 183, M. C.]

Poland and F. C. Earle, for the highway board, contra, supported the rule, and contended that, although the highway district had been duly dissolved by order of sessions, and though for many purposes the highway board had no longer any existence or any administrative powers, yet that it still and necessarily existed as a corporation for other purposes and duties, e.g., for the purpose of settling their accounts, collecting and getting in moneys and debts due to the board, paying debts due from the board, paying and distributing the funds and moneys in their hands to the proper recipients, and finally winding-up their affairs. If not, what was to become of and to be done with the moneys in the hands of the board's treasurer? The point raised on behalf of the company, as to the appeal having been already heard and determined, is conclusively settled against that contention by the following cases:

Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex; Slade's case, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 402; 2 Q. B. Div. 516; 46 L. J. 225, M. C.;

Reg. v. The Justices of Worcestershire, 3 E. & B. 477; 23 L. J. 113, M. C.;

Reg. v. The Justices of Monmouthshire, 4 B. & C. 844; 1 D. & R. 334.

WILLIAMS, J.—In this case I am clearly of opinion that the mandamus ought to go. The application is for a mandamus to the justices of the peace for the county of Essex, to enter continuances from session to session, in a certain appeal between the Shorthorn Dairy Company (the appellants) and the Billericay Highway Board (the respondents), and to hear and determine such appeal at the next general quarter sessions of the peace for the said county. Two objections have been raised to the issue of the mandamus. In the first place it is said that the justices in quarter sessions have already heard and determined this appeal. Now, however wrongly the justices might have decided the case, it is scarcely necessary to say that, if they had heard and determined it, this court would have no jurisdiction to issue an order to them to proceed to do what is now required. It is said, further, that the preliminary objection which was made before them was heard and determined by them. That is the converse way of putting it, that they have not heard and determined the appeal, but, in point of fact, have decided upon a preliminary objection, and would not further hear the case or enter upon its merits. The case is certainly one of some peculiarity, but it seems to me, looking carefully at the position of the corporation, the respondent highway board, and considering the real principles of law applicable to proceedings of this sort, that the case admits of no manner of doubt whatever. The appellants, the Shorthorn Dairy Company, had been ordered by the justices in petty sessions to pay a sum of money to the Billericay Highway Board, on account of expenses which the board had incurred in repairing certain highways in the parishes within their district, on account of the "extraordinary traffic" (that is the statutory expression) of the dairy company. That order having been made upon the company, the latter appealed therefrom to the general quarter sessions. The order of the justices in petty sessions was made on the 22nd Feb. 1883, and on the 1st March 1883 the company gave notice of appeal. On the 4th April the appeal came on for hearing at the quarter sessions, when the objection was taken that the highway board ceased to exist by having been dissolved as on and from the 25th

March 1883, and that therefore there was no respondent, nobody to oppose or to take part in the proceedings. The magistrates accepted and adopted that objection, and adjudged that there was no respondent at all before them, and then, on due service of the notice of appeal being proved, as a matter of form, in accordance with the practice of quarter sessions, the order appealed against was quashed. Under these circumstances, it seems to me to be impossible to say that the justices entered upon the merits of the case, or heard and adjudicated upon it in any shape or way. They determined merely the preliminary objection taken by the appellants that there was no respondent before the court to be heard. That is the same as if nobody had appeared at all; and, consequently, the same thing took place that happens when an action for the recovery of land is brought on, and the defendant does not appear, viz., that upon the mere demand of the party proceeding, judgment goes in his favour, without discussion or evidence or entering into the question in any way. If the objection decided by the magistrates here had been a valid and a sound one, possibly the result might have been the right one, however monstrous it might have been. If it had really turned out that all the property, powers, and interest of every sort and kind of the highway board had ceased to be in them on the 25th March, and that another body had been substituted for them, and that there had been a direct transfer from the one body to the other at midnight on the 25th March, it might have been said that there was something in the objection, because there was an existing body in whom were now all the powers, interests, and property of the defendant body, and who ought therefore to be the persons to take up the quarrel, and stand in the place of their predecessors, and bear the brunt of the battle, and pay the costs if unsuccessful. All that would have had some good sense in it; but when one comes to look at the matter as it in fact is, there is really nothing in it. The point is one that has been made, and therefore it must be referred to shortly. Now what is the position of this board that is said to have been dissolved on the 25th March? It is a highway board constituted under the General Highway Act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), consisting of waywardens elected by the ratepayers as representatives of the various parishes that are united together to form the highway district. There are two waywardens elected for each parish incorporated into the district, and those waywardens manage the whole business, as the business was, before the formation of the board, managed by the surveyors of the highways. By that Act of Parliament this new body was created a corporation, and all the property of the surveyors of highways, as it existed at the time this corporation was created, was transferred to and vested in the new corporation, in whom also were vested all rights, duties, and powers of every sort, they representing the entire district as a corporation having common interests and common rights. Then, it appears that this board determined on the 18th Dec. 1881 that they would take steps to dissolve themselves; and accordingly a resolution was passed in that month, under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, that they would dissolve, and accordingly, acting upon that, an application was made to the justices at quarter sessions, on the 3rd Jan. 1882, for a provisional order for dissolution, which was

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF ESSEX.

[Q.B. Div.]

accordingly made. The matter then came before justices at the two subsequent quarter sessions in April and June, on each of which occasions it was adjourned, and ultimately, at the sessions on the 17th Oct. 1882, a final order was made, that "this board be dissolved as from the 25th March 1883;" and the effect of that is, that, from that moment, the 25th March last, they ceased to have the power of exercising any jurisdiction whatever over these roads. By virtue of the 39th section of the Act, all their duties and powers in relation to highways and the management of them were immediately transferred by the operation of that section to the old board; that is to say, to the surveyors of highways in the several parishes as they existed before the Act was passed; but this remained to them, namely, that, as from the 25th March 1883, they were to make up and state their accounts as between themselves and the parishes, to adjust all the various and respective interests of the several parishes, to prepare their accounts and distribute the money and property to each of the parishes in proportion to the rights of the several parishes respectively, and also to prepare and complete their accounts and to present them to be audited in the regular way. That was their duty. The effect of that, in my judgment, is, that this board, from the 25th March 1883, ceased to be the highway authority, and ceased to have the management and control of the highways, or any responsibility in themselves with respect to them, but that, for the purpose of winding-up their affairs, stating their accounts, and collecting the moneys due to them, as a corporation representing twenty-five parishes incorporated in their name, for all these purposes they still continue to exist; and it is not necessary to give any illustrations showing how that must be the case. It is, absolutely impracticable and improbable for any other result to follow. The consequence of that is that there is an order made by the justices against the appellants, the Shorthorn Dairy Company, that they should pay to the Billericay Highway Board a sum of money to recompense them for the expense which they, the board, had already incurred in making good injuries caused to the highways within their districts by the "extraordinary traffic," which the Shorthorn Dairy Company had brought upon the said highways. Now, when that order was made there is no doubt at all that there was a debt created by it from the Shorthorn Dairy Company to the Billericay Highway Board, which it was not merely the right but the absolute duty of the board to collect and bring in, as soon as they possibly could, and preparatory to bringing that debt in, to so prepare and state their accounts for the audit as to give credit to the several parishes interested in the matter for the moneys to be so received; and so to shape their accounts between parish and parish that each parish really interested in it should have the benefit of that sum of money. The company then having entered their appeal at the quarter sessions, it is suggested that, because this board was dissolved for the purpose of managing the highways, therefore not they but some other body, whom it is impossible to discover, ought to have come in and taken up the appeal; and it was said that the surveyors of the highways should have done it. I do not even understand how that can be expressed in intelligible language. What surveyors? The surveyors of the two parishes particularly interested? Certainly not. In the first instance this money would have to go into the bank, and form part of the common fund, and be distributed by the board according to the interests of the several parties interested in it. If it could be said that the overseer of any particular parish could come in, this consequence would follow, that if that parish was actually in arrears with its rates, or there were rates still in the hands of the overseers of that parish not yet handed over to the board, and the overseers were to come in and intercept that money in the hands of the Shorthorn Dairy Company, they would leave the board in this position, that the board would have to prepare their account upon the footing of showing probably that the parish would be entitled to a contribution out of that money from them, whereas, in truth, by the interception of the money by the overseers the state of the account would be altogether altered. That is quite enough to show how such a contention would work out in practice. It cannot possibly, as it seems to me, be said that this board has ceased to exist for all purposes whatsoever; certainly for the purpose I have just referred to they have not so ceased, and therefore, in my opinion, the Court of Quarter Sessions were in error when they accepted and acted upon this objection. It seems to me that the decision of Lord Campbell, C.J. in the case of Reg. v. Brown (ubi sup.) is an authority for the proposition that where, as is the case here, the magistrates came to an erroneous decision upon a preliminary objection and, deciding so erroneously upon that preliminary objection, refuse to go into the merits of the case, that is not hearing and determining the case at all, but is simply refusing upon a wrong ground to exercise jurisdiction. On all these grounds, therefore, I am of opinion that this mandamus ought to issue to the justices that they should proceed to hear and determine the appeal.

SMITH, J.—I also am of opinion that this mandamus should go to the quarter sessions to hear this appeal. There are one or two facts, though it seems to me that there are very few which are pertinent, that I wish to notice in this case, and they are these: On the 22nd Feb. 1883 the petty sessions made an order upon the Shorthorn Dairy Company that they should pay to the board the sum of 322l. 8s. for damage done to certain highways by their "extraordinary traffic," by means of which certain roads in the Billericay highway district had been cut up and injured, and in repairing which damage that sum of money had been expended by the highway board under the 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77 for the common use and benefit of the district. The justices at petty sessions determined and adjudged that the dairy company were liable to pay to the highway board that sum of money. On the 1st March 1883 the company appealed against that order, making the highway board respondents in the first place, as they were bound to do. On the 25th March 1883 the district was dissolved pursuant to sect. 39 of the General Highway Act of 1862. On the 4th April 1883, upon the appeal coming on to be heard at the quarter sessions, the appellants the company took the point that, inasmuch as the district had been dissolved under sect. 39 of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, there was no person in existence, body corporate or otherwise,

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF ESSEX.

[Q.B. Div.]

to act as respondent in that appeal. The justices held the objection taken by the appellants to be a good one, and refused to entertain the appeal upon the merits, dismissed the order of the justices in petty sessions, and gave judgment for the appellant company. In that state of things the highway board came to this court and asked for a mandamus to the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal, upon the grounds that the justices had not heard and determined it, and that they were wrong in point of law in holding that there was no person really respondent in the appeal. Now, I think that the highway board were right on both points, and I will take the last point first. It has been strenuously urged by Mr. Philbrick and Mr. Bennett, on behalf of the dairy company, that the effect of sect. 39 is to obliterate from the face of the earth this corporate body as a highway board. In my opinion that section has no such effect. When we look at the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, we find first that under sects. 5 and 6 the highway board is formed. I am not going into the details as to how the district is formed, but there are in sects. 5 and 6 a set of provisions indicating how and in what way that is accomplished; in other words, how parishes are to be grouped together and constituted a district. Then, turning to sect. 9, which provides who is to be the governing body of that district, as contradistinguished from the district itself, we find there a set of provisions as to who are to be such governing body, viz., the highway board, which board is to be a corporate body by the fact of its having perpetual succession and a common seal. We have, therefore, by sect. 5 a district, quod district, formed, and by sect. 9 we have a governing body, quod governing body, formed and made corporate with a common seal. Then sect. 11 provides how and in what way, after the formation of the district and the board, the property which was the property of the parishes before they were made a district becomes, upon the district being made, the property of and vested in the highway board, and if it never should become necessary to abolish a district these two sections would point out how and in what way, after the passing of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, and the parishes having been united into a district, the affairs of the district are to be carried on as regards highways after that date. But it seems to have been thought by the Legislature that it might be desirable, in certain cases, that a district should be dissolved, and then we come to sect. 39. Now what does that say? As it seems to me, sect. 39 does nothing more than say that in certain cases a highway district may be dissolved, and then it goes on to say, "where any highway district is dissolved the provisions of the principal Act" (that is the Highway Act 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50) "in relation to the election of surveyors, and to all other matters, shall apply to the said highways in the same manner as if such highways had never been included within the limits of a highway district." I read that as meaning that, after a district has been duly dissolved, then the surveyors, quod surveyors, who are appointed by the individual parishes after the district has come to an end, are to take up the maintenance of the repairs and so on of the highways, exactly in the same way as before the passing of the Act of 1862, and before the twenty-five parishes as in this case were made into a district at all. Then comes this question, What is to become of the corporation? It is said that sect. 39 dissolves the corporation which had been brought into existence by sect. 9. It has been pointed out very forcibly by Mr. Poland what a ridiculous result would be brought about if that was really the intention of the Legislature and the true construction of the statute. First of all, the corporation, quod corporation, may have a judgment for money owing to them; who then would get that? The surveyor could not sue upon such a judgment. The surveyor is the old surveyor, and the old surveyor could not sue upon such a judgment in any shape or way. Then it may be that debts are owing to the corporation on contracts. How is a stranger to sue on such a contract as that? He cannot sue a party owing money on contract, for a person owing money on contract is in no shape or way under any liability to a stranger. Then again, debts may be owing to the corporation, as there are in this case, and there may be debts to be called in by the corporation, as is the case at present, and there is in the present case also a sum of about 1400*l.* in hand, which has to be distributed to the different recipients of that fund. It is urged on the one side that the result of the dissolution is to put an end to the corporation ipso facto, and to let loose all the judgment debtors and the persons who owe money on contract, and to bring the corporation to an end as from that date. That certainly seems to me to be a monstrous and ridiculous result, and one that I should not consider the statute to mean unless it were expressed in perfectly clear and unmistakable words that such was its meaning. But does the Act mean it? On the contrary, on looking into this statute it seems to me that it never intended such a result at all. There are no words in the Act to dissolve the corporation as has been suggested; there are only words which allow the dissolution of the district; and it seems to me that, for the purpose of winding-up their affairs, for the purpose of getting in their debts, and for the purpose of distributing the moneys they may have in hand, the Billericay Highway Board as a corporation still exists, and as such are the proper respondents in this appeal, which was lodged on the 1st March 1883. The only other point raised, and which this court has now to determine, is, whether or not the justices have in fact heard and determined this appeal. Now, after hearing and referring to the cases which have been cited before us upon that point, and particularly the cases of Reg. v. The Justices of Middlesex (ubi sup.) and Rex v. The Justices of Gloucestershire (ubi sup.). I am clearly of opinion that there has been no real hearing of the case at all. There has been nothing but a determination of the justices upon a preliminary matter, but no hearing upon the merits; and therefore, in my judgment, this mandamus should go directing the justices to enter continuances and hear the appeal.

Rule absolute for a mandamus.

Solicitor for the Billericay Highway Board,
W. W. Brown, agent for O. O. Lewis, Brentwood.

Solicitors for the Shorthorn Dairy Company,
Beaumont and Warren.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. on the complaint of T. D. SIBLY v. WHITE AND OTHERS.

[Q.B. Div.]

June 13, 14, and 21, 1883.

(Before WATKIN WILLIAMS and A. L. SMITH, JJ.)

REG. on the complaint of T. D. SIBLY v. WHITE AND OTHERS. (a)

Poor rate—Overseers of parish in a union—Bill in Parliament casting burden on poor rate—Overseers opposing Bill by authority of the vestry—Charging costs of opposition on the rates—Auditor's certificate allowing same in union accounts—Certiorari—Right and power of overseers to oppose Bill and charge costs on poor rate—Status and duties of overseers.

1. The overseers of a parish in a union are not entitled and have no power to oppose the passing of a Bill in Parliament, and charge the costs of such opposition upon the poor rate, notwithstanding that the Bill proposed to charge, under certain circumstances, the poor rates of the parish with payment of interest on stock to be thereby created, and that they were authorised, by a vestry meeting of the ratepayers, to oppose the Bill, and to take such steps and incur such expense in opposing it as they might think necessary.

2. Overseers are not trustees for the poor, but statutable officers whose duties are to keep the parish books, make up proper accounts, collect the required rates, and hand over the proceeds to the proper persons. They have not the ordinary governing or directing of relief to the poor, nor anything whatever to do with maintaining the ability of the parish to pay the required rate.

So held by the Queen's Bench Division (Watkin Williams and A. L. Smith, JJ.), making absolute a rule for a certiorari to remove into that division the district auditor's certificate and allowance, in the union accounts, of the costs incurred by the overseers of a parish in a union, in opposing a Bill in Parliament which proposed to cast a pecuniary burden on the poor rates of the parish.

Bright v. North (2 Phil. Ch. Rep. 216; 16 L. J. 255, Ch.) and The Attorney-General v. The Mayor, &c., of Brecon (40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 52; 10 Ch. Div. 204; 48 L. J. 153, Ch.) discussed and distinguished.

A RULE nisi was obtained on the 30th April last, at the instance of Thomas Dix Sibly, a ratepayer of the parish of St. George, in the Barton Regis Union, in the county of Gloucester, calling upon George Symonds White, auditor of the Gloucestershire Audit District, to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue, directed to him to remove into the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice the certificate of allowance made by him (together with his reasons or grounds for the same), bearing date on or about the 10th Dec. 1882, of the sum of 327l. 14s. 8d. in the accounts of the Barton Regis Union, for expenses incurred by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of St. George, in the said union, in opposing in Parliament a Bill called "The Bristol Port and Docks Commission Bill."

The facts of the case are as follows:—In the session of 1882 a Bill entitled "The Bristol Port and Dock Commission Bill" was presented to Parliament, by which Bill power was sought to constitute a commission for the purpose of acquiring and working the docks at Bristol, and for the purpose of the Bill to raise, if necessary, moneys out of the poor rates of the city and county of Bristol and certain parishes adjoining, of which the parish of St. George was one.

Upon its becoming known what powers the Bill sought to obtain, the overseers of the said parish of St. George called a meeting of the vestry of the parish, which meeting passed a resolution that the Bill should be opposed, and authorising the overseers to oppose the Bill in Parliament, and to take steps and incur such expenses in opposing it as they should think necessary.

The churchwardens and overseers of the said parish thereupon proceeded to oppose the Bill, and forthwith presented a petition against it, and upon the Bill coming before a committee of the House of Lords they were heard by counsel in opposition to the Bill, which was ultimately rejected by the Lords' committee. In opposing the Bill the said churchwardens and overseers incurred costs and expenses amounting, as allowed on taxation, to the sum of 327l. 14s. 8d., which sum was paid by them out of moneys in their hands arising out of the poor rates of the parish of St. George, and was charged by them in their parish accounts as follows:

September.—By cash for expenses incurred in opposing in Parliament the Bristol Port and Docks Commission Bill, the promoters of which sought for power to charge on the poor rate of this parish (with certain other parishes) any deficiency that might arise in carrying out their undertaking (the Bill was thrown out by the Lords Committee); amount as allowed on taxation, 327l. 14s. 8d.

On the audit of the accounts of the said union, on the 19th Dec. 1882, the said T. D. Sibly attended the audit meeting, and on his own behalf, as a ratepayer, and as solicitor on behalf of certain other large ratepayers of the parish, objected, under the provisions of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 35, to the allowance of the said sum as not being a lawful charge upon the poor rates, and as one that ought not to have been made by the overseers or to be allowed by the auditor.

The auditor, however, allowed the sum, and made his certificate for it, giving the following written reasons for so doing:

I have allowed the sum of 327l. 14s. 8d., being the amount of a duly taxed bill of Mr. J. W. S. Dix, the solicitor employed by the parish of St. George for opposing in Parliament a Bill entitled the Bristol Port and Docks Commission Bill; because, as it was proposed by the said Bill to take power to charge the poor rate of the parish, and to impose other or additional rates on property within the parish, which in the opinion of the parish officers would injuriously affect the value of property therein, it was their duty, as trustees, to oppose such Bill; and that they were justified, having acted on the opinion of solicitor and counsel, in applying the funds in their possession (raised by rates) in opposing such Bill, which was thrown out by the Lords' Committee. Witness my hand this 31st Jan. 1883.

(Signed) G. S. WHITE, District Auditor.

The auditor having, on the requirement of the said T. D. Sibly, so stated in writing his reasons for allowing the aforesaid sum, the rule nisi for a certiorari was moved for and obtained as above mentioned at the instance of the complainant, the said T. D. Sibly, and now came on to be argued, when the following counsel appeared, and showed cause against the rule on behalf of the several different parties as follows:

H. D. Greene for G. S. White, the district auditor.

Charles, Q.C. and Pitt Lewis for the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of St. George. They cited in support of their arguments

(a) Reported by HENRY L. KICH, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. on the complaint of T. D. SIBLY v. WHITE AND OTHERS.

[Q.B. Div.]

- Reg. v. The Commissioners of Sewers for the Tower Hamlets, 1 B. & Ad. 232; 9 L. J. 30, M. C.; Attorney-General v. Compton, 1 Yo. & Col. C. C. 417; Attorney-General v. Mayor, &c., of Brecon, 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 52; 10 Ch. Div. 204; 48 L. J. 153, Ch.; Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Wigan, Kay, 288; 23 L. J. 429, Ch.; De G. M. & G. 52; Bright v. North, 2 Ph. 216; s. c. nom. Brighton v. North, 16 L. J. 255, Ch.; Reg. v. The Mayor, &c., of Sheffield, L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 663; 40 L. J. 247, Q. B.; 43 Eliz. c. 2, sect. 1; 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, sect. 54.

Petheram, Q.C. and W. F. Barry for the guardians of the Barton Regis Union.

A. Wills, Q.C. and Glen, for the complainant Sibly, supported the rule for a certiorari, and cited

- Reg. v. The Mayor of Sheffield (ubi sup.)*;
Reg. v. Stewart and another, 12 A. & E. 772;
Gouldsworth v. Knight and others, 11 M. & W. 337;
 12 L. J. N. S. 282, Ex.

The scope and substance of the arguments urged on either side sufficiently appear in the judgment of the court.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 21.—The written judgment of the Court (Williams and A. L. Smith, JJ.) was now delivered as follows by

A. L. SMITH, J.—In this case a rule nisi for a writ of certiorari was obtained on behalf of Thomas Dix Sibly, a ratepayer of the parish of St. George in the Barton Regis Union, in the county of Gloucester, to remove into this court the certificate of allowance made on the 19th Dec. 1882 by Mr. George Symonds White, the auditor of the Gloucestershire Audit District, whereby he allowed the sum of 327l. 14s. 8d., being the amount of a duly taxed bill of costs of the solicitor employed by the overseers of the said parish of St. George for opposing in Parliament, in the session of 1882, a Bill entitled the Bristol Port and Docks Commission Bill. The material facts are as follows: On the 18th Dec. 1881 the Bill in question was deposited; on the 30th Dec. 1881 notice for convening a vestry meeting of the said parish of St. George was given by the churchwardens and overseers thereof, and pursuant thereto, on the 10th Jan. 1882, a vestry meeting was held, at which it was resolved that the Bill should be opposed, and that the overseers should take such steps and incur such expense as they might think necessary. The overseers thereupon did oppose the Bill in Parliament, and obtained its rejection, and incurred therein the costs amounting to 328l. 14s. 8d. The said Bill, amongst other provisions, contained the following clause: 76. (1.) If the commission (meaning thereby the companies incorporated by the said Bill) at any time find that they cannot have at their immediate disposal, under their borrowing powers or otherwise, funds sufficient to provide for the punctual payment of the whole of the interest on the consolidated stock on the day appointed for payment of the same, they shall, at such time before that day as will enable provision for such punctual payment to be made in manner after mentioned, issue precepts to the corporation and to the Barton Regis guardians and to the Bedminster guardians respectively, requiring each of such bodies to pay within a specified time, to be named in such precepts, the amount therein mentioned as payable by such body. (2.) It shall be the duty of each of such bodies to comply with the requisition of such precept by paying the sums mentioned out of any moneys in their hands or by levying the amount required, in the case of the corporation as part of the borough rate, and in the case of the said guardians as part of the poor rate leviable on the portions of their respective premises comprised in the dock rate area exclusive of the city. (3.) If default is made in payment by any of the said ratepayers of the sums required to be paid by them in pursuance of this section, the amount in default shall be deemed to be a debt due to the commission from the defaulting authority, and to be enforceable at the instance of the commission by mandamus. (4.) The amount payable by each of the said bodies shall be calculated by the commission in proportion to the rateable value of the city and of the portions of the said moneys comprised in the dock rate area, exclusive of the city, according to the valuation list for the time being in force, or, if there is no valuation list, then according to the last rate for the relief of the poor. The reasons given by the auditor for the allowance which he made were as follows: "Because it was proposed by the said Bill to take power to charge the poor rate of the parish and to impose other or additional rates on property within the parish which in the opinion of the parish officers would injuriously affect the value of the property therein, it was their duty, as trustees, to oppose such Bill, and that they were justified, having acted on the opinion of solicitors and counsel, in applying the funds in their possession (raised by rates) in opposing such Bill, which was thrown out by the Lords' Committee." The question now raised before us is, whether this is an expenditure which the overseers were legally entitled to make; or, in other words, whether it is an allowance which could in point of law be made. It was insisted by Mr. Charles, on behalf of the overseers, that the provisions of the Bill cast upon the ratepayers an additional burden, inasmuch as it provided for the taking of more money out of the parish than otherwise would have been the case, and thereby might exhaust the ability of the parish to pay rates; that it affected the poor of the parish, inasmuch as it diminished the rateable capacity of the parish; that it cast an additional duty upon the overseers themselves, viz., that of making an additional levy for the purposes of the Bill, and that thereby "rights, privileges, and duties" of the overseers, within the meaning of the case hereinafter referred to, were directly attacked; that by the statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, the overseers of the poor were to raise, weekly or otherwise, by the taxation of every inhabitant and of every occupier in such competent sum for and towards the necessary relief of the poor, to be gathered by the parish according to the ability of the same; that the overseers, as trustees for the poor, either by reason of the provisions of the statute itself, or if not by the direct authority thereof, at any rate as incident to the powers thereby conferred, were entitled to defend themselves from the proposals made by the Bristol Port and Docks Commission Bill, and to expend moneys derived from the poor rate in opposing the same. If it could be established that the overseers were trustees as suggested, and that "rights, privileges, and duties" similar to those dealt with by the Lord Chancellor

Q.B. Div.]

CHURCHWARDENS OF WEST HAM v. ILES.

[H. OF L.]

in the case of Bright v. North (2 Phill., ubi sup.), and by the late Master of the Rolls in The Attorney-General v. Bracon (ubi sup.), were being attacked, we are of opinion that those cases are authorities for the proposition put forward on behalf of the overseers; and indeed this was not disputed at the bar. We are, however, of opinion that the overseers wholly fail in point of fact. In the first place, there is no trust imposed upon them to maintain the ability of the parish to pay rates, and even if there were, the duty to maintain the ability of the parish to pay rates is wholly dissimilar from the duty which existed in the case of Bright v. North (ubi sup.), viz., to maintain the stability of the banks. Overseers, though a quasi-corporation for some purposes not material to this case (Goldsworthy v. Knight, ubi sup.), are officers annually or, as in this case, triennially appointed; their duty is to keep the parish books, to make up proper accounts, to collect the required rates, and to hand over the proceeds to the proper persons. They have not even the ordering, governing, or directing of relief to the poor; that appertains to the guardians (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 75, s. 54). They (the overseers) have nothing whatever to do with maintaining the ability of the parish to pay the required rate. An overseer is (as stated by Lord Denman, O.J. in the case of Reg. v. Stewart, ubi sup.), a statutable officer dealing with a statutable fund, and accountable for its application to statutable purposes. If the contention of the overseers in this case were well founded, they would be entitled to expend the moneys of the poor rate in opposing every local or other scheme which might tend to alter, lessen, or interfere with the rateable value of the parish. As to the suggestion that their own duties may be varied by the Bristol Port and Docks Commission Bill in their having to make an additional levy in that behalf, we are of opinion that such are not within either of the decisions cited. In our judgment, neither by the statute of Elizabeth nor by any powers incident thereto, were the overseers entitled to oppose the Bill in question, and to charge the costs thereof upon the poor rates; that they have no "rights, privileges, or duties," within the meaning of the cases cited; and, inasmuch as it was not contended that any right to property was sought to be attacked, we are of opinion that this rule must be made absolute, with costs against the overseers.

Rule absolute for a certiorari, with costs against the overseers.

Solicitors for the complainant, Sibly, Merediths, Roberts, and Mills, agents for Sibly and Dickinson, Bristol.

Solicitors for G. S. White, the district auditor, Peacock and Goddard, agents for Mullings, Ellett, and Co., Cirencester.

Solicitors for the overseers of St. George's, Warry, Robins, Burges, and Co., agents for J. W. S. Dix, Bristol.

Solicitors for the guardians of the Barton Regis Union, Gregory, Rowcliffe, Rawle, and Johnstone, agents for Benson and Carpenter, Bristol.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, April 24, 1883.

(Before Lords BLACKBURN, BRAMWELL, and FITZGERALD.)

CHURCHWARDENS OF WEST HAM v. ILES. (a)
ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND.

Poor rate—Stat. 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, sect. 19—Owner rated instead of occupier—House let "at a greater rate than 20l."

Where a house is let at a rent "payable at any shorter period than three months," which in the aggregate amounts to more than 20l. a year, the owner cannot be assessed to the poor rate instead of the occupier under stat. 59 Geo. 3. c. 12, sect. 19.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal affirmed.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the majority of the Court of Appeal (Lord Coleridge, O.J., and Brett, L.J., Baggallay L.J. dissenting), which had reversed an order of the Queen's Bench Division.

The case is reported below in 8 Q. B. Div. 69, and 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 149.

The question raised by the appeal was whether the owner of houses let at weekly rents, the sum of which in the course of a year would amount to more than 20l., is liable to be assessed to the poor rate under sect. 19 of Sturges Bourne's Act (59 Geo. 3, c. 12.) instead of the actual occupiers.

The section applies to "houses, apartments, or dwellings, . . . let . . . at any rate or rent not exceeding 20l. nor less than 6l. by the year, for any less term than one year, or on any agreement by which the rent shall be reserved or made payable at any shorter period than three months."

The respondent, who was the owner of house property let at weekly rents, had been assessed under a resolution passed by the vestry of West Ham under this section.

The Queen's Bench Division held that the assessment was properly made, but this decision was reversed by the Court of Appeal as above mentioned. The churchwardens and overseers then appealed to the House of Lords.

F. M. White, Q.C. and Mugliston appeared for the appellants. Their arguments appear sufficiently from the judgment of their Lordships.

No counsel appeared for the respondent. At the conclusion of the argument for the appellants their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

LORD BLACKBURN.—My Lords: In this case the whole question turns upon the construction of sect. 19 of 59 Geo. 3, c. 12. I quite agree with the argument which has been addressed to your Lordships, that in construing an Act of Parliament, where the intention of the Legislature is declared by the preamble, we are to give effect to that preamble to this extent, namely, that it shows us what the Legislature is intending; and if the words of enactment have a meaning which does not go beyond that preamble, or may come up to the preamble, in either case we prefer that meaning to one showing an intention of the Legislature which would not answer the purposes of the preamble or would go beyond them. To that extent only is the preamble material. The preamble of the section in question states that the payment of rates is evaded by houses being "let out in lodgings," in which case I may observe that those who framed the preamble did not understand the law as it is perfectly settled now. A man who lets out houses in lodgings, and is the occupier, is himself liable, and the lodgers are not. The preamble proceeds to say, "or in separate apartments"—in which case the occupier of the separate apartments is rated—"or for short terms, or let to tenants who quit their residences or become insolvent before the rates charged on them can be collected." That is the evil which is pointed at, and then the section enacts a remedy for it: "That it shall be lawful for the inhabitants of any parish to resolve and direct that the owner or owners of all houses, apartments, or dwellings in such parishes, being the immediate lessor or lessors of the actual occupier or occupiers, which shall respectively be let to the occupiers thereof" (for the moment I will leave out the next line and a half) "for any less term than one year, or on any agreement by which the rent shall be reserved or made payable at any shorter period than three months, shall be assessed to the rates for the relief of the poor instead of the actual occupiers." Now, stopping there (I have left out the limitations as to value altogether), there are two things. As it seems to my mind, where there has been a letting to the occupier of a tenement for any less term than one year, the lessor may be rated instead of the occupier, or where there has been a letting to the occupier, and by the terms of the agreement the rent has been made payable at any shorter period than three months, the lessor may be rated instead of the occupier. So far I think there can be no doubt about the matter. But it is very improbable that the Legislature would have passed any such enactment without some limit of value; and accordingly there are here the words "at any rent or rate not exceeding 20*l.* nor less than 6*l.* by the year." Those words are put in immediately after the words "let to the occupiers thereof," and the first question is upon the natural and grammatical construction of the words. Should they apply to a letting for any less term than one year or on an agreement by which the rent shall be reserved or made payable at any shorter period than three months? I think that the plain and natural meaning of the words is that they shall extend to both cases, the value must govern both classes. Now, it is said—and that is the only argument which to my mind seemed to amount to an argument in favour of the other side—that the effect of that construction would be to baffle the preamble, and that it would be necessary for the purposes of the preamble for us to say that whenever there are short terms of letting, not by taking in lodgers, but by the letting of an actual room, for a sum which exceeds 7*s.* 8*d.* a week (so says the argument), the Legislature are baffled in their object, which was to prevent the rates being evaded. But that I cannot see at all. I think that for that purpose it is possible enough that if their attention had been called to it they might have put some limitation; but to say that in order that they might not be baffled of their purpose, which was in respect to the letting of small lodgings at a small rent, the enactment shall apply, without stint or restriction of any sort, to a house which is let, as a house may well be let, to a person who is not inclined to take it for a long time, but is willing to pay at the rate of thousands a year for it, provided always that the rent is reserved or made payable monthly—to say that that is necessary in order to carry out the preamble is not, I think, in accordance with the rules of construction, and is not such a construction as it would be prudent to adopt. Then the words which I have read are followed by what has been called a proviso. When the inhabitants have come to this resolution or declaration, they "may rescind, renew, vary, and amend every such resolution and direction." Then come the words, "so as no such resolution or direction shall extend to assess or charge the owners of any house, apartments, or dwelling which shall with the outhouses and curtilages thereof be let at a greater rent than 20*l.* or less than 6*l.* as aforesaid." If it were not for those two words "as aforesaid" there could not have been any possible doubt, I think, that this provision extends not merely, as was argued, to the rescinding, renewing, varying, and amending, but to the original resolution and direction, the first resolution and direction as well as those subsequently made. The houses, apartments, or dwellings, are not to be "at a greater rent than 20*l.*, nor less than 6*l.*" The words "as aforesaid," it is argued, show that this is intended to apply only to a letting for a period of less than a year. I must say that that is straining the words. I have come to the conclusion, therefore, that the decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal was the right one, and consequently I move that that judgment should be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

(a) Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord BRAMWELL.—My Lords: I am of the same opinion. The question is how these words are to be read. Mr. White proposes to read them as though the words beginning with "or on any agreement" were not connected with the immediately preceding words, which occupy about two lines, but were connected with the words ending at "occupiers thereof," so that he would read them as though after the words "one year or" there was the word "let." Now, if that were so, he would be in the right; if not, if what comes after the words "one year" is a part of the sentence which begins at "any rent or rate," then he is not right. I am of opinion that he is not right. I think that—I will not say the grammatical construction, because either construction is in my judgment grammatical, but—the ordinary and obvious construction is that which is unfavourable to him, and makes it necessary that, although the premises are let under an agreement by which the rent assessed is made payable at a shorter period than three months, still the rent shall not be more than 20*l.* to enable this Act to be acted upon. I think that is the ordinary construction of the sentence as it now stands; and it is confirmed, to my mind, by what has been called the proviso, which shows that those who were drawing the Act of Parliament thought that they were dealing with a case in which they had provided that the rent should not exceed 20*l.* Nor am I very much struck by the argument about the preamble. I dare say mischief may result from the law being as we state it to be; I do not, however, see but that the preamble is complied with upon either construction. There is this at least to be said, that if premises were let for three months at 7*l.*, clearly that case would not be within the Act; and that being so, I do not think that we ought to suppose that the Legislature intended that if they were let for two months, whatever the value was, this Act should apply. I am of opinion, therefore, that the judgment should be affirmed.

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE.

[CT. OF APP.]

Lord FITZGERALD concurred.

Judgment appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellants, G. A. Sedgwick.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

Monday, July 16, 1883.

(Before BRETT, M.R., COTTON and BOWEN, L.JJ.)

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE. (a)

Public-house—Licence to sell excisable liquors—

Occupier about to quit premises—Neglect to apply for licence—Expiration of licence—New tenant or occupier—Licence to—Jurisdiction of justices to grant—9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 14.

By sect. 14 of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, "if any person duly licensed under this Act shall (before the expiration of such licence) die, or if any person so licensed . . . shall remove or yield up the possession of the house specified in such licence; or if the occupier of any such house, being about to quit the same, shall have wilfully omitted or shall have neglected to apply at the general annual licensing meeting, or at any adjournment thereof, for a licence to continue to sell excisable liquors by retail . . . it shall be lawful for the justices . . . at a special session . . . to grant to the heirs," &c., "or to any new tenant or occupier of any house having so become unoccupied . . . a licence to sell excisable liquors by retail . . . provided always, that every such licence shall continue in force only from the day on which it shall be granted until the 5th day of April or the 10th day of October then next ensuing, as the case may be."

At the general annual licensing meeting in 1881, a public-house in Liverpool was, and had been for years, duly licensed for the sale of liquors, the licence terminating on the 10th Oct. 1881. S. became tenant and transferee of the licences in Jan. 1881. In June 1881 S. gave up possession to W., who relet to B., who then took possession. No licensed person was in possession from that time, S. having successfully opposed an application by B. for a transfer. Afterwards, in August, when the general licensing meeting was held, B. was still occupier; but about that time she left the premises in consequence of an epidemic. She never returned, and no one applied at the general meeting for a renewal of the licence, which consequently expired on the 10th Oct. 1881. On the 21st Sept. the mortgagees of the house discovered that the house was empty, and that the licence had expired, and took possession. On the 5th Jan. 1882 D. became possessed of the premises, and applied to the justices at special sessions for a licence.

Held (reversing the decision of the Queen's Bench Division), that the justices had jurisdiction to grant the licence, notwithstanding the former licence had expired, B. being, at the time of the annual licensing meeting, a person who could have applied for a renewal of the licence, and "an occupier . . . about to quit" who had "neglected to apply" at such meeting "for a licence to continue to sell excisable liquors."

Ex parte Todd (47 L. J. 89, M. O.; 3 Q. B. Div. 407) and White v. Justices of Coquetdale (44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 716; 7 Q. B. Div. 238) overruled.

This was an appeal from a decision of a divisional court of the Queen's Bench Division, on a case stated by the justices at the quarter sessions held by adjournment at Liverpool on the 18th April 1882, on an appeal by Alexander Hill Davies from a refusal of Edward Lawrence and others, justices of the peace of the City of Liverpool, to grant him a licence to sell excisable liquors at the Prince of Wales Hotel, Highfield-street, Liverpool. The justices at quarter sessions granted the licence subject to the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division on the case stated.

CASE.

1. The premises, 39, Highfield-street, Liverpool, known as the Prince of Wales Hotel, had been for many years before, and were at the time of the general annual licensing meeting in 1881, licensed premises.

2. No notice of any objection to the renewal of the licences attached to the said premises was given before or at any time during the said annual licensing meeting.

3. One Atkin Smith Street became tenant of the said licensed premises to one Robertson in Jan. 1881, and the licences were transferred from Robert Williams, the licensed person in occupation of the said premises, to the said Atkin Smith Street, at a special session held on the 6th Jan. 1881.

4. While Street was tenant, Robertson's mortgagees gave notice to Street to pay the rent to them; and in the month of June 1881 the said Atkin Smith Street gave up possession of and removed from the said premises under some arrangement with a person named Wood, who subsequently relet the premises to a Mrs. Barker, a widow, who thereupon entered into possession.

5. The said house was not open for the sale of excisable liquors, nor were such liquors sold in the same, nor was any licensed person in the occupation thereof, after the month of June 1881.

6. Mrs. Barker applied at a special sessions held some time before the general annual licensing meeting in 1881, for a transfer of the licences from Street to herself; but, by reason of an opposition to her application made by Street on the ground that the arrangement under which he had given up possession had not been carried out, the transfer was not granted.

7. At the time of the general annual licensing meeting, Mrs. Barker was the occupier of the said house and premises, but at or about the time of the general annual licensing meeting, scarlet fever broke out in the house among Mrs. Barker's children, and they were removed from the premises by the officers of the health committee of the city, and Mrs. Barker left the premises at the same time, and never returned. After Mrs. Barker quitted them the premises were disinfected by the health officers and closed, and they remained closed and unoccupied until the mortgagees took possession.

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE.

[CT. OF APP.]

8. Mrs. Barker did not apply at the general annual licensing meeting, or at any adjournment thereof, for a renewal of the licence to the said premises, and no application for a renewal of the said licences was then made by anyone, and the said licences expired on the 10th Oct. 1881 by effluxion of time.

9. The mortgagees had no notice until the 21st Sept., after the termination of the general annual licensing meeting in 1881, that Mrs. Barker had left the premises, that the premises were closed, or that there had been an omission to apply at the general annual licensing meeting for a renewal of the licences to the said premises. Upon the mortgagees becoming aware of these facts they at once took possession.

10. A special session for the transfer of licences was held on the 13th Oct. 1881, but no application was then made for a grant of a licence to the said premises under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 14. but on the 24th Nov. 1881, at a special sessions then holden, an application was made by Robert Wren, under the said section of the said Act, for a grant of a licence to himself in respect of the said premises. The justices refused the said application.

11. The appellant, on the 5th Jan. 1882, became possessed of the premises under an arrangement with the mortgagees for the purchase of the freeholds thereof, and on the said 5th Jan. 1882 applied at the transfer sessions to the respondent justices to grant to him a licence in respect of the said premises in pursuance of the provisions of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 14.

12. The respondent justices refused the application on the ground that they had no jurisdiction to grant it.

The question for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division was whether, upon the above facts, the respondent justices, or the quarter sessions on appeal from their refusal, had jurisdiction to grant the appellant the licence applied for.

On the 3rd April 1883 Denman, Field, and Hawkins, JJ. quashed the order of the quarter sessions with costs.

Davies appealed.

The Solicitor-General (Sir F. Herschell, Q.C.) and H. Bremner for the appellant.—The question arises on the construction of sect. 14 of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61. (a) 'The justices at special sessions, and the

(a) And be it further enacted, that if any person duly licensed under this Act shall (before the expiration of such licence) die, or shall be, by sickness or other infirmity, rendered incapable of keeping an inn, or shall become bankrupt, or shall take the benefit of any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors, or if any person so licensed, or the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of any person so licensed, shall remove from or yield up the possession of the house specified in such licence; or if the occupier of any such house, being about to quit the same, shall have wilfully omitted, or shall have neglected to apply, at the general annual licensing meeting, or at any adjournment thereof, for a licence to continue to sell excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk and consumed in such house; or if any house, being kept as an inn by any person duly licensed as aforesaid, shall be or be about to be pulled down or occupied under the provisions of any Act for the improvement of the highways, or for any other public purpose; or shall be, by fire, tempest, or other unforeseen and unavoidable calamity, rendered unfit for the reception of travellers, and for the other legal purposes of an inn; it shall be lawful for the justices assembled as aforesaid at a special session, holden under the authority of this Act, for the division or place in which the house so kept or having

Divisional Court decided that there was no jurisdiction; but it is submitted that there is. Mrs. Barker was the occupier of the house, she was about to quit the same, and she neglected to apply for a licence. The court below, however, held that there was no power to grant a licence where the previous licence granted had actually expired at the date of the application. That decision was based on certain cases which are all distinguishable, though certain dicta in them, which we say cannot be supported, are in favour of the view taken by the court below. The effect of the decision, if it stands, will be to entirely destroy the benefit intended to be conferred by the section. The licence expires on the 10th Oct., and it is not till after the adjourned licensing meeting in September that a person can be said to have neglected to apply for a licence. Between the date of the adjourned meeting and the 10th Oct. no special sessions was held at which an application for a licence could have been entertained. There is nothing in the section to limit the jurisdiction to cases where application is made before the 10th Oct; and such a limited construction involves an absurdity, for a licence can only be granted, in respect of a house elsewhere than in London or Middlesex, till the 10th Oct. next, and if it were granted after the adjourned meeting it would expire in a few days. Moreover, such a licence would be altogether unnecessary, for the old licence would still be running till the 10th Oct. The present appellant comes within the word "new tenant or occupier," and is therefore the right person to apply for a licence. When a duly licensed occupier who had applied unsuccessfully for a licence at the adjourned meeting in Sept., and whose licence consequently expired on the 10th Oct., remained in occupation till the 13th Oct. and then gave up possession to another person, it was held that there was no jurisdiction to grant the new occupier a licence:

Simpkin v. Justices of Birmingham, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 620; L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 482.

That case was decided, however, on the ground that the outgoing tenant, not having quitted till after the expiration of his licence, did not come within that part of sect. 14 which enables a new licence to be granted, "If any person so licensed shall remove from or yield up possession of the been kept shall be situate, in any one of the above-mentioned cases, and in such cases only, to grant to the heirs, executors, or administrators of the person so dying, or to the assigns of such person becoming incapable of keeping an inn, or to the assignee or assignees of such bankrupt or insolvent, or to any new tenant or occupier of any house having so become unoccupied, or to any person to whom such heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns shall by sale or otherwise have bond fide conveyed or otherwise made over his or their interest in the occupation and keeping of such house, a licence to sell excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed in such house, or the premises thereunto belonging; or to grant to the person whose house shall as aforesaid have been or shall be about to be pulled down or occupied for the improvement of the highways, or for any other public purpose, or have become unfit for the reception of travellers, or for the other legal purposes of an inn, and who shall open and keep as an inn some other fit and convenient house, a licence to sell excisable liquors by retail, to be drunk or consumed therein: provided always, that every such licence shall continue in force only from the day on which it shall be granted until the fifth day of April, or the tenth day of October then next ensuing, as the case may be: (9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 14.)

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE.

[CT. OF APP.]

house." In a subsequent case the person duly licensed gave up possession to B. in August, but in the same month a transfer of the licence to B. was refused on the ground of his previous misconduct. In September B. was succeeded in his tenancy by G., who was succeeded in November (after the expiration of the licence) by T.; and it was held that, as the previous licence had expired, there was no jurisdiction to grant a new one to T.:

Ex parte Todd, 47 L. J. 89, M. C.; 3 Q. B. Div. 407.

In that case Mellor and Manisty, JJ. differed as to whether any new tenant could apply, or whether it must be the tenant immediately succeeding the licensee, the "new tenant" within the section. The case really only decides that there was no "duly licensed" tenant removing from the house. [BRETT, M.R.—Rightly or wrongly the court gave an interpretation to the section. BOWEN, L.J.—Is there any difference in principle as to the construction to be put on that part of the section which commences with the words, "if any person duly licensed," and the part which begins "or if any person so licensed?"] Yes, for the second part applies to persons removing, or wilfully omitting or neglecting to apply for a licence, and if the view of the court below were right, a licensed person might spite his landlord by omitting to apply for a new licence in August or at the adjourned meeting in September. The licence now asked for can only be granted at a special sessions, and we are told that it is the invariable practice not to appoint such special sessions between the date of the adjourned meeting and the 10th Oct. The licence would thus be lost till August in the next year. It must also be remembered that a tenant who is about to quit has no motive in applying for a new licence. [BRETT, M.R.—Suppose a person were about to quit after the date of the adjourned meeting.] In that case as no one but the occupier can apply, if he neglected to do so, no new licence could be granted till the following August, if the decision below is correct. Where the licensed person died on the 27th Sept. and an application at the adjourned meeting on the 2nd Oct by the lessees for a fresh licence was refused on the ground that they were not in occupation of or about to occupy the premises, and in November (after the licence had expired) the assignee of the licensee's heir gave notice that he would apply for a new licence at a special sessions in December, it was held that there was no jurisdiction to entertain the application:

White v. Justices of Coquetdale, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 715; 7 Q. B. Div. 238.

That case also turned on the words of the first part of the section. It has been suggested that Mrs. Barker could not have applied for a licence; but she was the occupier, though no transfer of licence was made to her, and no one else could have applied at the annual licensing meeting in August. Street had ceased to occupy, and could not therefore apply. The justices at sessions found as a fact that Mrs. Barker was an occupier.

Aspinall, Q.C. and Pickford for the respondents.—The justices only followed the authorities cited, which were binding on them. The point raised by the appellant's counsel is, however, not the only point. The section says the licence may be granted "if the occupier of any such house, being about to quit the same," shall have neglected to apply for a licence "to continue to sell." No person as occupier neglected to apply. Street had gone before either of the licensing meetings, and Mrs. Barker, although she occupied, was not an occupier who could omit to do the act which it is suggested she omitted to do—i.e., to apply for a licence to continue to sell—because she never had been entitled to sell, but had only been in bare occupation of the premises. All she could have done would have been to apply for a new or original licence. This part of the section only applies where there is an omission by a previously licensed tenant, which Mrs. Barker never was. In other words, a licence to continue to sell means a renewed licence—not a new licence to a person who has never before sold in that house. If a new licence could be applied for after the previous licence had expired, some limit of time within which application could be made would probably be found in the Act. Five cases are dealt with by the section, viz., death, sickness, bankruptcy, removal, and neglect or omission to apply for a licence; and the words "so licensed" apply both to renewal and neglect.

The Solicitor-General in reply.—Mrs. Barker could have obtained a licence to continue to sell if she had obtained a licence for a year from the 10th Oct.; that would have been, not a new licence, but a renewal of a licence. By sect. 74 of 35 & 36 Vict. c. 94, a new licence is defined to be "a licence granted at a general annual licensing meeting in respect of premises not theretofore licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors;" and "the renewal of a licence" means a licence granted at a general annual licensing meeting by way of renewal." A licence to continue to sell means a renewal of a licence.

BRETT, M.R.—In this case it seems to me that Mrs. Barker, on the facts stated, was a person who could have made a claim for a renewal of the licence. According to the definition which has been read to us by the Solicitor-General, if she had obtained a licence at all, it would not have been a new licence, but a renewal of a licence for the premises. Then, that being so, at the time of the general annual licensing meeting, Mrs. Barker was the occupier of the house and premises, and Mrs. Barker, from unhappy circumstances in her family, it is obvious at that time was a person who was about to quit the premises. Mrs. Barker, at the time of the general annual licensing meeting being a person in the occupation of the premises, was, it seems to me, entitled to ask at that time for what is called in the case, "a renewal of the licence of the said premises." If so, she did not apply in fact for the renewal. Then, after the 10th Oct., and after, therefore, the licence which had been granted for these premises had expired, the applicant (the appellant here) applies to the magistrates to exercise the jurisdiction given to them under the 15 section of the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, and the question is, whether they had jurisdiction. The question is not whether they were obliged to do it; because by the case it is stated that, if they had jurisdiction, they saw no objection to do it, and were prepared to do it, and it is taken that, if they had jurisdiction, they were prepared to grant to this applicant a new licence for the premises. Now, if Mrs. Barker was a person who, if she had obtained a licence at all, would have obtained a renewed licence, then it seems to me she is a person, in so far as she was an occupier, who was an "occupier about to quit the same," who did neglect to apply, that is, in other words, did not apply, "at the general annual licensing meeting . . . for a licence to continue to sell excisable liquors to be drunk or consumed in such house;" that is, I construe the words "licence to continue to sell excisable liquors" to be equivalent to "renewal of a licence." It does not mean that the person who is to ask for a licence shall continue, but that a licence shall be granted which shall allow liquors to continue to be sold and drunk on the same premises. If that be so, Mrs. Barker was a person who might have applied for a renewal, who was in occupation at the time when she might have so applied, and who did not do so. Then, had the magistrates jurisdiction under these circumstances when the appellant applied to them? The case having been brought within the preliminary part of sect. 14, the whole question is whether an efflux of time has happened which prevented the magistrates from having jurisdiction. In Ex parte Todd it was certainly held, and the meaning of the judgment was, that there does come a time when, by efflux of time, the magistrates have no jurisdiction, and that is at any time after the licence which has been in existence has become exhausted. The case of White v. The Justices of Osgestdale obviously was decided in obedience to the case of Ex parte Todd, and the question is clearly raised before us, therefore, whether we agree with Ex parte Todd. This case seems to me to be exactly governed by the principles there laid down, and by the construction of the Act there enunciated, and, unless we can say that we do not agree with the construction of the section put upon it in Ex parte Todd, we are bound to decide this case against the appellant. But I confess that I do not agree with the construction of this section put upon it in Ex parte Todd. It is admitted there are no words which specifically put this limitation of time on the power of the justices; therefore, we ought not to say that there is this limitation, unless there is a necessary implication that the words of restriction are satisfied in the section. So far from that, it seems to me that, by putting a restriction upon the section which was put upon it in Ex parte Todd, you immediately raise the most formidable case of difficulty that can be, which has been pointed out during the discussion, namely, that where persons in possession of licences, and in the occupation of premises, who can apply for a renewal, or persons not in possession of the premises, but who can apply for a renewal, omit or neglect to apply for the renewal in August and September, and where the occupation of the premises is to continue over October, no other person can apply for the renewal if that person does not. The person who is called a new tenant, who is coming in in November or at any time after the 10th Oct. cannot apply, and the licence is exhausted on the 10th Oct.; and, if the construction put upon the section in Ex parte Todd be true, there is no one who can remedy the matter, and the premises must remain without a licence until the following 10th Oct. That would be a casus omissus of such a formidable kind in the section that one would have to say, instead of saying there is a necessary implication in the restriction of time, that it was almost a necessary implication that the restriction of time was not there. I think that that view of the section was overlooked in Ex parte Todd. I do not think that the case of Ex parte Todd is strengthened by the case of White v. The Justices of Osgestdale, because the judges in that case did not exercise their minds upon the section, but only followed the former decision, as they were bound to do. I think that the magistrates, in this case, were bound also to act upon Ex parte Todd, but that, the case having now been discussed before us, we are at liberty to say that we disagree with that case. It seems to me that case was within the section, and that there is no limitation of time which deprived the justices of their jurisdiction, and that they therefore have jurisdiction to grant this appellant a licence, and, if that be so, and by the case we are to take it they intended to do so, we hold that they are entitled to do so, and that Mrs. Barker was a person entitled to have the licence renewed. With regard to the case of Simpkin v. The Justices of Birmingham, I do not think we need interfere in the least with that case, because the real decision there was not upon anything as to the limitation of time, but that the circumstances were not any of the circumstances mentioned in the section, and therefore the application of the section in that case did not arise.

COTTON, L.J.—There are two points which have to be considered; first, whether the event has occurred which enables the magistrates to act under the 14th section, and then, whether in the latter part of the section there is any limit as to time after which the magistrates cannot exercise the jurisdiction in the events which have occurred. Brett, M.R. has said almost all I intended to say upon Simpkin v. The Justices of Birmingham. That was a case upon facts—the question being whether the facts or circumstances had occurred giving the magistrates jurisdiction. That was under the first part of the section, and it certainly is no authority in any way in the present case, for all it decided was that, in the event which had there occurred, where the tenant had removed who had the licence, but did not remove until after his licence had expired, he was not a person so licensed removing, because it was held, as a question of construction, that a person removing within the subdivision of that part of the section, must be licensed at the time that he removed. The question simply was whether the event had occurred which gave the magistrates jurisdiction. In one construction that would be right, and probably it was; but what we have to consider is, whether there is any limit as to time as to when the magistrates are to exercise their discretion. I will refer to the event which has here happened. I do not for a moment say that the removal of the licensed tenant, Street, during the existence of the licence would not be an event which might be relied upon here; but the event which has been relied upon is the neglect of Mrs. Barker to apply for a renewal, and I think that neglect is an event which has occurred which could justify the present applicant in applying to the justices. Of course it is another question whether the time allowed within which they could exercise the jurisdiction has expired. I agree that Mrs. Barker was in a position to apply for a licence to sell excisable liquors, that is, really to continue to use the house as a house where liquors might be sold; and, when one looks at the notice given with reference to the transfer of the licence, it is, with reference to a transfer to so-and-so, and is intended to apply to the licence to sell at the old house. The house is not considered as being removed; that continues, and there is a new licence granted to the person who is to sell, but it is not itself a new licence, but only continuing the old house—the new person continues in the old house. I think here the words may probably be referred, not to the person licensed going on, but to the person not licensed applying for, and getting a licence to go on in the old house. Therefore I think Mrs. Barker was entitled to apply to continue the sale of excisable liquors in the old house, and, as she neglected to do that, an event occurred which justified an application to the magistrates. Then, as regards the limit, have the justices jurisdiction at a special sessions held after the previous licence has expired? In my opinion there is nothing to limit their powers. All that is said is this, that, if the event happens, "it shall be lawful for the justices, assembled as aforesaid at a special session, to grant a licence." There is no limit whatever there, and, as pointed out by Brett, M.R., it is very difficult to say, if the occupant does neglect to apply for a renewal in August, or at the adjournment which must be in September, how there can be an application under the section before the expiration of the licence, which must expire in October. I say "must" expire in October. I mean it must in that particular part of the country. In some places it must expire in April, and in others in October. This is in October, and the general annual licensing and the adjourned meeting must be one in August, and the other in September. Therefore it seems to me that it would be impossible practically to work the section, as regards the neglecting of the occupier to apply for the licence to continue, if the application under this section must of necessity be made at a special sessions existing, called, and held during the continuance of the licence. Under the Act of Parliament there need not be more than four special sessions in the year, and it is obvious that it might very well be that there could be no special sessions to which the application could be made, after the neglect of the occupier to apply in September. That being so, I think the construction we ought to give to these words, which is really the natural construction, is not to limit the time in which the jurisdiction ought to be exercised. Undoubtedly that is at variance with Ex parte Todd, but we are in a position to say whether that case was rightly decided. In my opinion, it was wrong to put it on the ground that the jurisdiction of the magistrate could not be exercised after the licence had expired.

BOWEN, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. There are two questions which we have to decide. First, whether Mrs. Barker is a person who falls within the description given in the 14th section, of a person who wilfully omits or neglects to apply for a licence to continue to sell. With regard to that point, my opinion is certainly the same as that of Brett, M.R. and Cotton, L.J., although I do not feel so clear as they do about it. But I should like to add a few words about the second point, which is, Assuming she is a person who falls within the description, is this application made too late? That depends upon whether Ex parte Todd is good law or not. Distinguish Ex parte Todd as we may, and justify it as we may endeavour to do, as a decision upon the special facts of that case, it still remains clear that the court in Ex parte Todd laid it down in distinct language, and with their minds clearly brought to the discussion of the question, that the application under section 14 must be during the pendency and currency of the period during which the old licence is in force. Now, is that good law? With the greatest respect for the court which decided it, I confess I cannot think that it is good law, and there is an almost conclusive point which arises against it, which is this: It is reading into the section words which limit the prima facie operation of the section, and make it do something different and smaller than it does in terms. Now, if any such limitation is to be put upon the Act, one certainly would not expect to find, and one would not readily acquiesce in, any limitation which made the remedy given by the Act otherwise than commensurate with the blot or mischief which the Act was intended to cure. In this case we have to deal with the licensing system. It hangs upon two kinds of licensing sessions. First, there is the general licensing sessions to which applications are made to renew for one year, to begin on the 10th Oct. then next; and besides that, as changes must occur in the tenure of these houses, special sessions are wanted to provide during the year for special changes which occur in the occupation of the tenancy. It is obvious that provision must be made for contingencies such as death, changes of occupancy, bankruptcy, and other similar contingencies; and sect. 14 is intended to deal with these, and the branch of that section under which the case falls, is the branch which provides that, "If the occupier of any such house, being about to quit the same, shall have wilfully omitted, or shall have neglected to apply at the general annual licensing meeting," then the beneficial portion of the section is to take effect. Now, what would be the protection which the landlord would gain, or the benefit which the occupier would obtain, if he did apply at the general annual licensing meeting? The landlord would gain the protection, and the occupant would gain the benefit, of the licence then to run from the 10th Oct. then next for a year. If we were to construe the section as the court in Ex parte Todd construed it, the provision which the section made for an accidental omission to apply for the licence at the general annual licensing meeting would not be commensurate with the protection and benefit which would have been obtained if the application had been duly made. That is to say, you would not be really curing the slip or blunder completely, but only curing it to a very limited, and almost perhaps imperceptible, degree; because, as has been pointed out, it must be rare indeed that an occupier of a house has omitted to apply to the general annual licensing meeting; it must be rare indeed, if the next occupier has no opportunity of applying, during the pendency or currency of the licence, for a fresh grant, and therefore the remedy would not be co-extensive with the mischief if those words were to be read into the Act of Parliament. It seems to me upon the general principle of construction to be a very good reason for not construing the Act in that way. You may perhaps do violence to an Act of Parliament in order to cure a mischief; but you certainly ought not to do violence to the language, or to read it in an unnatural sense, when the effect of so reading it would be to leave the mischief uncured, or to a certain extent uncured.

[Ct. of App.]

HUNNINGS v. WILLIAMSON.

[Ct. of App.]

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Gregory, Rowcliffes, and Co., for Bremner, Son, and Pennington, Liverpool.

Solicitor for the respondents, Atkinson, Town Clerk of Liverpool.

Wednesday, April 25, 1883.

(Before BRETT, M.R., and BOWEN, L.J.)

HUNNINGS v. WILLIAMSON. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Metropolis Management Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 54, 60—Vestry—Person interested in contract—Ceasing to be member—Action for penalties—Evidence of acting as member.

By the Metropolis Management Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 54, if a member of a vestry is concerned or interested in any contract made with the vestry, he ceases to be a member, and is liable to penalties.

Defendant lent money to a person who had made a contract with a vestry, and the benefit of the contract was assigned to defendant as security for the loan. Afterwards defendant was elected a member of the vestry.

In an action for penalties for acting after having ceased to be a member, the attendance-book, signed by defendant, and the minute-book containing his name, were produced at the trial, and the jury found for the plaintiff.

Held (refusing a rule for a new trial), that sect. 54 applied to a contract made before defendant became a member of the vestry, that defendant was interested in the contract within the meaning of the section; and that there was evidence of his having acted as a member of the vestry.

THIS was an action brought by one March Hunnings against William Thomas Williamson, to recover certain penalties which the plaintiff alleged the defendant had incurred under the 54th section of the Metropolis Local Management Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), by reason of having acted as a member of the vestry of the parish of St. Mary, Islington, after having ceased to be such member by being interested in a certain contract made with the vestry.

By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 54 :

In case any member of any vestry for any parish mentioned in schedule (A) or (B) to this Act in any manner be concerned or interested in any contract or work made with or executed for such vestry, in every case such person shall cease to be such member as aforesaid; and any person who acts as a member of such vestry after ceasing to be such member as aforesaid shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty of fifty pounds, which may be recovered by any person who may sue for the same in any of the superior courts of law, with full costs of suit.

By sect. 60 :

Entries of all proceedings of any such vestry, with the names of the members who attend each meeting, shall be made in the books to be provided and kept for that purpose under the direction of the vestry, and shall be signed by the members present or any two of them; and all entries purporting to be so signed shall be received as evidence, without proof of any meeting of the vestry having been duly convened or held, or of the presence at any such meeting of the persons named in any such entry as being present thereat, or of such persons being members of the vestry, or of the signature of any person by whom any such entry purports to be signed, all which matters shall be presumed until the contrary be proved.

(a) Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The case is reported on the questions of discovery and interrogatories, 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 392 and 581.

At the trial before Pollock, B., it was proved that in March 1882 the defendant's brother entered into a contract to do certain work for the vestry, and, being in want of money to enable him to carry out the contract, borrowed from the defendant, and assigned the benefit of the contract to the defendant by way of security for the loan. It was further proved that in May 1882 the defendant was elected a member of the vestry. The attendance-book of the members, and the minute-book of the vestry were produced. The attendance-book was signed on five occasions by the defendant as a member attending the meetings of the vestry. The minute-book contained the names of those members who had signed the attendance-book, and was duly signed as required by sect. 60, but was not signed by the defendant. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for five penalties, amounting to 250l.

The Queen's Bench Division refused a rule for a new trial.

Talfourd Salter, Q.C. now moved by way of appeal from such refusal.—There was no evidence of liability on the part of the defendant, and the case ought not to have been left to the jury. In the first place, the defendant never ceased to be a member of the vestry within the meaning of sect. 54; that section can only have been intended to apply to cases of contracts entered into after the member has been elected. Secondly, there was no evidence to go to the jury that the defendant acted as a member of the vestry. Thirdly, the defendant was not "concerned or interested in" the contract within the meaning of the statute. He referred to Fletcher v. Hudson, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 125; 7 Q. B. Div. 611.

BRETT, M.R.—In this case an action was brought under sect. 54 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120) on the ground that the defendant, being interested in a contract with a vestry, acted as a member of the vestry, and thereby became liable to penalties. The first objection put forward on behalf of the defendant is, that sect. 54 has no application to the case. It is contended that the section only applies to cases where the member is interested in a contract made after his election, and not where, as here, the contract was made before he became a member of the vestry. But if we look at the words of the section, they are, "such person shall cease to be such member." There is no limitation, nor any provision that the section shall apply only to future contracts, nor are there any express terms prohibiting the electors from electing a person who is interested in a contract with the vestry. There is nothing to show that the votes given for such a person are thrown away. It follows that if any person is elected a member of a

[CT. OF APP.]

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF ESSEX.

[CT. OF APP.]

vestry, and at or after the time of his election he is interested in a contract made with that vestry, he ceases to be a member, and there must be another election. Where a person already interested in a contract is elected, he ceases to be a member the moment after his election. I think, therefore, that the present case comes within the statute, and the objection which has been taken cannot prevail. The defendant, being interested in a contract with the vestry, ceased to be a member of the vestry within the meaning of sect. 54; but, after he had so ceased to be a member, he nevertheless acted as a member, and by so acting became liable to penalties. The next objection taken was that there was no evidence that the defendant acted as a member of the vestry. The attendance-book, which was kept by the vestry for the purpose of showing what members attended the meetings, was produced at the trial, when it appeared that this book was signed by the defendant. This was evidence that the defendant attended the meetings, and I am inclined to think that the attendance-book was in itself evidence that he acted as a member of the vestry. But the minute-book of the vestry was also produced; this was not signed by the defendant, but it was properly admitted for the purpose of showing that the transactions mentioned in it actually took place; for by sect. 60 of the same Act the entries purporting to be signed by any two of the members present "shall be received as evidence, without proof . . . of the presence at any such meeting of the persons named in any such entry as being present thereat, or of such persons being members of the board or vestry, . . . all which matters shall be presumed until the contrary be proved." I think the two books taken together are evidence of what was done at the meetings, and are also evidence that the defendant acted as a member of the vestry. Then it was further objected that there was no evidence that the defendant was "concerned or interested in any contract" made with the vestry, within the meaning of sect. 54. It was urged that, as he only lent the money to his brother to enable him to carry on the contract, and took an assignment of the benefit of the contract as security for the repayment of the loan, but was not himself a party to the contract, he could not be said to be "concerned or interested in" it; but surely he was interested in the contract, for it was his interest to promote its fulfilment in order that he might obtain payment of the money he had lent. For these reasons I think the defendant is liable, and a rule ought not to be granted.

BOWEN, L.J. concurred.

*Rule refused.*Solicitors for the defendant, Olapham and Fitch.

Wednesday, July 4, 1883.

(Before BRETT, M.R. and FRY, L.J.)

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF ESSEX. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Highway district—Highway board—Dissolution of district—Continuance of board—Order obtained by board—Appeal against such order—Hearing of appeal after dissolution of district—25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, ss. 9, 39—41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 23.

(a) Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A highway district was dissolved under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 39, by an order of justices, which was to take effect on the 25th March 1883.

The highway board took proceedings under 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 22, to recover certain expenses caused by extraordinary traffic, and in Feb. 1883 an order for payment of such expenses was made.

On the 1st March notice of appeal against this order was given, but the appeal came on for hearing on the 4th April, when, objection being taken that the highway board had ceased to exist, and therefore could not be heard as respondents, the justices at quarter sessions refused to hear them, and quashed the order.

Held, making absolute an order for a mandamus to the justices to hear and determine the appeal, that, notwithstanding the dissolution of the highway district, the highway board still existed, and were the proper respondents.

Order of Williams and Smith, J.J. affirmed.

THIS was an appeal of the Shorthorn Dairy Company Limited from an order of Williams and Smith, J.J. making absolute a rule for a mandamus to the justices of the county of Essex, directing them to hear and determine an appeal against an order which had been made under the Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 3, for payment by the Shorthorn Dairy Company to the Billericay Highway Board of a sum of money for extraordinary expenses incurred in repairing highways.

The facts of the case, and the provisions of the statutes on which the decision turned, are fully stated in the report of the case in the court below, 49 L. T. Rep. N. S. 177.

The appeal was argued by Philbrick, Q.C. and H. Curtis Bennett for the appellants, the Shorthorn Dairy Company; and by Poland (Wells with him), for the respondents, the Billericay Highway Board.

The arguments were similar to those used in the Divisional Court.

BRETT, M.R.—In this case an order for payment of extraordinary expenses incurred in repairing a highway was obtained by the Billericay Highway Board, who are declared by the Act of Parliament (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61), s. 9, to be a corporation, against the Shorthorn Dairy Company, the present appellants. There was an appeal to quarter sessions against that order, and it is not denied that when the appeal was entered the highway board were the proper respondents; but before the hearing of the appeal something happened which altered the state of affairs—an order for dissolving the highway district came into operation. On behalf of the appellants the effect of this is alleged to be that the highway board is dissolved, and, as the highway board were respondents in the appeal to quarter sessions, therefore, at the time when that appeal came on for hearing there were no respondents in existence, and the appellants were entitled to judgment. On the other side it is said that the highway board is not dissolved but still exists, and was the right respondent when the appeal to quarter sessions came on for hearing. If the respondent board was dissolved and gone they could not be heard as between the appellants and respondents. Whether in that case the appellants would be entitled to judgment I doubt; for if the highway board is dissolved, there must be some successor to them somewhere in existence, and I should say that the Court of Quarter Sessions should adjourn the hearing of the appeal until such successor could come in, and, therefore, that there ought not to be judgment for the appellants in such a case. But if they are not dissolved, the highway board were the right respondents, and the decision of the magistrates cannot be supported. The real question is, whether the highway board was dissolved on the 25th March, and that must depend on the proper interpretation of the Act of Parliament (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61). The board is constituted by sect. 9, which makes them a body corporate. Then was there anything in the order which came into force on the 25th March to take away their corporate life? It is said that sect. 39 shows that the board was dissolved; but that section speaks of highway district, not highway board, and does not say in terms that the board is to be dissolved. Sect. 39 goes on to show the consequence of dissolving the highway district, for in the last clause of the section it is provided that in such cases "the highways in such district . . . shall be maintained, and the provisions of the principal Act (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), in relation to the election of surveyors and to all other matters, shall apply to the said highways in the same manner as if such highways had never been included within the limits of a highway district." Therefore, the consequence of the dissolution of the district is to throw back matters into the same state as if the district had never existed. If, therefore, the board, as a body corporate, existed only for the purpose of managing the highways, it is dissolved; but it has other powers; amongst others, there is power to make contracts, which may result in debts, to sue and to defend actions, and to make rates in order to pay the costs of actions and for other purposes. This cannot be called the management of highways, and therefore it is not true to say that the highway board is only brought into existence as a body corporate for the purpose of managing the highways. Therefore it seems to me that only one set of powers and duties is transferred from the highway board. How, then, is it necessary to imply that the board is dissolved? I cannot see that it is. I come to the conclusion, to which I understand Mr. Philbrick assents, that, unless there is a necessary implication that the board is dissolved, the appellants must fail, and I think that there is no such necessary implication, and therefore that the board exists for the purpose of being respondents in this appeal. How far they may still exist for any other purposes I do not say. The result is that the appeal will be dismissed.

FRY, L.J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. The Act of 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 61) incorporates the highway board, and gives it power to hold property and to enter into contracts and incur debts and other powers. Then sect. 39 provides for the dissolution of highway districts, but that section does not expressly deal with highway boards, and is silent as to their successors if they are dissolved as corporations. Therefore, it is plain that the only way in which we can come to the conclusion that the board is dissolved is if we are bound to hold that there is a reasonable implication that this is the case. The balance of convenience is in favour of the view that the board should continue to exist, for if not in whom is the property of the board vested? It is said that the property is vested in the surveyors of the several parishes which were comprised in the dissolved highway district in proportion to the amount of the payments made by the several parishes to the common fund. But there is this difficulty, that the payments to the common fund vary from time to time, and, moreover, difficult questions might arise before it would be possible to know what were the amounts of the several undivided shares. Take the case of a chattel that was in the possession of the highway board at the time of its dissolution; it is said that it would belong to the surveyors of the parishes in undivided shares; but how inconvenient that would be. Take the case of the horses, carts, spades, &c. belonging to the board, and supposing they were stolen or misappropriated in any other way, what a difficulty would arise as to prosecuting or suing. If the board is still in existence this difficulty does not arise; so also in the case of debts owing by or to the board. It is suggested that there is an absurdity in the board continuing to exist for ever when there is no duty for them to perform, but it seems to me there is no difficulty as to this, for by the latter part of sect. 39 they have no duty as to the management of the roads, and that being so, they must eventually come to an end from having nothing to do. That is the view I take of the construction of the statute, and it is enough to say that Mr. Philbrick has not convinced me that the result is so unreasonable that there is a necessary implication that the board is dissolved.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitor for the Billericay Highway Board,
W. W. Brown, for C. O. Lewis, Brentwood.
Solicitors for the Shcrthorn Dairy Company,
Beaumont and Warren.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Thursday, July 26, 1883.

(Before KAY, J.)

GARD v. COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS. (a)

Metropolis Improvement Acts — Powers of Commissioners of Sewers to take land for improvements—Owner's right of pre-emption—Clause of particular statute conferring right of pre-emption not impliedly repealed by subsequent general statute—57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. ss. 80, 96—14 & 15 Vict. c. xci. s. 54.

The Commissioners of Sewers are not entitled, under 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. s. 80, to adjudge the whole of a house to be "necessary" to be taken for the widening of a street, and to take it in pursuance of such adjudication—when in fact only a portion of the house physically obstructs such widening—with the object of reselling the remainder of the house at an increased price, and so enabling a scheme for widening the street to be carried out, the "necessity" contemplated by the Act being a purely physical necessity. The right of pre-emption given by sect. 96 of the same Act to the persons from whom lands have been purchased under the powers of the Act is not taken away by 14 & 15 Vict. c. xci. s. 54.

(a) Reported by J. G. ALEXANDER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Thomas v. Daw (15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 200; L. Rep. 2 Ch. App. 1) and Galloway v. Mayor and Commonalty of London (14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 865; L. Rep. 1 E. & I. App. 34) distinguished.

THIS was a motion for an interim injunction to restrain the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London from proceeding under a notice to treat, dated the 9th Feb. 1883, served by them upon the plaintiffs for the purchase of certain premises, Nos. 44 and 45, Wood-street, in the City of London, and from taking any proceedings to assess the amount of compensation to be paid in respect of such premises; or, in the alternative, that the defendants might be restrained from selling or disposing of any part of the premises to any person or persons until the same should have been first offered for sale to the plaintiffs. By consent, the motion was treated as the trial of the action.

It appeared that the houses referred to in the motion formed part of the block of buildings burnt down by the Wood-street fire towards the end of 1882, and only the carcass was now standing. After the fire the Commissioners of Sewers determined to take the opportunity, before the re-erection of the buildings, of widening and improving Wood-street and Addle-street, the former by 5ft. 6in., and the latter (at the corner of which one of the houses stood) by 3ft. Negotiations for the amicable purchase of the property having fallen through, a notice was served on the plaintiffs to have the value assessed by a jury. The Commissioners of Sewers had made an adjudication in the form required by the Act 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. s. 80, that the whole of the premises in question were required for the purpose of widening the street; but only a width of 5ft. 6in. was required for the physical widening of Wood-street, and the commissioners proposed to resell the remainder without giving the first offer of it to the plaintiffs.

The following are the material sections of the two Acts which were referred to in the course of the argument:

It is enacted by 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. s. 80, that for the improvement of the streets and public places of that part of the metropolis which is situated within the weekly bills of mortality, it shall "be lawful for the Commissioners of Sewers or trustees or other persons having the control of the pavement of any parochial or other district . . . to widen . . . any of the streets or other public places within any such parochial or other district . . . and that if any houses, walls, buildings, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, or any part thereof, shall be adjudged by the said commissioners or trustees or other persons as aforesaid to project into, obstruct, or prevent them from so . . . widening . . . the said street or other public places within the said parochial or other district, and that the possession, occupation, and purchase of such houses, walls, buildings, lands, tenements, or hereditaments will be necessary for that purpose," the commissioners, &c., may contract with the owners of such houses, &c., and pay them such sums as may be agreed upon.

By sect. 82 of the same Act, it is provided that when the owners of such houses, &c., refuse or are unable to treat, a precept may be issued for impanelling a jury to assess the value of the premises; and by sect. 86 the premises are to vest in the commissioners, &c., on payment of the sums awarded.

By sect. 96 it is enacted that the commissioners, &c., may absolutely sell and dispose of all or any of the lands, &c. conveyed to them in pursuance of the Act, and a right of pre-emption is given to the persons from whom they were purchased.

By 14 & 15 Vict. c. xci. s. 54 it is made lawful for the Commissioners of Sewers "to sell and dispose of, in such manner as they may think fit, to any persons; and by indenture under the hands and seals of seven of the commissioners to grant and convey by way of absolute sale in fee simple for a consideration of money, any lands which have been or may be purchased by the commissioners for the purpose of altering, widening . . . or opening any of the streets or public places within the City, and which, by the commissioners, may be deemed unnecessary for the purposes aforesaid," no right of pre-emption being reserved to previous or adjoining owners.

By sect. 55 the commissioners are "authorised, by writing under the hands and seals of seven of the commissioners, to demise or lease such lands as shall be deemed unnecessary for the purposes aforesaid for the purpose of building upon or for any other purpose," as the commissioners may think fit, subject to a proviso that within five years from the date of such lease the commissioners shall sell and absolutely dispose of the lands comprised in it in manner thereinbefore directed.

Rigby, Q.O. and Theobald for the plaintiffs.—Under sect. 92 of the Lands Clauses Act the party called on to sell part of a house to the commissioners would have the right of compelling them to take the whole, but they would have no right to demand to take the whole; and although this is a proceeding under an earlier Act to which the Lands Clauses Act does not apply, there is a strong presumption that the intention of the Legislature would be the same. It would be an unreasonable construction to put upon sect. 80 to hold that it allows the commissioners to take the whole of the houses, when all that they really require is a strip of land 5ft. 6in. in width. [KAY, J.—Is it not the true construction of the section that the adjudication made by the commissioners is conclusive, so that the court cannot go behind it, if it has been made bona fide? Sect. 95 provides for their disposing of lands which turn out to be superfluous.] We submit that that is not the fair meaning of the section; the section is not grammatically correct, and need not be read in that way. [Hastings, Q.O. for the defendants, referred to Thomas v. Daw (15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 200; L. Rep. 2 Ch. App. 1.) KAY, J.—That case entirely confirms the reading of the section which I had already adopted, and shows that I cannot inquire into the correctness of the adjudication. Hastings, Q.O. said that the commissioners were desirous of having the opinion of the court as to whether they were right in making the adjudication, and he was therefore instructed to admit that only 5ft. 6in. in width was necessary for the physical widening of the street.] We say that it is a misuse of the powers conferred by the Act to take the whole of a house, when only a small part of it is required. [KAY, J.—May not the words “any part thereof” be read distributively, so as to apply only to “houses” to which they are appropriate, and not to the general words which follow?] That can hardly be so, as those words come after the general words. Substantially, the defendants do not say that they want the whole; they only say that they want to obtain control over the whole in order to carry out their scheme. [KAY, J.—Does “necessary” mean “necessary to widen the street,” or “necessary to cover their own expenses?”] We say “necessary for widening the street,” all the provisions of the Act point to a physical necessity; otherwise “convenient,” or “expedient,” or some such word would be used. [Hastings referred to the word “convenient,” used in the following section. KAY, J.—That is “necessary and convenient,” not “necessary or convenient.”] This case differs materially from Quinton v. Corporation of Bristol (30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 112; L. Rep. 17 Eq. 524) and Galloway's case (14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 865; L. Rep. 1 E. & I. App. 34.) The Act in those cases contained schedules defining the limits within which the lands were to be taken, and liberal powers of management; these are general provisions applicable throughout the metropolitan area, and there are no powers for raising capital to pay the expenses such as were there given. [KAY, J.—Still the Commissioners of Sewers come within the equity of those decisions in so far as they are not a trading body, and merely represent the public interest.]

Hastings, Q.C. and J. Henderson for the Commissioners of Sewers.—We contend that as the Commissioners of Sewers are authorised by the 80th section to take a house or any part thereof, if they require part of the house they can take the whole. It is a preliminary condition to the exercise of the power that some part should be wanted, but if that condition is fulfilled the whole can be taken. If the argument on the other side is valid, the section conferring the power of sale of superfluous lands would be superfluous, as no more land could be taken than was physically necessary. The purpose here is just as much a beneficial public purpose as in Galloway's case, and the same considerations apply to it. [KAY, J.—How does your argument apply to a case of land without buildings? If you wanted a corner of a piece of vacant land belonging to one proprietor in order to widen a street, do you say that you could take the whole? There might be an acre or more.] We only contend that in the case of houses we can take the whole. Thomas v. Daw (ubi sup.) is in our favour. The reason why there is no schedule in this Act is that the commissioners are empowered to adjudicate: the Legislature has placed confidence in their judgment, and if they honestly adjudicate these houses to be necessary, the court cannot go behind that adjudication. This adjudication is perfectly honest, because it is necessary to take the whole of the houses in order to raise money by their sale, and so to obtain means for the improvement of the street. Secondly, as to the claim of pre-emption under sect. 96. We rely, as an answer to that claim, on sect. 54 of the City of London Sewers Act 1854 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 91), which was an Act continuing and amending the previous Act of 1848 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 112), and is substituted for and must therefore be taken to have repealed sect. 96 of the Act of Geo. 3. The later section gives no further power to the commissioners than they had before under sect. 96 of the earlier Act; it must, therefore, have been meant to be substituted for it, and it does not contain any provision as to a right of pre-emption. [KAY, J.—It is now well settled, that a general enactment of a later Act cannot repeal a specific enactment in an earlier Act merely by implication. His Lordship referred to Thorpe v. Adams, 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 810; L. Rep. 6 C. P. 125; Hill v. Hill, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 860; 1 Ex Div. 411.]

Rigby in reply.—The commissioners are not acting as a judicial body in making the adjudication. Similar powers are given to other trustees and bodies by the Act. On the second point, the later general enactment cannot repeal the earlier special enactment.

KAY, J.—The question which I have to determine in this case is by no means free from difficulty. The defendants, the Commissioners of Sewers, admit that at the time when they made their adjudication they did not intend to use more than 5ft. 6in. in width of the site of these houses next to the street for the actual widening, but they intended to sell the rest for the purpose of raising money. That being their intention, they adjudged that certain houses, Nos. 44 and 45, Wood-street, and the land whereon they stood projected into, obstructed, and prevented them from altering, widening, and extending the street in question, and they adjudged in form that the possession, occupation, and purchase of such houses and of the land whereon they stood was necessary for that purpose—that purpose being the widening of the street. It has been decided in the case of Thomas v. Daw (ubi sup.) that the section under which the notice was given enables the commissioners to take either the whole or part of a house, and with that construction I entirely agree; and Lord Chelmsford, after stating his opinion to that effect, says as follows: “But although I have arrived at this conclusion, I think that in every case of an intended widening or altering of a street, it is competent to the commissioners to adjudge that the whole of a house or building obstructs or prevents this object. If this is honestly done, although erroneously, I think it cannot be questioned. The only consequence of the commissioners taking more than they require for the street would be that, under the 96th section, they would have to sell it subject to a right of pre-emption in the person from whom the house or building was purchased. But whether they intend to take the whole, or only a part, it is essential as a preliminary step that the commissioners should adjudge that the house, or the part required, prevents them from altering or widening the street.” I take Lord Chelmsford's meaning to be this: the commissioners must adjudge, first, that the whole of the house projects into, obstructs, or prevents them from altering, widening, or extending the street, or that part of it projects, &c.; and, secondly, that the possession, occupation, and purchase of the whole house will be necessary for that purpose, or that the possession, &c., of part of it will be necessary. The form of the adjudication here clearly refers to the whole of the house. The commissioners do not use the word “whole,” but they say that the house projects, &c., and that the house is necessary to be taken, so that the form of the adjudication fulfils the obligation thrown upon them, according to the words of Lord Chelmsford. The 80th section of the Act provides as follows: [His Lordship read them, and proceeded:] The word "that" in the beginning of the last clause seems to me to refer—though it is certainly ill-expressed—to the word "adjudge," and that seems to be the view of Lord Chelmsford. And I read the word "part" all through the sentence, so that in this case there are two things to be adjudged, viz., first, that the whole or part of the house projects, &c., and, secondly, that the purchase of the whole or part of the house will be necessary for that purpose. Does then the section mean that the commissioners are to make a mere formal adjudication following the exact words of the Act, although they may, as is admitted to be the case here, have in fact come to the conclusion that only a part of the house is required for the physical widening of the street, or is the meaning this: that if in fact only part of the house obstructs the street, or if in fact only part of the house is necessary to be taken for the purpose of widening the street, they must bona fide come to a conclusion upon and determine that question? Can they, as it has been argued they may do, say this: "We come most clearly to the conclusion that we only want 5ft. 6in. for the physical widening of the street, and that only 5ft. 6in. obstruct such physical widening; but, although we have that plainly in our minds, we arbitrarily, under this section, adjudicate that the whole obstructs our widening the street, and we take the whole in order to widen it." I confess I should have great hesitation in coming to the conclusion that that was the construction of the Act. But the argument, which is deserving of the greatest possible consideration, has been put in this way: It is said that these commissioners are not a trading body, armed with these powers for the purpose of making profit, but they are a body who are, like the Corporation of London in the well-known case of Galloway v. The Mayor and Commonalty of London (ubi sup.), armed with their powers for the purpose of making public improvements in a great city; and part of the scheme of the Act is that, in carrying out its provisions, they will sometimes take more land than they want for actually carrying out the physical purpose of widening streets. It is argued that therefore the court will give a wide interpretation to their powers, and not interfere with them, although it may appear they are taking more land than they want for the actual widening, intending to sell the portion which they do not want in order to raise money to carry out the scheme of the Act; and in the argument reference was made to sect. 96, and the subsequent sections which give to the original owners a right of pre-emption in the event of the commissioners selling any land which they may have taken, and may ultimately not want, and providing that the money obtained by such sales may be used for the purposes of the Act. In that way it is said that the case comes within the decision in Galloway v. Corporation of London. First of all, I observe that there is a very wide distinction between that case and the present one, because in that case the lands which were to be taken are all put in a schedule to the Act, and actually defined by boundaries and quantities, and the words of the Act were that they might take all the lands, which not only showed the extent to which they might go, but placed a limit, within the four corners of the Act, on the land which they were to take. There is nothing of that kind in the present case. There is no schedule here, nor any limitation whatever as to the lands to be taken, save such as is comprised in the words I have read, and that makes an enormous distinction between the two cases. Suppose the commissioners were to take it into their heads to widen one of the widest thoroughfares in London, such as Oxford-street or the Strand, and say that they would take the lands on both sides of the street. If the argument which I am now considering be right, they might adjudge that every house and every vacant piece of land on both sides of the street obstructed their widening of the street, and proceed to take the whole of such house or piece of land, however great its extent. Or, to put an extravagant case, suppose the street which they were about to widen passed a large building like the Bank of England, they might take the whole of the Bank of England. Or again, suppose there was a wide vacant piece of land, a quarter of an acre in extent, then, although they only wanted a yard of that, according to the argument they might take the whole. That gives an enormously greater power to these "commissioners, or trustees, or other persons" than was given in Galloway's case to the Corporation of London. Then there is another distinction between the two cases, which to my mind is of still greater importance. In Galloway's case there were very large powers of raising money for the purposes of the Acts, and upon the whole consideration of the words of the Acts, their Lordships came to the conclusion that it was not intended to limit the power of the corporation. Lord Cranworth, after referring to the sections containing those powers, says "The object of all this is plain. It was anticipated that the projected improvements would be likely so to add to the value of property in the neighbourhood that, by enabling those at whose cost the improvement had been made to appropriate to themselves, at their old value, the houses and lands adjoining the improvements, and then to sell them at their increased value, they might be able wholly or partially to reimburse themselves the outlay they had made." The argument there was, that the powers of the corporation ought to be limited to so much of the land on both sides of the widened street as might be wanted for the purpose of building new houses. But Lord Cranworth said that he did not find in the Act of Parliament any limit of that kind; the only limit he found was in the map and book of reference, which described by boundaries the land which the corporation were to take. The Act said that they might take all, and it was impossible to impose that arbitrary limit. That brings that Act into sharp contrast with this. Here the land which the commissioners may take is the land which they may adjudge necessary, and it seems to me that they were bound to adjudge, not merely by a formal judgment, but by coming really, upon consideration, to a decided opinion and conclusion. Then, were they justified in coming to the conclusion which they came to by their adjudication? I do not treat the question as one of honesty or dishonesty, but I think they were not justified. The argument, which I have listened to with the greatest possible attention, is that the section does not mean only the physical widening, and that it is sufficient if the house obstructs the widening, or is required for the purpose of the widening in this sense, viz., that by selling the larger portion of it the commissioners may make a profit, and apply the money for the purpose of the widening. But I think the meaning of the Act is that the commissioners are not to take more of a house than they bonâ fide adjudge is necessary for the physical purpose of widening the street, and I think the phrase "for that purpose" does not include the taking of other and extra land beyond what is actually wanted, with the object and intention of selling such extra lands for the purpose of raising money. Therefore for that reason I must say that I am against the defendants in this case, and I think the best way to put my decision is that the admission which the defendants have made shows that the formal adjudication they have made was in the wrong form, that it ought to have been an adjudication that only 5ft. 6in. projected, and that only 5ft. 6in. was necessary to be purchased. I must not omit to say that the section I have been considering, and the decision of Lord Chelmsford in Thomas v. Daw, are both open to this observation, that there may very often be cases in which, at the moment of the adjudication, the commissioners do not know exactly how much they will want, and therefore are bonâ fide unable to say whether they want the whole or any part, or whether they want five feet or five yards or any other quantity, and, within the meaning of the Act of Parliament, may say that a specified quantity is wanted, when a less quantity would suffice. But the contention that they can do that when they have, in fact, come to a conclusion as to exactly how much they do want is, I think, wrong, and in my opinion the Act does not give them any power, when they know exactly what they want, to take extra land for the purpose of selling. As to the other point which has been raised, I should have felt very great difficulty in agreeing with the defendants. [His Lordship read sect. 96 of the Act 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix., and continued:] It is confessed that when the commissioners gave notice to the owners of these particular houses to treat for the purchase of them, they had come to an agreement with third parties to sell to them. Most certainly, if sect. 96 is still in force, that was contrary to the Act. But it is said that sect. 96 is not now in force, and for that reference is made to the City of London Sewers Act 1851 [his Lordship read sect. 54 of this Act]. It is said that the power there given to the commissioners to sell to any person is totally inconsistent with the provision that the persons from whom they bought should have a right of pre-emption. I should be slow to consider that a section in a general Act, worded as this is, repealed by implication a previous section of a particular Act giving a right of pre-emption, without referring to that previous section or to the Act which contains it, and without showing on the face of it the smallest indication of an intention to take away from individuals a right such as this. But that the section had not that effect is pretty plain if the next section is looked at [his Lordship read sect. 55]. It is sufficiently plain that the object of that section, at any rate, was to give a power of leasing to seven, instead of the whole of the commissioners. Under the former Acts the concurrence of the whole was necessary to a conveyance of superfluous lands, and it seems to me that the meaning and purpose of the two sections was to enable seven of the commissioners to exercise the powers necessary to carry out the formalities, and, though the sections are badly expressed, that is a possible and not unreasonable construction, and one which the court ought to adopt, rather than the conclusion that an important right of pre-emption given by the earlier statute is by implication taken away. Therefore I come to the conclusion, although it is not necessary to decide the point—but I desire to express my opinion upon it, after hearing the able argument which has been addressed to me—that the later Act does not operate so as to take away by implication the right of pre-emption conferred by the earlier Act; and on that ground also the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. But, being in his favour on the former ground, I think it right to grant an injunction in the fullest terms to prevent the defendants from taking any further proceedings for taking compulsorily the whole of these two houses; and, the defendants admitting that at the time when they made the adjudication they only required 5ft. 6in. for the purposes of the Act, and intended to sell the rest of the two houses, there must be a declaration that the adjudication of the 30th Jan. 1883 was ultra vires and wrong.

Solicitors: Walls, Abbot, and Martin; E. A. Baylis.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Monday, July 23, 1883.

(Before GROVE and MANISTY, JJ.)

REG. on the prosecution of THE ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE OF THE POPLAR UNION (resps.) v. THE EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK COMPANY (apps.) (a)

Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), ss. 46, 47—Supplemental valuation list—Alterations—Dock company—Diminution of profits—Sufficiency of evidence of alteration.

Upon an appeal against a supplemental valuation list, under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869, evidence showing an alteration extending over a period beyond the preceding twelve months is inadmissible.

A diminution in the profits of a dock company within the preceding twelve months is admissible as evidence of an alteration in value, but is not in itself sufficient to establish an alteration within the meaning of the Act.

The dock company are not entitled to have their premises valued at their present actual value, and to have that value entered in the supplemental valuation list, but all that can be entered is any alteration in value that may have taken place during the preceding twelve months.

APPEAL from an order of the Court of General Assessment Sessions under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869 upon a case stated for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. The material part of the case is as follows:—

1. The East and West India Dock Company are and have been for many years possessed of extensive docks, premises, and hereditaments lying partly in the parish of All Saints, Poplar, in the Poplar Union, in the county of Middlesex.

(a) Reported by H. D. BONSEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

2. At the quinquennial valuation made in 1875 the court of assessment sessions fixed the gross and rateable values of the aforesaid hereditaments at 127,776*l.* gross and 61,896*l.* rateable.

3. At the next quinquennial valuation in 1880 the company were assessed at the same values as before, and did not appeal.

4. In 1881 a supplemental valuation list within the meaning of sect. 46 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869 was made by the overseers of the parish, but they did not include therein the hereditaments of the company. No objection was made by the company to the supplemental list, nor any application to be inserted therein.

5. On the 27th May 1882 the company gave notice to the overseers, requiring them to make a supplemental valuation list within the meaning of sect. 46 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869 showing the alterations which had taken place within the preceding twelve months in the gross and rateable value of the said hereditaments.

6. On the 1st June 1882 a supplemental valuation list within the meaning of sect. 46 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869 was, subject to the question of the omission of the company's hereditaments hereinafter mentioned, duly made and deposited by the overseers of the parish, but they did not include in the said supplemental list the hereditaments of the company.

7. On the 24th June 1882 the company gave notice to the clerk of the assessment committee of the Poplar Union and the overseers that they desired that the supplemental list should be corrected by the insertion therein of the said hereditaments with an assessment at gross, 70,067*l.*, rateable 50,391*l.*

8. On the 29th Sept. 1882 the assessment committee heard counsel for the company on their objection, who, for the purpose of proving that there had been an alteration within the meaning of sect. 46, tendered in evidence the books and balance-sheets of the company for the years 1874 to 1881 inclusive, and offered to verify by the testimony of witnesses the facts and figures therein contained; and he contended that the books and balance-sheets showed that there had been a continuous and considerable decline in the profits of the company, extending over several years down to and including 1881, and that an important portion of such decline had occurred during the preceding twelve months.

9, 10, and 11. No evidence other than as above-mentioned was tendered; the assessment committee declined to insert the property of the East and West India Dock Company in the supplemental valuation lists, on the ground that no alterations had been made in the value within the meaning of the Act, and thereupon the company appealed to the court of assessment sessions.

12. On the hearing by agreement between the parties no further evidence was tendered by either side, but the opinion of the assessment sessions was asked upon the following questions: (1) Whether the evidence tendered to the assessment committee on the 29th Sept. 1882, or any and what part thereof was relevant and admissible. If any, then (2) whether such relevant and admissible evidence tendered, if proved, was sufficient to establish an alteration within the meaning of sect. 46; (3) whether, assuming an alteration within the twelve months established, the company was therefore entitled to have the present actual value ascertained and inserted (as was contended by the company), or only to have the values standing in the valuation list reduced by the amount of the alteration in value, if any, occurring within the preceding twelve months, and to have such altered values inserted in the supplemental list (as was contended by the assessment committee); and the company duly applied to the justices in assessment sessions to direct a valuation of the said hereditaments under sect. 36 of the said Act. It was agreed that the balance-sheet for the year 1881 should be taken as though made for the twelve months preceding the said supplemental list objected to, saving all other (if any) just exceptions thereto.

13. It was contended for the company that the evidence tendered was relevant and admissible and, if proved, was sufficient to establish that an alteration had taken place within the preceding twelve months within the meaning of the 46th section of the said Act, and that the company were entitled to have the hereditaments valued at the present actual value, and such value entered in the supplemental list.

14. It was contended for the assessment committee that the company were concluded by the quinquennial valuation made in 1880, and also by the supplemental list of 1881, and that the company could not go behind either of the said lists, and that the evidence as to a falling off in the years 1875 to 1881 was consequently irrelevant and inadmissible, and that none of the evidence tendered was relevant and admissible, or, if any, only such, if any, as showed a falling off within the preceding twelve months between April 1881 and April 1882, and that such last-mentioned evidence was not, nor was the whole of the evidence tendered, even if relevant and admissible, sufficient to establish an alteration within the said preceding twelve months, April 1881 to April 1882, within the meaning of sect. 46 of the said Act, and that, even if the said evidence did establish an alteration within the said twelve months, the company were not therefore entitled to have the said hereditaments valued, and their present actual value entered in the supplemental list, but only to have the values reduced by the amount of the alteration in value, if any, occurring within the preceding twelve months.

15. The court of assessment sessions was of opinion that the whole of the evidence tendered to the assessment committee was relevant and admissible and sufficient to establish an alteration within the meaning of sect. 46 of the Act; and that the appellants were entitled to have the hereditaments valued at their present actual value, and such value entered on the supplemental list, and not merely any alteration in value which might have taken place during the preceding twelve months.

16. The question for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division is, whether the decision of the court of assessment sessions was right.

By the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), s. 43:

The valuation list as approved by the assessment committee, and, if altered on any appeal under this Act to any sessions or a superior court, as so altered, shall come into force at the beginning of the year, commencing on the sixth of April succeeding that in which it is made, and shall last for five years, subject to any alterations that may be made by any supplemental or provisional list as hereinafter mentioned.

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK COMPANY.

[Q.B. Div.]

By sect. 46 :

Every valuation list shall be revised in manner directed by this Act, and such revision in every period of five years (the first of such periods beginning with the sixth of April, one thousand eight hundred and seventy one) shall be conducted as follows :—

(1.) In each of the first four years of such period a supplemental list shall, if necessary, be made out in the same form as the valuation list, and shall show all the alterations which have taken place during the preceding twelve months in any of the matters stated in the valuation list, but shall contain only the hereditaments affected by such alterations. If no alteration has taken place which makes a supplemental list necessary, the overseers shall send a certificate to that effect to the assessment committee in place of such list, which certificate may be in the form contained in the second schedule of this Act.

(2.) In the fifth year of every such period the overseers shall make a new valuation list.

(3.) The same regulations shall be observed, and the same proceedings shall be had in the case of a supplemental list and a new valuation list as are directed by this Act, and the Acts incorporated herewith in the case of the valuation list made in the first year after the passing of this Act.

(4.) A supplemental list and a new valuation list shall come into force at the beginning of the year succeeding that in which they are respectively made, in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as the valuation list made in the first year after the passing of this Act.

(5.) In each of the last four years of such period the valuation list which was in force on the day before the commencement of each such year, together with and as altered by the supplemental list, if any, which comes into force at the commencement of such year, shall be the valuation list which is in force during that year.

(6.) A new valuation list when it comes into force shall supersede the valuation list which was in force during the fifth year of such period.

By sect. 47 :

If in the course of any year the value of any hereditament is increased by the addition thereto or erection thereon of any building, or is from any cause increased or reduced in value, the following provisions shall have effect :

(1.) The overseers of the parish in which such hereditament is situate may, and on the written requisition of the assessment committee, or of any ratepayer of the union, or of the surveyor of taxes for the district, shall send to the assessment committee a provisional list containing the gross and rateable value as so increased or reduced of such hereditament, &c.

Sir Farrer Herschell (S.G.) and Holl, Q.C. (Fullarton with them) for the respondents.—The scheme of the Act, as I submit, is that, instead of there being constantly changing valuations continuing to be made from time to time, there shall be a quinquennial valuation which shall stand for five years subject to the provision for certain cases. The effect of the order of quarter sessions is practically to destroy altogether the value and effect of a quinquennial valuation. There is a quinquennial valuation made in 1875, and then again in 1880, at which no objection is taken, and of course the quinquennial valuation in 1880 must be taken as the starting-point. In 1881 there is a supplemental list, but no supplementary list as regards them. They made no application to be inserted in it, and no objection was taken by them, and therefore my contention is that down to the year 1881 they are concluded, and that, when they come to 1882, all that they are entitled to show, if they can, is that within the meaning of this Act there has taken place an alteration within that preceding twelve months, and that by reason of the alteration they ought to be inserted in that supplemental list as reduced in value. In the supplemental list you have no business with anything except alterations which have taken place during the preceding twelve months. The sessions have held this, that there was an alteration during the preceding twelve months, and that once you show an alteration during that twelve months you need not look at the quinquennial valuation or anything at all; you are at large, and you are to be assessed on the value without reference to the quinquennial valuation. You must take the quinquennial valuation as the basis. They must assume 127,000*l.* was the proper value, and show how much it has diminished. [Grove, J.—How can they show that without going into the whole question of valuation?] If they cannot, then the Legislature says they are not to. All they are entitled to go into is the alteration during the preceding twelve months. [Manisty, J.—The sessions have found that the appellants are entitled to have the hereditaments valued at their present actual value, and such valuation in the supplemental list is not merely an alteration in value which may have taken place.] That is the issue between us. Another question is the mode of valuation. My contention is that the increase or reduction must be an increase or reduction arising from some definite cause, either affecting the structure or its relation to other structures, or some change in the condition of things which has caused it to be increased or reduced in value. The illustration given in the 47th section is the erection of any building, and of course the removal of a building would be the same. I do not say it is exhaustive, but it is illustrative of the alteration which is to cause a change in the valuation. [Grove, J.—Suppose the building to be a shop of a particular class, which has a very large business, and in consequence of the predominance of a particular trade it is entirely superseded, so that it loses its value as a shop though it is structurally the same, should you say that was not an alteration in value within the meaning of the statute?] I should say it was because there would be a change in the condition of things which could be attributed to a specific cause. It is said that the rates from shipping in the docks were less in the twelve months in question than they had been previously, but that is no evidence that the value of the hereditaments has diminished. Falling off of receipts in a particular year is no evidence of an alteration in value. You must first prove the cause, and then you must prove the amount of alteration due to the cause; but all that is proved here is the diminution in receipts. The case of Reg. v. The New River Company (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 309) was relied on before the court of quarter sessions, but there was a structural alteration; pipes had been laid on to a new district. In the present case there is no suggestion that there has been any structural alteration.

Sir Hardinge Giffard, Q.C., Marriott, Q.C., and Digby for the appellants.—The assessment committee have no right to reject the evidence; the question of diminution of value is a question of fact, and the amount of the receipts is an element which they ought to take into consideration—of course it would not be conclusive, but it ought not to be rejected. [Grove, J.—I think I may say, both for my brother Manisty and myself, that the evidence was admissible and relevant, but the difficulty in my mind begins after that; the question is whether it was enough.]

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK COMPANY.

[Q.B. Div.]

Quite enough. The evidence tendered shows a diminution of the shipping, not in any particular year, but going on progressively for a great number of years. In order to bring ourselves within the Act we are not obliged to assign a cause except for the one reason I mentioned, namely, that it must be a cause, or rather a thing which affects the rateable value. By the last statute the Legislature intended to alter the state of the law as it then stood, and to substitute provisions which were no longer open to the same construction. Under the Union Assessment Act there is no particular period for a valuation. The leading principle of the Act which your Lordships have now to construe is to secure a uniform basis of value for the metropolitan district, and a valuation must be made every five years. A ratepayer could formerly appeal against the rate; he can now appeal against the valuation list, subject to this, that he must show a change of circumstances. By the 46th section the supplemental list is to be in the same form as the valuation list; the same regulations are to be observed and the same proceedings as in the case of the list in the first year. The list in the first year is to show the gross and rateable value, not with reference to any antecedent valuation. It is very difficult to see what ground there is for suggesting that which prima facie, I suppose, would strike everyone as unjust and improper, namely, that you are to have an artificial estoppel. Unless an alteration can be shown within the preceding twelve months, there can be no interference with the quinquennial value; but, when once the condition arises—that is, an alteration within the preceding twelve months—then there is nothing to prevent the ratepayer showing the truth, and he is not bound by the previous valuation. There is nothing in the statute to lead to the suggestion that the Legislature intended to impose on the parties an artificial calculation on which the values may be entirely unreal, and that they are not really to ascertain the truth. In the case of Reg. v. The New River Company, cited by the Solicitor-General, the judgment is entirely inconsistent with the notion that the alteration must of necessity be something physical and structural. My contention is, that in order to be allowed to enter into the calculation at all, I must show that there has been an alteration of circumstances which has taken place within the preceding twelve months, and the moment I show such an alteration, the problem which the statute calls upon the proper authority to solve is this: what is in truth the rateable value for the year in the supplemental list? [GROVE, J.—If you have to show an alteration in circumstances, that is just what is contended against you. You must not simply show an alteration in receipts.] The evidence tendered, is that a very much smaller number of ships came into the dock, and that, I submit, is a change of circumstances.

GROVE, J.—I am of opinion that the assessment committee are right, and that the East and West India Dock Company are not entitled by the statute to have their assessment reduced in the way which they contend, and, further than that, the evidence which was tendered and given, though to a certain extent admissible and possibly relevant evidence in a limited degree, was not sufficient evidence to entitle the assessment committee to adopt the mode of valuation which the appellants contend is the right mode within the meaning of this Act. Now, the question really depends upon two sections of the Act. Possibly one section only really applies to this particular case, namely, the 47th; because, as was thrown out by my brother Manisty in the course of the argument, this is more a case within the 47th section than within the 46th section, the 46th section being applied to a supplemental list, which, as far as I can gather from the Act, is not made obligatory upon the application of any ratepayer of the union; whereas, in the 47th section, the words are "The overseers of the parish may, and on the written requisition of the assessment committee, or of any ratepayer of the union, or of the surveyor of taxes for the district, shall send to the assessment committee a provisional list." The 47th section, therefore, seems to apply to an obligatory list being made out on the application of the party affected; but, as far as regards the question argued before us, that point does not appear to me to be material. At all events, it has not been argued by the counsel on either side, because the question which has been raised before us is really this, as far as I can express it, whether, when the quinquennial valuation has been made, and when a new valuation in any subsequent year has to be made—I call it a new valuation although perhaps I am using a term which is not quite what the Act means by "new valuation," because the Act by new valuation means a supplemental and additional valuation which may either add to or reduce the value given to hereditaments in the previous valuation—whether you can first of all go behind the particular year and reopen and go into the valuation for the years intervening between the quinquennial valuation and that time, or whether you can go back altogether and show the actual value of the property within the meaning of the Act. Now the argument of Sir Hardinge Giffard—I need not say an able one—seems to me to ignore the two important provisions of this Act. I directed his attention to both of them; but I think he treated them rather lightly, and, in my judgment, he did not answer the difficulties which arose on the words of sects. 46 and 47. His argument was this: The previous Act of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 103, had an annual valuation, and its provisions were directed to what was requisite for an annual valuation, and, among other sections, the 25th section, which may be called the same section, with reference to the then state of things, as the 47th section under the present Act; and Sir Hardinge Giffard contended that from the alteration in the wording of the 47th section of this Act from the wording of the 25th section of that Act, a very different construction was to apply to the 47th section of the present Act. The words of the 25th section of the previous Act are these: "Where, by reason of any alteration in the occupation of any property included in such list, such property becomes liable to be rated in parts not mentioned in such list as rateable hereditaments and separately valued therein, and when and so often as it shall appear to the overseers that any rateable property included in such list has been increased or reduced in value since the valuation thereof, whether by building, destruction of building, or other alteration in the condition thereof or otherwise, the overseers of the parish in each of the

Q.B. Div.]

REG. v. THE EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK COMPANY.

[Q.B. Div.]

cases aforesaid shall, as soon as conveniently may be, make a supplemental valuation list, showing the annual rateable value according to the judgment of the overseers," &c. The 47th section of the present Act says this—in place, I may call it, of what I have read of the Act of the 26th & 27th Vict.: "If in the course of any year the value of any hereditament is increased by the addition thereto, or erection thereon, of any building, or is from any cause increased or reduced in value, the following provisions shall have effect." Now there the words, "increased or reduced from any cause" no doubt are larger than any words in sect. 25 of the preceding Act; but it appears to me that they are not so large as Sir Hardinge Giffard contended, because he reads them thus: "If from any cause they are increased or reduced in value." That is, never mind the cause; you need not go into the cause, if they are increased or reduced in value, that is enough. Now I do not read the section in that way, and for this reason, among others, that if the Act had intended to say that, it would have said, "If in the course of any year the value of any hereditament is increased or reduced, the following provisions are to have effect." But, when we come to the 46th section, that, to my mind, seems still more clear, because it reads thus: "Every valuation list shall be revised in manner directed by this Act, and such revision in every period of five years (the first of such periods beginning with the 6th April) shall be conducted as follows: In each of the first four years of such period a supplemental list shall, if necessary, be made out in the same form as the valuation list, and shall show all the alterations which have taken place during the preceding twelve months in any of the matters stated in the valuation list." It appears to me that the argument for the dock company in this case really ignores those words. What meaning are we to give to "alterations which have taken place during the preceding twelve months"? According to the argument for the dock company, any alterations during the preceding four years, provided it was within the last year, could be inquired into; and not only that, but I do not see how you could avoid going even beyond the last quinquennial valuation if you are to take the actual value of the premises and the real value of them altogether. I cannot ignore the words "during the preceding twelve months" in sect. 46, or "if in the course of any year the value of any hereditament is increased or reduced" in sect. 47. The object of the statute is that there should be a five years' valuation. It was to prevent the old valuations remaining when great changes have taken place in the value of premises, and it was to keep them always alive and keep them, if I may say so, fairly up to the existing period, and it was thought that five years was a fair time for revaluation. It would have been costly and troublesome to have valued them every year. If we are to be able to reopen the valuation in each of those four years, the quinquennial valuation is really no more than the valuation in any of the other years. I do not say that the mode of computation may not be a difficult one. It is a matter on which we are not asked, and which must be left to a jury, how you are to frame the reduction. There will be a great deal more difficulty in considering the Act in the opposite way, but still I do not say it is free from difficulty in the mode of application. In the present case, the assessment committee heard counsel for the company on their objection and requirements with a view to proving that there had been an alteration within the meaning of sect. 46 entitling the company to a revision of the valuation list, and he tendered in evidence the books and balance-sheets of the company for the years 1874 to 1881, and offered to verify by the testimony of witnesses the facts and figures therein contained; and he contended that the said books and balance-sheets showed that there had been a continuous and a considerable decline in the profits of the company extending over the several years down to and including 1881, and that an important portion of such diminution had occurred during the preceding twelve months, and that, under the circumstances stated, an alteration within the meaning of sect. 46 had taken place. No evidence other than as above-mentioned was tendered. It is stated in another part of the case that that was done by an agreement. Therefore it was not as if they could have tendered other evidence, and did not, but that it was agreed that that evidence should be taken as a test of the contention on each side. One question left to us is, Is that evidence admissible and relevant? I think it was admissible as to those twelve months only. It was relevant, but I think it was not enough. It is necessary to show diminution in the value within the meaning of the Act, and it is also necessary to show an alteration in circumstances. A mere alteration showing that they had received less money within the last twelve months than they had received in the preceding year would not be enough. It may be an accidental fluctuation in the business from some adventitious cause having nothing to do with the valuation of the premises. Therefore, on that question, I am of opinion that the evidence, although partly admissible and relevant, was not sufficient to establish an alteration within the meaning of the 46th and 47th sections. Then, secondly, with regard to the opinion of the sessions that "the appellants are entitled to have the hereditaments valued at their present actual value, and such value entered in the supplemental list, and not merely any alteration in value which may have taken place during the preceding twelve months," that I answer in the negative—that the appellants are not entitled to have them valued at their present actual value, and have that value entered in the supplemental list, but all that can be entered is any alteration in value which may have taken place during the preceding twelve months. My judgment, therefore, is in favour of the respondents.

MANISTY, J.—I am of the same opinion in the result, and, as this is a question of some little difficulty and some general importance, I propose to go somewhat more at length into the reasons upon which I have arrived at the same conclusion. Now, no doubt the Act of 1862 has some bearing upon the Act of 1869, but there is no real serious difference so as to put a different construction upon the Act of 1869 from that which, if there were no Act of 1862, I would put upon it. The scheme of the Act of 1862, of course, was somewhat difficult and the language was somewhat difficult to deal with. For instance, in sect. 15 of the Act of 1862, the gross estimated rental was to be "the rent at which the here-

Q.B. Div.]

REG. V. THE EAST AND WEST INDIA DOCK COMPANY.

[Q.B. Div.]

ditament might reasonably be expected to let from year to year." It was necessary to put a very large construction upon those words, and that has been rectified in the Act of 1869, which does assist one somewhat in dealing with the subsequent sections, because the gross value in the Act of 1869 means, not the rent at which it may be let from year to year, but the rent which a tenant might be reasonably expected to pay, taking one year with another, for these docks, and that is the fundamental principle. Now, the next thing is, there is to be a quinquennial valuation, and the provisions with respect to it certainly are exceedingly careful, and, to my mind, very clear. The overseers are to make a valuation list, and you will find throughout this Act there are three things clearly and very distinctly mentioned, and they are, in form, at all events, and somewhat also in substance, different things. There is the valuation list, that is the quinquennial valuation list, and that is to last subject to the provisions afterwards found in the Act. The valuation list is to come into force at the beginning of every year—I think the 6th April ensuing that in which it is made—and it is to last from April to April, and it is to be conclusive evidence, by sect. 45, of the gross value and of the rateable value of the hereditaments, subject always to the provisions afterwards mentioned. Now, what are these provisions? The first is a supplemental list in sect. 46, and I must say I think what I threw out at the commencement of the argument in this case is a quite correct view, the more I have thought about it, that this proceeding is quite misconceived in form; the whole appeal is misconceived altogether in form, and it is, in substance, a proceeding under sect. 47, although it is quite impossible in considering sect. 47 to exclude the language of sect. 46. Sect. 46 clearly contemplated the overseers preparing a supplemental list. There is nothing in that to make it compulsory, but in this case they did prepare a supplemental list, which, of course, was subject to a revision by the assessment committee and to an appeal to the quarter sessions, and, strange to say, the form in which the present appeal came before the sessions was as an objection to the omission from the supplemental list. There is no appeal given for such a thing. In sect. 46 provision is made for the overseers if necessary making a supplemental list, and then the principle on which it is to be made out is in these terms, that it is to be in the same form as the valuation list. It is to be in the same form as far as it goes, and it shall show all the alterations that have taken place during the preceding twelve months. That would not be in the valuation list originally, and, therefore, the form is for a valuation list; but you shall take the form so far as it goes, and show the alteration, and then the parties affected by that may appeal. The list shall show all the alterations that having taken place during the preceding twelve months in any of the matters stated in the valuation list, but shall contain only the hereditaments affected by such alteration. Now, you have three lists—the valuation list, the supplemental list, and the provisional list, and provisions are made here for all three, and they are clear and very distinct, if people would only follow them. That being so, what takes place? Evidence is given with regard to the income of this company for a number of years, but, as for confining themselves to an alteration in the value in the preceding year, whether it is to be taken out of sect. 46 or out of sect. 47, seems to me to be immaterial—they are in substance the same; one is more explicit, namely, "which shall have taken place during the preceding twelve months," and the other is "an alteration in the course of any year." The evidence laid before the sessions, and I suppose, before the assessment committee also, was to the effect that, if you look to the income of this company during several years, going back to the year 1874, you will find that there is a great difference in the income of that company. Apply the Act to that. You are to assert and to prove an alteration within the preceding twelve months, or in any one year. Now, it seems to me that they were quite wrong in taking the evidence applicable to all these years, and that evidence was admissible with a view, if they could, as a step in the case, to show that there was an alteration of some sort in the year preceding—that would be in the year 1881—which did reduce the value. Now, just take 1880 or 1881, or any year you like, and say, Well, there has been a drop this year of 10,000*l.* or 20,000*l.* To my mind it would be utterly wrong to say that it is to be deducted either from the quinquennial 90,000*l.* or deducted at all from anything. You would have to see how that alteration, if it be an alteration, would affect the letting, not of that year, but the letting to a tenant, taking one year with another, taking the good and the bad all through. That is what they had to do. The greatest mistake would be made if they said, "We go into the annual value of this year, and will prove it by showing the income has been so much less this year than last year, and so much less than it was the year before." I do not deny that it is evidence which shows that there has been a very large reduction in the income, unless it is accounted for; and it may be, if they have laid out a great deal more money on the property that year, it would not affect the letting value a bit, but would rather increase it. So the very reduction in the net profits increases the rateable value of property very often; but, then, has there been a substantial alteration which has caused the letting value to be altered, and, if so, to what extent? I do not myself think it necessary to say whether, if there be a falling off of 10,000*l.*, that is to be deducted from the 90,000*l.* I think that would be an utter mistake. You have to look to see what the cause is, and if that cause goes actually to increase the value, though it may not increase the income, that is the thing which the assessment committee have to look at. Whether, therefore, you take it upon sect. 46 or sect. 47 of the Act of 1869, it seems to me the result is the same. I am very clear upon this, that the sessions were wrong in admitting evidence of preceding years. The principle on which they have gone seems to me to have been the wrong one, and therefore the question should be answered against them.

Solicitors for the appellants, Freshfields and Williams.

Solicitor for the respondents, J. W. Marsh.

ERRATUM.—In Reg. on the complaint of T. D. Sibby v. White and others (ante, p. 241), line 5 of paragraph 2 of head-note, for "ordinary" read "ordering."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

April 23 and 24, 1883.

(Before Lords BLACKBURN, BRAMWELL, and FITZGERALD.)

JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE v. MAYOR, &C., OF ROCHDALE. (a)

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND.

Highways—Turnpike roads—Liability to repair—41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 13.

Where by the operation of a local Act enlarging the boundaries of a municipal borough, and passed between 31st Dec. 1870 and the date of the passing of the Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), portions of turnpike roads entering the borough were brought within the area of the borough, and so taken out of the turnpike trusts:

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that such portions of the turnpike roads had not become "main roads" within sect. 13 of the 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, so as to make the county rates liable for half the expenses of repairing them.

THIS was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Lord Coleridge, C.J., Brett and Cotton, L.JJ.), reported in 8 Q. B. Div. 12, and 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 425, reversing a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Watkin Williams and Mathew, JJ.), reported in 6 Q. B. Div. 525 and 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 316, upon a special case. The special case, and the sections of the Acts of Parliament are set out in the report of the case before the Divisional Court, and the facts appear sufficiently from the head-note, and from the judgments of their Lordships.

Gorst, Q.C. and H. F. Blair appeared for the appellants.

Sir H. Giffard, Q.C. and F. O. Crump for the respondents.

Gorst, Q.C. was heard in reply.

At the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships gave judgment as follows:—

LORD BLACKBURN.—My Lords: This case depends upon the construction of a few words in an Act of Parliament, and the words of that Act of Parliament are such as to make it no easy matter to say what the Legislature intended. The general rule of construction of Acts of Parliament is of course, as everyone knows, that we are to give effect to what we understand to be the intention of the Legislature, and we are to derive the intention of the Legislature from the words which they have used, construing them in the sense which such words ought to bear with reference to the subject-matter to which they are applied. That is a very good rule to lay down, but the difficulty always is as to the application of it to the particular case. Now, as to this particular case, what appears to me is this. I think that the fact that Rochdale has a municipal corporation is purely an accident, and that it has nothing to do with the case which we have to consider. But the fact that Rochdale has now an urban sanitary authority within the Public Health Act of 1875 has a great deal to do with the matter, although the fact that it is a municipal borough is not, in my opinion, important. Now the first thing which we find is this. Looking at the history of the legislation in 1853 before Rochdale was ever made into a borough, but when it was only a country town, a Rochdale Improvement Act was passed, which incorporated some clauses of the Towns Improvement Act 1847, and particularly sect. 50: "The trustees of any turnpike road shall not collect any toll on any road within the limits of the special Act or lay out any money thereon." The limits of that special Act are three-quarters of a mile round the market-place of Rochdale, which, as I said before, was not at that time a borough. Then in 1856 Rochdale was incorporated and became a borough, and in consequence of that the powers which had previously been exercised by the commissioners under the Rochdale Improvement Act all came into the hands of the town council of the borough, who were then acting as trustees. Then followed the Rochdale Improvement Act 1872; it is important to notice the date 1872. That Act extended the territorial limits of the municipal borough, and made them co-extensive with the boundaries of the parliamentary borough of Rochdale, which were a different thing, and all the provisions of the Acts theretofore in force relating to the "town" were extended to and rendered applicable in respect of the enlarged borough. Now this portion of the enlarged borough comprises a portion of a district which was not within the jurisdiction of the improvement commissioners, or the jurisdiction of the municipal corporation when they were acting as trustees, until that Act had obtained the Royal assent, and the Act obtained the Royal assent in 1872, not quite seven years before the Act of 1878 which we have to consider. There were several portions of turnpike roads which were within that extended district, as I may call it, the trusts of some of which had expired and some had not expired at the time when this action was brought. That being the state of things in 1872, in 1875 there came the Public Health Act of that year. That Public Health Act regulated what should be done in urban sanitary districts, and amongst others these are the clauses which are material. Within an urban sanitary district (which would include Rochdale, for Rochdale would be a borough whose corporation was exercising the powers of an urban sanitary authority) it is enacted that the municipal authority shall be the sole surveyor of the highways, and there is a clause (sect. 148) which clearly shows that the Legislature, in passing that Act of 1875, were quite aware that within an urban sanitary district, or through an urban sanitary district, there might be turnpike trusts, and they made provision as to what should be done with them. The turnpike trusts were to continue, but arrangements and agreements might be made as to that portion of road which was subject to a turnpike trust wholly within the district of the urban authority, and that it might be managed by them. Of course, when such an Improvement Act as the present had passed, including sect. 50 of the Towns Improvement Act, the portion of the turnpike road which lay within the district that had been created under such Act was no longer to be managed by the turnpike trustees, but by the general law of the land the portion of the highway which lay within the parish was repairable by that parish. The section which has been referred to of the Public Health Act shows that as a general matter the Legislature were quite aware that there might be turnpike roads running in urban sanitary districts. That

(a) Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

H. OF L.]

JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE v. MAYOR, &C., OF ROCHDALE.

[H. OF L.]

being the state of things, there came the legislation of 1878, which has to be considered. The legislation of 1878 as regards all this matter seems to have one general idea in it. The portion of road wholly within the parish was by the general law of the land repairable by that parish. It was a great hardship, or might be a great hardship, for that particular parish, which was perhaps a poor rural one, that the parish should have to keep up a road which was cut up by the traffic of distant parts of the country that came across it. That was a practical inconvenience which had been felt long before, and I believe it was mainly upon that ground that Acts for turnpike trusts were first introduced. Now turnpike Acts were almost always passed for a certain time, but in practice they were continued for a longer time; they varied in their terms, but that was the common thing. The Legislature, seeing that what I have just stated was the case, seem to have thought that where there was a road which ran through a parish, or where there was a highway authority which had to maintain the road, that highway authority being substituted for the parish, it might be very hard upon it that a comparatively small district should maintain the road entirely for the benefit of the great traffic which passed through it, and which came from distant parts, and I think that that was a sensible and intelligible reason for legislation. The mode in which the Legislature sought to remedy that hardship was to say that when there was such a road it should be a main road, and that the main road should still be maintained by the district in which it was, but that half of the expense was to be paid out of the county rate of the county in which it lay. They seem to have thought that, when such a road had been put under a turnpike trust, prima facie that road was in its nature such as ought to be maintained in this manner, and it was certainly a reasonable enough thing so to think. Accordingly they passed the enactment which we have now to construe (sect. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act 1878), and as to which it is no doubt very difficult to see what it means: "For the purposes of this Act, and subject to its provisions, any road which has within the period between the 31st Dec. 1870 and the date of the passing of this Act ceased to be a turnpike road, and any road which being at the time of the passing of this Act a turnpike road may afterwards cease to be such, shall be deemed to be a main road." I pass by the rest of it. What do these words mean? If they mean any road which was subject to a turnpike trust (meaning the whole road which was subject to a turnpike trust) and has ceased to be a turnpike road (meaning that the turnpike Act has either been repealed, or by efflux of time has expired), then the present case is not within them, for these portions of the turnpike roads which lie within the extended borough of Rochdale are not within these words, and consequently the action was wrongly brought, and the judgment in the action ought to be for the defendants. That was the view which the Queen's Bench Division took; they thought that that was the meaning of these words. The Court of Appeal thought that any road has ceased to be a turnpike road when by legislation, though the rest of the road has continued to be a turnpike road, a portion of the road which has been subject to a turnpike trust has been taken from it, and the turnpike trustees have been forbidden either to spend money upon it or to interfere with it, or to levy tolls upon it. When that had been done, the Court of Appeal thought that it had ceased to be a turnpike road, and as by the operation of the Act of 1872 these had, in that sense of the word, ceased to be turnpike roads within the seven years, the time limited, they thought that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. The question now is, which of the two constructions of the Act is the right one? I do not myself attribute any weight whatever to the interpretation clause. My own impression is, looking at these words, that if the case had been now beginning I should have hesitated long before saying what the words of the Legislature did mean. I do not think that it is at all a good specimen of draftsmanship; the words are by no means clear. I, however, rather think (but on this I wish to speak with some doubt) that if it had been absolutely res integra I should have inclined to the same opinion as the Queen's Bench Division did; I should have thought that the effect of the enactment was that it meant when the whole turnpike trust ceased. But the Court of Appeal having decided the other way, I rather think that, if I were left deciding by myself alone, I should say that, although I was inclined to agree with the Queen's Bench Division, yet I did not feel that so strongly as to make me reverse the decision of the Court of Appeal. But I find that the other noble and learned Lords who have heard the case have a much stronger opinion in favour of the view of the Queen's Bench Division than I have, and I certainly should not differ from them in the state of mind which I have described. I think that the strongest reason why the words which have been used in this legislation may bear the meaning which the Court of Appeal has put upon them, is found in what Sir Hardinge Giffard brought forward, namely, that in the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, which is a general Act, sect. 50 certainly does use the words "any road" in such a sense as shows that they clearly mean a part of a road, for it says that the turnpike trustees shall not spend money on any road, or levy tolls on any road, which lies within the district of the special Act; which clearly means any portion of a road that lies within that district. Now the Legislature, in passing sect. 13 of the Act of 1878, knew, or ought to have known (perhaps they forgot it), that there were a great many districts in England in which Acts had been passed including sect. 50 of the Towns Improvement Act as part of them, and knowing that when they used the words at the beginning of sect. 13, "any road" (the very words of sect. 50), there is a prima facie reason for saying that they used them in the sense in which the words had been used in the legislation which they were dealing with, or ought to have been dealing with. They used those words no doubt, but then it may very well be said that it does not at all follow that words which are used in one Act by the Legislature shall have the same sense as when they are used in another Act. It is only when the two subject matters are so closely connected that you can fairly say that the Legislature must have used the words in the same sense as they had done before that the argument comes into play at all. What I have said makes me pause before I venture to assert that the Court of Appeal were wrong. But when I look at the matter in the other way, and see what good ground there is for saying that having regard to the object of the Legislature it would perhaps be reasonable to consider that the whole turnpike road trust was then before the Legislature, I will not venture to differ from the other noble and learned Lords who have heard the arguments in the present case, and to say that the Court of Appeal were right. Taking that view of the matter the result will be, and I beg to move, that the appeal be allowed with costs.

LORD BRAMWELL.—My Lords: I concur in the advice which has been given to your Lordships by my noble and learned friend, and I confess that my opinion upon the matter is so strong that, when I consider who have decided the other way in the Court of Appeal, and the hesitation of my noble and learned friend, I have some misgiving as to whether I can properly have appreciated the considerations upon which the court below have acted, and my noble and learned friend has doubted I do not know historically how this Act came into existence. It may have been, as Mr. Gorst says it was—I have very little doubt that it was so—from some notion of relieving agricultural districts in the way he supposes. However, I doubt very much whether, if one did know, one would have a right to apply that knowledge to the construction of this Act of Parliament. I think not. I think you must construe the Act of Parliament, not according to what possibly may have been the motives, if you can ascertain them, of those who passed it, but according to its language. I think upon the language of the Act of Parliament you can see what the intention was, namely, that whereas certain turnpike roads were maintained by the tolls which the turnpike trustees could levy, it was contemplated, as we know (and this we have a right to refer to, because it is general knowledge) that this power of levying tolls would cease by the expiration of the time for which the power to levy them had been given, and that, as a consequence of that, parishes which had no particular benefit from the road, any more than they had from other roads in the parish, would be liable to expenses for repairs occasioned by the use of those roads by persons out of the parish—by the general public in fact. I say, taking those things into account, it seems to me that one can see that the Legislature intended to give a relief to parishes which would find themselves in the position of having to repair such roads as those; that is to say, roads which had ceased to be turnpike roads by reason of the expiration of the time within which the power of levying tolls could be exercised. It seems to me that the intention of the Legislature was to give relief to parishes in such cases as that—possibly to sanitary authorities, but I think not, for I do not see that it would apply to sanitary authorities—at all events we may say generally to give relief to the parishes through which the road passed. I think one can see that that was the general intention. Now let us see how that intention has been carried into effect by sect. 13 of that Act. I own to my mind the language of that section is plain. "For the purposes of this Act and subject to its provisions any road which has" (I will leave out the next words) "ceased to be a turnpike road, and any road which being at the time of the passing of this Act a turnpike road may afterwards cease to be such." To my mind those words plainly mean this, that when any turnpike road, or any road which was a turnpike road, has ceased to be such, or if any road which being a turnpike road (as indeed it says in so many words) shall cease to be such after the passing of this Act, then upon the turnpike road spoken of there ceasing to be a turnpike road, the provisions of this section shall apply. I see no difficulty in understanding that to mean not a road from the Land's End to John o' Groats, but a road which was under a turnpike trust, and which may be five miles in length, or fifty for all I know, and which may go through one parish, or parts of one parish, or one county, or may go into two or three. The expression to my mind is one which one ordinarily uses when one says, "This is a turnpike road;" that is to say, the particular place we are standing upon is a part of a road which road is under a turnpike trust, or has the powers, and duties, and rights, and circumstances which attend a road under a turnpike trust. It seems to me manifest that that is so, not only from the reason of the thing, but when you come to the words, "and any road which being at the time of the passing of this Act a turnpike road may afterwards cease to be such." That says in words "any road which being at the time of the passing of this Act a turnpike road." But part of a turnpike road is not "a turnpike road," it is part of a turnpike road. And if after the passing of this Act the turnpike powers expired as to any road, it would not be true that a part of the road in particular had ceased to be a turnpike road; it would be true of the whole road. If after the passing of the Act a particular part of the road were taken out of the operation of the turnpike trusts, it would not be true that the turnpike road had ceased to be a turnpike road; it would only be true that a part of it had. I confess this appears to me to be plain. In addition to that I think the expression "ceased to be a turnpike road" (I do not want to repeat the arguments that have been used) is an inaccurate expression to apply to a case where a portion of a road has been taken away from the operation of a turnpike Act. It really is like the case that Mr. Blair put, of a man's hat being knocked off his head, and of a person saying, "You have ceased to wear your hat." In one sense it would be true; you could not say it was a falsity, but it would be a very inaccurate way of describing what had happened. The word "ceased" is a strictly proper word to apply to the case where the entire road has "ceased to be" a turnpike road, because the powers applicable to the entire road have ceased, but it is an inaccurate expression to describe what has happened to a part of a road which has been taken out of the road generally, and which has in one sense ceased to be a turnpike road, because it has ceased to be a part of a road which is a turnpike road. Therefore, if we look at the general intention of the statute, which I think can very well be collected from it, and look also at the language used, it is manifest to my mind that this 13th section must be read thus: "For the purposes of this Act and subject to its provisions to any road which has been a turnpike road" (that is to say, the entirety of the road which has been a turnpike road), "and at the date of the passing of this Act has ceased to be such, and to any turnpike road which is a turnpike road at the time of the passing of this Act, and afterwards ceases to be such," the provisions of the section shall apply. I say that is a matter of mere construction. But further than that, really when one considers what the condition of things is here, as was most forcibly put by my noble and learned friend on my left (Lord Fitzgerald), how is it conceivable that the Legislature could have intended that at the expiration of six years this burden which the Corporation of Rochdale had voluntarily taken upon themselves (advisedly no doubt, and for good consideration, because they found it worth their while to do so) should be taken from them and shifted in part upon the county? Sir Hardinge Giffard very ingeniously suggested that possibly they had not taken it upon themselves, and he gave an illustration which was perhaps somewhat difficult to answer, but everybody knows perfectly well that towns do take this upon themselves, and that it is not legislation that has forced it upon them. They do it voluntarily, and no reason can be given, as I say, why it should be taken from them and put upon the county. In addition to that there is this consideration: I have been endeavouring to find a power in the local Acts, which I cannot find altogether there, though I think there is some indication of it—probably it is derived from the provisions of the general Acts incorporated with these local Acts—a power enabling this corporation of Rochdale to deal with this road in an entirely different way from that in which rural parishes, or indeed urban parishes, can deal with the roads within their boundaries which cease to be turnpike roads, but which do not come under any of these Improvement Acts. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that it can be found out that the Corporation of Rochdale may divert the road, and may widen the road, and may deal with it in a way altogether different from the way in which a road is commonly dealt with by a parish which has to repair it after it ceases to be a turnpike road. I confess I cannot feel any difficulty about this case. It may be from my inability to appreciate the point which has created a doubt in the mind of my noble and learned friend who has addressed your Lordships, and which has caused the Court of Appeal to decide otherwise, but speaking for myself I really cannot entertain any doubt about it. I think that the judgment of the Court of Appeal must be reversed.

H. OF L.]

JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE v. MAYOR, &C., OF ROCHDALE.

[H. OF L.]

LORD FITZGERALD.—My Lords: I agree with the opinion of the noble and learned Lord who has preceded me, and I should say that from the beginning I thought on reading the two judgments, the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division and the judgment of the Court of Appeal, that on the whole it would be better to follow the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division. In that judgment, as delivered by Williams J., I think a construction is put upon sect. 13 of the Act of 1878 which follows its grammatical and ordinary meaning, which adds nothing to it, and takes nothing from it, and, above all, it will be observed does violence to no existing right, and does not affect existing liabilities. When you find a grammatical construction of which that can be said it is preferable in most cases to follow it. I should not say that I have a very confident opinion, because, as I have confessed in the course of the argument, questions arising upon the Turnpike Road Acts or Highway Acts as applicable to England are entirely new to me, and I am especially glad that in this particular case I am relieved from the task of following out that labyrinth of Acts which we should have to deal with, if we had to take them as bearing one upon the other for the purpose of interpreting sect. 13. I deal with sect. 13 of the Act of 1878 alone. No doubt it is capable of two meanings. One meaning, that which I am prepared to adopt, was given to it by the Queen's Bench Division. Now let us see how the contrary meaning would operate. Certainly the section is capable of being construed as applicable to part of a road as well as to the whole of the road which is subject to some particular turnpike trust; but, in dealing with it as the Court of Appeal have done, you involve yourself at once in difficulties. You interfere with existing liabilities, and you create rights which did not exist before the Act passed. I have already pointed this out in the course of the argument; it has become of importance as affecting not the borough of Rochdale alone, but also many boroughs throughout the country. There must be, and I assume there are, a great many boroughs in different counties in exactly similar circumstances; that is, boroughs which have taken upon themselves the maintenance of the roads within the territorial ambit of the borough, getting in return complete control over them, a property in them, and a right to do with them as they please, save that they are under an obligation to keep them in repair, and they may raise special rates within the limits of the borough for that purpose. In addition to the full dominion, they get an ample equivalent for the expenses of maintenance in being protected by the provisions of the Act from contribution to other county rates in reference to roads situate in the district of the county to which the borough belongs. It has been observed that before the passing of the Act of 1878 the position of the borough of Rochdale since 1872 was unaltered. I dare say that observation would apply to other boroughs in the country. They had certain liabilities, and they had no right to reduce those liabilities by going to the county at large. We all know that, as was pointed out by the noble and learned Lord who has last delivered judgment, when a road becomes a portion of a borough such as Rochdale, the whole state of things is altered, and the repairs of the road become quite a different thing. Probably, in place of being an ordinary country road, it becomes one paved and with footpaths. The expense of keeping it in repair may be double what it was before, and, if we are to adopt the construction put upon sect. 13 by the Court of Appeal, the result would be that one half the cost of repair of such of these roads as had formerly belonged to turnpike trustees would be thrown upon the county at large. I asked if there was anything in the language of the Act of Parliament which would warrant us in coming to that conclusion, or if there was any reason that could be adduced from the special nature of the matters dealt with by the Legislature to lead us to that conclusion, and I got no answer to the question. It appears to me to be a question between two interpretations, one of which is according to the literal grammatical common-sense construction of sect. 13, applying the language of the section to that state of facts where a road which had been the subject of a turnpike trust has ceased to be a turnpike road, either by effluxion of time or otherwise, and not applying it to a portion of the road. That is according to the grammatical and fair construction of it, and it involves you in no difficulty. But you at once get into difficulty, and expose yourself to the danger of doing injustice, when you adopt the contrary construction. For that reason, from the beginning I have thought that the Queen's Bench Division was right, and I agree now with the judgment of my noble and learned friends.

H. OF L.] GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY CO. v. HACKNEY DISTRICT BOARD OF WORKS. [H. OF L.]

Order appealed from reversed; respondents to pay the costs in the Court of Appeal and of this appeal; judgment of the Queen's Bench Division restored; cause remitted to the Queen's Bench Division.

Solicitors for the appellants, Ridsdale and Son, for Wilson and Hulton, Preston.

Solicitors for the respondents, J. J. and C. J. Allen, for Z. Mellor, Rochdale.

May 10 and June 11, 1883.

(Before Lords BLACKBURN, WATSON, and FITZGERALD.)

THE GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY v. THE HACKNEY DISTRICT BOARD OF WORKS. (a)

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND.

Metropolis Management Act 1855 and 1862—New street—Land bounding or abutting on—Paving expenses—Street carried over railway on a bridge.

The appellant company, in pursuance of the powers conferred on them by the Railways Clauses Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), made a railway in a cutting across a public road, and carried the road over the line on a bridge. The bridge was supported on piers erected on the slopes of the cutting, and there was a parapet wall on each side of it. These walls were the property of the company. The respondent board paved the road, and called upon the company to contribute to the expenses as being owners of land bounding or abutting on "a new street" within sect. 77 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102). It was admitted that the road was a "new street" within sect. 105 of the Metropolis Management Act 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120).

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the company was not liable to contribute to the paving expenses either as owners of the parapet walls or of the line and slopes.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Baggallay, Brett, and Holker, L.JJ.), reported in 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 679, and 9 Q. B. Div. 412, which had reversed a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Lord Coleridge, C.J. and Manisty, J.) upon a case stated by a metropolitan magistrate.

A summons had been taken out by the respondent board to recover from the company a sum of 74l. 2s. 8d. in respect of the cost of paving a new street under circumstances which appear in the head-note above and in the judgment of Lord Watson.

The magistrate dismissed the summons, subject to a case stated, and his decision was affirmed by the Queen's Bench Division, but was reversed in the Court of Appeal as above mentioned.

(a) Reported by C. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Charles, Q.C. and French appeared for the appellants.

Sir H. Giffard, Q.C., Poland, and Ivory for the respondents.

The arguments appear sufficiently from the judgments of their Lordships.

The following authorities were cited or referred to:

Angell v. Paddington Vestry, L. Rep. 3 Q. B. 714; Plumstead Board of Works v. British Land Company, L. Rep. 10 Q. B. 203; 32 L. T. Rep. N. S. 94; London and Brighton Railway Company v. St. Giles, Camberwell, 4 Ex. Div. 239; 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 162; North Staffordshire Railway Company v. Dale, 8 E. & B. 886; Coverdale v. Charlton, 4 Q. B. Div. 104; 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 88; London and North-Western Railway Company v. St. Pancras, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 654; Lord Northbrook and Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works, L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 183.

Charles, Q.C. was heard in reply.

At the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships took time to consider their judgment.

June 11.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

*LORD WATSON.—My Lords: The facts of this case are simple enough, but the questions of law to which they give rise are attended with considerable difficulty. A street in the Hackney District, known as Cazenove-road, runs nearly at right angles to the appellants' line of railway, which at that point is in a deep cutting, and is carried over the railway by means of a bridge. The roadway of the bridge, measuring from parapet to parapet, is of the same uniform width as the remainder of the street. The parapets of the bridge consist of two brick walls bounding the roadway, which rest upon arches of brickwork, having their foundations outside the lines of the roadway in the land of the appellant company. The respondents have paved part of Cazenove-road, which is admitted to be a "new street" in the sense of sect. 105 of the Metropolis Management Act 1855, and they now maintain that the appellants are liable to contribute to the expenses of that operation, inasmuch as they are owners of lands bounding or abutting on both sides of the roadway of the bridge, within the meaning of sect. 77 of the Metropolis Management Act 1862. On each side of the bridge there is a narrow way or passage, the private property of the appellants, leading directly from Cazenove-road to their railway, and it is not disputed that the appellants are liable to contribute in respect of these two passages as bounding or abutting on the street. The controversy between the parties is confined to those portions of the street which are lined by the parapet walls of the bridge. A divisional court of the Queen's Bench, consisting of Lord Coleridge, C.J. and Manisty, J., decided in favour of the appellants, holding that the present case was ruled by that of the London and Brighton Railway Company v. St. Giles (ubi sup.). The Court of Appeal unanimously set aside that decision, on the ground that the parapet walls of the bridge are lands owned by the appellants within the meaning of sect. 77 of the Act of 1862. I agree with the observations made in the Court of Appeal that the London and Brighton Railway Company v. St. Giles (ubi sup.) is not an authority which the judges of the Queen's Bench were bound to follow,* seeing that judgment went in favour of the railway company on the express ground that the roadway of the bridge was not a "new street." That being so, it became quite unnecessary to determine whether the railway company would have been liable if the bridge had been part of a new street. Still the deliberate opinion of the court is entitled to its due weight, because, although unnecessary to the ultimate disposal of the case, it was formed and expressed after hearing full argument on the point. In the case stated by the magistrate there was no mention made of parapets or bounding walls, and though presumably there must have been some sort of fence for the protection of wayfarers, Hawkins, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, deals with the question as if the whole upper portion of the bridge had consisted of a roadway or street. It was maintained on behalf of the appellants that the bridge in Cazenove-road, including the carriage-way, footpaths, and parapet walls, is now vested in the respondents by virtue of certain enactments contained in sect. 96 of the Metropolis Management Act 1855. That clause (inter alia) provides that all streets being highways, and the pavements, stones, and other materials thereof, shall vest in and be under the management and control of the vestry or district board. And as the interpretation clause of the Act (sect. 250) declares that the word "street" shall "apply to and include" any bridge not being a county bridge, it was argued that the fabric of the bridge in question, at least to the extent above indicated, must be held to have passed to and become vested in the respondents in the terms of sect. 96. I am unable to assent to the appellants' argument upon this part of the case. It was assumed, no doubt rightly, by the counsel on both sides that the rights and liabilities of the appellants, with reference to this bridge, were regulated by the Railways Clauses Act 1845. The object of the enactments of that statute, so far as these bear upon the present case, was to compel railway companies to provide and maintain convenient roads, in substitution for such portions of turnpike-roads, or public highways, as might be intersected by their line of railway. In the case of the company electing to keep their line below the level of the substitute road, the language of the Act appears to me to distinguish the road itself from the bridge by which it is to be carried over the line. Sect. 46 in that case provides that the "road" shall be carried over the railway "by means of a bridge." Again sect. 50 enacts, with regard to "every bridge erected for carrying any road over a railway," that there shall be a good and sufficient fence "on each side of the bridge," and also that "the road over the bridge" shall have a clear space of a certain width between the fences thereof. The real import of these enactments is, that the substitute road shall be supported by means of a bridge provided by the railway company, the land upon which the old highway rested having been taken and used for railway purposes. In my opinion the right of the public, or of the highway authority, is not thereby enlarged. Their right is, in the first place, in and to the road, and may extend to the materials of which it is composed; and in the second place, to have subjacent support to the road from a properly constructed bridge. They are also entitled, in terms of the statute, to have the road maintained, and to have the bridge kept properly fenced by the railway company; but these provisions do not appear to me to imply that they are to have any greater interest in the bridge and its fences, as distinguished from the road proper, than they had in the strata upon which the original road rested. These remained the property of the landowner, although burdened with a public right of way in perpetuity. The Metropolis Management Acts do not, in my opinion, confer any larger right upon district boards in the streets and highways placed under their charge than had previously belonged to the public. The statutory functions of the district board are limited exclusively to the surface of the road or street proper. In the case of new streets, what sect. 105 of the Act of 1855 authorises the board to do is to "pave the same, either throughout the whole breadth of the carriage-way and footpaths thereof, or any part of such breadth, and from time to time to keep such pavement in good and sufficient repair." Keeping in view, then, that the sole object of vesting streets, and the materials of which they are composed, in district boards is to enable them effectually to perform their statutory duties in relation to the streets, I cannot suppose that the Legislature, in enacting that the word "street" shall "apply to and include" any bridge, intended to vest in the board anything more than the street which is carried or supported by the bridge. Accordingly, I understand the position of matters to be this: the whole bridge, from its foundation upwards, is part and parcel of the appellants' land, with the exception of those portions of it, consisting of the carriage-way and footpaths, and the materials of which they are made, which have become vested in the respondents by force of statute. The bridge, with that exception, appears to me to be as much the appellants' property as an embankment would be, constructed upon land acquired for that purpose in order to carry the approaches to the bridge. Although the parapet walls of the bridge in question are, in my opinion, part of the appellants' land, that does not appear to me to be of itself necessarily conclusive of their liability to contribute to the expense of paving Cazenove-road. If these walls had been erected by the appellants at their own hand and for their own purposes, the present case would have been within the principle of London and North-Western Railway Company v. St. Pancras (ubi sup.). As I understand the facts of that case, the line of the railway company ran parallel to, but at a depth of 18 feet below, the level of the street. On the side of the railway next to the street the company built a retaining wall, which was carried up to the edge of the street and for several feet above its level. I think the court were right in holding that the wall was land of the railway company abutting on the street, because to my mind it is obvious that the wall was necessary for the construction of the line and the protection of the traffic upon it, and, in short, formed part of the works from which the company were deriving profit. I do not think that case differs in principle from Higgins v. Harding (L. Rep. 8 Q. B. 7; 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 483). It seems to me that no substantial distinction can be made between the retaining wall of a railway cutting and the retaining wall of a railway embankment. The authorities cited in the course of the argument appear to me to establish this proposition that the person vested with the property of heritable subjects which have been placed extra commercium, or are subject in perpetuity to the burden of a public right which deprives him of their beneficial use, is not an owner of land within the meaning of sect. 77 of the Act of 1862. In Angell v. Paddington (ubi sup.) it was decided by the Court of Queen's Bench that a church abutting upon a new street, the site of which had been conveyed to the Commissioners for Building New Churches, is neither a house nor land within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts. Then in Plumstead v. British Land Company (ubi sup.) it was held by the Exchequer Chamber (reversing the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench) that the owners of the solum of roads which had been dedicated to the public were not, although these roads abutted on a new street, owners of "land" within the meaning of these Acts. The Court of Queen's Bench had previously decided in Lord Northbrook v. Plumstead (L. Rep. 7 Q. B. 183) that the owner of the soil of certain private roads leading out of a new street was liable to contribute in the terms of sect. 77; and the view taken by the court in Plumstead v. British Land Company (ubi sup.) seems to have been that there was really no difference in principle, but only an immaterial difference in degree, between a case of a public highway and that of a road, the use of which had been granted to private proprietors. In the Exchequer Chamber a somewhat broader view was taken of the policy and import of the enactments of sect. 77. Lord Coleridge, C.J., in whose opinion the other members of the court concurred, there lays it down that the property to which the Legislature intended to attach liability was, in popular language, either house property or land property in the street; that the public roads belonging to the company were not such land property in any reasonable sense, and consequently that the company were not owners of land within the meaning of the statutes. The circumstances of the present case are, in my estimation, materially different from those with which the Court of Queen's Bench had to deal in London and North-Western Railway Company v. St. Pancras (ubi sup.). The parapet walls and their support were not erected by the appellants at their own hand and for their own railway purposes, but under the compulsion of a statutory enactment made in the interest and for the benefit of such members of the public as might have occasion to use that part of Cazenove-road which crosses the line of railway. Nor does the present case appear to me to come within the principle of Lord Northbrook v. Plumstead (ubi sup.), because, as was pointed out by the judges who decided that case, the use of the private roads was part of the consideration in respect of which the tenants agreed to pay rent, so that the landlord was actually getting a return from them in the shape of rent. But should these parapets, and the bridge itself, which are a source of expense and not of profit to the appellants, be taken down, the earnings of the appellants' railway would not be thereby affected. On the other hand, it must be conceded that these parapet walls are not in all respects in the same position as soil irrevocably dedicated to the public as a highway. If they were, I should have little difficulty in holding that the present case is ruled by Plumstead v. British Land Company (ubi sup.).

The surface of land occupied as a highway is incapable of being turned to profitable account by the owner without encroaching on the rights of the public. In the case of a bridge carrying a public road across a railway the statutory obligation of the company, under sect. 50 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), is to provide and maintain "a good and sufficient fence on each side of the bridge of not less than four feet;" and it has been argued that, inasmuch as the parapet walls which they have erected remain the property of the appellants, they may be used by them for any profitable purpose not inconsistent with their continuing to be efficient fences. The only such purpose to which it was suggested that the walls in their present state might be turned was the letting of their surfaces for posting advertisements. The suggestion is ingenious, and may or may not have some possible foundation in fact, but it fails to satisfy me that the Legislature in framing the Metropolis Management Acts intended to deal with the surface of a mere roadside fence as "land" which might be let at a rack rent. Another suggestion, to my mind much more worthy of consideration, was this, that the appellants may take down these parapet walls, and erect tenements supported by arches in their stead, abutting and opening upon the street. I am not prepared to say that such a proceeding would be ultra vires of the company, but the suggestion does not appear to have any bearing upon the character of these parapet walls. If as they now stand these walls are not "land" within the meaning of the statutes, I do not think they ought to be regarded as "land" because they may be removed in order that the appellants may build houses or offices abutting on the foot pavements of the bridge. I can understand, however, an argument to the effect that the land of the appellants ought, notwithstanding its being at present below the level of Cazenove-road, to be considered as bounding or abutting upon the street in the sense of the statutes, seeing that the appellants may erect buildings upon it along the sides of the bridge. Being unable to come to the conclusion that these parapet walls are land owned by the appellant company within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts, I am compelled to consider whether the land owned by the appellants, irrespective of these parapets, bounds or abuts on Cazenove-road. If the land of the appellants were on the same level as the street, and only separated from it by the walls in question, I should be inclined to hold that it none the less abutted on the street because of that separation. But the appellants' railway and the slopes on either side of it are very much below the level of the street—at least I infer so from the statement in the case, which is that the line of railway is in a deep cutting. In its present condition, therefore, it appears to me that the appellants' railway bounds, or abuts upon, Cazenove-road in much the same sense in which the waters of the Thames might be said to bound, or abut upon, the foot pavements of Westminster Bridge, and that is not, according to my opinion, the sense in which the words "bound" or "abut" are used in the Metropolis Management Acts. But the question still remains, must not the appellants' land be deemed to abut upon the street, seeing that, without interfering with its use for railway purposes, part of it at least might be utilised in order to support a line of buildings along both sides of the bridge? Whether land situated below the level of a street is or is not to be deemed as abutting on it within the meaning of the statutes appears to me to be a question of degree depending upon the circumstances of the case. One can easily imagine a case in which it would be scarcely possible to suggest that land in that position could be utilised for any other purpose than that of erecting buildings upon it having a frontage to the street; and it is not more difficult to figure a case in which it would be beyond the bounds of reasonable probability to suppose that the land could be utilised for any such purpose, although there were no absolute physical impossibility in the way. There are many cases lying between these two extremes, and the present appears to me to be one of them. To the best of my judgment, the appellants' land cannot in any reasonable sense be said to bound or abut upon the street in question. I think that, as it is laid out and used at the present time, the land does not, in point of fact, bound or abut upon the new street which has been paved by the respondents. It is used, no doubt, to support fences which do bound that new street, but those fences are mere accessories of the public highway, and are not, in my opinion, land capable of yielding a rack rent to the appellants within the meaning of the statutes. The present use of their land as railway, and the maintenance of these fences in their present condition, are strictly in accordance with the statutory powers and liabilities of the railway company; and I do not think that the possibility of the company one day or another making a different use of their land is attended with such imminent probability as would justify me in treating their land, for the purposes of this case, as if the change had actually been made. I therefore move that the judgment of the Court of Appeal be reversed with costs, and that of the Queen's Bench Division restored.

H. OF L.] GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY CO. v. HACKNEY DISTRICT BOARD OF WORKS. [H. OF L.]

LORD BLACKBURN.—My Lords: I quite agree with the opinion of Lord Watson as to the facts and points to be decided. The difficulty, which is in my mind considerable, arises from the necessity of construing the words of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, s. 77, "the owners of the land bounding or abutting on such street shall be liable to contribute as well as the owners of houses therein," when applied to such property as is described in the special case. I think that neither the land beneath the bridge where the road is carried on the bridge, nor the bridge itself, so far as it is beneath the road, could properly be said either "to bound or abut on" the new street into which the road has been turned. In one sense, no doubt, it may be said that such subjacent land does bound the street, but not, I think, in the sense in which from the context it must be taken that the Legislature intended to express in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, s. 77. On the other hand, I think that the land which runs along each side of the line of street does bound and abut on it, whether that land be steep or not, and whether built on or not. Consequently I think that the decision in London and North-Western Railway Company v. St. Pancras (ubi sup.) was right. But, to adopt the illustration used, I do not think that the land covered by water, on which the Thames flows, either bounded or abutted on the road which was carried over old London Bridge, though I think that the houses which stood on each side of the road which was carried over old London Bridge did both "bound and abut on" that road; and, if we can suppose such a case, if that road had been turned into a new street, those houses would have been liable to contribute to the expense of paving it; and I think that in this I do not differ from the court below. This disposes of all but the parapets and fences of the bridge. I agree with Lord Watson in thinking that the whole bridge, from its foundation upwards, is part of the appellants' property, with the exception of those portions of it consisting of the carriage-way and footpaths, and the materials of which they are made, which have become vested in the respondents by force of the statute. The property or fences of the bridge are not, I think, vested in the respondents; they remain part of the appellants' property; and as the bridge of which they are part is fixed to and so is part of the land, they are part of their land. But the Legislature, when framing 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, had not present to their minds any such case as this. We have, what is always a difficult task, to say what is the intention expressed by the words of the Legislature when applied to a state of facts of which they probably were not thinking, and as to which, consequently, they had not really any intention at all. On this I have had more difficulty than seems to have been felt by either of the two other noble and learned Lords who heard the argument. I feel that the conclusion to which the Court of Appeal has come is hard upon the railway company, and is scarcely what the Legislature, if such a case had been present to their minds, would have wished to say; but I have doubts and difficulty as to whether the Legislature have not said it, and therefore have difficulty about reversing the decision. But my doubt and difficulty—for it is no more—is not strong enough to make me dissent from what I find is the opinion of both the noble and learned Lords who heard the argument.

LORD FITZGERALD.—My Lords: The question brought before us on this appeal is, whether the railway company is liable to be rated for paving and maintaining the street called Cazenove-road, Stamford Hill, in respect of the fence walls of a bridge by which that road is carried over the railway. The facts have been already stated. It is admitted that Cazenove-road is a "new street" within the meaning of the statute 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 105. The company exercised their statutable powers by working a deep cutting through the road for their permanent way, and have carried the road across the cutting by means of a bridge flanked by fence walls. There is a railway station close to the bridge, and, as was to be expected, Cazenove-road has become a street with houses continuously built on both sides, and as such the local board has undertaken to pave it and keep it in repair. The decision of the Court of Appeal seems to have been that the fence walls of the bridge formed no part of the roadway or street, but did constitute land, the property of the company, fronting and abutting on the street on both sides and from one end of the bridge to the other, in respect of which the company was liable to be rated. It would seem from the judgment of the Court of Appeal that, if there had been no fence walls, or if the fence, whatever it was, stood within the limits of the old roadway, the decision of that court would have been for the company. The question is one of the construction of several statutes, and I prefer considering it irrespective of the cases which have been quoted. The company had authority by statute to carry their railway across the Cazenove-road, and had an option in doing so to carry the road over the railway by means of a bridge of the requisite dimensions. The statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 46, provides that "such bridge, with the immediate approaches and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall be executed, and at all times thereafter maintained, at the expense of the company." Sect. 50 of the same statute enacts rules for the construction of bridges to carry a road over the railway, and amongst others, that "there shall be a good and sufficient fence on each side of the bridge, of not less height than four feet, and on each side of the immediate approaches of such bridge of not less than three feet;" and that the road over the bridge shall in the case of a turnpike-road have a clear space between the fences of thirty-five feet. Sect. 51 provides that if the available width of the road should thereafter be increased beyond the width of the bridge, the company shall be bound, at the request of the trustees of the road, to increase the width of the bridge. The regulations thus made are for the public safety and convenience. The statute does not prescribe what the fences of the bridge should be made of, and it may be that a fence of wood or of iron, or an iron rail, might constitute a good and sufficient fence. In the case before us the fence appears to be a brick wall. It seems also that, although the bridge must have a clear space of certain dimensions between the fences, it need not necessarily be of the same width as the roadway of the road with its footpaths, if any, and we may suppose instances in which the whole bridge with its fence walls might be erected within the boundaries of the roadway as it stood before being interfered with by the company. The bridge in question, with its fence walls and approaches, was, I assume, made in conformity with the regulations of the statute. When completed with its fence walls, it was intended by the Legislature as a substitute for the piece of public road or public highway which the company had appropriated to the use of the railway. It seems to me that the roadway and the fence walls are parts of one entire thing, and form together the statutable bridge provided for the public convenience and safety in lieu of that which the company had taken, and are to be "at all times thereafter maintained at the expense of the company," for the use of the public." In the view which I take it is not necessary now to consider in whom the property in the bridge and its necessary works was vested when completed and opened for public use. The determination of that question, if it was necessary, would involve the consideration of some rather complicated statutes; but assuming that the Legislature intended by the Act of 8 & 9 Vict. for wise purposes, and for the protection of railway companies, that save as to the mere roadway or space between the fences the dominion should belong to the company, so as to prevent any other body or persons from interfering with the structure, it was nevertheless a dominion given to or left in them for the benefit of the public, and subject to the obligation of maintaining the structure for the public use, and at their own cost. I proceed now to consider the question arising under the subsequent statutes of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 105, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, s. 77, and for that purpose I shall assume that the following passage from the judgment of Brett, L.J. is in fact accurate: "That which is found to be a new street consists only of the width of the footway and carriage-way. The walls, which are along the whole length of the bridge on either side, are no more part of the street than houses would be which bound the street. They form the street, but are no part of the street. They are walls supported by brickwork, or other permanent work fixed into the land." And I shall further assume that the walls of the bridge rest on a structure fixed into land belonging to the company, and that, as such, the walls represent land in legal and technical phraseology, and that the ownership of both land and walls is in the company. The question then is, whether the company is liable to be rated in respect of these fence walls. Every owner of land bounding or abutting on the street is not necessarily liable to be rated—I may refer to Plumstead Board of Works v. British Land Company (ubi sup.), and to other authorities which have been cited—but only such owners as come within the interpretation clause, sect. 250 of the first of the two Acts, which declares "owner" to mean the person for the time being receiving the rack rent, or who would receive the same if let at a rack rent. Then is this company in respect of these fence walls the owner of land within that meaning? In my judgment they are not such owners. The bridge is by the statute dedicated to public use, and its fence walls are provided for public protection; and if the ownership and control of the walls is in the company, it is so for public purposes, and subject to the obligation of perpetual maintenance, unless and until some other good and sufficient fences shall be provided by the company instead for the public protection. The company could not let the walls at a rack rent; and if they might use them for any purpose it must be a use subordinate to the public purposes to which the bridge as a structure is in its whole devoted. If the view that I have taken is correct, it is unnecessary to consider the cases which have been cited, or the reasons given in the Court of Appeal for the judgment now under consideration; but I desire to say that, having heard the judgment of Lord Watson, I concur in his criticism on the authorities which he has cited, and in the final conclusion at which he has arrived.

Order appealed from reversed; order of the Queen's Bench Division restored; cause remitted.

Solicitor for the appellants, O. A. Ourwood.
Solicitor for the respondents, B. Ellis.

H. OF L.]

DOBBS v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

Aug. 2, 3, 7, and Nov. 30, 1883.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR (Selborne), LORDS BLACKBURN, WATSON, BRAMWELL, and FITZGERALD.)

DOBBS v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY. (a)

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL IN ENGLAND.

Water rate—Basis of assessment—Annual value—Rateable value.

The expression "annual value" of property in an Act of Parliament must, prima facie, be taken to mean the net annual value after deducting the necessary burdens upon the property.

One of the special Acts of the respondent company (7 Geo. 4, c. cxl.) provided that water was to be supplied at a scale of rates graduated according to the rents of the houses supplied, and by sect. 27 the rates were to be payable "according to the actual amount of the rent, where the same can be ascertained, and where the same cannot be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor's rate is computed." By a later special Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii., s. 48) water was to be supplied at the following rates, "where the annual value of the dwelling-house shall not exceed 200l. at a rate not exceeding 4 per cent. per annum on such value, and where such annual value shall exceed 200l., at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent. per annum." In the case of a house held for a long term of years at a ground rent:

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that whether the words of the later Act had or had not the same meaning as those in the earlier Act, the water rates should not be calculated on the gross annual value, but on the rateable value appearing in the assessment to the poor rates.

Colvill v. Wood (2 O. B. 210) explained.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Lord Coleridge, C.J., Baggallay and Lindley, L.JJ.) reported in 10 Q. B. Div. 337, and 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 504; which had reversed a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Field and Bowen, JJ.) reported in 9 Q. B. Div. 151, and 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 816, upon a case stated by a metropolitan police magistrate in pursuance of the Act 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The case raised the question as to the basis on which the waterworks companies of the metropolis are entitled to assess their rates upon the occupiers of houses within their respective districts. The respondents claimed a right to rate the appellant upon the "gross annual value" of the house, No. 34, Westbourne-park, in the parish of Paddington, of which he was the owner and occupier, and their claim was resisted by the appellant, who contended that the company were only entitled to rate him on the amount of the "net annual value" of the property. The appellant was the occupier of a house, No. 34, Westbourne-park, in the parish of Paddington, and was possessed thereof for a term of ninety-seven years from the 25th March 1852, under a lease dated the 31st Dec. 1853, at a ground rent of 15l. per annum, the lease containing, among other covenants, a covenant by the lessee to repair and insure. The house was within the district which the respondents were entitled to supply with water. The respondents were incorporated by Act of Parliament, and their rights, privileges, and liabilities are controlled by several Acts of Parliament, and among others by the Act 7 Geo. 4, c. cxl. By the 27th section of that Act it is provided, among other things, that the rate to be levied by the company "shall be payable according to the actual amount of the rent, where the same can be ascertained, and where the same cannot be ascertained, according to the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor's rate is computed in the parish or district where the house is situated." By the 46th section of the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii., it was provided that the company should be entitled to levy a rate upon the "annual value" of the houses they supplied. By sect. 4 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), the expressions "gross value" and "rateable value" are thus defined: "The term 'gross value' means the annual rent which a tenant might reasonably be expected, taking one year with another, to pay for an hereditament if the tenant undertook to pay all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and the commutation rent charge, if any, and the landlord undertook to bear the cost of the repairs and insurance and other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain the hereditament in a state to command that rent. The term 'rateable value' means the gross value after deducting therefrom the probable average cost of repairs, insurance, and other expenses as aforesaid." The "gross value" and the "rateable value" of the appellant's premises, as appearing in the valuation list for the time being in force under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869, were 140l. and 118l. respectively. The respondents claimed a right to charge the appellant for water supplied by them for domestic purposes at the rate of 4l. per cent. upon the gross value of 140l., and the appellant disputed such claim, contending that the basis upon which the charge was claimed to be made was erroneous, and that it should have been made on the net annual value of 118l. The case was referred to the decision of a magistrate at Marylebone Police-court, who decided in favour of the company, but granted a special case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division upon the question of law as to whether he was right in deciding that sect. 46 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. was applicable, and that the "gross value," as interpreted by the Valuation (Metropolis) Act 1869, was the proper basis of assessment, or whether he should have decided that such basis should be the rateable value of the premises. The special case came on for argument in the Queen's Bench Division in March 1882, when the Court reversed the decision of the magistrate, holding that the 27th section of 7 Geo. 4, c. cxl. was not repealed, and that the rent of the premises could not be ascertained, and that, upon the proper construction of the section in question, the rate should be based upon the rateable value of the premises. The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division, holding that the 27th section of 7 Geo. 4, c. cxl. was not repealed, but that, upon the proper construction of such section, the rate should be based upon the gross value.

From this decision the present appeal was brought.

Davey, Q.C., Webster, Q.O., Sutton, and Poley, appeared for the appellant.

(a) Reported by O. E. MALDEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Solicitor-General (Sir F. Herschell, Q.C.), Finlay, Q.C., and J. Clerk for the respondents.

At the conclusion of the arguments their Lordships took time to consider their judgment.

Nov. 30.—Their Lordships gave judgment as follows:

LORD BRAMWELL.—My Lords: I think this case may be dealt with as governed by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. s. 46. For either that is the same in effect as the 7 Geo. 4, c. cxl., s. 27 (which I do not think), or it is different. If the former, the meaning of the two being the same, either may be considered; if the latter, then the provisions of the later Act put an end to the operation of those of the former. In either case it may be disregarded. An Act which says the law in future shall be different from what it was, may not, strictly speaking, be said to repeal it, but it abrogates it for the future. The question then is, what is the meaning of "annual value" in sect. 46 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. ? Now, without undertaking an all-sufficient definition, it seems to me that we may safely adopt that in the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 96, viz.: "the rent at which they would let free of all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent." This is their value. If a rent exceeding this cost could not be got, they would be valueless. It is as impossible to say that the annual rent without such deduction is the annual value, as it is to say, that the daily hire of a horse is its daily value without deduction for its keep, etc. This is the value, the net, the only value. The Solicitor-General said that this was to interpolate the word "net." That is not so. Value means net value; net value means value. He did propose to interpolate a word, "gross." Now gross value is different from value. It is though a convenient, an inaccurate expression, like "gross profits." The difference between what a thing costs and the larger sum it sells for is not profit, if the buying and selling are attended with expense to the trader. Value is net value, and involves those reductions from rent which the appellant claims. I am confirmed in this by the provision in the 15 & 16 Vict., which makes the owner liable for the water rate of small tenements. What is the value of them to him? What he gets minus what it costs him to get it. But the value cannot be greater in the hands of the tenant. Hamilton v. Bass (12 C. B. 631) is really in point. Property was let at a gross yearly rent of 75*l.* 15*s.* with an agreement that the landlord should pay all rates and taxes. Deducting them and 1*l.* 6*s.* for expenses of collection and 4*l.* for repairs, the net rent was reduced below 60*l.*; and it was held that this did not qualify thirty 40*s.*-freeholders; the statute 8 Hen. 6 c. 7, giving the right of voting to those who have "free land or tenement of the value of 40*s.* by the year at the least, above all charges." Maule, J. said, "If a man has a piece of land by means of which he can enable himself to expend 40*s.* a year by laying out 5*s.* upon it—can that be said to be of the value of 40*s.* a year?" Judgment was given against the vote on this reasoning. In Colvill v. Wood (2 C. B. 210) it was, indeed, held that the fair annual rent of premises is the proper criterion of their clear yearly value within the statute 2 Will. 4, c. 45, s. 27, without making any deductions for landlord's repairs. But that case was expressly decided on the ground that the vote was given to the occupier, and that it was "obvious the Legislature could never have intended that the right of a tenant to vote should depend on calculations so nice, artificial, and difficult of application" as what the value was to the tenant, that depending "on the use to which he puts it," and other matters.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR (Selborne).—My Lords: I agree, as I believe all your Lordships agree, in the result and generally in the reasoning of the opinion which has just been delivered. I should like to add a few words, because I confess that there is a single point, which is not material to the result, upon which I am not sure that my opinion is quite the same as that of Lord Bramwell. My noble and learned friend, as I understood, expressed an opinion that the meaning of the words "annual value" may be, if it is not, different in the two Acts, namely, 7 Geo. 4, c. cxl. and 15 & 16 Vict. c. clvii. He gives reasons in which I concur, for thinking that if that be so, or whether it be so or not, it makes no difference in the result. I confess that I am not inclined myself to differ from the two courts below upon that particular point. They thought that nothing was really altered by the later Act except the steps of the scale, if I may so name them, but that the words "annual value" in the later Act had the same meaning with those in the earlier Act, and made it competent, if it were necessary or useful, to refer to the earlier Act for the elucidation of that meaning. I confess that that having been the opinion, as I read it, of all the judges in both courts below, I am not prepared to dissent from them. The words in the original Act are "the actual amount or annual value," and then it refers to the computation of the assessment to the poor rate. The words in the later Act are "the annual value" throughout, it being expressly declared that the earlier Act is not to be "repealed, altered, interpreted, or in any manner affected" by the later Act except as expressly follows from it. I cannot but think that reading the earlier Act with the later, the words "the annual value" upon those Acts alone ought to be taken to mean the same thing in the second Act as they mean in the first. That might be unimportant if I agreed (as I do not agree) with the interpretation which is placed upon the words in the first Act by the Court of Appeal; but I confess that the words of the first Act only appear to me to make that which I should have thought reasonably clear without them, more expressly clear, namely, the words "the actual amount or annual value upon which the assessment to the poor's rate is computed in the parish or district where the house is situated." Now, that does not appear to me to relate to the computation in any particular year, but it is as from time to time computed; and whether you look to the principle of valuation upon which the computation of the assessment to the poor rate proceeds in the seventh year of King George IV., or to that which, in order to cut off all opportunity for abuse, was expressly declared by the Poor Rate Valuation Act of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, some years afterwards, it appears to be perfectly clear that the mode of valuing for the purpose of computing the assessment to the poor rate was first to ascertain what is called the gross value,

H. OF L.]

DOBBS v. THE GRAND JUNCTION WATERWORKS COMPANY.

[H. OF L.]

then to make the deductions necessary in order to arrive at the real value, and the value having been so ascertained, the computation of the assessment to the poor rate was practically the same whether it did or did not proceed to cut off equally all round a certain part of the value ascertained with reference to the real facts of the case. That appears to affect the assessment merely, but not the principle of valuation or the principle of computation. I agree with Lord Coleridge, C.J., that the Act did not refer to the assessment itself, but referred to the value upon which the assessment was computed. But the value upon which the assessment was computed was in principle and properly the net value and not the gross value; and it is expressly so declared to be, for the purposes of the poor rate, by the later Act of the 6 & 7 Will. 4. I thought it desirable to say as much as I have now said, because, assuming the second Act as far as the use of the words "annual value" is concerned, not to use them in a different sense from the first, I think that the light which the former Act throws upon the latter is not against but will favour the conclusion at which your Lordships have arrived. I entirely agree with Lord Bramwell that, as we have to deal with the word "value," we must take that word in its natural sense, unless there is something in the Act that points to an artificial or arbitrary sense, which I do not discover. Therefore, I understand my noble and learned friend to move that the judgment under appeal be reversed and that the order of the Queen's Bench Division be affirmed.

LORD BLACKBURN: My Lords, I entirely agree with the result which has been arrived at by your Lordships, namely, that the order of the Court of Appeal should be reversed and the order of the Queen's Bench Division affirmed; and I rather think that in substance there is no great difference in the way in which one comes to that result. I quite agree with Lord Bramwell in what he says, that when the second Act was passed reciting the first and saying that it was not repealing it, if it enacted a rule that was contrary to it, it had really the effect of repealing it, and it was the same thing as if it had been repealed. I quite agree also with what the Lord Chancellor has said, namely, that if the former Act had the same meaning as the second one has, which of course involves the question whether the Court of Appeal are right in the construction which they put upon it, it would be a great additional reason for saying, "We hold this construction of the Act." But the real point upon which it seems to me that the whole thing ultimately turns is this, are the words "annual value," as used in this Act, prima facie to mean the real annual value expressed and explained in the Parochial Assessment Act, that is to say the value after deducting the necessary burdens upon it, or not? After considering the case, and considering what has been said and the cases which have been cited, I cannot bring myself to doubt that that is the ordinary and proper meaning of the word "value" when it is used, unless there be something to show that the Legislature intended it in a different sense, which of course there might be. And the one point upon which I was rather desirous of saying a word is this, that I do not think it is to be understood (and certainly I myself do not so understand), that the case of Colvill v. Wood, which has been referred to, in which it was decided that in the Reform Act the words "annual value" were to be understood not in this way but as meaning the rent, is in fact overruled—I do not think that it is—I do not inquire at present whether the reasoning there is to my mind quite satisfactory or is not—I do not care how that is—but as regards the Reform Act, after the thirty years that it has been acted upon, I should not hesitate in saying that it is too late to cast any doubt upon it. But the question is whether or not that is the general rule. Now, I quite agree with what has been said by Lord Bramwell as to the circumstances of that Act, and as to giving the franchise to a person, that that might apply to cut down or alter the words used there as meaning something different, and something less than they would have meant generally if they had been used in another way. But if that case is to be considered as saying that in all cases the value is to mean what was contended for by the Waterworks Company here, namely, the rental without regard to the deductions from it in order to make it the real value, I cannot agree with it. I think that the general meaning of these words, unless there be something to alter it, is that which is put upon them by your Lordships, and consequently that the decision of the Queen's Bench Division was the right one, and that the decision of the Court of Appeal was founded upon a mistake and ought to be reversed.

LORD WATSON.—My Lords: I concur. I agree with the process of reasoning by which Lord Bramwell has shown that in his opinion the words "annual value" occurring in the statutes which we have to construe signify annual net value, which I should take to be the primary meaning of the words. I do not understand that the judgment of this House or the opinion of my noble and learned friend goes beyond that, or decides that in every statute, no matter what is the context, these words are to be read as meaning net value.

LORD BRAMWELL.—My Lords: I wish to state that Lord Fitzgerald is unable to attend to-day but has sent me to say that he concurs in the reasons which I have suggested to your Lordships for this judgment.

Order of the Court of Appeal reversed. Order of the Queen's Bench Division restored. The respondents to pay the costs of the appeal in the Court of Appeal, and of the appeal in this House.

Solicitors for the appellant, Hollingsworth, Tyerman, and Andrews.

Solicitors for the respondent, Bircham and Co.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

May 29 and 30, 1883.

(Before BRETT, M.R., LINDLEY and FRY, L.JJ.)

PEARSALL v. THE BRIERLEY HILL LOCAL BOARD. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Compensation—Settlement by arbitration—Action on award—Right to have amount assessed before question of liability is determined—Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 308.

By sect. 308 of the Public Health Act 1875 compensation is to be made by the local authority to any person who sustains damage by reason of the exercise of the powers of the Act; "and any dispute as to the fact of damage or amount of compensation shall be settled by arbitration," &c.

Plaintiff made a claim against defendants, the local authority, in respect of damage sustained by their raising the level of a street, and an arbitrator was appointed under the Act. Defendants contended that the amount of compensation could not be settled until after the question of their liability had been determined, and attended the reference under protest.

The arbitrator awarded compensation and costs to plaintiff.

In an action to recover the amount of compensation so awarded and the taxed costs of the reference: Held (reversing the judgment of Bowen, L.J.), that the decision of the question of liability was not a condition precedent to the right to have the amount of compensation assessed by arbitration, and therefore, as on the facts proved at the trial it was shown that defendants were acting in exercise of the powers of the Act, plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount of compensation awarded by the arbitrator and the costs of the reference.

THE plaintiff in this case was possessed of a house and premises in High-street, Brierley Hill, within the urban sanitary district of the defendants, who where the Urban Sanitary Authority of Brierley Hill. The defendants in the course of certain paving operations raised the soil of the street three feet in front of the plaintiff's premises, and otherwise altered the street. The plaintiff alleged that he had sustained damage by reason of the defendants' operations, and made a claim for compensation, and appointed an arbitrator to determine the amount of compensation, and gave notice of such appointment to the defendants. The defendants did not within fourteen days appoint an arbitrator, and the arbitrator appointed by the plaintiff took upon himself the reference as sole arbitrator. The defendants appeared at the reference under protest. The arbitrator awarded a sum of 234*l.* 10*s.* 8*d.* to the plaintiff as compensation, and also directed the defendants to pay the plaintiff's costs, which were taxed at 152*l.* 0*s.* 3*d.*

The action was brought on the award to recover the compensation and costs, amounting together to 386*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.*

The defendants based their defence to the plaintiff's claim on three grounds: first, that the alterations complained of were not alterations effected by them under the powers conferred upon them by the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), but were nothing more than a restoration to its former level of an ancient highway, which they were legally justified in effecting under their powers as surveyors of highways; secondly, that the award was invalid on the ground that there was a dispute as to the legal liability of the defendants, and the question of liability had not been decided at the time of the arbitration; and thirdly, that the plaintiff's notice of claim was insufficient because it did not specify any amount.

The case came on for trial at the summer assizes in 1882 at Gloucester before Bowen, L.J. without a jury, and was reserved for further consideration.

On the 5th Dec. 1882 the Lord Justice delivered judgment. As to the first ground of defence, he found as a fact on the evidence before him that what had been done was not the restoration of the old road, but an act done by the defendants under the Public Health Act, and therefore decided that point in favour of the plaintiff. As to the second ground of defence, he held that the arbitration was premature, as the question of liability was in dispute and undecided when the award was made, and gave judgment for the defendants on this ground. It therefore became unnecessary to consider the question as to the sufficiency of the claim, which accordingly was not decided.

The plaintiff appealed.

By the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 308:

Where any person sustains any damage by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of this Act, in relation to any matter as to which he is not himself in default, full compensation shall be made to such person by the local authority exercising such powers; and any dispute as to the fact of damage, or amount of compensation, shall be settled by arbitration, in manner provided by this Act, or, if the compensation claimed does not exceed the sum of twenty pounds, the same may, at the option of either party, be ascertained by, and recovered before, a court of summary jurisdiction.

The power to pave streets, and alter the levels, is contained in sect. 149, and the provisions as to arbitration in sects. 179, 180.

The appeal was argued by Dosanquet, Q.C. (H. Matthews, Q.C. with him) for the plaintiff; and by Jelf, Q.C. and Anstie, Q.C. (Kettle with them) for the defendants. The arguments are sufficiently referred to in the judgments. The following authorities were cited:

Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, 1 E. & B. 694; 22 L. J. 294, Q. B.;

Reg. v. The Burslem Local Board of Health, 1 E. & B. 1077; 29 L. J. 242, Q. B.;

Re Dares Valley Railway Company, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 717; L. Rep. 4 Ch. 554;

Sutton Harbour Commissioners v. Hutchins, 21 L. J. 73, Ch.;

Burgess v. The Northwich Local Board, 37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 355; and the same case at a later stage of the proceedings, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 154; 6 Q. B. Div. 264;

Reg. v. The Wallasey Local Board, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 90; L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 351;

Bradley v. The Southampton Local Board of Health 4 E. & B. 1014;

The Bradford Local Board of Health v. Hopwood, 6 W. R. 818.

BRETT, M.R.—I decide with some hesitation, because I have the misfortune to differ from the view which has been taken by Bowen, L.J., but I have come to the conclusion that this appeal ought to be allowed, and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount found to be due to him by the award. Bowen, L.J. decided that the action could not be maintained solely on the ground that the question of liability had not been determined before the amount was determined by arbitration; that is, that it was a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator to award the amount that the question of liability should previously have been determined. It is said on behalf of the respondents that if there is a dispute the right must be decided before there is any arbitration, or else there must be no dispute. Bowen, L.J. did not decide, and it was not argued, that the jurisdiction of the arbitrator only arises where there is no dispute; he decided that where there is a dispute the right must be first determined, and the question now is whether we agree with his decision. The learned Lord Justice did not decide on the words of the Act in their ordinary and grammatical sense, but he gave the Act a particular construction on the ground that it seemed to him after consideration that it would give rise to an obvious and insurmountable inconvenience to construe the Act in any other way, and he therefore either interpolated words by implication, or else gave a particular meaning to the words of the Act different from that which they would naturally bear. The argument before us did not turn very much on the words of the section, for the learned counsel for the respondents rather avoided them, and argued more on the ground of the inconvenience which it was contended would arise if the ordinary meaning of the words were adopted. It is said that the Act now before us is different from the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), and no doubt the two statutes are different from one another in some respects; but a construction has been put on the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act which cannot now be denied to be right, and this construction is the same as that which the appellant seeks to put on the Act now before us. It is said that the effect of adopting this construction would be to produce inconvenience; but, if that is so, the same inconvenience would equally arise in cases under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. It is said that, if the parties go to arbitration before they have settled the question of liability, this would give rise to expense which might be thrown away, because the inquiry before the arbitrator would prove futile if it should afterwards be decided that no liability existed; but that would be so in cases under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. If the parties go to arbitration on an erroneous claim, the claimant will be defeated, because when an action is brought on the award he will fail to prove his right, and therefore will not obtain judgment, and if a right is proved which is obviously different from that on which the award is based, the claim must fail. If we construe the section to the effect that the question of liability must be tried before the question of amount the same difficulty arises, for the trial of the question of right may require a long and expensive investigation, which may turn out to be futile in the event of the arbitrator finding that nothing is due, while the question of amount may be simple and easy. In whichever way, therefore, the statute is construed there must be separate inquiries, and the inconvenience is equal in both cases. Therefore, the argument of inconvenience does not enable us to construe the Act of Parliament otherwise than according to the ordinary meaning of the words. The effect of doing so would be to alter the construction which has been placed upon the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and the inconvenience would be the same either way. I think, therefore, that the construction should be adopted which gives their ordinary meaning to the words of the statute. Then as to the decisions. The case of Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers (1 E. & B. 694) turned on a statute, which is to my mind substantially the same as that now before us. It is said that we should have to overrule that decision if we were to allow the appeal in the present case. It is said that the result in that case was arrived at on the construction of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 112, because it is in different terms from the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. I cannot understand Mr. Anstie's argument on that point. He suggested a difference between two statutes, which give a right and a remedy, depending on whether the right is given by express words or by necessary implication from the mode in which the statute is worded. I think that if the right is given by necessary implication that is the same as if it were given by express words written in the statute. But I do not think Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers is inconsistent with our decision in the present case. I agree that we must consider the case with regard to previous decisions, and if the case before us turns on the same point as the previous decisions, we must be guided by the reasons there given. But in Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers the ground and reason of the decision was that the arbitrator had determined the question of liability, and not only the question of the amount of compensation; I cannot see that we are called upon to interfere with that judgment. I have no doubt that in that case the award was bad on the ground on which it was contested, and on which the Court of Queen's Bench would not act upon it. Also in the case of Bradley v. The Southampton Local Board (4 E. & B. at pages 1017, 1019) Lord Campbell said that the ground of the decision in Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers was that the award was bad, because the arbitrator had taken upon himself to determine the question of liability. It seems to me that the case of Reg. v. The Burslem Local Board of Health (1 E. & E. 1077) does not raise the question. I will not go through all the cases, for it is admitted that the point has never been decided, and therefore we are not bound by authority. Then, if the argument based on inconvenience is gone, what is left but the words of the statute? If we decide this case—as I think we must—in the same way as the cases under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act have been decided, we so decide not because this statute is exactly like the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, or because we construe it by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, but because this statute leads to the same result as the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. We decide not on the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act and the decisions which have been given on it, but on the words of the Act on which the question in the present case arises. I decide that the words of the Act must be read according to their ordinary grammatical meaning, and we cannot add to or alter them. The question is whether, on the words of the statute, there is anything to show that an inquiry can only be held as to the amount of compensation, either where there is no dispute as to liability, or else, if there is a dispute, after it has been settled; that is, whether it is a condition precedent to the holding of the inquiry that the dispute shall have been settled. The words of sect. 308 are, "any dispute as to the fact of damage or amount of compensation shall be settled by arbitration in manner provided by this Act." There is no limitation contained in those words, and no statement as to time; nothing need take place before the arbitration except the dispute. I am therefore of opinion that the determination of one question is not a condition precedent to the determination of the other, and therefore the arbitration as to the amount of compensation can be held before the question of liability is settled. For these reasons I cannot agree with the judgment of Bowen, L.J., and I think that the fact that the amount has been determined before the liability is no bar to the right to recover, and therefore the action can be maintained. In the action there can be no difficulty in determining the question of liability. As to the objection taken to the claim that no specific amount is mentioned, I think there is nothing in it. I think the procedure on all the statutes is uniform. There may be the alternative forms of procedure, but on all the statutes it is alike.

[CT. OF APP.]

PEARSALL v. THE BRIBLEY HILL LOCAL BOARD.

[CT. OF APP.]

[OT. OF APP.]

PEARSALL v. THE BRIERLEY HILL LOCAL BOARD.

[OT. OF APP.]

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am also of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The question is whether the award is binding on the defendants. The real substantial question as to whether the local board could justify what they did as surveyors was decided on further consideration after the trial. The question argued before us was, whether it was incumbent on the plaintiff, before proceeding to obtain an award as to the amount of compensation, to take proceedings to get the question of the defendants' liability determined. This must depend on the words of the Act. There is nothing said in sect. 308 about the order in which the proceedings are to be taken. The section does not say when the compensation is to be assessed, or that the question of liability must be determined first. Why then should we say more than the Act says? Why should we say that it is a condition precedent that the person claiming compensation should have the question of liability settled before the amount of compensation can be assessed? I do not see how, under the language of the Act, we can impose any such obligation. I cannot see what the plaintiff has done wrong, or what he has omitted that he ought to have done. We must look at the literal language of the Act, which in my opinion ought to conclude the case. But it is said that the decisions on the Sewers Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 112) and on the old Public Health Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63) are authorities the other way. Mr. Jelf and Mr. Anstie referred to the cases of Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers (1 E. & B. 694) and Reg. v. The Burslem Local Board of Health (1 E. & B. 1077). As to the case of Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, the date of the decision is important. It was decided in 1853, and at that time there was a difference of opinion as to the proper method of proceeding under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. It was not settled then whether a public body who took part in proceedings for the settlement of compensation was not precluded from afterwards denying its liability, and it was not settled what the functions of the arbitrator were. It is now settled that a party who takes part in settling the amount of compensation is not precluded from afterwards disputing the question of liability, and it is now settled that the functions of an arbitrator and of a jury are narrowed to settling the amount of compensation, and that the party against whom the award is made is not prejudiced by it in contesting the question of liability. In the case of Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, the arbitrator unquestionably assumed to determine the question of liability. The question there was whether the Commissioners of Sewers were liable to make compensation out of the rates; they said they were not, because the liability rested with the contractors. The arbitrator determined that the commissioners were liable, and the court was asked for a mandamus to compel them to make compensation. The decision there was unavoidable, but it is now contended that it goes to this, that the award was bad because the arbitrator could not ascertain the amount of compensation until after the question of liability had been settled. No doubt there are expressions which are favourable to that view, but in Bradley v. The Southampton Local Board of Health (4 E. & B. 1014) Lord Campbell expressly says that in Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, the damage was admitted, and the only question to be decided was that of liability. Also in the case of Reg. v. The Burslem Local Board of Health (1 E. & B. 1077) the amount of compensation was not in dispute. It is impossible to say that the present case is governed by Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, or Reg. v. The Burslem Local Board of Health. In Burgess v. The Northwich Local Board (37 L. T. Rep. N. S. 355) the court refused to set aside the award, though the board disputed their liability; and in Utley v. The Todmorden Local Board of Health (31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 445) no objection seems to have been taken to assessing the compensation first. On the other hand, in Reg. v. The Wallasey Local Board (L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 351) a mandamus was applied for before the compensation was assessed, and the application was successful. I see no reason why the practice under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act should not be applied to cases arising under a similar Act. The course of procedure is well settled. The question whether the court would refuse a mandamus on the ground that an action lies on the award is another matter.

Fry, L.J.—I entirely agree. I will first look at the words of the Act, and it does not appear to me that sects. 179 and 180 in any way explain sect. 308. The result is peculiar. The claimant may have several questions which he must get settled before he can obtain compensation, but only two of them are determined by the award settling the amount of compensation. The claimant is dominus litis so far as regards the order in which he will have those questions determined, for the Act has not said that any of them must be determined before the others. Then is there any such balance of convenience or inconvenience as to induce us to construe the

CT. OF APP.] THE MIDLAND RAIL. CO. v. THE WITHINGTON DISTRICT LOCAL BOARD. [CT. OF APP.]

Act in a way different from its natural meaning? It appears to me that there is no such balance. It is said that it is inconvenient to determine the question of the amount of compensation when it may turn out to be immaterial in the event of the claimant failing to establish his right to compensation at all; but in the same way it may be said that it is inconvenient to determine the question of title to compensation when it may turn out immaterial if it is afterwards ascertained that no damage has been done for which compensation is payable. I cannot say which would be the most inconvenient. Therefore I think on that ground there is no reason for putting any restriction on the claimant's right. It is said that there is authority for the respondent's contention. There are two lines of cases upon analogous statutes. The decisions in Reg. v. The Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers (1 E. & B. 64) and Reg. v. The Burslem Local Board of Health (1 E. & E. 1077) show that it was thought best that the question of liability should first be settled; but the other cases, which were decided on the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, show that it was there considered right that this question should be determined last. In my opinion, therefore, there is nothing to take away the claimant's right to try the question of amount first. I do not say whether he could try the question of right first if he preferred doing so. I rather think he might, subject to this, that an application might be made for a mandamus to compel him to proceed to determine the question of amount, the granting of which would be in the discretion of the court.

Judgment reversed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Mackeson, Taylor, and Arnould, for Joseph Higgs, Brierley Hill.

Solicitors for the defendants, Byrne and Lucas, for Homfray and Halberton, Brierley Hill.

June 26 and 27, 1883.

(Before BRETT, M.R., LINDLEY and FRY, L.JJ.)

THE MIDLAND RAILWAY COMPANY v. THE WITHINGTON DISTRICT LOCAL BOARD. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 264)—Urban authority—Expense of repairing street—Payment by mistake—Action for money received—Notice of action—Things done or omitted to be done under Act.

Defendants, who were an urban authority, gave notice to plaintiffs, under sect. 150 of the Public Health Act 1875, to execute certain works, and, on the notice not being complied with, defendants executed the works themselves, and demanded from plaintiffs their proportion of the expenses, which plaintiffs paid.

Both parties then believed that the street where the works were executed was a highway not repairable by the inhabitants at large. It was afterwards discovered that it was not such a highway, and plaintiffs sued to recover the amount which they had paid, as money received by defendants, having been paid by plaintiffs under a mistake of fact.

Held (affirming the judgment of North, J.), that plaintiffs' claim was for something "done or intended to be done, or omitted to be done under the provisions of" the Public Health Act 1875, within the meaning of sect. 264, and therefore, as the notice of action did not comply with the requirements of that section, and the action had not been commenced within six months next after the accruing of the cause of action, plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

THE plaintiffs, the Midland Railway Company, had made a line of railway in the township of Withington, and within the district of the defendants, the Withington Local Board. This line of railway abutted upon a lane called Lapwing Lane. The defendants, who were the urban sanitary authority for the district, determined to pave, flag, and sewer Lapwing Lane under the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55). In consequence they gave notice to the plaintiffs as owners and occupiers of land abutting upon the lane, requiring them to sewer, level, pave, flag, and channel a portion of the lane within three months from the date of the notice. This notice not being complied with the defendants did the work themselves, and demanded from the plaintiffs their proportion of the expenses incurred. The plaintiffs' proportion of the expenses was apportioned by the surveyor at 1146l. 4s. 7d., which sum was paid by the plaintiffs to the defendants on the 30th Oct. 1880. Both the plaintiffs and the defendants then believed that the lane in question was not a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large. It was afterwards ascertained that both parties had been mistaken in so believing.

On the 2nd Feb. 1882 the plaintiffs gave notice of action to the defendants, but the notice did not state the name and place of abode of the plaintiffs' solicitor, and therefore did not comply with the requirements of sect. 264 of the Public Health Act 1875. (a)

The writ was issued on the 3rd March 1883, and therefore not within six months next after the accruing of the cause of action, as required by the same section.

(a) 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 264: A writ or process shall not be sued out against or served on any local authority, or any member thereof, or any officer of a local authority, or person acting in his aid, or anything done or intended to be done or omitted to be done under the provisions of this Act, until the expiration of one month after notice in writing has been served on such local authority, member, officer, or person, clearly stating the cause of action, and the name and place of abode of the intended plaintiff, and of his attorney or agent in the cause, and on the trial of any such action the plaintiff shall not be permitted to go into evidence of any cause of action which is not stated in the notice so served; and unless such notice is proved the jury shall find for the defendant. Every such action shall be commenced within six months next after the accruing of the cause of action, and not afterwards, and shall be tried in the county or place where the cause of action occurred, and not elsewhere. Any person to whom any such notice of action is given as aforesaid may tender amends to the plaintiff, his attorney or agent, at any time within one month after service of such notice, and, in case the same be not accepted, may plead such tender in bar; and in case amends have not been tendered as aforesaid, or in case the amends tendered are insufficient, the defendant may, by leave of the court, at any time before trial, pay into court under plea such sum of money as he may think proper; and if upon issue joined, or upon any plea pleaded for the whole action, the jury find generally for the defendant, or if the plaintiff be nonsuited or judgment be given for the defendant, then the defendant shall be entitled to full costs of suit, and have judgment accordingly.

(a) Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiffs' claim was for money received, and they sought to recover the above-mentioned sum of 1146l. 4s. 7d., as money paid to the defendants under a mistake of fact. The defendants relied on the insufficiency of the notice of action, and the fact that the action was not brought within six months next after the accruing of the cause of action.

The plaintiffs in their reply set up a waiver of the provisions of the statute, alleged to be contained in certain letters which had passed between the parties.

At the trial the jury found that Lapwing Lane was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large.

North, J. on further consideration gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed.

Gully, Q.C. and S. Taylor for the plaintiffs in support of the appeal.—The first question is, whether the defendants are entitled to one month's notice of action, and to have the action brought within six months' under the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 264, in a case where they are sued to recover back money which has been paid to them under a mistake of fact. The provisions of the section in question only apply to actions of tort, and not to actions of contract, as is shown by the last clause of the section enabling defendants to tender amends and plead the tender in bar; such a provision can only be intended to apply to actions of tort. If the section can apply at all to an action for money received, it can only be where the circumstances are such that an action for tort would lie, but the plaintiff has elected to waive the tort, and sue in this form of action. It is true that this section contains the words "or omitted to be done," which were not in the former Acts, but this makes no difference in the construction, and these words cannot have the effect of bringing the present case within the section, if it is a case which would not have been within the former statutes. It was not necessary, therefore, to bring the action within six months, and the defects in the notice of action are immaterial, for, the case not being within the statute, no notice of action was necessary. Even if this contention is not well founded, the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed, for on the true construction of the correspondence the defendants have waived compliance with the provisions of the statute. They referred to

Irving v. Wilson, 4 T. R. 485;
Wallace v. Smith, 5 East, 115;
Umphelby v. McLean, 1 B. & A. 42;
Waterhouse v. Keen, 4 B. & C. 200;
Greenway v. Hunt, 4 T. R. 553;
Davies v. The Mayor of Swansea, 8 Ex. 808; 22 L. J. 297, Ex.;
Davies v. Ourling, 8 Q.B. 286;
Selmes v. Judge, L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 724; s.c. nom.
Judge v. Selmes, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S., 604;
Newton v. Ellis, 5 E. & B. 115; 24 L. J. 337, Q. B.;
 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 324;
Poulsen v. Thirst, L. Rep. 2 C. P. 449;
Wilson v. Mayor and Corporation of Halifax, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 660; L. Rep. 3 Ex. 114;
Flower v. The Local Board of Low Leyton, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 760; 5 Ch. Div. 347.

Ambrose, Q.C., Le Biche, and Heywood appeared for the defendants, but were not called upon.

BRETT, M.R.—In this case an action was brought by the Midland Railway Company to recover money which was alleged to have been paid under a mistake of fact. It is to be taken for the purpose of this argument that it was so paid, and that if the right procedure were adopted the plaintiffs could recover. The question is, whether they are prevented from recovering because the notice of action was insufficient, and the action was not commenced within the time limited by sect. 264 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55). This depends on the construction of that section, and its application to the facts of the case. The facts are these: The local board, supposing that the road was not a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, exercised certain rights which they supposed belonged to them, and gave notice to the railway company requiring them to make sewers, and execute other works in the road in question, and gave notice that they would do the work themselves if it was not done by the company, and would charge the company with the expenses. The local board accordingly did the work, and charged the railway company with the expenses, and the railway company, acting under a mistake equally with the local board, paid the amount so charged against them. All through these transactions it is obvious that the defendants supposed they were exercising the powers conferred on them by the statute; at each step they deliberately took proceedings which they could have no right to take unless it were by virtue of the powers given by the Act. The mistake was afterwards found out, and the plaintiffs demanded the return of the money which they had paid, and the defendants refused to return it. I am inclined to think that in so refusing they still thought they were acting under the Act, but it is unnecessary to decide this. The plaintiffs brought their action for money received, and the action was commenced more than six months after the cause of action, whatever it was, accrued. The cause of action might be said to have accrued on payment of the money, or possibly it might be said to have accrued when the demand for repayment was refused; but, however this may be, if the case is within sect. 264, the action was commenced too late. The question is whether the defendants are entitled to notice of action, and to the limitation of six months, in this action for money received. It is obvious that the words "every such action" in the second paragraph of the section refer to an action against a local authority "for anything done or intended to be done or omitted to be done under the provisions of this Act." The question is, whether this action comes within the terms, for the second paragraph of the section provides that "every such action shall be commenced within six months next after the accruing of the cause of action, and not afterwards." I am inclined to think that the person who drew the section had his mind directed to an action of tort rather than an action of contract, for it goes on to provide that a person who has received notice of action may tender amends and plead such tender in bar. This provision looks as if it were directed to the case of an action which sounds in damages rather than an action to recover a debt. But the real question to be considered is, what is the meaning of the whole section, and I am prepared to say that the section applies to every action, whatever its form may be, where the cause of action is something done or intended to be done, or omitted to done, under a bond fide belief that it was done or omitted under the provisions of the Act. It is urged that the section applies only where the action might be brought for a tort, but the tort is waived, and the action is brought for money received, and that in cases where the action is brought for money received, but the plaintiff could not sue for damages for a tort, the section does not apply. I think that is too narrow a view, for the section is applicable wherever the action is brought to obtain relief for anything done, or intended to be done, or omitted to be done under the provisions of the Act. It is said that the action is brought on a contract, and that wherever there is a contract and an action in respect of the contract the section does not apply. I think that is true where the thing is done or omitted to be done by virtue of a previous contract, as in the case that has been cited (Davies v. The Mayor of Swansea, 8 Ex. 808), where building materials were seized. There the materials were seized under a contract contained in a deed made between the plaintiff and the defendants, which gave the defendants power to do so in certain cases; therefore they did not take the materials by virtue of the Act. There was nothing in the Act which gave them power to seize the materials. Here it is said that because the action is for money received there was an implied contract to pay back the money; but it seems to me that this is a fallacy, for there never was a contract. When the old forms of action existed a difficulty arose as to the question under which form of writ this kind of action should be brought, and the judges held that it came under the writ for money had and received, as if there were a contract, not because there was a contract. They said it was a quasi contract, which shows there was not in fact a contract. The action for money had and received was applied by the common law courts for different purposes, such as the case of money paid under a mistake of fact, or the case of a toll demanded when in fact there was no right to exact a toll. How can anyone say there was a contract there? The parties were at arm's length. Therefore the fact that the action is in form for money received does not show that the matter in dispute arose out of a contract. The question is, whether what the defendants did was done under the Act, and they were therefore entitled to notice of action, and to have the action brought within six months. Then it is said that the provision enabling defendants to tender amends shows that actions like the present were not intended to come within the section; but, though I think that provision probably was introduced with a view to actions of tort, still it seems to me that the use of the word "amends" alone is not strong enough to exclude a case that otherwise would come within the previous words. Then as to the cases, I think none of them are inconsistent with the view we take. In Waterhouse v. Keen (4 B. & C. 200) the judgments show that even on the old Acts in a case like the present notice of action was necessary, but the judges in giving their reasons show that they would not be bound by the mere form of the action, but would consider the substance. We cannot decide here in favour of the plaintiffs without overruling Selmes v. Judge (24 L. T. N. S. 904; L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 724), which is in accord with the present case. It is said that the attention of the judges there was not called to the point, but I cannot think it was overlooked. I cannot disagree with that decision. I think it was right. There the Act of Parliament did not contain the words "omitted to be done." Then those words were added in the new Act. It is said that those words have no meaning; but the draftsman must have known of the cases, and it was always argued that the statute did not apply to acts of omission. It seems to me that, in order to avoid this contention, these words were put in. Even if I thought that without those words the plaintiffs would prevail, I should be of opinion that with the words in the Act they cannot. I think, therefore, that the judgment of North, J. was right, and ought to be affirmed. As to waiver, I think the point cannot be maintained, for there was no mis-statement on the part of the defendants.

[OT. OF APP.] THE MIDLAND RAIL. CO. v. THE WITHINGTON DISTRICT LOCAL BOARD. [OT. OF APP.]

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The action was brought to recover money paid for the expenses of repairing a street, which afterwards turned out to be a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large. I assume that the circumstances are such as would entitle the plaintiffs to recover but for the question which we are now deciding. The defence raised is under sect. 264 of the Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55). The defendants rely on that section, and say that the plaintiffs cannot maintain this action because the notice of action which has been given does not comply with the requirements of the statute, and more than six months have elapsed from the accruing of the cause of action. These two defences turn on a few words in sect. 264, namely, "for anything done, or intended to be done, or omitted to be done under the provisions of this Act;" if the action was so brought the defendants are entitled to succeed. All that was done by the defendants was done bond fide, and they would have been in the right if the facts had been as they thought. All was done under the impression that the defendants were acting within their province as the local authority, and that is how the money came to be paid. Now what gives the plaintiffs the right to bring an action? The taking and keeping of the money. I cannot separate the taking from the keeping. The taking of the money was an Act done under the provisions of the Act of Parliament, and if the keeping is the cause or a main part of the cause of action, the defendants are sued for keeping money which they have obtained under the powers conferred by the Act. Taking either view I think the true construction is, that the case comes within the words of sect. 264. This view is supported by the cases of Waterhouse v. Keen (4 B. & C. 200) and Selmes v. Judge (L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 724). On a minute analysis there may be some difference between the facts of those cases and those of the present case, but substantially they are similar. I decline to decide the case on the difference between actions of contract and of tort. The distinction as to this is fine, and will be found fully discussed in Brown v. Boorman (11 Cl. & F. 1). What we have to consider is this; did the defendants take and keep this money under the bond fide belief that they were entitled to take and keep it? I think they did, and therefore that sect. 264 applies, and I think it clear that the defendants have done nothing to deprive them of their right to set up the defence under the statute.

[CR. CAS. RES.]

REG. v. HOLMES.

[CR. CAS. RES.]

I am therefore of opinion that the judgment is right and ought to be affirmed.

Fry, L.J.—I can express my concurrence in the judgments which have been delivered in a very few words. I think sect. 264 means anything done, or intended or omitted to be done under colour of the provisions of the Act. Then to what is the inquiry to be directed? To the substance, not the form of the action. What is the substantial thing for which this action is brought? It is the unlawful taking and keeping of the money. The defendants thought they did this under the Act. I am therefore of opinion that sect 264 applies. In Waterhouse v. Keen (4 B. & C., at page 218) Holroyd, J. said: "The action in form is for money had and received to the plaintiff's use, but in substance it is brought to recover money alleged by the plaintiff to have been unlawfully taken by the defendant as toll under colour of the authority of the Act. The demanding and taking the toll was an act done in pursuance of the Act. This is a case therefore within the words of the Act." In Selmes v. Judge (L. Rep. 6 Q. B., at pages 727, 728) Blackburn, J. said: "The only illegal act done by the defendants was to make an informal rate; they proceeded to collect it, and received from the plaintiff the amount assessed upon him; in these transactions it is clear that the defendants intended to act according to the duties of their office as surveyors, although they mistook the legal mode of carrying out their intention." It is said on behalf of the plaintiffs here that sect. 264 does not apply because illegal reception of money is not an act done or intended to be done under the provisions of the Act, unless the person receiving the money has some kind of power to take it, in which case it is said that if the power were exercised there would be a tort. That is an argument on the form of action. As to the question of waiver, I have nothing to add.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitors: for plaintiffs, Beale, Marigold, and Beale; for defendants, Ohester and Co., for H. T. Crofton, Manchester.

CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Saturday, Nov. 24, 1883.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., DENMAN, HAWKINS, WILLIAMS, and MATHEW, JJ.)

REG. v. G. HOLMES. (a)

Jurisdiction—False pretence—Posting the letter containing the pretence—Obtaining of money thereby.

A false pretence was made by letter in N., England, and posted there to, and received by, a person in France. In consequence of the letter that person drew a cheque in France, payable at N. in England, and sent it to the prisoner at N. in England, who cashed the cheque in England.

Held, that the prisoner was properly indicted and tried at N. in England.

THIS was a case stated for the opinion of this Court by Huddleston, B.

The prisoner was tried and convicted at the Assizes at Nottingham, on Thursday, the 26th July 1883, for obtaining from Louis Gabet Gabet 150*l.* by false pretences.

The prisoner, who was a machine manufacturer at Nottingham, had entered into a contract at Caudry, in France, to build at Nottingham, for Gabet, a Lovas lace machine, to be completed within a certain time, to be paid for on certain terms, and to be sent to France to Gabet.

The prisoner had written, at Nottingham, a letter containing the pretence which was proved to be false, in consequence of which the prosecutor had parted with his money.

The letter was written and posted at Nottingham, and received by the prosecutor Gabet at Caudry, in France, from whence a draft for 150*l.* was sent, according to and in compliance with the directions of the prisoner contained in his letter. The draft was received by the prisoner in Nottingham, and cashed there.

It was objected on the part of the prisoner that, as the false pretence was made in England, but did not operate to obtain the money until it reached its destination in France, no offence was committed over which the English court had jurisdiction.

For the prosecution it was contended that, as the representation was made in England, and the money received there, the offence was within the English jurisdiction.

Reg. v. Cooke (1 Fos. & Fin 64) was quoted.

The only question for the Court is, whether the prisoner could be indicted and tried for the offence in Nottingham. If he could, the conviction is to stand; if not, the conviction is to be quashed.

J. W. HUDDLESTON.

No counsel appeared to argue the case on either side.

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.—I think that when the facts are ascertained there can be no reasonable doubt that the conviction was proper. The false pretence was made by means of a letter written and posted in Nottingham, and sent to a gentleman in France, who, in consequence of it, drew a cheque in France for 150*l.* payable in Nottingham, and sent it to the prisoner at Nottingham, and he received the money there. For this offence the prisoner was indicted and tried in the county of Nottingham, and the question put to this court is, whether there was jurisdiction in the court of assize at Nottingham to try the prisoner. I confess that it did not occur to me that there could be any doubt upon the question, nor, upon consideration, does there appear to be any. The pretence was made in the county of Nottingham, for it was held in Rea v. Burdett (4 B. & Ald. 95) and other cases that the delivery at the post-office of a sealed letter inclosing a libel, is a publication of the libel at the place of posting; and the money, which was the result of the false pretence, was obtained in Nottingham. Therefore the two necessary ingredients of the offence both took place in the county where the prisoner was tried. What was done in the meantime between the making of the offence and the obtaining of the money is immaterial, for all the necessary ingredients to constitute the offence took place at Nottingham. The conviction, therefore, is right, and must be affirmed.

DENMAN, J.—I am of the same opinion. This case appears to me to be covered by Reg. v. Cooke (1 Fos. & Fin. 64).

HAWKINS, WILLIAMS, and MATHEW, JJ. concurred. Conviction affirmed.

(a) Reported by JOHN THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

CR. CAS. RES.]

REG. v. HOLLIS—REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX.

[CT. OF APP.]

Saturday, Nov. 24, 1883.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., DENMAN, HAWKINS, WILLIAMS, and MATHEW, JJ.)

REG. v. HOLLIS. (a)

Larceny—Ringing the changes—Money obtained by a trick.

The prisoner and another person went to an inn. The prisoner asked the barmaid for whisky. He put down half a sovereign, and received 9s. 6d. in silver in change. He then asked for the half-sovereign back, saying he thought he had change. She gave it back. His companion then asked for a cigar. She served him with it. The prisoner then put down 10s. in silver and a half-sovereign, asking the barmaid to give him a sovereign for it, which she did. His companion kept on engaging the barmaid's attention. The prisoner never returned the 9s. 6d. which the barmaid gave him in the first instance. The barmaid never intended to part with her master's money except for full consideration.

The prisoner having been convicted on an indictment for larceny of the money, the Court sustained the conviction.

CASE stated for the opinion of this Court by the Chairman of the Worcestershire Quarter Sessions.

At the last Worcestershire quarter sessions Thomas Hollis was tried before me on a charge of larceny of money, to the amount of ten shillings, the property of Charles Parkes. He was indicted jointly with William Wicks, who pleaded guilty.

The money the subject of the indictment was obtained by the trick commonly known as "ringing the changes."

The prisoner Hollis and Wicks went to an inn kept by the prosecutor: Wicks asked the barmaid for sixpennyworth of whisky; he put down a half-sovereign; the barmaid gave him 9s. 6d. change. Wicks then said, "Did I give you a half-sovereign? I wish you would give it me back. I think I have change." The barmaid gave him the half-sovereign, but he did not return the 9s. 6d. At that moment the other prisoner, Hollis, asked for a cigar, which the barmaid gave him. He handed her a shilling in payment, and she returned him the change. Wicks then gave the barmaid 10s. in silver (9s. 6d. of which was the change she had previously given him) and a half-sovereign, and asked her to give him a sovereign for it. She took the money to her master, and received from him a sovereign, which she gave to Wicks. Wicks then asked her to fasten his glove, upon which Hollis remarked, "Isn't he fussy?" The two prisoners then left, and in a few minutes afterwards the barmaid discovered the fraud.

The barmaid stated in her evidence that she did not intend to part with the sovereign, except for full change of the prisoner's money; and her master also stated in his evidence that she had no authority to part with it except for full consideration.

It was contended by counsel for the prisoner that the barmaid had general authority to act for her master in such a matter as giving change, and that the transaction was complete before she discovered the fraud; therefore that the property in the money had passed, and that the prisoner could not be convicted of stealing it.

After referring to Reg. v. McKale (L. Rep. 1

O. C. R. 125; 11 Cox C. O. 32; 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 335) and Reg. v. Middleton (L. Rep. 2 C. C. R. 38; 12 Cox C. O. 417; 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 777), I overruled the objection; and the jury found the prisoner guilty, and, in reply to questions put by me, also found specially that the barmaid had no intention to part with the property in the sovereign except for full change of the prisoner's money, and that her master had given her no authority to part with it for other than full consideration.

The question reserved for the consideration of the Court is, whether, under the circumstances above set forth, the prisoner was properly convicted of larceny.

G. W. HASTINGS,

Chairman of the above Court of Quarter Sessions.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner to argue the case.

Godeon, for the prosecution, relied upon the authority of Reg. v. Middleton and Reg. v. McKale (ubi sup.).

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—I cannot see the difficulty in the case.

HAWKINS, J.—Suppose you were counsel for the prisoner, how would you put his case?

Godeon.—I should contend that the barmaid had parted with the possession of the money to the prisoner.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—She was induced to do so momentarily by a trick, and did not intend to part with it but for an equivalent.

DENMAN, J.—The jury did not find that the prisoner from the first intended the fraud, but it may be inferred from the evidence that he did so intend.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—I have no doubt in this case. If a man imposes upon another person by saying what the prisoner said to the barmaid, who had no authority to part with the money, and who did not intend to part with the money except for full consideration, and obtains money from that person, it is a stealing of money. Here the prisoner got the money by a deliberate trick, and I should be very sorry that there should be any doubt that to obtain money so is larceny.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

Supreme Court of Judicature.

COURT OF APPEAL.

April 7, 9, and May 11, 1883.

(Before BRETT, M.R., LINDLEY and BOWEN, L.JJ.)

REG. on the prosecution of THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE TREASURY v. THE JUSTICES OF MIDDLESEX. (a)

APPEAL FROM THE QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Prisons—Superannuation of officers—Liability of county for—Prisons Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 36—Superannuation Act 1859 (22 Vict. c. 26), s. 7.

At the time of the coming into operation of the Prisons Act 1877, C., a governor of a prison, had been in the prison service for more than twenty years. In order to facilitate improvements in the organisation of the Prisons Department, the Lords of the Treasury, pursuant to sect. 36 of the Prisons Act 1877, granted to C. an annuity, by way of compensation allowance, in consideration of his retirement from office, and made an order pursuant to paragraph 4 of that section, apportioning the amount between the rates and funds provided by Parliament. The amount so granted did not exceed two-thirds of C.'s salary. Upon objection taken by the justices that the Lords of the Treasury had no power to order that a portion of such allowance should be paid out of the rates, on the ground that the annuity was not by way of superannuation allowance within the meaning of paragraph 1 of the above section, but was a special compensation allowance made for the purpose of facilitating improvements in the department to which C. belonged, which, according to paragraph 2, could only be dealt with in manner provided by the Superannuation Act 1859:

(a) Reported by JOHN THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a) Reported by P. B. HUTCHINS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held (Bowen, L.J. doubting), that the apportionment was rightly made, and judgment of Field and Stephen, J.J., making absolute an order for a mandamus commanding the justices to pay out of the county rates the portion charged upon them, affirmed.

A RULE nisi was obtained on behalf of the Commissioners of the Treasury, calling upon the justices for the county of Middlesex to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding them to pay to Col. Colvill the sum of 429l. 6s. 8d., being the proportion of the pension awarded to him as the late governor of the Middlesex House of Correction, which the justices were liable to pay to Col. Colvill on his being retired.

Afterwards a special case was stated for the opinion of the court.

The following are the material parts of the case:

1. Previously to and up to the 1st April 1878 (the date of the coming into operation of the Prisons Act 1877), the justices for the county of Middlesex in quarter sessions assembled were the prison authority in respect of Coldbath Fields Prison, in the county of Middlesex, a prison belonging to that county, and were the local authority, having before that date the management and control of the prison and its officers.

2. On the 7th Dec. 1854 the justices appointed Col. T. H. Colvill governor of Coldbath Fields Prison under the provisions of 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 25, and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 56, s. 24, and the other public general Acts then in force. Col. Colvill continued to act as governor of the above prison beyond the 1st April 1878, namely, until the 24th Aug. 1878, as hereinafter mentioned.

3. After the coming into operation of the Prison Act 1877, the prison, together with all the officers thereof, was taken over by and became subject to the control of the Secretary of State for the Home Department and the Prison Commissioners, according to their respective functions, as by that Act is provided. Col. Colvill continued subsequently to the transfer to be the governor, and to discharge the duties of governor down to the 24th Aug. 1878; but he ceased to be governor as from the 1st Aug. 1878, under the circumstances herein-after appearing.

4. Shortly after the coming into operation of the Prison Act 1877, namely, in June 1878, Col.

Colvill was informed by one of the Prison Commissioners that he might if he pleased resign his appointment of governor at once, and receive the full rate of pension, and he told the Prison Commissioners that he was willing to retire on a pension of two-thirds of his salary and emoluments, and he wrote a letter to that effect to the Prison Commissioners. Another gentleman was shortly after this communication appointed governor of the prison by the commissioners, and from that time Col. Colvill was unable to act as governor of the prison. He was, after he was so unable to act, informed by one of the Prison Commissioners that his pension was fixed at 582l. 13s. 4d. per annum, but he had no official notice of that fact or of his resignation being accepted.

5. The Secretary of State, after the transfer of the prison mentioned in paragraph 3, caused particulars of Colonel Colvill's services, accompanied by a letter, dated the 15th May 1878, to be forwarded to the Commissioners of the Treasury, in order that they might be moved to award to him such an amount of compensation allowance as they might consider adequate to meet the circumstances of the case, and in order that payment of the allowance might be apportioned between the funds to be provided by Parliament and the rates which, at or immediately before the commencement of the Prison Act 1877, were applicable to the payment of the salary of Colonel Colvill. The Commissioners of the Treasury thereupon awarded to Col. Colvill an annuity of 582l. 13s. 4d. per annum, commencing from the 1st Aug. 1878, and apportioned it as requested, namely, 429l. 6s. 8d., to be borne by the justices of Middlesex as the prison authority of Coldbath Fields Prison, and 153l. 6s. 8d., to be borne by grants provided by Parliament.

6. From the documents contained in the appendix to the special case it appeared that Col. Colvill had served as governor of the prison upwards of twenty-three years, and that his pension 582l. 13s. 4d. represented thirty-eight-sixtieths (one-sixtieth per annum) for a service of twenty-three years, with ten-sixtieths (ten years) added on his retirement from the public service for the purpose of facilitating improvements in the organisation of the department to which he belonged, and five-sixtieths (five years) added under sect. 4 of the Superannuation Act 1859, the pension being calculated on a salary and emoluments reckoned at 920l. per annum.

7. Col. Colvill at the time of his retirement was less than sixty years of age, and he had not become incapable from confirmed sickness, age, or infirmity, or injury received in actual execution of his duty, of executing his office in person, nor had a medical certificate of any such age, infirmity, or injury ever been made or given.

8. The office held by Col. Colvill had not been abolished, nor had he been deprived of any salary or emolument by reason of the abolition of the office which he held. By reason, however, of his ceasing to be governor as aforesaid, he ceased to enjoy the salary and emoluments which as governor he had enjoyed.

9. Col. Colvill retired from his governorship for the purpose of facilitating changes in the general system of administration of all the prisons vested in the Secretary of State by the Prison Act 1877, and the improvements in the organisation of the Prison Department which were then in the course of being carried out for the purpose of economy and efficiency. This re-organisation applied generally to the whole Prison Department, including the prisons which were retained as prisons, a number being discontinued.

11. No special minute within the meaning of sect. 7 of the Superannuation Act 1859 had ever been made or laid before Parliament with reference to Col. Colvill or his office.

12. Col. Colvill's only right to a pension or allowance before the passing of the Prison Act 1877 depended on public general statutes.

13. No grant or award had been made by the Treasury of any pension or superannuation allowance to Col. Colvill, other than as above mentioned. The defendants declined to pay to Col. Colvill the portion of the allowance demanded from them, and on the 18th Nov. 1879 a formal demand to pay the same was addressed to the defendants through their clerk by the Solicitor to the Treasury. The defendants subsequently to the receipt of such demand assembled in quarter sessions, and on the 16th Feb. 1880 the defendants, through their clerk, refused to pay the same.

The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the defendants ought to discharge out of the county rates the portion of the annuity so charged upon them as aforesaid, or any part thereof.

Field and Stephen, JJ. held that the defendants were liable to discharge the whole of the portion so charged, and made the rule for a mandamus absolute. Their judgment is reported 48 L. T. Rep. N. S. 480.

The defendants appealed.

April 7 and 9.—The appeal was argued by B. S. Wright for the justices, appellants, and by A. L. Smith (Sir H. James, A. G., with him) for the prosecution in support of the judgment of the Divisional Court.

The arguments turned mainly on the construction of the Superannuation Act 1859 (22 Vict. c. 26) sect. 7, and the Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21) s. 36.

By the Superannuation Act 1859 (22 Vict. c. 26) s. 7:

It shall be lawful for the Commissioners of the Treasury to grant to any person retiring or removed from the public service in consequence of the abolition of his office, or for the purpose of facilitating improvements in the organisation of the department to which he belongs, by which greater efficiency and economy can be effected, such special annual allowance by way of compensation as, on a full consideration of the circumstances of the case, may seem to the said commissioners to be a reasonable and just compensation for the loss of office, and if the compensation shall exceed the amount to which such person would have been entitled under the scale of superannuation provided by this Act if ten years were added to the number of years which he may have actually served, such allowance shall be granted by special minute stating the special grounds for granting such allowance, which minute shall be laid before Parliament, and no such allowance shall exceed two-thirds of the salary and emoluments of the office.

By the Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21), s. 36:

If, at any time after the commencement of this Act, it appears to the Treasury that any existing officer of a prison has been in the prison service for not less than twenty years, and is not less than sixty years of age, or that any existing officer of a prison has become incapable, from confirmed sickness, age or infirmity, or injury received in actual execution of his duty, of executing his office in person, and such sickness, age, infirmity, or injury is certified by a medical certificate, and there shall be a report of the prison commissioners testifying to his good conduct during his period of service under them, and recommending a grant to be made to him, the Treasury may grant to such officer, having regard to his length of prison service, an annuity, by way of superannuation allowance, not exceeding two-thirds of his salary and emoluments, or a gratuity not exceeding the amount of his salary and emoluments for one year.

If any office in any prison to which this Act applies is abolished, or any officer is retired or removed, any existing officer of a prison who by reason of such abolition, retirement, or removal is deprived of any salary or emoluments, shall be dealt with in manner provided by the Superannuation Act 1859, with respect to a person retiring or removed from the public service in consequence of the abolition of his office, or for the purpose of facilitating improvements in the organisation of the department to which he belongs.

"Prison service" for the purposes of this section means, as respects the period before the commencement of this Act, service in a particular prison, or in the prisons of the same authority, transferred to the Secretary of State, and, as respects the period after the commencement of this Act, service in any such prison or, in any other prison transferred to the Secretary of State under this Act.

Any annuity by way of superannuation allowance or gratuity granted under this section shall be apportioned between the period of service before the commencement of this Act and the period of service after the commencement of this Act, and so much of such annuity or allowance as is payable in respect of service before the commencement of this Act, regard being had to the amount of salary then paid, but without taking into account any number of years added to the officer's service on account of abolition of office or for facilitating the organisation of the department, shall be paid by the prison authority of the prison in which the officer to whom such annuity or allowance is granted was serving at the date of the commencement of this Act, out of rates which at or immediately before the commencement of this Act were applicable to the payment of the salary of such officer, and the residue shall be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament.

The following statutes were also referred to: 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, s. 30 (which was in force when Col. Colvill was appointed governor); 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 24; 22 Vict. c. 26, ss. 2, 4, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126 (the Prison Act 1865), ss. 15, 73, 74, 79; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 36; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 83; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 73; 41 & 42 Vict. c. 63.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 11.—LINDLEY, L. J.—The facts are all set out in the special case, and therefore it is only necessary for me to state the point which we have to decide. The question is whether the justices of Middlesex are bound to discharge out of the county rates that portion of the annuity granted to Col. Colvill which the Commissioners of the Treasury have charged upon them, or any part of such portion. The facts relating to Col. Colvill will be found stated in paragraphs 6, 7, 8, and 9 of the special case. The first statute to which it is necessary to refer is the Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21) s. 36. We have all felt great difficulty in interpreting that section, for the words which are introduced by way of parenthesis make it extremely obscure. The section must be construed with reference to the provisions of the Superannuation Act 1859 (22 Vict. c. 26), and that Act must be construed with reference to 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 24. There is a series of statutes dealing with allowances, superannuation, compensation, and pensions, and there appears to be a tendency to class the various matters dealt with in different classes, and to call them by different names. The statutes distinguish between superannuation and allowance and compensation. In 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 24, the word "compensation" is used, and it applies to offices which are abolished or reduced in value, and in the same statute we also find the following expressions, "pension," "allowance," "superannuation," "superannuation allowance or compensation," and "retired allowance." Looking at 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 24 alone, it seems to me that the three words, "compensation," "superannuation," and "allowance," are used to denote different things, and that the word "allowance" is applied mainly to unusual superannuation allowances. It is important to ascertain and appreciate the distinction between the various words used. I now come to sect. 36 of the Prison Act 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 21). Col. Colvill is clearly not within the first clause of that section, for he was under sixty years of age, and had not become incapable, from confirmed sickness, age, or infirmity, or injury received in the execution of his duty, of exercising his office in person; this clause applies to an annuity by way of superannuation allowance, that is to say, a retiring allowance, which may be granted in the cases specified. The second clause, I think, does apply here. It is urged that Col. Colvill is not within it because the expression is, "if any officer is retired," and it is said that this does not apply to him because his retirement was voluntary; but I think he is in the position of an officer who is "retired," for he was allowed to retire, and I am of opinion that this comes within the clause, and that the words do not refer exclusively to compulsory retirement. This second clause goes back to the Superannuation Act 1859, for it provides in substance that the officers of the prisons referred to shall be dealt with as provided by the Superannuation Act. If sect. 36 of the Act of 1877 had stopped there, it would have come to this, that an officer such as Col. Colvill would be entitled to be paid by the Treasury out of the public funds (not out of the rates) such sum as might be awarded under the Superannuation Act 1859. Sect. 2 of the Superannuation Act relates to the ordinary rate of allowance, and this depends on the period of service. Sect. 4 provides for the mode of computing the amount of superannuation in certain cases there mentioned; I refer to it in order to show the scheme on which the Act is based. This scheme is that, when an additional allowance is intended to be made, a certain number of years is to be added to the number of years which the officer who is to receive the allowance has served, and he is to be treated as if he had served more years than he has in fact served, and the scale applicable to such longer period of service is to be applied. Sect. 7 is the important section, for it would have governed the present case if sect. 36 of the Act of 1877 had stopped at the end of the second clause. The first half of sect. 7 of the Act of 1859 seems to show that, in theory at least, the Treasury could grant what they liked, without having regard to any definite scale; but, in my opinion, the last part of that section shows that it was contemplated that the Treasury would have regard to the period of service, and would apply as a standard the scale referred to in sect. 2. In theory the Treasury might make an arbitrary grant, without regard to scale, but that was not the mode of proceeding contemplated. I think we ought not to assume that the Treasury would exercise their powers arbitrarily, but ought to attribute to them the intention of proceeding upon the lines sketched out for them by the Act of Parliament. I now come to the last clause of sect. 36 of the Prison Act 1877. The whole difficulty in the present case arises from the words "without taking into account any number of years added to the officer's service on account of abolition of office or for facilitating the organisation of the department." These words cannot apply to the case of an officer who is only entitled to a superannuation allowance under the first clause of the section; they can only apply to the case of a person who is entitled to compensation as distinguished from superannuation allowance. There is therefore this difficulty, that in order to give effect to these words, it becomes necessary to extend the meaning of the expression "superannuation allowance or gratuity" so as to include compensation, or we must deprive the words of the effect which it was intended they should have, and defeat the purposes for which they were introduced into the Act. We cannot interpret the words with strict accuracy. Mr. Wright, in his able argument, suggested that the words might have been inserted to meet such a case as this: A governor of a prison has served his full time, and is more than sixty years old, but does not wish to retire, although, if he did retire, he would be entitled to a superannuation allowance under the first clause of the section; the prison authority, however, considers it desirable for the purpose of facilitating the reorganisation of the department that he should retire and receive compensation. It is said that the words in question were put in to meet such a case as that. I do not say the words would not meet such a case, but I can see no reason for confining them to such a case. The section is extremely obscure, but I think the true explanation is that, by a blunder in drafting, the expression "superannuation allowance," in the early part of the last clause, is used as excluding compensation, but later, in the same clause, has been inserted upon the supposition that "compensation" has been included in "superannuation allowance." On any other explanation I cannot understand the section. The difficulty is that the words would cease to be applicable if the Treasury were to adopt an arbitrary mode of granting compensation under sect. 7 of the Superannuation Act 1859; but I assume that the Treasury will act in accordance with the intention of the Legislature, and, in granting compensation, will base their calculation upon past services. If they do this, the difficulty is got over. I am, therefore, of opinion that the judgment appealed from was right, and ought to be affirmed. The Master of the Rolls wishes me to state that he concurs in this view.

BOWEN, L.J.—I have also bestowed much time and reflection upon the construction of the 36th section of the Prison Act 1877. It is an obscure enactment, and difficult to construe, and, in my opinion, we cannot arrive at a conclusion either one way or the other in the present case without doing violence to the words of the section and also of the Superannuation Act 1859. I do not feel justified in expressing dissent from the view

Q.B. Div.]

WEST LANCASHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY (apps.) v. IDDON (resp.).

[Q.B. Div.]

taken by the Queen's Bench Division and by the Master of the Rolls and Lindley, L.J., but I still feel much doubt and difficulty.

Judgment affirmed.

Solicitor for prosecution, The Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for defendants, Nicholson and Herbert.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

Tuesday, Dec. 4, 1883.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., STEPHEN and MATHEW, JJ.)

WEST LANCASHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY (apps.) v. IDDON (resp.). (a)

Railways Clauses Act 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 92), s. 15—Bridge with an opening span—Detention of any vessel, barge, or boat—Barge with mast which could be lowered.

By sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863, "where the company constructs a bridge with an opening span, it shall not be lawful for the company to detain any vessel, barge, or boat for a longer time than may be necessary for admitting a carriage or engine traversing the railway, and approaching the bridge, to cross the bridge, and for opening the bridge to admit the vessel, barge, or boat to pass; and the company shall be subject to, and shall abide by, such regulations with regard to the user of the bridge as may from time to time be made by the Board of Trade. If the company detains a vessel, barge, or boat longer than the time aforesaid, or fails in any respect to abide by such regulations as aforesaid, they shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, without prejudice to any remedy against them for any loss or damage sustained by any person."

The railway of the appellant company was carried over the river D., which was a navigable river, by a bridge with an opening span.

Held, that the railway company were not bound to open the bridge for a barge with a mast so constructed that it could be lowered, and that refusing to open the bridge for such a vessel was not a detention within the meaning of the Act.

CASE stated by two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Lancaster, under sect. 33 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act 1879.

1. Upon the hearing of a certain information and complaint preferred by the respondent against the appellants, for that the appellants on the 9th Feb. 1883, at Tarleton in the said county, then being incorporated by the West Lancashire Railway Act 1871, and which Act is incorporated with and forms part of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, and part 1 (relating to cancellation and surrender of shares), and part 3 (relating to debenture stock) of the Companies Clauses Act 1863, the Companies Clauses Act 1869, the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts 1845, 1860, and 1869, the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act 1845, and part 1 (relating to construction of a railway) of the Railways Clauses Act 1863, unlawfully did detain a vessel, barge, or boat belonging to the respondent at a certain bridge with an opening span, belonging to the appellants, for a longer time than was necessary for admitting a carriage or engine traversing the railway and approaching the bridge, to cross the bridge, and for opening the bridge to admit the vessel, barge, or boat to pass, contrary to sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863, and sect. 31 of the West Lancashire Railway Act 1871, we adjudged that the appellants had detained the respondent's barge for a longer time than aforesaid, and we convicted the appellants in a penalty of 10s. and costs.

2. The following facts were either proved before us or admitted by both parties:

3. Sect. 13 of the Act 6 Geo. 1, c. 38, is as follows:

And it is hereby also further enacted and declared by the authority aforesaid, that the said river Douglas, alias Asland, is and for ever hereafter shall be esteemed and taken to be navigable from the said river Ribble to the said place called Miry Lane End, in the township of Wigan aforesaid, and that all the King's liege people whatsoever may have and lawfully enjoy their free passage in, along, through, and upon the said river Douglas, alias Asland, or any part thereof, between the said river Ribble and the said place called Miry Lane End in the township of Wigan aforesaid, with boats, barges, lighters, and other vessels, and also all necessary and convenient liberties for navigating the same without any let, hindrance, or obstruction from any person or persons whatsoever, paying such rate and duty, rates and duties, as are by this Act appointed to be paid to the said undertakers, their heirs or assigns.

4. The railway of the appellants is carried over the river Douglas or Asland by a bridge having two opening spans. By sect. 31 of the West Lancashire Railway Act 1871, sub-sect. D., it is enacted that sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863 (incorporated with that Act) shall extend and apply to the bridge or viaduct, not only when constructed, but also during the construction thereof. Part I., which includes the said sect. 15 of the Railway Clauses Act 1863, is incorporated with the West Lancashire Railway Act 1871.

5. Sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863 is as follows:

Where the company constructs a bridge with an opening span, it shall not be lawful for the company to detain any vessel, barge, or boat at the bridge for a longer time than may be necessary for admitting a carriage or engine traversing the railway, and approaching the bridge to cross the bridge, and for opening the bridge to admit the vessel, barge, or boat to pass, and the company shall be subject to and shall abide by such regulations with regard to the use of the bridge as may from time to time be made by the Board of Trade. If the company detains a vessel, barge, or boat longer than the time aforesaid, or fails in any respect to abide by any such regulations as aforesaid, they shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds without prejudice to any remedy against them for any loss or damage sustained by any person.

6. The respondent is the owner of a vessel or barge fitted with a mast, and with such vessel or barge has the right to navigate the said river at the point where it is crossed by the said bridge.

7. The said vessel or barge passes along canals, and on account of the low arches of canal bridges is fitted with an apparatus whereby the mast can be raised or lowered. The canal lock nearest to the bridge is distant therefrom about three-quarters of a mile. The sail is not always raised on the river, but before the bridge was constructed there was no need to lower the mast at that point. The

(a) Reported by H. D. BONSRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

DINNING (app.) v. SOUTH SHIELDS GUARDIANS (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

river is tidal, and the respondent's vessel or barge passes up or down only with the tide. The height of the bridge above the river is not sufficient to allow the vessel or barge to pass under with raised mast, except when the tide is at still water. At the time of the detaining complained of the vessel or barge could not pass under with raised mast. The respondent had before such time given notice to the appellants that his vessel or barge would be passing the bridge at 10 a.m., and requested the appellants to have the bridge open. The respondent's vessel or barge approached the bridge coming down from the lock with hoisted sail, arriving at the bridge half an hour later than the time he had fixed. The respondent had to lower his sail and mast in order to get through the bridge, which would take, as stated by witness, from fifteen to twenty minutes, and he then had to put it up again when he got through the bridge. No evidence was given, nor was it contended by appellants, that any carriage or engine was traversing the railway and approaching the bridge at the time respondents vessel or barge arrived at the bridge. It was admitted on behalf of the appellants that they would have refused to open the bridge for the respondent if he had come punctually at ten o'clock or any other hour.

8. The respondent had paid toll to the Leeds and Liverpool Canal Company for his voyage.

9. It was admitted by both appellants and respondent that no regulations with regard to the use of the bridge have been made by the Board of Trade.

10. The respondent contended that he had a right, under sect. 13 of the Act 6 Geo. 1, c. 38, set out above, to enjoy free passage along the said river at the point in question, and to pass the bridge with hoisted sail as a convenient liberty for navigating such river without obstruction, and therefore to have the bridge open for him accordingly.

11. The appellants contended that, as the barge could, and in fact did pass with lowered mast without the bridge being opened, they, the appellants, had not detained the barge within the meaning of sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863.

12. We were of opinion that, as a matter of fact, the progress of the respondent's vessel or barge was retarded by the bridge being unopened for a longer time than allowed by sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863, and as a point of law this was a detaining of the vessel or barge within the meaning of sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863, and convicted the appellant in the manner before stated.

13. The question of law therefore upon which this case is stated for the opinion of the court is, whether upon the facts and admissions stated, and having regard to the provisions of sect. 13 of the statute of 6 Geo. 1, c. 38, and sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863, the appellants ought to have opened the bridge for respondent's vessel or barge to pass through.

A. T. Lawrence for the appellants.—The construction put upon the statute by the justices is an unreasonable one. It would make the traffic of the railway impossible; the train could not leave the preceding station until the bridge is re-connected. Of course it must be opened for ocean-going vessels, but that traffic is very much less than the barge traffic. By the Act the bridge had to be built a certain height, and that in itself shows that it was never intended that it should be opened for all kinds of vessels. These barges have masts which are made in such a way that they can be lowered, and therefore they are not the class of vessels for which the railway company are bound to open the bridge.

Fullarton for the respondent.—It is not found as a fact in the case that this boat is not an ocean-going vessel; these barges go on both the canal and the river. The Act does not apply to one class of vessels more than another. The public have a right to use a navigable river without any obstruction, and such right is preserved by the Act which compels the railway company to open the bridge. The bridge is made in this way for the very purpose of protecting the right of the public in navigating the river. The justices have found as a fact that there was a "detention," and therefore there is no appeal.

Lord COLERIDGE, C.J.—It is clearly the duty of the railway company to open the bridge for ships having masts which will not lower, but the question here is, whether they are bound to open the bridge for vessels having masts which will lower. I am of opinion that they need not do anything of the kind. By sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863 the company are liable to pay a penalty not exceeding 20*l.* if they detain a vessel, barge, or boat for a longer time than is necessary for admitting a carriage or engine traversing the railway and approaching the bridge to cross the bridge, and for opening the bridge to admit the vessel, barge, or boat to pass; but here it is not necessary that the barge need be detained at all, because the mast can be lowered, and it is constructed for that purpose. I think the true construction of the Act is, that it is not necessary to open the bridge for a barge which can lower the mast; and refusing to open the bridge in such a case is not a detention within the meaning of sect. 15 of the Railways Clauses Act 1863. The appellants are entitled to succeed, and the conviction must be quashed.

STEPHEN and MATHEW, JJ. concurred.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Sandys and Trevenner.

Solicitors for the respondent, Hamlin and Grammer.

Monday, Dec. 10, 1883.

(Before Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., STEPHEN and MATHEW, JJ.)

DINNING (app.) v. SOUTH SHIELDS GUARDIANS (resps.). (a)

*Wife chargeable—Maintenance by husband—Payment towards cost of relief—Limit of amount to be ordered—*31 & 32 Vict. c. 122, s. 33.

By the Poor Law Amendment Act 1868, s. 33, when a married woman requires relief without her husband, guardians or overseers may apply to justices, who may summon such husband to appear before them to show cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife, and make an order upon him to pay such

(a) Reported by M. W. McKELLAR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q.B. Div.]

DINNING (app.) v. SOUTH SHIELDS GUARDIANS (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

sum weekly or otherwise towards the cost of the relief of the wife, as after consideration of all the circumstances of the case shall appear to them to be proper, and shall determine in such order how and to whom the payments shall from time to time be made.

Respondents proved upon an application under this section that they had granted relief to the appellant's wife to the amount of 3s. a week, and that the appellant was able to maintain her at 15s. a week.

Held, upon a case stated by Stephen and Mathew, J. (dissentients, Lord Coleridge, O.J.), that the justices had no power under this section to order payment beyond the actual relief granted, and that an order of 15s. a week was bad.

THIS was a case stated by two of Her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the borough of South Shields in the county of Durham, under the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on questions of law which arose before them as therein stated.

1. At a petty sessions holden at South Shields aforesaid, in and for the said borough, on the 17th Nov. 1882, a complaint preferred by the respondents against the appellant, charging the appellant for that on the 2nd day of Nov. 1882, Elizabeth Dinning, being a married woman, and requiring relief without her husband, did become chargeable to the South Shields Poor Law Union, and that the said Thomas Dinning was the husband of the said Elizabeth Dinning, and liable to maintain her, and why an order should not be made upon him for a sum to be paid weekly towards the relief of his said wife pursuant to sect. 33 of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122 was heard and determined, the said parties then being respectively present, and upon such hearing the said appellant was by us ordered to pay the sum of 15s. per week for his wife's relief and maintenance.

2. And whereas the appellant, being dissatisfied with this determination upon the hearing of the said complaint, as being erroneous in point of law, duly applied in writing to state and sign a case, setting forth the facts and the grounds of such determination, for the opinion of this court, but the said justices being of opinion that the application of the appellant was merely frivolous, refused to state and sign such case, and at his request signed and delivered to him a certificate of such refusal. And whereas the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice have since granted a rule calling upon the justices to state such case, setting forth the facts and the grounds of their determination.

3. Now therefore the said justices, in obedience to the said rule and order of the said Queen's Bench Division, and the provisions of the said statute, stated and signed the following case:

4. Upon the hearing of the complaint it was proved on the part of the respondents, and found as facts, that the said appellant had allowed his lawful wife, the said Elizabeth Dinning, to become chargeable to the respondents' poor law union, that she was unable to maintain herself, that the said appellant was liable to maintain her, and that he was able by work and other means to provide for her, that the appellant was rated to the poor for property for which he was owner on an annual value of 329l., exclusive of the annual value of the house in which the appellant resided, and of his business premises, and that he was also a coal merchant.

5. It was further proved by the evidence of Thomas Fosback, a relieving officer of the respondents, who was called as a witness in support of the complaint, that the amount of relief granted by the respondents to the said Elizabeth Dinning was the sum of 3s. per week, and no more.

6. It was contended on the part of the appellant that the justices had no power to order a sum to be paid weekly which would more than cover the whole sum paid by the union to the defendant's wife for her relief, that the union having considered 3s. per week sufficient for her relief had paid her that sum, and that as the statute under which the complaint was made only enabled the justices to make an order towards her relief, they could only make an order for a sum under the amount granted by the union, i.e., they might order 2s. 11d. per week, but could not order the full sum of 3s.

7. On the part of the respondents it was contended that the statute was an enabling statute, that there were other poor law provisions by statute enabling the respondents to recover the full sum expended by them in maintaining the appellant's wife by reason of her becoming chargeable to the union, and that the statute 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122, s. 33 expressly conferred power on justices to summon the appellant to show cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife, and that having regard to all the circumstances of the case, and the means of the appellant, that they should make an order upon the appellant to pay such a sum weekly or otherwise as they should deem proper for the relief and maintenance of the appellant's wife.

8. The said justices carefully considered the whole of the facts and circumstances of the case, and respective contentions of the appellant and respondents, and decided that the appellant was bound to maintain his wife, and that as it had been proved that the appellant had ample means, the sum of 15s. per week was a reasonable sum for the appellant to pay towards the relief and maintenance of his wife, which said sum they directed to be paid by the appellant weekly, and every week to Thomas Fosback, a relieving officer of the said union.

9. The question of law arising on the above statement for the opinion of the court was, whether the said order was valid or otherwise. And the court was solicited according to the power vested in the court by the statute to remit the case to the said justices with the opinion of the court thereon, or to make such other order as to the court might seem fit.

By the Poor Law Amendment Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 122), s. 33:

When a married woman requires relief without her husband, the guardians of the union or parish, or the overseers of the parish, as the case may be, to which she becomes chargeable, may apply to the justices having jurisdiction in such union or parish in petty sessions assembled, and thereupon such justices may summon such husband to appear before them to show cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife, and upon his appearance, or in the event of his not appearing upon proof of due service of such summons upon him, such justices may after hearing such wife upon oath, or receiving such other evidence as they may deem sufficient, make an order upon him to pay such sum

Q.B. Div.]

DINNING (app.) v. SOUTH SHIELDS GUARDIANS (resps.).

[Q.B. Div.]

weekly or otherwise towards the cost of the relief of the wife as after consideration of all the circumstances of the case shall appear to them to be proper, and shall determine in such order how and to whom the payments shall from time to time be made; which order shall, if the payments required by it to be made be in arrear, be enforced in the manner prescribed by the Act of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, for the enforcing of orders of justices requiring the payment of a sum of money; Provided that such order may be at any future time revoked by the justices in petty sessions assembled, if they see sufficient cause for so doing.

Bremner for the appellant.—The justices have no authority under this section to assess the maintenance which a husband ought to provide for his wife. The guardians are the persons empowered to make the application, upon whom is the duty to fix the amount of relief to be granted, and they can only recover something "towards the cost of the relief of the wife." The justices may order only part of this cost, or at all events not more than the whole, and may determine how and to whom the payments shall be made, but they cannot grant anything for maintenance beyond the actual cost of relief. This order therefore was beyond the jurisdiction of the justices.

Cock for the respondents.—The only words to be interpreted are "towards the cost of the relief of the wife," but they must be read with the rest of the section, which requires the husband to show cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife, and which directs consideration of all the circumstances of the case. If it were intended to limit the order to the actual cost of relief, it is difficult to imagine why the justices' order should determine the person to whom payments were to be made. The persons who drew up the marginal note to the section certainly must have considered the justices to have the more extended jurisdiction which they have exercised in this case; that note is, "Order may be made in petty sessions upon a husband to maintain his wife."

MATHEW, J.—I am of opinion that the justices had not the power to make the order appealed against in this case. The section enables the guardians or overseers to apply to the justices, who may summon the husband of a wife chargeable to their union or parish; the husband is to show cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife, but the only order which the justices can make after hearing the husband, or in his absence, is "to pay such sum weekly or otherwise towards the cost of the relief of the wife, as after consideration of all the circumstances of the case shall appear to them to be proper, and shall determine in such order how and to whom the payments shall from time to time be made." I quite see room for doubt whether justices were not under this section intended to fix the proper amount the husband should pay for his wife's maintenance, but the guardians are expressly mentioned as the parties concerned, and they must make the application. The payment is to be towards the cost of relief, and I can see nothing in the subsequent words to extend the power of the justices beyond the amount of that cost. In this case the justices have interpreted the section differently, but it appears to me they were wrong.

STEPHEN, J.—I am of the same opinion, and I not only entertain the same doubts which have

